Inside this issue:

- Tribe opens propane company
- Oaks Indian Missions needs donations
- Donation aids battle against diabetes

TODAY'S INDEPENDENT INDIAN NEWS

- A FREE PUBLICATION

WWW.NATIVETIMES.COM

VOLUME 18 • ISSUE 1

PUBLISHED WEEKLY

JANUARY 6, 2012

Kialegee Tribal Town defends casino proposal

Residents have expressed opposition to the project, citing its close proximity to schools and the strain on public resources.

BROKEN ARROW, Okla. (AP) – The leader of the Kialegee Tribal Town has responded to an Oklahoma congressman's concern about a proposal to build a casino in Broken Arrow by saying the Native American tribe has no other real options for economic development.

Tiger Hobia, the town king for the tribe, said he was disappointed by Republican Rep. John Sullivan's comments.

"The Kialegee Tribal Town project is the epitome of the Congressional vision for Indian economic development," Hobia said in a prepared statement released by the tribe's attorney Vicki Sou-

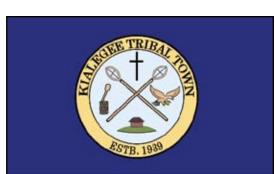

Sullivan sent a letter to the National Indian Gaming Commission last week urging it to keep the concerns of Broken Arrow residents opposed to the casino in mind as it considered the tribe's gaming license request.

The tribe has started groundwork for the planned casino at a site near the Creek Turnpike, which loops along the southern portion of the city. Records show the area near Creek Turnpike has been identified for industrial use in the city's comprehensive plan.

But city officials said they have

See CASINO Continued on Page 3

The Kialegee Tribal Town is a federally recognized Native American tribe in Oklahoma, as well as a traditional township within the Muscogee Creek Confederacy.

LM OTERO / ASSOCIATED PRESS FILE

In this 2010 file photo, peyote dealer Mauro Morales handles peyote buttons in Rio Grande City, Texas. He is one of three "Peyoteros," Texans licensed to sell peyote that grows wild near the border with Mexico to tens of thousands of Native American Church members across the U.S.

Tribe seeks easier access to Peyote plants

The misbegotten reputation of peyote affects its availability, Native American Church proponents said.

S.E. RUCKMAN Special to the Times

CADDO NATION, Okla. -Peyote's tale has long roots. It is an intricate story of reverence, piety and later; illegality. Today, the gray-green cactus is experiencing revived religious interest but lowered production-a duality that has some officials questioning its reputation as an outlaw.

Intrigue has always surrounded the plant. Peyote has been used by medicine men in the Southwest for more than 5,000 years as a spiritual barometer through its hallucinogenic effects. Alarm among non-Native groups soon followed. Dan Swan, associate curator at the Sam Noble Oklahoma Museum of Natural History (SNOMNH), said peyote is experiencing a growth spurt in the Four Corners area of New Mexico, Colorado, Arizona and Utah. Swan, who has spent more than 20 years study-

See PEYOTE Continued on Page 4

Tribe's high-interest online lending venture booms

MATT VOLZ Associated Press

HELENA, Mont. (AP) - An Indian reservation in the heart of Montana's farm country may seem an unlikely place to borrow a quick $600, but the Chippewa Cree tribe says it has already given out more than 121,000 loans this year at interest rates that can reach a whopping 360 percent.

As more states pass laws to rein in lenders who deal in high-interest, short-term loans, Indian tribes like the Chippewa Cree and their new online lending venture, Plain Green Loans, are stepping in to fill the void. The Internet lets them reach beyond the isolated Rocky Boy's Indian Reservation to borrowers across the nation, while tribal immunity has allowed them to avoid bans and interest-rate caps several states have set.

To Neal Rosette, Plain Green Loans CEO and the Chippewa Cree's former executive administrative officer, it's a win-win. The online lending venture is a resource for people who can't or won't borrow from banks, while it gives the tribe a steady revenue stream and jobs with unemployment on the reservation at nearly 40 percent.

Rosette said this model could be the successor to gambling for tribes looking for an economic boost. Some tribes have owned online lending businesses for several years, and Rosette said the Chippewa Cree and three other tribes have started the Native American Lenders Alliance to encourage

"I believe this is the new outlook for Indian Country, not just Rocky Boy," Rosette said. "We are sovereign nations and we have the ability to create our own laws that regulate our businesses such as this."

That's a problem for consumer groups and the states that have tried to bring such lending under control. The issue with these loans, consumer advocates say, is that their high interest rates make it too easy for a borrower to become trapped in a cycle of debt as they have to borrow more to repay their original loans.

Forty-two states and the District of Columbia have taken different regulatory approaches, from outright bans to interest-rate caps. Montana voters last year passed a ballot initiative that capped such loans at a 36 percent annualized interest rate, which has led to a nearly 83 percent drop in so-called deferred deposit lenders, according to Montana banking and financial institutions director Melanie Griggs.

But as the cap drives lenders out of the state, more people are turning to the Internet, which adds the danger of passing along personal bank account information that can be distributed to other lenders and brokers and can lead to overdrafts.

"When they were getting it from brickand-mortar businesses it was easy to monitor how many people were getting payday loans. Now that it's all on the Internet, it's harder to monitor," Griggs said.

The Chippewa Cree tribe says its loans are not payday loans, those two-week loans with annualized interest rates of more than 600 percent or more. Instead, the tribe says, its highest annualized interest rate is 360 per-

See LENDING Continued on Page 3

Choctaw Nation school restored to BIA Indian education system

TULSA, Okla. (AP) - A school established more than 100 years ago by a Native American tribe will be part of the Bureau of Indian Education school system and eligible for additional funding, an Oklahoma congressman said.

U.S. Rep. Dan Boren secured language to reinstate Jones Academy, a Choctaw Nation school near Hartshorne, to the system and included it in an omnibus appropriations bill that recently passed the "Restoring Jones Academy to the BIA has been a priority of mine," Boren, a Democrat, told the Tulsa World.

The Jones Academy's removal from the system dates back to a federal government program in the 1950s, he said. It was repealed in 1970, but the school's removal remained in effect.

The Choctaw Nation established the school in 1891. It has enrolled students from 29 federally recognized tribes and from different states.

Boren called the change allowing the school to once again be part of the program an important step in keeping promises the United States made to Indian tribes.

"It is imperative to support Native American education," Boren said. "Tribal students have a dropout rate higher than any other racial or ethnic group in America."

As a result, he said, many of their languages and cultural traditions are beginning to disappear.

"Schools like Jones Academy, which teach tribal languages and craftsmanship, are working to reverse this trend," Boren said. Choctaw Nation Chief Gregory Pyle welcomed the legislation.

COURTESY

Jones Academy, established by the Choctaw Nation more than 100 years ago, is located near Hartshorne, Okla., which is about 15 miles southeast of McAlester.

"Reinstating the Academic Program at Jones Academy will ensure that our students receive a complete academic education in a culturally rich setting," Pyle said.

Red Cliff Chippewa first tribe to open public park

MILWAUKEE (AP) - The Red Cliff Chippewa will become the first tribe in the nation to open a park to the public.

They are creating Frog Bay Tribal National Park on nearly 89 acres of its reservation and opening the lakeshore property and its views of the Apostle Islands in northern Wisconsin.

Red Cliff bought the nearly 89acre property last month for half the $950,000 appraised value. The tribe received a $488,000 federal grant.

Red Cliff Natural Resources Administrator Chad Abel tells the Milwaukee Journal Sentinel that an official public opening is expected in August.

According to the National Park Service, there is no other tribally owned or controlled park in the U.S. open to the public.

Tribe opens propane company

HEATHER SARLES
Otoe-Missouria Tribe

RED ROCK, Okla – For many years, low and fixed income Otoe-Missouria community members struggled to pay for the minimum number of gallons required by propane companies who delivered to the remote location around the tribal complex. To answer this need, the Otoe-Missouria Tribe opened PK Propane.

PK Propane is one of several companies that the tribe has started in the last year. Tribal member and PK manager Lester Harragarra explains the thought behind starting the new company.

"Heating during the winter months was always a struggle for many elders living on a fixed income," Harragarra says. "At the suggestion of Chairman John Shotton, the OMDA (Otoe-Missouria Development Authority) investigated the process to obtain a license from the State of Oklahoma Liquefied Petroleum Gas Administration to transport and dispense propane"

The licensing, sale and transportation of liquefied petroleum is heavily regulated due to its extremely volatile nature. Once the tribe obtained the correct licenses, the search began for qualified employees.

"Currently PK employs four full-time employees, three are tribal members," Harragarra says. "One Board member is required to hold a State issued license to sell and dispense propane."

The propane company, which is located west of the tribal cemetery, currently has more than 220 customers and has a service area of 50 miles. The company has one Bobtail propane delivery truck and two driver/installers Deswood Koshiway and Abe "Junior" Dent.

"Most of our customers are in the Red Rock, Ponca City, Perry area," Harragarra says. "We have been contacted by another tribe about servicing their complex and would like to service some of the other tribes in the area as well."

Tribal member R.T. Shotton is the site manager. Shotton says that in addition to home delivery, the company can also fill portable tanks up to 100 lbs.

The name PK was selected by Kennetha Greenwood, OMDA, who offers a clever answer to what the name actually means.

"PK doesn't actually stand for anything in English," Greenwood says, "but the sound the initials make together sounds like the word for good in Otoe. So to Otoes, PK means good when they hear it, and that's what we hope for our new business, that it does and brings good things for the tribe"

To learn more about PK propane visit them online at www.PKpropane.com. To order propane or to ask a question about your propane needs call 580-723-4433.

Colorado water users assoc. elects first Native president

George Arthur (Navajo) will lead powerful water rights advocacy group

STEPHINE POSTON

LAS VEGAS – For the first time in the 66-year history of the Colorado River Water Users Association (CRWUA), a Native American will take the reins of an organization that advocates for all the users of the Colorado River.

CRWUA is the largest, most powerful organization related to Colorado River matters. The organization represents a variety of groups. Each of these groups has its own water interests, ranging from water management organizations, Indian tribes, governmental entities, power companies, and environmental groups. Together they form the CR-WUA, which has a single interest of working together for the future of the Colorado River.

CRWUA is made up of the seven basin states and the Ten Tribes Partnership. The Colorado River provides water for 35 million users and supplies a majority of the power for the southwest States.

George Arthur, a member of the Navajo Nation, has been the Chairman of the Ten Tribes Partnership for six years. The Ten Tribes Partnership has participated in CRWUA since 1996. "It's everyone's responsibility to use the water and care for the resource to ensure future generations are not faced with the challenges we have today. As the President of CRWUA it will be my duty to safeguard the interests of all who use the Colorado River," stated Arthur.

"The Colorado River is faced with a myriad of complexities and I will look to my CRWUA colleagues for support and guidance. Additionally, I look forward to working with the CRWUA states and members to raise awareness about tribal issues in and related to the basin," added Arthur.

The new Vice President of CRWUA is David Moodeer of the Central Arizona Project. Darryl Vigil, of Jicarilla Apache Tribe, will assume the Secretary/Treasurer position of CRWUA. Mitch Bishop of the Southern Nevada Water Authority will serve as the Assistant Secretary.

"It's been a long time coming and I'm happy to see this day that marks the accession of the Ten Tribes Partnership to the leadership of CR-WUA. Fifteen years ago, the CRWUA Board of Trustees took the position that tribes were a stakeholder and belonged on the Board. The CRWUA Board of Trustees will support George Arthur and the Ten Tribes Partnership in every way to succeed in this effort," stated John Zebre, CRWUA's outgoing President from Wyoming.

For more information about CRWUA, please visit www.crwua.org.

Region 6 Tribal Lead meeting set

CATOOSA, Okla. – The Region 6 Tribal Lead meeting is set for Jan. 25 at the Hard Rock Hotel & Casino Tulsa.

The meeting hopes to educate and assist those interested in preventing exposure to lead-based materials.

"This meeting is being held at no cost for all those that have a stake in protecting the public from unnecessary exposure to lead in their homes, schools and child care facilities," said Cherokee Nation Environmental specialist Karen Dye.

It is the intent of the Inter-Tribal Environmental Council to bring interested stakeholders together to discuss common issues, provide insight into the future, understand the issues from other perspectives, share, educate and network.

"We believe that this meeting will better equip all of us with ways to assist tribal populations and the general public in reducing lead exposures," Dye said.

The meeting will address how federal and state policies affect lead removal and prevention in healthy housing and identify opportunities to promote good indoor environments in affordable housing. Lead certification/accreditation, childhood lead screening, lead testing techniques, training providers and examples of community action groups and successful lead removal projects also will be discussed.

Lead abatement professionals, affordable housing advocates, city councils and local planning commissions, consumers of subsidized housing, housing authorities, legislators and daycare workers are all invited to take part in the discussions.

Also invited are neighborhood groups, non-profit housing organizations, professional associations, public agencies, residential builders and developers and tenants and homeowners.

A block of hotel rooms at the Hard Rock Hotel at the government rate of $77 a night will be reserved for this date. Reservations can be made by calling 1-800-760-6700 and on or before Jan. 12. Mention the Region 6 Tribal Lead Meeting when making reservations to obtain the government rate.

To register for the meeting or for more information, call 918-453-5109 or email karendye@cherokee.org.

NOTICE FOR OSAGE COUNTY

(WEATHER PERMITTING) THE OSAGE COUNTY ASSESSOR WILL BE AT THE FOLLOWING LOCATIONS:

BARNSDALL - CITY HALL-COMMUNITY ROOM-409 W. MAIN-JANUARY 9, 11:00 A.M.-1:00 P.M. HOMINY - COMMUNITY CENTER-610 S. WOOD - JANUARY 10, 10:00 A.M. - 2:00 P.M.

SKIATOOK-COMMUNITY CENTER-220 S. BROADWAY – JANUARY 12, 10:00 A.M. – 3:00 P.M. AND

SAND SPRINGS- HEALTH CENTER-306 E. BROADWAY- JANUARY 13, 11:00 A.M. – 1:00 P.M. AND MARCH 8, 10:00 A.M. – 3:00 P.M.

MARCH 9, 10:00 A.M. - 3:00 P.M.

SHIDLER- SENIOR CITIZENS CENTER – 125 S. COSDEN - JANUARY 17, 11:00 A.M. – 1:00 P.M.

 ${\it FAIRFAX-SENIOR~CITIZENS~CENTER-600~W.~HARRISON-JANUARY~18, 11:00~A.M.-1:00~P.M.}$

TULSA – GILCREASE HILLS HOMEOWNERS ASSOC. – 1919 W. SEMINOLE – JANUARY 19, 10:00 A.M. – 2:00 P.M. AND MARCH 6, 10:00 A.M. – 3:00 P.M.

McCORD - SENIOR CITIZENS CENTER-115 MARY RD JANUARYY 20, 10:00 A.M. – 2:00 P.M. AND MARCH 7, 10:00 A.M. – 3:00 P.M.

HULAH - SENIOR CITIZENS CENTER –1924 CR 3575- JANUARY 23, 11:00 A.M. – 1:00 P.M.

PRUE - SENIOR CITIZENS CENTER -209 WAH GRA SEE- JANUARY 24, 10:00 A.M. - 2:00 P.M

 ${\tt BARTLESVILLE-LABADIE\ HEIGHTS\ BAPTIST\ CHURCH-SW\ OF\ CITY,\ JANUARY\ 25,\ 10:00\ A.M.-2:00\ P.M.}$

SPERRY - CITY HALL - 115 N. CINCINNATI - JANUARY 26, 10:00 A.M. - 2:00 P.M BURBANK - CITY HALL -105 FIRST ST - JANUARY 27, 10:00 A.M. - 12:00 NOON

FOR THE PURPOSE OF

TAKING NEW APPLICATIONS FOR HOMESTEAD EXEMPTION, DOUBLE HOMESTEAD EXEMPTION, SENIOR FREEZE, VETERANS EXEMPTION, REPORTING CHANGES MADE TO YOUR PROPERTY AND/OR BUILDINGS, TURNING IN MANUFACTURED HOMES, RENDERING BUSINESS PERSONALS, REPORTING FARM EQUIPMENT, TRACTORS, BOAT DOCKS, ETC., AND APPLYING FOR AGRICULTURE FUEL EXEMPTION.

DEADLINE FOR FILING IS MARCH 15, 2012

ADDITIONAL HOMESTEAD EXEMPTION: AN ADDITIONAL EXEMPTION WILL BE GRANTED FOR ALL HOUSEHOLDS WITH A GROSS INCOME (COLLECTIVE INCOME OF ANY AND ALL SOURCES OF ALL PERSONS LIVING IN THE HOMESTEAD) NOT TO EXCEED $20,000.00 FOR THE PRECEEDING CALENDAR YEAR. THERE ARE NO AGE REQUIREMENTS. HOWEVER, FOR A PERMANENT EXEMPTION, YOU MUST FILE AT AGE 65, AND YOU MUST BE 65 AS OF MARCH 15TH. IF 66 YEARS OR OLDER AND QUALIFIED IN 2011, NO ANNUAL APPLICATION IS REQUIRED. FOR MORE DETAILS CALL 918-287-3448.

VETERANS EXEMPTION: 100% DISABLED OR SURVIVING SPOUSE MAY NOW APPLY FOR A PROPERTY TAX EXEMPTION THAT WILL ELIMINATE THEIR TAX BURDEN ON HOMESTEAD PROPERTY. APPLICANT MUST PROVIDE A CURRENT U.S.D.V.A. BENEFITS AWARD LETTER WITH QUALIFICATIONS SPECIFIC TO THIS EXEMPTION THAT CERTIFIES THE 100% SERVICE RELATED DISABILITY.

PROPERTY VALUATION FREEZE (AKA: SENIOR FREEZE): THE OWNER MUST BE 65 YEARS OLD OR OLDER AS OF JANUARY 1ST, 2012; AND GROSS HOUSEHOLD INCOME LEVEL CANNOT EXCEED $59,600.00 FOR THE 2011 YEAR. TO QUALIFY THE TAXPAYER MUST PROVIDE COPIES OF 2011 PAPERS TO VERIFY TOTAL HOUSEHOLD INCOME OF ALL OCCUPANTS LIVING IN THE HOMESTEAD PROPERTY. TOTAL HOUSEHOLD INCOME INCLUDES ALL TAXABLE AND NON-TAXABLE INCOME SOURCES. THE STATE OF OKLAHOMA WILL VERIFY ALL APPLICANTS.

IT IS THE RESPONSIBILITY OF THE TAXPAYER TO NOTIFY THIS OFFICE IF INCOME EXCEEDS THE QUALIFIED AMOUNTS.

HOUSE BILL #1724: IF PERSONAL PROPERTY TAXES ARE DELINQUENT, YOUR HOMESTEAD EXEMPTION WILL BE CANCELLED.

GAIL HEDGCOTH, OSAGE COUNTY ASSESSOR 600 GRANDVIEW, RM 101 , OSAGE COUNTY COURTHOUSE, PAWHUSKA, OK. 74056 HOURS: 8:30 A.M. – 5:00 P.M. 918-287-3448

Navajo Nation seeks return of remains

FELICIA FONSECA Associated Press

FLAGSTAFF, Ariz. (AP) – Archaeologists curious about American Indian cultures dug up human remains and associated funerary objects at Canyon de Chelly decades ago, while some remains were taken for protection from erosion in the canyon with towering red, sandstone walls.

Whatever the reason, the Navajo Nation wants hundreds of sets of human remains exhumed from the national monument on their reservation to be returned for proper burial, contending the tribe is the rightful owner of them. The Navajo Nation, whose members live on the country's largest American Indian reservation, contend in a lawsuit filed last week that despite their demands for the remains, the National Park Service has unrightfully held them in a collection in Tucson.

Since 1931, the federal agency has been charged with preserving the thousands of artifacts and ruins within the national monument near Chinle. But the land revered by Navajos as sacred remains tribally owned.

Canyon de Chelly Superintendent Tom Clark said the Park Service's goal is to repatriate the items, but it first must determine whether any other tribes have cultural affiliation to them under a 1990 federal law known as the Native American Graves Protection and Repatriation Act. Clark said that law appears to conflict with the property rights of the Navajo Nation.

"Until we see how this plays out, we would not proceed to aggravate the situation," he said Tuesday. "But we'll see how it actually plays out and determine from there. Obviously other tribes are interested in it, too."

Canyon de Chelly has been inhabited for thousands of years, with artifacts and cliff dwellings lining the canyon walls dating from the 4th to 14th centuries. Clark said Zuni Pueblo, the Hopi Tribe, Apaches, Utes or other tribes could have rightful claims to the

The Navajo Nation - which calls the canyon "tsegi" or "within the rock" believe that digging up human remains causes illness to the living, including arthritis and depression, and damages the environment. The tribe said it never agreed to let the Park Service or any other entity carry off remains or cultural objects located on the monument because that would have contradicted traditional Navajo laws and violated the rights of tribal members.

"Since at least 1868, this has been the heart of Navajo country, and nothing in the act that created the national monument changed that," said Alan Downer, director of the tribe's Historic Preservation Department. "So for the Park Service to say, 'we dug it up, put it in our collection and, therefore, it's ours' is wrong."

The tribe further argues that the remains were taken before Congress outlined a process for museums and federal agencies to inventory their collections, consult with tribes regarding cultural affiliation and return remains to the appropriate tribe. Congress has allowed the Park Service to hold the objects and remains only temporarily to preserve and protect them at most, the tribe said.

The most recent excavation in Canyon de Chelly took place in 1988 when the tribe agreed to let the Park Service remove remains from an eroding arroyo under the condition that they be reburied soon after, Downer said. Instead, they ended up in the Park Service's collection, he said. Other excavation work was done as early as the

The Park Service met with tribes in June and showed them its collection. Downer said some of the pottery clearly is Navajo as are remains recovered from Massacre Cave, where 115 Navajos were killed in a bloody encounter with the Spanish in 1805.

"When you get to pre-contact times, it's very difficult to say 'this is unquestionably ancestral to this contemporary tribe," Downer said.

Clark said the Park Service doesn't claim ultimate ownership of the remains or objects but must follow the mandate of Congress.

"We all want to have the remains repatriated, that's what all the tribes and the Park Service have all stated," he said. "That is our goal. I guess the disagreement is in the process to get

The Navajo Nation is asking a judge to declare that the remains are the property of the tribe and order the Park Service to immediately return them. Should the court determine that federal laws transferred the title of human remains and cultural objects from the tribe to the Park Service, the Navajo Nation wants those laws declared void.

no jurisdiction in dictating planning requirements there because the property is an original allotment of the Muscogee (Creek) Nation, of which the Kialegee Tribal Town is a branch.

Paxton Myers, chief of staff for the National Indian Gaming Commission, said last week the tribe risked violating the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act if it opened a casino. The commission is still reviewing whether the land is eligible for gaming.

Luis Figueredo, the attorney representing the proposed Red Clay Casino, said the commission's determination isn't legally binding.

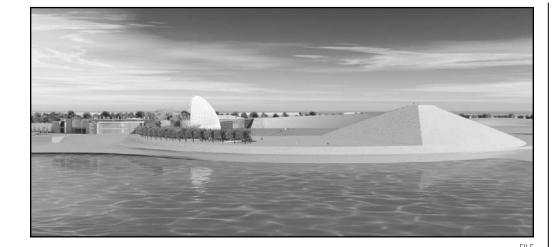

Hobia said the tribe has kept federal and city officials informed about the project's progress at all times, that it had no other viable economic development opportunities and it is dependent on limited allocations and subsidies, the Tulsa World reported last Tuesday.

The casino project would bring jobs and increase the purchase of goods and services in the city, he said in his statement.

"It is a widely established fact that employment, purchases and tax payments made by tribal casinos lead to increased business for surrounding communities," Hobia said.

Residents have expressed opposition to the project, citing its close proximity to schools and the strain on public resources.

"Can't they find another piece of land away from young people?" Broken Arrow resident Donna Tracy asked. "That's just opening temptations to those young people. That's putting them in harm's way."

This model rendering shows what the American Indian Cultural Center will look like once completed.

Funds sought for American Indian Cultural Center

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) - Private donations are being sought to complete the American Indian Cultural Center and Museum that's being built in Oklahoma City,

The center's new executive director, Blake Wade, says he will have to raise $80 million to complete the structure, which is about half finished. Wade says the center could open in three to four years.

The Oklahoman reports that Wade says he expects to have to raise $40 million from the public in private donations and the rest through state appropriations.

So far, the state has contributed $67 million in addition to $16 million from the federal government plus $6.7 million from Indian tribes and private donors.

Woman brings Indian remains home

MOUNT PLEASANT, Mich. (AP) - A Michigan woman attending college in Canada has returned home with the remains of an American Indian that were kept at a museum for more than 100 years.

The Morning Sun in Mount Pleasant says the remains along with other items were repatriated in December by the Saginaw Chippewa Tribe in central Michigan's Isabella County. It's not known how the remains ended up at the Museum of Vancouver in British Columbia, although officials say there was much "random collecting" in the early 20th century.

The remains and other artifacts were buried Dec. 19 in the Nibokaan Indian Cemetery.

They were transported by Emily Birky of Glenn, Mich., who is pursuing a doctorate at the University of British Columbia. She believes the remains were removed from a mound near Saginaw, around 1905.

Hopis lose lawsuit over effluent for snowmaking

FLAGSTAFF, Ariz. (AP) - The Hopi Tribe has lost a round in court in its bid to stop Flagstaff from selling treated sewage water to Arizona Snowbowl.

The Arizona Daily Sun reports Coconino County Superior Court Judge Joe Lodge ruled in favor of the city Friday.

It's not clear if the Hopis will appeal the decision.

"We're going to seriously take a look at what we have," said Hopi Chairman Le Roy Shingoitewa.

The judge said the substanal components of the case had already been decided in federal court, and the tribe was legally required to raise its objections earlier.

"The plaintiff was clearly on notice in March 2002 that the city of Flagstaff intended to contract with Snowbowl to purchase reclaimed wastewater to be used for snowmaking at the Snowbowl ski area," Lodge wrote in his ruling.

The ruling sidesteps some of the new legal questions raised by the tribe, such as whether reclaimed wastewater can legally be used to make snow if the melted snow then flows into other water basins outside of Snowbowl, which is prohibited by state regulations.

Flagstaff officials pleased with the ruling.

We're glad the judge sees our perspective on the case, and would like to move forward with more productive issues with our neighbors," said Flagstaff City Manager Kevin Burke.

The owner of the business has recently approached the Navajo Nation and one other tribe over the possibility of using groundwater from deep wells in the Coconino or Redwall aquifers rather than reclaimed wastewater.

The idea is just a rough proposal at this point, said Snowbowl owner Eric Borowsky.

He has not yet called for any work to determine whether using groundwater is feasible.

Snowbowl plans to begin making snow for skiing in the winter of 2012-2013.

A different case litigating snowmaking on health and environmental grounds is headed for oral arguments in January at the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES

Publisher & Editor LISA SNELL editor@nativetimes.com

Contributing Writers Dana Attocknie LENZY KREHBIEL-BURTON Wesley Mahan KAREN SHADE

Advertising Sales KATHLEEN ROBERTSON LISA SNELL ROB WALTON advertising@nativetimes.com

Distribution SHELBY HICKS STEVE LACY WESLEY MAHAN MICHAEL MARRIS KATHLEEN ROBERTSON Brenda Slaughter

The Native American Times, formerly the Oklahoma Indian Times, is published weekly (except the last week of the year) by Lisa Hicks Snell. Mailing address is PO Box 411 Tahlequah, OK 74465. All the contents within the Native American Times are copyrighted material. Any reproduction, redistribution without the written consent of the NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES is strictly

> Each week's issue is available for free download online at: www.nativetimes.com

Subscription rates: $65.00 for fifty-two issues, $32.50 for twenty-six issues, or $16.25 for thirteen issues. (Rates are for postage and handling) Send check or money order

> NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES Attn: Subscriptions P.O. Box 411 Tahlequah, OK 74465-0411

> > Phone: (918) 708-5838 Fax: (888) 689-4873

Postmaster: Send Change of Address Form 579 to: NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES P.O. Box 411, Tahleguah, OK 74465

WWW.NATIVETIMES.COM News from the crossroads of Indian Country

LENDING

Other legal battles are being fought or have been fought in California, West Virginia, Missouri, New Mexico and Maryland.

cent. Payments are made over a period of months, usually in monthly or biweekly installments.

By any account, those rates are still very high. By the company's own example, a first-time borrower who takes out a $600 loan would end up paying $1,261.32 over 12 bi-weekly pay-

Less than a year old, Plain Green Loans already has an F rating by the Better Business Bureau after the agency received 20 complaints mainly dealing with billing and collection issues. Eleven of the complaints were resolved, but the company didn't respond or failed to resolve the other nine, according to the BBB.

Rosette said those complaints are relatively few when compared to the thousands of loans the company has administered.

"We've got a process in place that we believe is very quick at handling any type of complaint that we get. That's part of this industry, complaints, regardless of who you are," Rosette said.

As long as it doesn't make any loans to Montana residents, state prosecutors plan to let Plain Green Loans and the Chippewa Cree tribe be.

"We haven't looked specifically at the tribe," said assistant attorney general Jim Molloy. "We've not pursued it based on the understanding with the tribe that they're not lending to Mon-

Rosette confirmed that the tribe is not lending to Montana residents, but he bristled at the idea that the state could enforce its rate cap even if the tribe were lending in the state.

"If we wanted to defend our position in Montana, we could. But why? It's a small market. It wasn't worth the fight if there was one," Rosette said.

Other legal battles are being fought or have been fought in California, West Virginia, Missouri, New Mexico and Maryland, creating an unsettled regulatory environment, said Jean Anne Fox, director of financial services at Consumer Federation of America, a consumer advocacy group in Washington, D.C.

"It's a real threat to the ability of state regulators to enforce the loan market to police caps and other consumer protection measures," Fox said.

Some non-tribal businesses have seen tribal immunity as a shield that they can use to make high-interest loans outside of the regulatory spotlight and a way to avoid state law enforcement, Fox said. So they affiliate themselves with the tribe and conduct business under that shield, she said.

It can be difficult to obtain records that define the relationship between a tribe and non-tribal entity. That's the case with Plain Green Loan's relationship to a Fort Worth, Texas-based company called Think Finance Inc.

Think Finance says on its website that Plain Green Loans is one of its "products," along with online lenders owned by two other tribes. "Our latest product, Plain Green, launched in April. Customers in need of emergency cash can apply online in minutes, get an answer in seconds, and get cash as soon as the next day," a Think Finance press release from September reads.

Neither the tribe nor Think Finance returned calls and emails for comment on the relationship between the companies. Better Business Bureau spokeswoman Chelsea Dannen said her agency also tried to contact Think Finance to clarify the relationship but received no response.

Rosette said Plain Green Loans is wholly owned by the tribe, though he acknowledged that his staff of 25 isn't equipped to handle the volume. It employs a Las Vegas call center and uses brokers to provide it with databases of potential borrowers. It borrows just enough money each day to cover its

There are a lot of things the tribe won't disclose. Rosette says the default rate is on Plain Green loans is proprietary information. He won't name the companies the tribe is involved with or say where company borrows its money or at what rate.

If it turns out that Plain Green Loans is not a bona fide tribal lender, that could change state prosecutors' laissez-faire approach to the company, Molloy said.

But just the obscurity and the uncertain relationship between the tribe and the Texas company exemplify the underlying problem with tribal online lending businesses, Fox said.

"We're not sure who's doing what here," Fox said.

Native American images for mascots bring debate

CARMEN McCOLLUM
The Times

GARY, Ind. (AP) – The issue of using Native Americans as mascots and images in sports has long been debated with some terming the practice offensive.

However, numerous Indiana schools and teams use Native American mascots. They say it's a way to honor the nation's 19th state, which was once inhabited by Indian tribes for thousands of years.

One of the most common nicknames for Indiana high school teams is the Warriors, ranking at No. 2. Calumet High School in Lake Ridge Schools uses the nickname.

The issue of school mascots came up for discussion recently with the Lake Ridge School Board in Calumet Township and in Portage Township Schools in Portage.

Rick Lowe, Lake Ridge board president, wants to see the Calumet High mascot, affectionately known as Chief Wahoo, back on the school's sign.

Superintendent Sharon Johnson-Shirley said the mascot on the school's front sign was taken down more than two years ago when contractors were doing renovation work around the building. However, the mascot is evident throughout the building, including at the entrance on floor mats.

With the exception of School Board member Annette Wells, who told fellow board members that putting an Indian mascot back on the building might be offensive to some people, no one disagreed with Lowe.

Calumet Principal Tim Pivarnik said he has never had any resident complain about the signage. He said they've made a template of the original sign, using exterior grade wood, and a group of students will paint it. Pivarnik said the mascot will be hung on the Ridge Road side of the building. He hopes this will be done before the end of the year.

In Portage, Superintendent Mike Berta said he sees the Indian mascot, with the head of an Indian chief in steel in front of the high school building, as a tribute to a heroic group of people, but he adds, "I guess others can see it differently"

A few months ago, Portage School Board member Cheryl Oprisko expressed concern at a board meeting the symbol might not be appropriate.

However, Berta said he thinks the mascot is pretty cool. "It's on some of our stationery, and a facsimile of it is in front of the building. I have never had anyone in my 39 years in Portage make any statement of concern about our Indian mascot being offensive to anyone. Just the opposite, in fact. The Indian mascot has always been one of respect and pride for students and employees,"

he said

Chris Kaufman, a spokesman for the Indiana High School Athletic Association, said the association believes it's up to an individual school system and community what mascot to choose. He said the association is not a legislative body and has no mascot restrictions.

Michelle Stokely, an assistant professor of sociology and anthropology at Indiana University Northwest in Gary, said she believes that among Native Americans there is a general feeling the Indian mascots and images in sports are inappropriate.

"However, tribal people believe there are so many more issues to think about that they don't waste a lot of time thinking about that," she said.

Stokely said the emphasis on warriors or warriors winning a battle are issues. She said it's usually something aggressive and it doesn't reflect the diversity in every society, which includes things like arts, religion and family life.

"It creates the sense that Indian people are a thing rather than a diverse, broad society," she said. "So you have this character or cartoon figure of an Indian that diminishes the overall quality of a society. One of my classes discussed this recently. Indians are only 1 percent of the U.S. population. That's a small number that doesn't assert political or ethnic power the way larger groups do."

The misbegotten

NCAA says lawsuit by tribes should be thrown out

FARGO, N.D. (AP) – The NCAA says a lawsuit that was sparked by the University of North Dakota Fighting Sioux nickname controversy should be thrown out of federal court.

The suit was filed by members of the Spirit Lake and Standing Rock Sioux tribes. It seeks at least $10 million from the NCAA and a reversal of its policy banning use of American Indian imagery.

The North Dakota Legislature agreed to repeal a law requiring the university to keep the nickname and a logo depicting the profile of an American Indian warrior. It took effect this month.

The motion filed Thursday by the NCAA says the tribes lack standing to bring the lawsuit and says their claims are not supported by facts.

State appeals Mukwonago nickname ruling

MADISON, Wis. (AP) – The state is appealing a Waukesha County court ruling which allows Mukwonago High School to keep its Indians nickname and logo.

Judge Donald Hassin ruled in September that the state's effort to strip the school of its Indians name was unconstitutional. The state Department of Public Instruction ruled last year the nickname and mascot perpetuThe district was given a year to drop the Indians mascot. The school district did not and Hassin ruled the department's administrative hearing on the case was unfair.

ated stereotypes of American Indians and is discriminatory.

The Journal Sentinel says at least three other school districts have had administrative hearings on their nicknames.

IMAGE DRUGSFORUM.COM

Federal law, 42 USC 1996a, outlines genuine religious peyote use by only those who are Native American. It is illegal for anyone with less than one quarter Indian blood to possess cactus buttons.

PEYOTE

Continued from Page 1

ing peyote and the Native American Church (NAC), said peyote holds firm sway.

"It's so complicated," Swan said in a telephone interview. "It's difficult to know what's up with the availability of peyote. I been down there (south Texas) and that's undeniable there's not as much as there used to be."

The Sooner state remains the "cradle of peyotism." Visiting Lipan Apaches intermarried with Plains tribes and the ground work was laid for the present-day Native American Church, Swan said.

The curator cites growth for peyote (as a religion) in the 1860s around south Texas and northern Mexico circa the 1930s. Among the Native communities, peyote's place was low-key but essential. It was not until the 1960s that peyote drew a bad reputation when counter-culturists began to tout mescaline (active peyote hallucinogen) for its mystical and mythical qualities.

"It never caught on," Swan said of non-Native users. Instead, it became known as a "danger to society," during Richard Nixon's presidency in 1970 when drug schedules were created to rank drugs based on various criteria. Peyote was placed on the list of most dangerous drugs and remained there.

reputation of peyote affects its availability, NAC proponents said. Since the plant grows almost exclusively in southern Texas, that state's laws govern and monitor its commerce (which has steadily dropped since 2006). To date, official growers or peyoteros are licensed by the Drug Enforcement Agency (DEA) while NAC church branches are also registered with the state of Texas. Peyote's drop-

Peyote's dropping numbers are prompting one Indian tribe in Oklahoma to ask for broadened access through the federal level. The Caddo Nation in Binger, Oklahoma, hopes United States Department of Agriculture (USDA) tribal liaison, Janie Hipp (Chickasaw), will carry forth their petition to ease access to the cactus for tribes. Milton Sovo, Caddo Nation vice-chairman, said the tribe sat down with Hipp in a consultation at a federal workshop touted for building bridges between tribes and federal agencies.

Leaders of the 5,500-member tribe said they wanted to reach USDA secretary, Tom Vilsack, with suggestions on peyote accessibility. Meanwhile, USDA officials allow that the tribal liaison favors protecting natural environments for plants that Indians use for medicinal purposes, but peyote is not specifically named. Hipp released a departmental statement that both addressed and skirted the issue.

"Through their actions, Native Americans have provided the world's farmers with fiber and seeds that literally clothe and feed the planet. It is important that these original strains be preserved as a resource not only for Native American farmers and ranchers, but for those who will benefit from them in the future."

Criss-crossing federal agencies are also a part of the Caddos' obstacles. U.S. Department of Drug Enforcement Agency (DEA) officials said while peyote sits on the Schedule 1 drug list, changes remain unlikely. Federal statutes cite its potential for abuse or harm when using and because it has no medically sanctioned use (schedules are ranked numerically with the most dangerous drugs listed with lowest number). Currently, peyote is listed alongside drugs like Ecstasy (MDMA), Psilocybin mushrooms and LSD. Meanwhile, the Schedule 2 list has cocaine and opium which have medical applica-

Special agent Keith Brown of the DEA's New Mexico regional office said of 16 years in the region, he has not encountered trafficking or prosecution involving peyote.

"It's illegal, but when you look at other drug problems facing America or Native America, it's not peyote that's the problem," Brown said.

Drugs that are problems on reservations or amongst Indians are methamphetamine, prescription drugs or marijuana, he said.

In Texas (the Caddo Nation's aboriginal territory), state officials monitor the sales volume by its three legal vendors and put the figure at just under roughly $480,000 annually. This amount limits a market that drug runners are interested in, the DEA special agent adds.

Federal law, 42 USC 1996a, outlines genuine religious peyote use by only those who are Native American. It is illegal for anyone with less than one quarter Indian blood to possess cactus buttons. And only card-carrying members of the NAC can purchase the buttons used to ingest during religious services.

But the Caddo Nation members said they aren't interested in bending DEA laws on legality - only in increasing how much peyote they can purchase and how easily they can get to it, Sovo said.

"She (Hipp) promised to take it back to the USDA secretary," Sovo said. "It took us 10 years to get someone in Washington (D.C.) to sit down and listen to us."

Caddo Nation officials said peyote is used as a traditional Indian sacrament in their religion and is covered by the U.S. Constitution. If there's a shortage of access, they said, the feds should step up assistance to Indian peyote practitioners.

Ironically, looking for the cactus is not that difficult online. Plugging the word "peyote," into a search engine pulled up 3 million results. Outside of the United States (excluding France and Russia) laws are more lenient about buying and possessing the Lophophora williamsii, or peyote buttons. In those countries, its legality hinges on it being a botanical specimen growth, Swan said.

Peyote's restricted and illegal status is illogical, tribal officials maintain.

"Common sense is not so common it seems," Sovo said.

A lot is at stake here, Caddo chairman, Brenda Edwards, said. The Caddos will keep trying.

"Not just for us but for all tribes," Edwards said. "The soil is changing and many of the plants are not as plentiful as they once were. We'd like access to labs and answers on our soil questions as well as plants' availability back."

SUPERNAW'S ANNUAL SALE

10% OFF ON PENDLETON PRODUCTS AND BROADCLOTH 20% OFF ON EVERYTHING ELSE IN THE STORE

HACKLES, SPIKES, FLUFFS, SKINS, BEADS, SHELLS, NEEDLES, THREAD, BLANKETS, SAGE, CEDAR, BROOCHES, LOTS OF JEWELRY EVERYTHING! HURRY!

CASH OR CREDIT CARD ONLY PURCHASES MUST BE MADE IN THE STORE
OPEN NOON TO 6:00 PM WEEKDAYS
SATURDAY 10:00 AM TO 5:00 PM

SUPERNAW'S OKLAHOMA INDIAN SUPPLY 109 NORTH BROADWAY, SKIATOOK, OK 74070 COUNTRYWIDE TOLL FREE 1-888-720-1967 EMAIL: SUPERNAW@FLASH.NET

We proudly offer an array of services, from general dentistry to sedation, dental implants, and cosmetic dentistry - all designed expressly to meet our patient's changing needs. With four general dentists and four hygienists, we can maintain your oral health for a lifetime all at one location.

We Accept Contract Health & Sooner Care

We serve patients in the Drumright, Cushing, Stillwater, Stroud, Ponca City, and surrounding areas with personalized service and exemplary care. Call for your appointment today.

918-352-3312 or Toll Free 877-RH Melton drumrightdentalcenter.com

COMMENTARY

Shorn locks and the knowing of hearts

S.E. RUCKMAN

We weave a strange pattern while we are here on the planet. Still, the intricate crisscrossing of people, circumstance and places in our lives produces a beautiful design in Indian Country.

Recently, my family experienced the sudden loss of my former brother -in-law. A kind and gentle soul, the call to mourn him was intense and traditional. As a head man for the Cheyenne Dog Soldier Society, he had spent years living his life in thought of others. His give-all and take little philosophy taught me much about generosity and how to tell real from counterfeit ges-

I will keep my personal feelings about him to myself. But as we sat in the Cheyenne & Arapaho Tribes of Oklahoma community center, a larger imprint clarified. His brother, three daughters, grand-daughter and two adopted daughters (one of them, my child) sat in the family seats all sporting newly shorn hair. Most had hair that reached down their backs, but as a sign of respect and to announce their period of mourning, they relinquished it.

As a Plains Indian, this ritual is a familiar one but is often over looked as past practices fade against newer things like Power Point presentations of the dearly departed. I am all good to welcome in the new rituals but I cleave to the traditional utterances. It says who we are.

Cutting off one's hair goes back in our culture to the times when the only ownership we could claim was family, tribe and pride. All of those went a long way to securing a full life and surely it was enough because it had carried us on through the years when we became landowners (of sorts) and foreigners in our own lands.

The idea is that the mourning family is calling out to those who might see them from afar. It says: This person has suffered a terrible loss. As such, loved ones are granted ample bereavement as mourning allows. Hair-cutting is sufficient unto itself. When the hair grows out, its length similarly signals that the official mourning period's end approaches.

I was speaking to a Southeastern tribal friend who was still lamenting the loss of his mother from the year prior. I told him about the hair cutting and he had no idea what it was. Pulled by compunction, I began to look at tribal viewpoints on hair cutting. I found that other tribes outside of the (Northern and Southern) Plains did likewise in m ourning, like the Senecas. Sociologists might call this cultural similarities but I see the crisscrossing.

The sudden disappearance of our hair announces the loss of our prior identities. This was highly visible in the boarding schools attended by legions of Indian children in our collective past. Not only were the tribal clothes removed but the badge of our outer selves. Thankfully, our tribal languages and Indian names could sufficiently masquerade the inner heart.

As for the hair that was cut from my brother-in-law's immediate kin, it became a beautiful song. The various switches were placed in his casket so he would take them as he made the journey toward spiritual sunshine. The gesture wrung from me tears that I had probably stored for decades. I was comforted that he would carry them along; a physical remembrance of his loved ones as he walked.

For those in Indian Country who are looking forward to 2012, it is unquestioned that some have also recently lost a loved one. Maybe it is not so recent, but the hole is still there. These are the ones who are quizzical to see what will bloom in the flower of the New Year. Where they will go, what is in store, and who they will love becomes as a present to be unwrapped. At the same time, they are ever alert to scan the horizon for a remembrance or signal from their departed one as they reach forward.

For the record, I now know those hearts.

S.E. Ruckman is a citizen of the Wichita and Affiliated Tribes in Anadarko, Okla. She graduated from the University of Oklahoma's School of Journalism and has written for the Tulsa World and the Native American Times. She is a freelance writer who is based in Oklahoma.

Wounded Knee 1890: A day that will live in infamy

NOTES FROM INDIAN COUNTRY

TIM GIAGO (Nanwica Kciji) © 2011 Unity South Dakota

Most white South Dakotans forget that in December of 1890 there were still violent hostilities that existed between the Lakota and the United States. To this day an all-inclusive peace treaty has never been signed between the tribes of the Great Sioux Nation and the United States government.

On December 15, 1890 Tatanka Iyotanka (Sitting Bull) was shot to death by tribal police officers Red Tomahawk and Bull Head. Many of his followers fled to seek refuge with his halfbrother, Si Tanka (Big Foot). Because Big Foot had been affiliated with the new religious formation known as the Ghost Dance, and fearing arrest and reprisals, Big Foot set out for Pine Ridge after an invitation from Chief Red Cloud to join him there and assist him in finding a path to peace.

Big Foot's followers numbered around 300 and fled to Pine Ridge under a white flag of peace. They had no intention of fighting and in fact their intentions were just the opposite; all they wanted was to find a place of peace.

On December 28 they were intercepted by the 7th Cavalry, the same branch of the U. S. Army that was headed by George Armstrong Custer in 1876 at the Little Bighorn. Big Foot's band was pushed to make an encampment at Wounded Knee creek. They were stripped of their weapons.

The next morning, December 29, while forced to line up for further searches a weapon discharged and the massacre at Wounded Knee began. Without weapons, the Lakota warriors shouted to the women and children to flee and they fought the soldiers with their bare hands.

Big Foot was shot to death while lying in his tent suffering from pneumonia.

Two weeks before the massacre after hearing of the death of Sitting Bull, a newspaperman named L. Frank Baum, the same man who wrote The Wonderful Wizard of Oz a few years later, editorialized in the Aberdeen (S.D.) Saturday Review, "Sitting Bull, most renowned Sioux of modern history, is dead. He was an Indian with a white man's spirit of hatred and revenge for those who wronged him and his. With this fall the nobility of the Redskin is extinguished and what few are left are a pack of whining curs who lick the hand that smites them. The Whites, by law of conquest, by justice of civilization, are masters of the American continent, and the best safety of the frontier settlers will be secured by the total annihilation of the few remaining Indians."

My grandmother Sophie was an employee at the Holy Rosary Indian Mission, just a few miles from Wounded Knee, and told of the soldiers that rode on to the mission grounds on that freezing day in December, some with blood still on their gloves, and about how she and several of the students had to feed and water their horses.

American Horse, a prominent Lakota leader said, "There was a woman with an infant in her arms who was killed as she almost touched the flag of truce . . . A mother was shot down with her infant; the child not knowing its mother was dead, was still nursing. The women as they were fleeing with their babies were killed together, shot right through and after most all of them had been killed a cry was made that all those who were not killed or wounded should come forth and they would be safe. Little boys came out of their places of refuge, and as soon as they came in sight a number of soldiers surrounded them and butchered them."

More than 20 Medals of Honor were given to the soldiers involved in this pitiless massacre. To the Lakota people, even to this day, December 29, 1890 is a "Day that will live in infamy."

To the Lakota it will never be ancient history, but a day they will tell their children about and their children will tell it to their children. My grandmother was there and remembered that day and as a Lakota woman, she and all of our relatives were marked for annihilation by the newspaper man L. Frank Baum. He called for the genocide of the Lakota people and no one, except the Lakota people, saw any wrong in

I heard a television newsman say just last week that the shooting at Virginia Tech where 33 students were killed, was the largest mass shooting in American history. Numbers vary on the Massacre at Wounded Knee, but nearly 300 would not be far from reality. And then there were the massacres at Sand Creek and Washita to name a few more where American Indian men, women and children were shot to death.

America has never made reparations nor apologized for this Day of Infamy.

Tim Giago, an Oglala Lakota, is President of Unity South Dakota. He was a Nieman Fellow at Harvard with the Class of 1990. His weekly column won the H. L. Mencken Award in 1985. He was the founder of The Lakota Times, Indian Country Today, Lakota Journal and Native Sun News. He can be reached at UnitySoDak1@knol-

The viewpoints expressed in columns and letters are the opinions of the writers and not necessarily the opinion or viewpoint of the Native American Times publisher or staff. Letters to the editor are welcome and may be submitted via e-mail to editor@nativetimes.com or mailed to PO Box 411, Tahlequah, Okla. 74465. To be published, we require you provide your name, tribal affiliation, a phone number (which will not be published) and city of residence for verification.

LANGLEY

MONKEY ISLAND 918-257-8869

918-782-0011

www.okstatebank.com Equal Housing Lender Native American Owned

NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES recycles with Tahlequah Recycling Incorporated... shouldn't you?

Reeves Renovations Professional Construction, Remodeling & Repairs

Bathrooms • Kitchens • Paint Tile • Trim • Plumbing Electrical • Solar Panels Windmills • Winterizing Quality Work • Free Estimates

918-637-6736 johnwilliamreeves@juno.com Mayes & Cherokee Counties -

Follow Us! www.twitter.com/nativetimes

-
$\Lambda TT$	VE	$\Lambda$ $\Lambda$ $\Lambda$	EDI	[CAN	T '   ' T
$\mathbf{A}\mathbf{\Pi}$	V C /			ICAIN		MUCR

Name:
Address:
City:	State: Zip:

□ $65.00 for	52 issues	$32.50 for	26 issues

■ $16.25 for 13 issues

Mail this form with a check or money order to: Native American Times • P.O. Box 411 Tahleguah, OK 74465 • 918-708-5838

■ $1.25 single copy

MORE JOBS, MORE NEWS, MORE EVENTS. Visit online at www.nativetimes.com

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT / HELP WANTED

BIDS

Cherokee Nation whose headquarters are located in beautiful Tahlequah, Oklahoma is a national leader in Indian tribal governments and economic development in Oklahoma, We are a dynamic, progressive organization, which owns several business enterprises and administers a variety of services for the Cherokee people in Northeastern Oklahoma. Cherokee Nation offers an exceptional employee benefits plan with Comprehensive Health, Life, 401(k), Holiday Pay, Sick Leave and Annual Leave.

CURRENT OPPORTUNITIES

#5868 RFT Inpatient Registered Nurse (Hastings/7:30 am - 4:00 pm/On call), Tahlequah -1/21/12

Interested applicants please apply at www.cherokee.org

Cherokee Nation Human Resources Department PO Box 948 Tahlequah, OK 74465 (918) 453-5292 or 453-5050

Or Visit our website at: www.cherokee.org Employment will be contingent upon drug test results. Indian preference is considered.

Miss An Issue? Download back issues for FREE www.nativetimes.com

American Indian Alaska Native Tourism Association

Introducing America's First Nations to the World

AIANTA is a nonprofit association of Native American tribes and tribal businesses organized to advance Indian Country tourism. The Association is made up of member tribes from six regions: Eastern, Plains, Midwest, Southwest, Pacific Northwest, and Alaska. The purpose of the Association is to serve as the voice and resource for its constituents in advancing tourism, assist tribes in creating infrastructure and capacity, provide technical assistance, training and educational resources to tribes, tribal organizations and tribal members.

AIANTA currently is seeking to fill two positions, Finance Director and Membership Coordinator. Please visit www.aianta.org/news for complete vacancy announcement. Please submit resume including salary history and two references no later than 5:00 p.m. MST, November 28, 2011 to:

> Attn: Sherrie Bowman 2401 12th Street NW Albuquerque, NM 87104 Or electronically at sbowman@aianta.org

Architectural Project Manager

Architectural Project Manager, Tahlequal, OK: Responsible for architectural projects including the plan, design, and construction of residential structures in the rustico style. Reports to owner and designated supervising licensed Architect. Bachelor's degree in Architecture, 1 year's experience in construction projects. Resumes to: Chance Properties, LLC, V. H. Wilhelm, 2210 Golf Course Road, Tahlequah, OK,

NATIVE AMERICAN HIRING PREFERENCE?

Advertise to Native Americans! E-mail your ad for a quote to: lisa@nativetimes.com

The Pawnee Nation of Oklahoma is accepting applications for the full-time, regular status position of Title VI Program Coordinator/Department Manager. To apply, please visit our website at http://www.pawneenation.org

Director of Native American Recruitment

Bacone College is looking for a Director of Native American Recruitment. This is a full-time, 12-month position designed to reach out to the Native American market across America and express Bacone College's primary focus and interest in recruiting and retaining Native American students that reflect its mission and heritage. Recruitment will focus primarily on Native American prospective students interested in attending Bacone College and working as a point of contact with these students throughout matriculation.

This position requires extensive travel within Oklahoma and the United States. The person selected for this position is primarily responsible for recruitment of Native American students and maintaining secondary education relationships.

Send letter of application, vita, transcripts, and three references humanresources@bacone. edu or Human Resources, Bacone College, 2299 Old Bacone Road, Muskogee, OK 74403. Bacone College is a private four-year college with a mission to provide opportunities to American Indian students and employees. EOE

SUB-BID ANNOUNCEMENT

PROJECT: Pawnee Nation, 2010 ICDBG New Law Enforcement Building OWNER: Pawnee Nation of Oklahoma NO CALLS TO OWNER. ARCHITECT: Anishinabe Design NO CALLS TO ARCHITECT. CONSTRUCTION MANAGER: Builder's Unlimited, Inc. 4677 S. 83rd E. Avenue, Tulsa, OK 74145 (918)835-1138 Fax: (918)834-5865 Contacts: Glenna Clark, Bid/Project Coordinator for bid and document questions. gclarkbuitulsa@tulsacoxmail.com

PRE-BID DATE: December 21, 2011 @ 10:00 AM, Meet at Pawnee Nation of Oklahoma, Conference Room, 881 Little Dee Drive then a site visit is scheduled immediately following. **NOT MANDATORY, HIGHLY ENCOURAGED.

BID DATE: Sealed proposals will be received until no later than 2:00 p.m. on Friday, January 6, 2012.

INDIAN PREFERENCE DOES APPLY -MUST PROVIDE COPY OF CDIB CARD OR TERO CERTIFICATION WITH SEALED BID. PREVAILING WAGE DOES APPLY.

Sealed proposals shall be delivered to: Pawnee Nation c/o Builders Unlimited, Inc. 881 Little Dee Drive Pawnee, Ok. 74058

Look for Native American Times on Facebook! Friends get front page scoops and breaking news.

SERVICES

Native American Electrician

1st Call Electric

Reasonable Rates • At Cost Material

918-277-1610

Licensed • Insured • Bonded • OK#70011

Serving Northeast Oklahoma

Advanced Energy Solutions

(Heating & Air Conditioning)

Serving Oklahoma City and the surrounding area.

Service, repair and installation of all brands

* * American Standard Dealer * *

405-315-6116

Expert Owner Operation • You can relax when AES is on the job

Commercial Janitorial Services/Supplies ✓ Landscaping Services Big Time Maintenance Solutions (405) 338-8180

American Indian Owned

Metal Roofing & Siding

Professional Construction and Home Repairs

Free Estimates

Charles Snell 918-507-2902

Native American Contractor

Call to reserve your brand today!

405-933-2474

702 E Central • Anadarko, Okla.

EVENTS

*Email your powwow or other event info to: Lisa@ nativetimes.com. Name, date, time, place and contact information is free.

EVERY WEDNESDAY Kiowa class, October-No-Oliphant Hall, Tulsa University. Info call Sarah, (918) 445-5213

EVERY THURSDAY The Otoe-Missouria Substance Abuse and Behavioral Health Programs sponsor an open group for families touched by addiction from noon to 1 p.m. at the Otoe-Missouria Health Building. This is a confidential group. Call 580-723-4466 x252 or x262 for more information.

SECOND TUESDAY Cherokee Artists Association meeting at 202 E. 5th Street Tahlequah, Okla.

Phone: (918) 458-0008 Web site: www.cherokeeartistsassociation.org

THIRD TUESDAY of even numbered months - The Central Oklahoma Cherokee Alliance meets at Mayflower vember, 6:30 pm, Room 300, UCC Church, Oklahoma City at 6 p.m. Phone: (405) 408-0763. The next meeting is Feb. 16.

> FOURTH THURSDAY Each month the American Indian Chamber of Commerce of Oklahoma - Eastern Chapter hosts a monthly luncheon at Bacone College Muskogee, Okla. 11:30 a.m. at Benjamin Wacoche Hall. Please RSVP one week ahead of time. Phone: (918) 230-3759

FIRST FRIDAY Indian Taco Sale, 11:00 a.m. - 2:00 p.m. at Norman First American UMC, 1950

Beaumont Drive, Norman, OK 73071, 405/321-5640

FIRST FRIDAY Indian Art Market at Concho Community Building, Concho, Okla. Phone: (405) 422-7622. All Indian artists are invited to come and sell/ share their work.

EVERY 2ND SATURDAY Indian Taco Sales - from 11-2:30pm at OK Choctaw Tribal Alliance, 5320 S. Youngs Blvd, Oklahoma City www.okchoctaws.org

MONDAYS, WEDNESDAYS AND THURSDAYS The Marble City Nutrition Center serves hot meals at the Marble City Community Center at 11:30 a.m. Meals are free to anyone over 50, but a small donation is suggested to help with the expense of the program. Gather for fellowship and friendship. Volunteers welcome. Marble City Nutrition Center, 711 N. Main, Marble City, Okla. Phone: (918) 775-2158

YOUTH COUNCIL The Native Nations Youth Council (NNYC) bimonthly meetings from 6:30pm - 8:30pm @ the Youth Services of Tulsa Activity Center (311 S. Madison - on 3rd just west of Peoria). Call to confirm location. Info Call: Chad Gilley (918) 382-2204 or nnyc@ihcrc.org

THROUGH JANUARY 10 Blackbear Bosin artwork featured in The Red Earth Museum & Gallery. Open free to the public Monday – Friday and Saturday by appointment. Located at 6 Santa Fe Plaza next to the Skirvin Hilton Hotel in Oklahoma City. Visit www. redearth.org or call (405)

427-5228 for more informa-

THROUGH JANUARY 2012 Cowboys & Indians Revisited - an exhibit at the Science Museum Oklahoma featuring metal work by Caddo artist Darroll Joe Reddick. 2100 NE 52nd St, Oklahoma City. Info call 405-602-6664 or ScienceMuseumOK.org

Oklahoma City Powwow Club New Years Dance at Centennial Building (aka Kitchens Bldg.) Oklahoma State Fair Grounds. Gourd Dancing at 2pm and 6pm. Grand Entry at 7pm. Tiny Tots Special. Info call 405-

JANUARY 7

919-1572.

JANUARY 8 Rogers County Cherokee Association meeting at 2 p.m. Call Lee Keener 918-346-0078

JANUARY 14 80th Birthday Dance for Moses Starr at Concho Community Hall, Concho, Okla. Gourd Dancing @ 2pm Supper @ 6pm

JANUARY 19 South Coffeyville Cherokee Community meeting at 6:30 p.m. Call Vickie Brokeshoulder 918-822-2893

JANUARY 24 Vinita Indian Territory Coalition Cherokee Community meeting at 6 p.m. Call Lisa Trice-Turtle 918-453-2988

JANUARY 30-FEBRUARY 5 Tulsa Boat Show, Quik Trip Center, Tulsa, Okla. (918) 519-1219

*Email your event information to lisa@nativetimes. com or fax your flyer to 888-689-5245.

Program trains workers for energy jobs

The program is open to anyone with a high school diploma or GED and OERB offers some scholarships, while many employers pay for the continued education.

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) - The cyclical nature of the oil and natural gas industry sometimes makes it difficult for companies to find qualified employees.

The industry currently is struggling to find replacements for its aging workforce, so the Oklahoma Energy Resources Board created a training program to prepare interested students to fill a variety of technical roles.

"It's really been well received by the industry," said board member Tim Munson, exploration manager for Oklahoma City's Spartan Resources LLC.

Munson helped set up OERB's PetroTech program with a few other industry professionals after OERB Director Mindy Stitt and former board member Mike Terry came up with the idea for the training program.

He also helped recruit other professionals to teach classes focused on key technical areas.

OERB now offers PetroTech classes in two sessions each year at Francis Tuttle Technology Center. Another program was started about two years ago at Tulsa Technology Center.

Munson said it takes about a year to complete the program, which includes 14 classes. Each one spans up to five classroom sessions, encompassing a total of more than 170 hours.

He said the classes offer students an introduction to all aspects of the oil and gas industry, while allowing them to build a network of professional contacts as they learn.

"A lot of our students actually get hired before they even get out," Munson said.

Natalie Young-Schneider completed the PetroTech program in 2008 in only three

She said she heard about the OERB program from a customer while working on the energy trading desk at a local bank.

Young-Schneider, 30, was interested in continuing her education, since she didn't have a college degree at that time.

"It was really easy and convenient," she said. The PetroTech classes at Francis Tuttle were at night, so they didn't conflict with her job.

Young-Schneider said she was able to test out of a few classes, so she completed the program faster than usual.

Young-Schneider said she appreciated the opportunity to learn from industry professionals. She also said she enjoyed learning about several aspects of the oil and gas industry, but she remained drawn to the financial side of the business.

Young-Schneider ended up landing a job marketing derivatives at Chaparral Energy Inc. in August 2008. She credits her prior experience and her PetroTech training for her hir-

The PetroTech program has won plenty of fans at Chaparral.

"As the oil and gas industry has continued to grow in the Oklahoma City area, the shortage of experienced oil and gas employees has continued to also grow," said Diane Montgomery, vice president of finance and investor relations at Chaparral Energy Inc.

"The PetroTech training program provided by OERB has been a good resource in assisting Chaparral in filling that gap by training employees for tech positions in land, geology, engineering and marketing."

More than 130 people have completed the technical training program since it was implemented in 2007.

"Chaparral has a number of employees who have completed OERB's PetroTech program and we value the expertise gained through the training," Montgomery said. "The program provides education highly concentrated on the actual day-to-day activities of the energy industry."

Munson said the makeup of PetroTech students has changed a bit since the program be-

It was meant to help train outsiders for jobs in the oil and gas industry, but he said now more industry workers are taking classes to open up new opportunities with their current

"It's really paid off wonderfully for everyone." Munson said.

He said the PetroTech courses are affordable, with the entire set of classes costing only about OERB offers some scholarships, while many employers pay for the continued education.

The program is open to anyone with a high school diploma or GED.

For more information, call (405) 942-5323, ext. 231 or toll-free 1-800-664-1301, ext. 231; email petrotech@oerb.com or go online at www.oerb.com.

In this 2009 photo, Oaks Indian Mission residents enjoy an evening meal together in the mission's cafeteria.

Oaks Indian Mission needing donations

OAKS, Okla. - The Oaks Mission in Delaware County is asking for donations for the Native American children it cares for at its residential fa-

The 167-year-old mission is a home for children who are abused, neglected or abandoned or children whose parents cannot care for them for various reasons. The mission usually cares for 30 to 40 children ranging in ages 3 to 18.

The mission's needs range from recreational equipment to laundry detergent. Staff is requesting board games, pillows, dish soap, toothbrush holders, bicycles, Wii games, storage containers, arts and crafts sets, bleach, laundry baskets, disinfectant spray and wipes, clothes hampers and 14- and 15-gallon trash

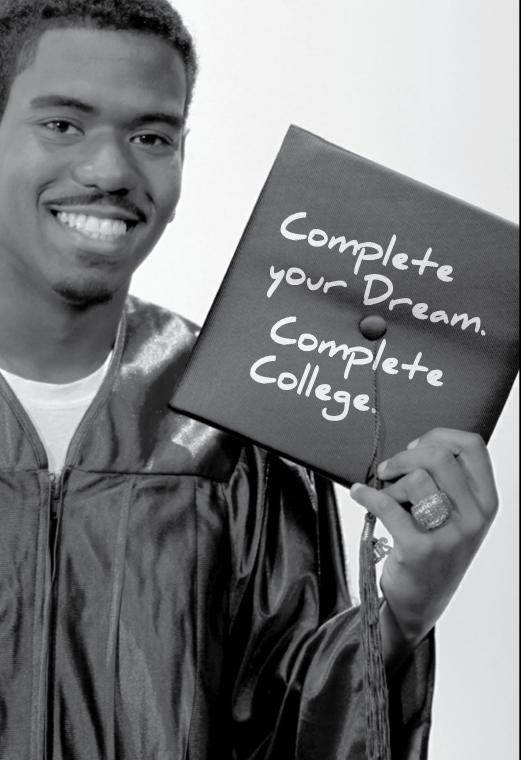

The mission is also in need of clothing in all sizes for children ages 5 to 18, socks and underwear for ages 10 and up, home décor items, area rugs, carpet cleaner, pot holders, Brita water filters for faucets, towels, wash cloths, hair brushes, used but good pots and pans, cooking utensils, first aid kits, medical supplies and Tylenol and Motrin.

The mission is also asking for donations of a butchered calf or pig.

In 1892, with the future of Indian Territory missions in doubt because of the assignment of land allotments by the Dawes Commission, the Danish Evangelical Lutheran Church opened a school at the mission site, which was then called Springplace Mission. A church was established in October 1903 named Eben Ezer Lutheran Church and still operates today. The church and mission became the nucleus of Oaks. In 1926, the Oaks Indian Mission was established as a children's home.

Today, the mission is a nonprofit agency and is funded through private donations. For more information, call 918-868-2196 or visit online at www.oaksindianmission.

Choctaw Nation aids battle against diabetes related blindness

TRAVIS MORROW

OKLAHOMA CITY - The Choctaw Nation of Oklahoma has awarded $1 million to the Dean McGee Eye Institute to aid their efforts in fighting diabetes related blindness among Native Americans.

According to the National Institute of Health, diabetes is the leading cause of blindness among adults and such diabetes afflicts over 16 percent of Native Americans treated by the Indian Health Service.

The Dean McGee Eye Institute, which has worked with the Choctaw Nation on these matters since 2001, is currently building a 78,000 squarefoot state-of-the-art research and clinical facility and renovating its currently existing building.

"This gift helps to expand our clinical and research capabilities in treating and preventing vision loss from diabetes and other disorders in the hundreds of tribal members who visit our doctors," said Dr. Gregory Skuta, chief executive of Dean McGee.

According to the Dean McGee Eye Institute, its doctors provide services for over 150,000 patient visits each year and have treated more than 3,000 tribal members at its clinics in Oklahoma City and Talihina.

"Encouraging American Indians to seek vision care is a major health goal of the Choctaw Nation," said Gregory E. Pyle, Chief of the Choctaw Nation, "especially considering the high risk of diabetic retinopathy in this popula-

Chief Pyle especially noted Dean McGee's establishment of rural clinics, such as the one in Talihina, in order to aid in the early diagnosis of diabetes related eye disease. These early detection efforts have enabled patients to achieve better treatment outcomes.

"This is an excellent example of collaboration between tribal health care systems and those who provide services to Indian patients," said Chief

The Dean McGee facility currently houses the Department of Ophthalmology for

The Dean McGee Eye Institute, which has worked with the Choctaw Nation on these matters since 2001, is currently building a 78,000 square-foot state-of-the-art research and clinical facility.

College of Medicine. With the doubled for research laborato-the University of Oklahoma new expansion, space will be ries and clinical capacity will be increased by 40 percent.

Study finds reduced lung function may signal diabetes

TAHLEQUAH, Okla. - University of Oklahoma Health Sciences Center researchers have found reduced lung function might be a sign of diabetes in Native Americans, according to a new published

The study is published in the October 2011 issue of Diabetes Care, a journal focusing on diabetes and heart disease in Native American populations.

The Center for American Indian Health Research at the OU College of Public Health conducted the study. Researchers looked at Native American men and women with and without diabetes and measured lung functions.

They found decreased lung function often preceded signs of diabetes, said Fawn Yeh, College of Public Health professor and researcher.

Lung function tests measure the strength of the lungs, air capacity, exhaling capacity and exhaling speed. The lung function was a possible indictor of Type 2 diabetes, which is characterized by an inability to eliminate sugars from the blood because of an insulin resistance.

Doctors test blood glucose and sugar levels to determine whether a patient is diabetic, Yeh said, and lung impairment develops prior to this.

The study is not definitive enough to say decreased lung function will be a sure predictor of diabetes, but it is a step in the right direction, Yeh said. Diabetes is often part of a larger problem called metabolic Metabolic syndrome consists increased fat in the blood, reduced high-density lipoprotein cholesterol, high blood pressure and high glucose levels, according to the study paper. It can lead to diabetes and heart disease.

Yeh is now studying why Native Americans might have decreased lung function and how it is related to metabolic syndrome, she said.

This is one of the first studies to look specifically at Native American populations, which has one of the highest diabetes rates in the U.S., according to the "Oklahoma has very high rates of diabetes driven by a growing problem with overweight and obesity," said Gary Raskob, dean of the OU College of Public Health. "Our state has very high rates of chronic obstructive lung disease, largely due to smoking. The fact that a diabetic patient may be at greater risk of lung disease strongly supports the need to address tobacco use, as well as obesity."

It is important doctors be aware that diabetes patients, especially Native Americans, might have reduced lung function so they know to look for it, Yeh said.

AARP Oklahoma launches Indian Elder Navigator

OKLAHOMA CITY - The AARP in Oklahoma has announced the launch of its Oklahoma Indian Elder Navigator, a single point of entry website for Indian elder services.

The site can be accessed at www.aarp.org/okindiannavigator.

"We hope that this new website will be a place where Indian elders from any Oklahoma Indian tribe can go to find the service or resource that best fits their needs," said AARP Executive Council Member and former Absentee Shawnee Tribe Gov. John Edwards. "We envision it as a 'living room' of information for tribal elders."

The AARP Indian Elder Navigator is designed to be a resource center where tribes can list their respective contact information and resources on such topics as housing, transportation and health care. At its launch, information on tribal nutrition and food commodity programs were posted on the Going forward, AARP officials said they hope to work directly with tribal leaders and program directors from all federally recognized tribes in Oklahoma to add new and updated information to the AARP Oklahoma Indian Elder Navigator. Program directors with questions about adding their programs' information can email Craig Davis at cedavis@aarp.org.

The Summer University Program of the Indian University of North America

A partnership between The Crazy Horse Memorial Foundation and the University of South Dakota

The 8 1/2-week program begins on Saturday, June 9 and ends on Wednesday, August 8, 2012.

Applications are being accepted now.

For more information visit: www.usd.edu/summerschool/crazy-horse.cfm

UNIVERSITY OF SOUTH DAKOTA

414 East Clark Street Vermillion, SD 57069 605-677-6240 • 800-233-7937 www.usd.edu/cde

Crazy Horse Memorial 12151 Avenue of the Chiefs Crazy Horse, SD 57730 605-673-4681 www.crazyhorsememorial.org

Good oral health critical for diabetic patients

TAHLEQUAH, Okla. - There is a critical need to educate the 26 million people in America living with diabetes about oral health.

Ninety-five percent of people living with diabetes also have a form of gum disease. This is significant in comparison to the fact that only 50 percent of the general population has a form of gum disease. The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention reports that people with diabetes are twice as likely to develop serious gum disease as people without diabetes.

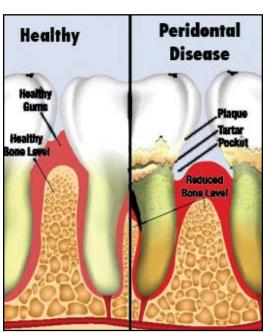

"People living with diabetes are at an increased risk for developing periodontal disease because they are generally more susceptible to bacterial infection and have a decreased ability to fight bacteria that invade the gums," said Dr. Maria Emanuel Ryan, professor of oral biology and pathology at Stony Brook University. "Conversely, scientific evidence suggests that periodontal disease may play a serious role in the development and progression of diabetes by adversely affecting blood glucose control. It is important that both patients and their health care providers be aware of the connection, monitor and take appropriate action to both prevent and treat periodontal disease."

The link between oral health and diabetes is particularly important in Indian Country, where, according to the American Diabetes Association, American Indians and Alaskan Natives have a 2.2 times higher likelihood to have diabetes compared to white Americans. In addition, 95 percent of Native people coping with diabetes have Type II diabetes, and 30 percent of Native people have pre-diabetes.

Unfortunately, throughout much of Indian Country, access to professional oral health care is limited.

The Native American Oral Health Care Project, an ADA-sponsored initiative that seeks to collaborate with Indian tribes to improve oral health, reports that dental decay is 300 times more likely throughout Indian Country than it is in the general U.S. population. This statistic is even more alarming when the high diabetes rate among Native people is considered.

"Studies have shown that untreated periodontal disease can make it more difficult to control diabetes so that no matter how much you watch your diet or whether you are good about taking your medications you may find that it gets harder and harder to keep your blood sugar levels down because the infection and inflammation in your mouth is causing insulin resistance, thwarting your efforts to gain control of your diabetes," Ryan said.

COURTESY

Ryan added that recent studies have indicated that the risk of developing diabetes is twice as likely in people with varying degrees of periodontitis followed over two decades. Periodontitis is the inflammation and infection of the tissue and bones surrounding the teeth.

A big misconception is that patients always experience pain if they have gum disease; this is not the case and is especially important for diabetes patients to know and watch for the following signs and symptoms: bleeding gums when you brush or floss; red, swollen, puffy or sore gums; gums that have pulled away from your teeth; changes in the way your teeth fit together when you bite; pus that appears between your teeth and gums; and constant bad breath or a bad taste in your mouth.

People living with diabetes and those who may be at risk should take an active role in their condition management to combat the risk of gum disease and other oral health problems by flossing, visiting the dentist regularly and brushing twice daily with antibacterial toothpaste.

Inside this issue:

- Creeks inaugurate new Chief
- Lawmakers have new Indian member
- Mohegan Sun fails to refinance debt

TODAY'S INDEPENDENT INDIAN NEWS

- A FREE PUBLICATION

WWW.NATIVETIMES.COM

VOLUME 18 • ISSUE 2

PUBLISHED WEEKLY

JANUARY 13, 2012

Tribes concerned about water, gaming

ANDY MARSO

The Topeka-Capital Journal

TOPEKA, Kan. (AP) -Ponka-We Victors, the only American Indian member of the Kansas Legislature, lived on the Tohono O'odham reservation in Arizona several years ago during college.

She remembers when farmers and residents of a nearby town diverted too much of the area's water for irrigation, leaving the tribe parched.

"I'm telling you, that is the most horrible thing to wake up to," Victors said recently. "You can't bathe, you can't cook, you can't really do anything. I felt bad for the elders and the chil-

Victors, D-Wichita, said water policy is something that is on the minds of the state's Indian tribes going into the upcoming session.

The Kickapoo nation in Horton has been embroiled in a federal lawsuit for almost five years over the right to build a reservoir that tribal Chairman Steve Cadue said is sorely needed.

"We're in desperate need of water," Cadue said. "Of course, safe drinking water is the main purpose, but it affects

See TRIBES Continued on Page 4

Ponka-We Victors, D-Wichita

Kateri Circle Celebrates Announcement

Dorothy Whitehorse Delaune is an enrolled citizen of the Kiowa Tribe and a member of the St. Patrick's Catholic Church Kateri Circle in Anadarko, Okla.. She is standing in front of the parish's shrine to Blessed Kateri Tekakwitha, who will be canonized in an upcoming ceremony of the Roman Catholic Church.

Catholic Church recognizes first Native American saint

BRIAN DAFFRON

ANADARKO, Okla. - December 19, 2011 saw the signing of a decree by the Vatican officially recognizing the miracle of Blessed Kateri Tekakwitha, with an official date for canonization in the near future. This will make Blessed Kateri (1656-1680) of the Mohawk and Algonquin Nations, to be the first Native American saint of the Roman Catholic Church.

Blessed Kateri, listed as an "American layperson" on the Vatican Radio website, survived smallpox as a child, which left her disfigured and with impaired vision. She reached beatified status in 1980 under Pope John Paul II. The recognized miracle attributed to Blessed Kateri is

See SAINT Continued on Page 7

Senators, congressman oppose planned casino

TULSA, Okla. (AP) -Oklahoma's two U.S. senators and a U.S. representative have joined the opposition to a casino an American Indian tribe is building in Broken Arrow.

U.S. Rep. John Sullivan told the Tulsa World that he and Sen. Tom Coburn have sent letters to National Indian Gaming Commission Chairwoman Tracie Stevens and Assistant U.S. Interior Secretary Larry Echo Hawk inquiring about the status of the Kialegee Tribal Town's efforts to have land approved for a casino.

Construction has begun at the site, even though there has been no formal approval of a casino there.

Sen. Jim Inhofe said in a statement that he does not believe the Bureau of Indian Affairs will approve a casino at the site.

"Given the strong local opposition to a casino at this location and the land's proximity to schools and homes, I do not believe that the BIA would approve such an application," Inhofe said.

Records show that the property is owned by sisters Marcella Giles and Wynema Capps, who tried to transfer it to the Kialegee Tribal Town through a lease, but a Tulsa County district court judge withheld approval of that request, saying they could present the proposal to the U.S. Secretary of the Interior.

Sullivan said he thinks the proposed land transfer is illegal.

"We want to put pressure on the NIGC and the BIA," Sullivan said. "We want to derail this."

Tiger Hobia, the Town King of the Kialegee Tribal

U.S. Rep. John Sullivan

Town, has declined interview requests, but said in a Dec. 24 statement that the tribe has no other economic development opportunities.

"The Kialegee Tribal Town project is the epitome of the Congressional vision for Indian economic development," his statement said, adding, "This is one of the very reasons the Indian Gaming Act was enacted."

Investigators probe cause of Blackfeet fires

BROWNING, (AP) - Investigators believe a downed power line and a spark from a chimney may have caused the two wildfires that scorched 16,000 acres on the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, a tribal spokesman said Jan. 6.

The rare winter fires sprung up at about the same time during the evening Jan. 4 outside of Browning. High wind gusts spread the flames east away from the city, burning at least two houses and a still-undetermined number of barns and sheds.

A portion of U.S. Highway 2 was closed and hundreds were forced from their homes and a boarding school. No injuries were reported.

Fire crews from the tribe, surrounding counties and federal agencies worked through the night to beat back the rapidly spreading blazes, finally aided by rain early Thursday and a snow shower later in the day.

The fires were 95 percent contained by Friday afternoon, with fire officials expecting complete containment by Monday, said tribal spokesman Wayne Smith.

Officials have not yet finished their investigation, but Smith says they have ruled out arson.

Investigators and Glacier Electric Cooperative Inc. officials said a power line downed by the wind was the likely cause of one of the fires. The investigators also believe that a stray tinder from a chimney may have caused the other fire, but they were double-checking

See FIRES Continued on Page 3

Reservation works to preserve Salish language

MYERS REECE Flathead Beacon

KALISPELL, Mont. (AP) – Fewer than 50 people are believed to speak Salish fluently on the Flathead Indian Reservation and most of them are in their 70s, leaving a deeply uncertain future for the language in Northwest

With that in mind, Rosie Matt,

Chaney Bell and Echo Brown have started up the Salish Institute, a grassroots movement dedicated to improving the "health, culture, education and environment of the Salish and Pend d'Oreille people."

The institute, a nonprofit organization based out of St. Ignatius, has held three community meetings since October and will have more in the future. Though the gatherings are open to discussion on any community issue, attendees have made clear that a primary concern is keeping the Salish language alive, Matt said.

The institute, which also hosts weekly Salish language choir practices for youths, is developing partnerships with other organizations in the hopes of creating a network that can achieve

See SALISH Continued on Page 4

This undated photo shows a 2011 gathering of the Salish Institute on the Flathead Indian Reservation in Montana. Fewer than 50 people are believed to speak Salish fluently on the Flathead Indian Reservation and most of them are in their 70s, leaving a deeply uncertain future for the language in Northwest Montana

Tiger promises progress in inaugural address

Along with plans for expedited housing access and stronger economic development, Tiger announced an overhaul to the Muscogee (Creek) Nation judiciary.

STAFF REPORTS

OKUMULGEE, Okla. — After being sworn in Saturday morning before a packed house at the Claude A. Cox Omniplex's Multipurpose Building, Muscogee (Creek) Chief George Tiger made one overarching promise.

"Change is happening and I pledge to you that though there may be hard challenges, we will overcome any obstacle in our nation's progress through perseverance and a shared vision that has helped us, as a people, endure and triumph," he said in his inaugural address.

Along with plans for expedited housing access and stronger economic development, Tiger announced an overhaul to the Muscogee (Creek) Nation judiciary.

In an emergency meeting in late December, the National Council passed legislation that will abolish the tribe's single district court and replace it with three inferior courts that will each deal with a specific area: civil cases, criminal cases and family cases.

The National Council passed similar legislation in late 2010 that was not enacted and yielded lawsuits between the legislative and executive oranches.

Tiger also expressed interest in building and strengthr- ening relationships with state,

L. MIDDLETON / NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES

George Tiger and wife Francis greet well-wishers after the Creek Nation inauguration ceremony Jan. 7 at the Claude A. Cox Multipurose Building in Okmulgee, Okla..

federal and tribal officials, including resuming regular meetings among the leaders of the Five Civilized Tribes.

The new chief did not comment on the Kialegee Tribal Town's on-going efforts to open a casino in Broken Arrow, Okla., despite growing opposition from local residents and officials. The 439-member tribal town, headquartered in Wetumka, Okla., is federally recognized as a separate tribe, but is also considered part of the Muscogee (Creek) Nation.

"I will be addressing that in an official manner – maybe next week, maybe two weeks," Tiger said in a post-ceremony press conference.

A graduate of Haskell Indian Nations University and 14-year member of the Muscogee (Creek) Nation National Council, Tiger defeated Mike Flud in a November run-off election to succeed A.D. Ellis. Ellis did not run for re-election due to term limits.

Prior to Tiger taking the oath of office, Second Chief Roger Barnett and recently elected members of the National Council were also sworn in, taking the oaths of office in both English and Creek.

Tulsa District representatives Samuel Alexander and Cherrah Ridge, both of Broken Arrow, Okla., are the council's new speaker and deputy speaker respectively.

Barnett, a native of Bristow, Okla., is a veteran of the U.S. Army and represented the Creek District on the National Council for 12 years, including serving as speaker during the previous session.

Cheyenne River Sioux could lose buffalo herd in $1M dispute

The tribe's chairman, Kevin Keckler, wouldn't specify the size of the tribe's buffalo herd or comment on the case.

RAPID CITY, S.D. (AP) – The Cheyenne River Sioux tribe may lose its buffalo herd if it cannot settle a $1 million claim by a rancher who says he was not paid for 308 bison that he sold to a tribal company five years ago.

Unless the tribe and the rancher, Clint Amiotte of Interior, can reach an agreement by Thursday, the U.S. marshal intends to auction the tribe's herd on Jan. 23, according to a letter Amiotte's lawyer sent to the tribe's chairman, tribal council and attorneys.

Amiotte's attorney, Allison F. Eklund of Roseville, Minn., declined comment on the case Friday.

Amiotte was granted a judgment of almost $1.1 million against a tribal company, Pte Hca Ka Inc., in August 2010 after the company did not contest the rancher's claims. The amount of money owed has since been reduced to about $750,000, not including interest, court filings say.

The Rapid City Journal reported that the tribe's chairman, Kevin Keckler, wouldn't specify the size of the tribe's buffalo herd or comment on the case. Court documents indicate the tribe owns more than 400 bison.

Since the judgment was ordered, Pte Hca Ka has been working to have it set aside. U.S. District Judge Roberto Lange has not ruled on the request.

The Cheyenne River Sioux reservation is in north-central South Dakota, north of Pierre. Interior is about 70 miles southeast of Rapid City.

Amiotte shipped his buffalo in July and August of 2006 to slaughterhouses on the reservation and in Omaha, Neb., court documents say. He said he received one payment that summer, a $12,337 check from Pte Hca Ka, which bounced.

Since then, Amiotte has been paid $7,500 by Pte Hca Ka and $10,000 by the Cheyenne River tribe, as well as money seized from a bank account and payments from landowners who have been leasing land from Pte Hca Ka.

Tahlequah attorney nominated for Cherokee Nation AG post

TAHLEQUAH, Okla. – Cherokee Nation Principal Chief Bill John Baker announced Jan. 6 that he is nominating Tahlequah lawyer Todd Hembree to be the tribe's next attorney general.

"Todd has a wealth of Indian law experience," Baker said. "His professional and personal backgrounds make him a natural fit to be the next attorney general of the Cherokee Nation."

Originally from the Greasy community in southern Adair County, Hembree is a graduate of Stilwell High School, Northeastern State University and the University of Notre Dame Law

A practicing attorney for more than 20 years, Hembree has served as independent counsel for the Cherokee Nation's legislative branch for 12 years.

"I am very honored to receive this nomination for attorney general," Hembree said. "Since 1999, I have represented the Tribal Council and I consider this to be the most fulfilling experience of my professional career. However, I now look forward to representing the Cherokee Nation as a whole, enforcing its laws and defending our sovereignty."

Hembree will go before the Tribal Council's Rules Committee on Jan. 26. If confirmed, he will go before the full council in February. He would succeed current attorney general A. Diane Hammons, whose term expired in 2011.

Oklahoma Tobacco Helpline

NOTICE FOR OSAGE COUNTY

(WEATHER PERMITTING)

THE OSAGE COUNTY ASSESSOR WILL BE AT THE FOLLOWING LOCATIONS:

SKIATOOK-COMMUNITY CENTER-220 S. BROADWAY – JANUARY 12, 10:00 A.M. – 3:00 P.M. AND MARCH 9, 10:00 A.M. – 3:00 P.M.

SAND SPRINGS- HEALTH CENTER-306 E. BROADWAY- JANUARY 13, 11:00 A.M. – 1:00 P.M. AND MARCH 8, 10:00 A.M. – 3:00 P.M.

SHIDLER- SENIOR CITIZENS CENTER – 125 S. COSDEN - JANUARY 17, 11:00 A.M. – 1:00 P.M. FAIRFAX – SENIOR CITIZENS CENTER – 600 W. HARRISON-JANUARY 18, 11:00 A.M. – 1:00 P.M.

TULSA – GILCREASE HILLS HOMEOWNERS ASSOC. – 1919 W. SEMINOLE – JANUARY 19, 10:00 A.M. – 2:00 P.M. AND MARCH 6, 10:00 A.M. – 3:00 P.M.

McCORD - SENIOR CITIZENS CENTER-115 MARY RD JANUARYY 20, 10:00 A.M. – 2:00 P.M. AND MARCH 7, 10:00 A.M. – 3:00 P.M.

 $HULAH-SENIOR\ CITIZENS\ CENTER-1924\ CR\ 3575-JANUARY\ 23,\ 11:00\ A.M.-1:00\ P.M.$

PRUE - SENIOR CITIZENS CENTER -209 WAH GRA SEE- JANUARY 24, 10:00 A.M. - 2:00 P.M

BARTLESVILLE – LABADIE HEIGHTS BAPTIST CHURCH – SW OF CITY, JANUARY 25, 10:00 A.M. – 2:00 P.M SPERRY – CITY HALL – 115 N. CINCINNATI - JANUARY 26, 10:00 A.M. – 2:00 P.M

BURBANK - CITY HALL –105 FIRST ST – JANUARY 27, 10:00 A.M. – 12:00 NOON

FOR THE PURPOSE OF

TAKING NEW APPLICATIONS FOR HOMESTEAD EXEMPTION, DOUBLE HOMESTEAD EXEMPTION, SENIOR FREEZE, VETERANS EXEMPTION, REPORTING CHANGES MADE TO YOUR PROPERTY AND/OR BUILDINGS, TURNING IN MANUFACTURED HOMES, RENDERING BUSINESS PERSONALS, REPORTING FARM EQUIPMENT, TRACTORS, BOAT DOCKS, ETC., AND APPLYING FOR AGRICULTURE FUEL EXEMPTION.

DEADLINE FOR FILING IS MARCH 15, 2012

ADDITIONAL HOMESTEAD EXEMPTION: AN ADDITIONAL EXEMPTION WILL BE GRANTED FOR ALL HOUSEHOLDS WITH A GROSS INCOME (COLLECTIVE INCOME OF ANY AND ALL SOURCES OF ALL PERSONS LIVING IN THE HOMESTEAD) NOT TO EXCEED $20,000.00 FOR THE PRECEEDING CALENDAR YEAR. THERE ARE NO AGE REQUIREMENTS. HOWEVER, FOR A PERMANENT EXEMPTION, YOU MUST FILE AT AGE 65, AND YOU MUST BE 65 AS OF MARCH 15TH. IF 66 YEARS OR OLDER AND QUALIFIED IN 2011, NO ANNUAL APPLICATION IS REQUIRED. FOR MORE DETAILS CALL 918-287-3448.

VETERANS EXEMPTION: 100% DISABLED OR SURVIVING SPOUSE MAY NOW APPLY FOR A PROPERTY TAX EXEMPTION THAT WILL ELIMINATE THEIR TAX BURDEN ON HOMESTEAD PROPERTY. APPLICANT MUST PROVIDE A CURRENT U.S.D.V.A. BENEFITS AWARD LETTER WITH QUALIFICATIONS SPECIFIC TO THIS EXEMPTION THAT CERTIFIES THE 100% SERVICE RELATED DISABILITY.

PROPERTY VALUATION FREEZE (AKA: SENIOR FREEZE): THE OWNER MUST BE 65 YEARS OLD OR OLDER AS OF JANUARY 1ST, 2012; AND GROSS HOUSEHOLD INCOME LEVEL CANNOT EXCEED $59,600.00 FOR THE 2011 YEAR. TO QUALIFY THE TAXPAYER MUST PROVIDE COPIES OF 2011 PAPERS TO VERIFY TOTAL HOUSEHOLD INCOME OF ALL OCCUPANTS LIVING IN THE HOMESTEAD PROPERTY. TOTAL HOUSEHOLD INCOME INCLUDES ALL TAXABLE AND NON-TAXABLE INCOME SOURCES. THE STATE OF OKLAHOMA WILL VERIFY ALL APPLICANTS.

IT IS THE RESPONSIBILITY OF THE TAXPAYER TO NOTIFY THIS OFFICE IF INCOME EXCEEDS THE QUALIFIED AMOUNTS.

HOUSE BILL #1724: IF PERSONAL PROPERTY TAXES ARE DELINQUENT, YOUR HOMESTEAD EXEMPTION WILL BE CANCELLED.

GAIL HEDGCOTH, OSAGE COUNTY ASSESSOR 600 GRANDVIEW, RM 101 , OSAGE COUNTY COURTHOUSE, PAWHUSKA, OK. 74056 HOURS: 8:30 A.M. – 5:00 P.M. 918-287-3448

Lawmakers have new Indian member

Maine is unique among the states in having Indian tribal representatives, according to Maine Indian historian Glenn Starbird.

GLENN ADAMS Associated Press

AUGUSTA, Maine (AP) - History will be made when Maine lawmakers return to the State House for their 2012 session and welcome a new member.

David Slagger will be seated in the House, becoming Maine's first Maliseet Indian legislator. The University of Maine doctoral candidate will be sworn in by Gov. Paul LePage on Wednesday.

Two of Maine's four tribes - the Penobscots and Passamaquoddies - are already represented in the Legislature; the Micmacs are not. The Houlton Band of Maliseets was authorized to send a representative to the Legislature

Maine is unique among the states in having Indian tribal representatives, according to Maine Indian historian

GLENN ADAMS / AP PHOTO

In this Dec. 28, 2011 photo, David Slagger sits at his desk at the State House in Augusta, Maine. Slagger will be seated as the Maliseet Indian representative in the House and will become the first member of the Houlton Band of Maliseets to serve in the Legis-

Glenn Starbird. The earliest record of Indian representation dates to 1823, three years after Maine became a state, when the Penobscots sent a member.

"As a Native person, I want to be a representative that does substantial things that affect our people's lives in a positive way," said Slagger, whose first name is an Anglicized version of his Native-language name, pronounced

Indian representatives are selected internally by their tribes. They are allowed to submit bills, participate in legislative committee sessions and speak on the floor of the House, but they cannot vote. Their districts are also represented by voting legislators.

The 800-member Houlton Band of Maliseet Indians is part of the larger Maliseet Nation of New Brunswick, Canada, and is led by a tribal chief, Brenda Commander. Graydon Nicholas, New Brunswick's lieutenant governor and a member of the Maliseet Tribe, plans to attend Slagger's swearing-in in Maine.

Slagger, lives in Kenduskeag near Bangor with his wife, who is a Micmac, and three children. He said he wants to make a difference for the Native Americans he represents when he comes to Augusta.

Acknowledging that relations between Maine's state government and tribal officials have not always been smooth, he said, "I would like to have respectful, harmonious relations with the state, and I would like to be an agent of that change."

Slagger comes to the Capitol with at least one specific proposal in mind, a bill that would make it illegal to impersonate Native Americans. Slagger said such misrepresentation occurs in the sale of arts and crafts.

A number of other issues that go before lawmakers are of interest to the tribes, notably gambling and, in recent years, the use of words on official place names in the state that many Indians consider offensive.

Maine lawmakers face a packed agenda in the concluding year of their two-year session.

The governor wants to close a budget gap by imposing sweeping cutbacks that could remove thousands from Medicaid, or MaineCare. Also on LePage's agenda is legislation to make natural gas available to more people and businesses and to merge some Cabinet-level departments.

the evidence at the scene,

"One of the investigators came up with his findings and wanted the others to

Meanwhile, the tribe was still assessing the damage.

Two houses have been confirmed destroyed, though

one of them was unoccu-

It was initially estimated that 10 to 15 structures were damaged or destroyed, though officials still did not have a firm count by Friday afternoon. Other homes were expected to have smoke damage, and the total number of livestock killed or lost was not yet

Smith told Shelby radio station KSEN-AM and KZIN-FM that the Black-feet tribe's hot shot crews saved numerous houses in the Boarding School area

The tribal crews were first on the scene and steered the fire away from the residennorth of Browning.

concur," Smith said.

pied, Smith said.

Smith said.

NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES

Publisher & Editor LISA SNELL editor@nativetimes.com

Contributing Writers Dana Attocknie WESLEY MAHAN KAREN SHADE

Advertising Sales KATHLEEN ROBERTSON LISA SNELL ROB WALTON

advertising@nativetimes.com

Distribution SHELBY HICKS STEVE LACY WESLEY MAHAN MICHAEL MARRIS KATHLEEN ROBERTSON Brenda Slaughter

The Native American Times, formerly the Oklahoma Indian Times, is published weekly (except the last week of the year) by Lisa Hicks Snell. Mailing address is PO Box 411 Tahlequah, OK 74465. All the contents within the Native American Times are copyrighted material. Any reproduction, redistribution without the written consent of the NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES is strictly

> Each week's issue is available for free download online at: www.nativetimes.com

Subscription rates: $65.00 for fifty-two issues, $32.50 for twenty-six issues, or $16.25 for thirteen issues. (Rates are for postage and handling) Send check or money order

> NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES Attn: Subscriptions P.O. Box 411 Tahlequah, OK 74465-0411

Phone: (918) 708-5838 Fax: (888) 689-4873

Postmaster: Send Change of Address Form 579 to: NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES P.O. Box 411, Tahlequah, OK 74465

WWW.NATIVETIMES.COM - News from the crossroads of Indian Country

CALL LISA 918-708-5838

True American Indian www.flyingeagletradingpost.com

Nation loses another hero

WINDOW ROCK, Ariz.- The Navajo Nation has lost another heroic Code Talker.

Pfc. Keith M. Little, 87, passed away Jan. 3 at Tsehootsoi Medical Center in Fort Defiance, Ariz. after battling an illness. Pfc. Little served in the 4th Division of in the United States Marine Corps and fought in the Pacific Theater of World War II.

"The Navajo Nation is saddened by the loss of another hero. He was a national treasure, who led the Navajo Code Talkers through the Navajo Code Talkers Association and the Navajo Code Talkers Foundation. He believed in sharing his stories and was fundraising for the National Code Talker Museum and Veterans Center. Myself, the Vice President and First Lady offer our support and prayers to the family during this time," said President Ben Shelly.

Pfc. Little was born on March 4, 1924 near Tonalea, Ariz. He was 17 years of age, when he enlisted with the USMC and completed boot camp at Camp Pendleton in San Diego, Calif. Afterwards, he entered the USMC Communication Training Center. He eventually would become a Navajo Code Talker and transfer to the 24th Marines, 4th Marine Division. His service took him to communicate the unbroken military voiced code in battles at Saipan, Tinion and Iwo Jima.

Upon his honorable discharge from the Marines in 1945, Pfc. Little returned to complete his schooling at Chilocco Indian School in Oklahoma. He then attended college at Weber State College in Ogden, Utah. During which time, he worked at the Intermountain Indian School in Brigham City, Utah.

Pfc. Little would eventually work for the Navajo Tribal Sawmill as a logger and advanced to logging manager for the Navajo Forest Products Industry in Navajo, N.M., where he worked until he retired in the Congressional Silver Medal in 2001. At the time of Pfc. Little's death, he was president of the Board of Directors of the Navajo Code Talkers Foundation and was serving as president of the Navajo Code Talkers Association.

For his service as a Code Talker, President George W. Bush presented Pfc. Little

He was an instrumental leader in raising money for the National Navajo Code Talkers Museum and Veterans Center project that would be built near Window

He understood the museum would serve as the epicenter of information about the Navajo Code Talkers, and since less than 70 Navajo Code Talkers are estimated to still be living, Pfc. Little, wanted to have the museum completed in a timely manner.

When he wasn't at the forefront of fundraising for the National Navajo Code Talkers Museum and Veteran's Center, he was home in Crystal tending to his ranch. He loved caring for his livestock and performing work on his ranch.

The family asked that in lieu of flowers, donations be made in Pfc. Little's honor to the National Navajo Code Talker Museum and Veterans Center fund at www. navajocodetalkers.org or contact Wynette Arviso at (505) 870-9167 or by email at wynette@navajocodetalkers.org.

SBA offering free online business course

WASHINGTON - Native American entrepreneurs have a new tool to help determine if they're ready for business ownership and to help them get started. Native American Small Business Primer: Strategies for Success is a free, self-paced online business course developed for Native American business owners. The course provides an overview of basic business principles and to make them aware of the programs and services available from the U.S. Small Business Administration.

"Native American Small Business Primer: Strategies for Success will enhance the agency's effort to provide important resources for emerging Native American entrepreneurs," said SBA Administrator Karen Mills. "Our ultimate goal is to help create jobs and stimulate economic and business development in our Native American communities. This course is an essential business development tool for the entrepreneur's toolbox."

The new online course emphasizes business planning and market research as essential steps to take before going into business; informs Native American entrepreneurs about the legal aspects of starting a business, including the type of ownership (legal structure) and licensing; and provides key information on seed money for starting up, raising capital, and borrowing money. In addition, there is a section on how to estimate business startup costs that can help assess the financial needs of going into business.

The course is available from the SBA's Online Small Business Training web page under Online Courses for Starting Your Business at http://www.sba.gov/content/ online-courses-starting-your-business.

Course participants completing the online training programs can earn a certificate of completion from the SBA, with their name, date and course title. The Native American Small Business Primer course is one of nearly 30 online tutorials offered by the SBA's Online Business Training ( www.sba.gov/training ). Free courses are offered on Starting a Business, Managing a Business, Financing a Business, and Contracting.

DRUMRIGHT DENTAL CENTER Advanced Dental Technology

We proudly offer an array of services, from general dentistry to sedation, dental implants, and cosmetic dentistry - all designed expressly to meet our patient's changing needs. With four general dentists and four hygienists, we can maintain your oral health for a lifetime all at one location.

We Accept Contract Health & Sooner Care

We serve patients in the Drumright, Cushing, Stillwater, Stroud, Ponca City, and surrounding areas with personalized service and exemplary care. Call for your appointment today.

918-352-3312 or Toll Free 877-RH Melton drumrightdentalcenter.com

SUPERNAW'S ANNUAL SALE Sale ends Jan. 14th!!!

10% Off on Pendleton Products and Broadcloth 20% Off on Everything Else.

2500 strands of glass beads at $.80 each at sale prices

CASH OR CREDIT CARD ONLY PURCHASES MUST BE MADE IN THE STORE OPEN NOON TO 6:00 PM WEEKDAYS SATURDAY 10:00 AM TO 5:00 PM

SUPERNAW'S OKLAHOMA INDIAN SUPPLY 109 NORTH BROADWAY, SKIATOOK, OK 74070 COUNTRYWIDE TOLL FREE 1-888-720-1967 EMAIL: SUPERNAW@FLASH.NET

Mohegan Sun casino fails to refinance $811M debt

UNCASVILLE, Conn. (AP) -The parent company of the Indianrun Mohegan Sun casinos in Connecticut and Pennsylvania says it has failed to reach an agreement to refinance $811 million in debt, but lenders have waived a possible

The Mohegan Tribal Gaming Authority said Jan. 5 that a delay in refinancing debt was among conditions that "raise substantial doubt about our ability to continue as a going concern."

Mitchell Etess, chief executive of the authority, which owns and operates the Mohegan Sun in Uncasville and Mohegan Sun at Pocono Downs in Wilkes-Barre, Pa., told The Associated Press on Friday that the dire warning is only a financial requirement of auditors.

"Auditors have no choice," he said. "They must put in that language."

Etess cited the waiver as a vote of confidence by lenders and cited fourth-quarter income of $46.7 million, compared with a $26.3 million loss in the same quarter last year.

Etess said refinancing is taking a long time because of the weak recovery following a deep and prolonged recession that has sharply cut into consumers' entertainment spending.

He also cited the "status of Native American gaming financing" generally.

"Those impacts that have happened in the outside world have impacted our bondholders' thoughts as we go through the process," Etess said.

The neighboring Mashantucket Pequot Tribal Nation in eastern Connecticut has worked to restructure billions of dollars in debt after its Foxwoods casino was hit hard by the economic downturn and increased competition in the Northeast.

Last month, the Mississippi Band of Choctaw Indians received a six-month extension on loans to

And in Washington state, revenue at some tribal casinos fell as much as 30 percent at the start of the recession, forcing tribes to struggle with ways to refinance debt on new casinos and other ventures.

IMAGE NEW JERSEY ONLINE

A report issued in March said that for the first time, revenue fell in 2009 at American Indian gambling casinos nationwide as the recession forced consumers to curtail spending.

A report issued in March said that for the first time, revenue fell in 2009 at American Indian gambling casinos nationwide as the recession forced consumers to curtail spending. The report by economist Alan Meister of Nathan Associates Inc. said casinos generated about $26.4 billion in 2009, down 1 percent from 2008.

Choctaw Nation hosting E-Waste collection events

to reduce the amount of reusable raw materials placed in landfills.

The first collection will be from 9 a.m. to 1 Center, located at 3408 Wes Watkins Blvd. in Durant (north of the Choctaw Casino and Resort, off Enterprise Drive).

The second will be at the Choctaw Village Shopping Center at 1421 SE Washington in Idabel from 9 a.m. through 1 p.m. on Jan. 21.

Each collection will allow those seeking to dispose of electronic waste to do so in an environmentally safe fashion. E-Waste is the most rapidly growing segment of the municipal waste

Oklahoma will be hosting two electronic waste from homes, schools, and businesses become this environmentally conscious effort. "We are (e-waste) collections this January in an effort obsolete or no longer functional and need to be certainly happy to provide an opportunity for discarded.

> E-Waste contains many valuable, recoverable considerable energy to process and manufacture. here," said Chief Gregory E. Pyle. Recycling old, unwanted electronics conserves natural resources, helps to reduce greenhouse gas emissions and pollution, and saves energy and raw material resources. Recycling also precomponents (mercury, lead, cadmium, beryllium and chromium) from leaching into our soil when land filled.

In observance with these facts, the Choctaw com.

DURANT, Okla. - The Choctaw Nation of stream. It is produced when electronic products Nation encourages everyone to take part in people to dispose of this type of waste. It is important that we not only advocate going green, resources such as aluminum, copper, gold, silver, but also facilitate the necessary actions to make p.m. Jan. 14, at the Choctaw Nation Recycling plastics and ferrous metals, all of which require a real difference, and that is what we are doing > Acceptable items for recycling include computers, laptops, fax machines, washers, dryers, gaming equipment, cell phones, hard drives ($20 fee to wipe memory), television sets, fitness vents the toxic chemicals found in electronic equipment, auto batteries and anything else that runs on electricity.

> > For questions about the collections, call 580.775.4231, or email thorst@choctawnation.

Wis. officials want Berlin mascot suit dismissed

BERLIN, Wis. (AP) - The state wants a lawsuit dismissed that challenges the constitutionality of a 2010 state law that allows the schools superintendent to ban American Indian mascots and logos.

The Wisconsin Department of Public Instruction ordered the Berlin School District to drop its Indians nickname and logo by Sept. 16, 2012, because its promotes stereotyping, discrimination and pupil harassment.

The state had received a complained from a district resident regarding the Berlin Indians' nickname.

The Berlin school district decided not to fight the state ruling, but a group of local citizens filed a lawsuit in October.

The state's motion, filed in Green Lake County Circuit Court Tuesday, claims a lawsuit should be brought by a school district, not individual taxpayers.

The motion was filed on behalf of the Wisconsin Department of Public Instruction, its Superintendent Tony Evers, and Paul Sherman, an education consultant with the DPI.

Sam Hall, an attorney from Milwaukeebased Crivello Carlson, S.C., is working for the Berlin group. His firm also represented two Mukwonago residents who challenged the state law because the state ordered that school district to drop its Indians nickname.

In that case, a judge ruled the state's effort was unconstitutional because an administrative hearing on the case was unfair. The judge also agreed that the law, as applied against Mukwonago, was unconstitutional because the decision maker, Sherman, had a high risk of bias. Sherman also made the ruling for Ber-

Hall tells the Oshkosh Northwestern that he doesn't expect a dismissal.

"The Wisconsin attorney general's office filed the exact same motion in Waukesha County during the Mukwonago School District's fight to keep its Indian logo and nickname, and the motion was denied," Hall said.

UND announces rebranding

GRAND FORKS, N.D. (AP) - The University of North Dakota is one step closer to phasing out the Fighting Sioux nickname.

The university has been working to retire the nickname and accompanying American Indian head logo, which the NCAA deems offensive, and rebrand several organizations and media related to UND's athletics department. A large part of the transition process was to be completed by the end of the year.

UND Athletics Director Brian Faison has announced that the UND Athletics fundraising organization will no longer be called the Fighting Sioux Club. It will be renamed the North Dakota Champions Club. The school's sports network will be renamed UND Sports Network, while UND Athletics' official website will change from FightingSioux.com to UNDSports.

Continued from Page 1

our growth and economic development as well. We can't build new houses - we have a waiting list for people to get into the Kickapoo reservation."

Gov. Sam Brownback has said he will push a four-point plan to address water conservation this session, with an emphasis on renewing the Ogallala Aquifer.

Steve Ortiz (Mon-Wah), tribal chairman of the Prairie Band Potawatomi in Mayetta, said water isn't an issue for his tribe, but draining of aquifers is becoming a problem Ortiz was one of about a dozen tribal leaders who met with President Barack Obama earlier this month. One of the issues he said they discussed was water rights.

Cadue, Ortiz and Victors all said Brownback has been receptive to the concerns of the state's tribes since he became governor. They said they appreciated a proclamation he issued in November apologizing to the state's five main tribes for the "spirit of deception" that too often marked dealings with them in the past.

Brownback has also said he doesn't want to discuss expanding state gambling during the coming session, while the state's Democratic leaders have made gaming the funding centerpiece of their jobs proposal.

That doesn't sit well with Ortiz, who said the state shouldn't expand gaming while restricting the tribes to one casino per reservation.

"We're opposed to it, mainly because of the fact that this now would give the state not only four casinos, but they're also talking about two racetracks," Ortiz said. "So that really gives them six gaming operations, which really in return they should allow us to have more gaming operations as tribes without having to pay the state any Ortiz said he met with Kansas Democratic Party chairwoman Joan Wagnon two months before the jobs proposal was presented and she didn't mention more state gaming as a possibility.

"She just said she could make no commitment about Indian gaming," Ortiz said. "We had no idea this was going in their Wagnon, via email, said she wasn't aware of the gaming aspect of the proposal at the time she met with Ortiz.

Victors said she didn't have any input on the jobs proposal and hadn't had a chance to talk to the leaders of her party about it.

"But, you know, the No. 1 thing is jobs," Victors said. "Unfortunately, I didn't see a lot of opportunities for making jobs a priority this past session. I was kind of shocked by that, coming in as a freshman. I thought that all we would talk about was the jobs

Ortiz said there also was some concern among the tribes about the voter identification law the state passed. Ortiz said he was disappointed that tribal identification cards aren't included on the list of approved IDs.

"We're looking for a bill to be introduced into the Kansas Legislature that tribal identification cards be allowed as voter ID," Ortiz said. "Right now we've had meetings with the secretary of state, but I've not seen any Democrat or Republican come forth saying they'd introduce a bill."

Increasing voter turnout on the reservations is on the agenda for Victors, who said she believes she is the first female American Indian in the Legislature.

She said she would like to be a bridge between state and tribal governments, providing her unique perspectives on such things as living on a reservation without clean, abundant water.

"I would really like to see something worked out with that water issue," Victors said. "This is Kansas, and it's the new millennium, you know. There should be something where tribes, reservations and people don't have to wake up to that burden."

SALISH

community-wide goals.

"Here on the reservation we're at a critical point in order to save our language," Matt said.

The Salish Institute joins other organizations on the reservation that provide resources for language learning, including the Nkwusm language school and Salish Kootenai College. The People's Center in Pablo is also starting classes in January, according to the center's program manager, Lucy Vanderburg, a longtime teacher and advocate of language as a vital link to one's heritage.

"It's always on my agenda to encourage people to learn the language," she said. "It's always been one of my passions to teach the language."

Vanderburg is one of the reservation's remaining fluent Salish speakers. Growing up in the 1950s and 1960s, she said her family spoke Salish in their home, as did many other people throughout the community.

"I can remember going to the post office or the grocery store with my mom, and you'd run into somebody you knew and they spoke the language," she said. "I guess I always thought it would be around."

Both the Bitterroot Salish and Pend d'Oreille traditionally spoke dialects of Salish, sharing a common language family with other tribes in the Northwest. The third tribe that makes up the Confederated Salish and Kootenai Tribes of the Flathead Indian Reservation is the Kootenai, which speaks its own language.

Matt and Vanderburg encourage Kootenai speakers to form their own language programs. Vanderburg hopes to have Kootenai instructors teach courses at the People's Center, while Matt said she knows of somebody trying to form a grassroots Kootenai language group.

"We have been asked, 'Why aren't you including the Kootenai?" Matt said. "We just want to focus on this language family and cultural heritage, but we would love someone to do this for Kootenai."

Matt said she has gotten to know Bell and Brown, her fellow Salish Institute founders, through years of working together at different language and cultural programs. They decided the reservation could use an organization that takes a "holistic approach to learning culture," one that carefully considers factors such as history, environment and language.

The nonprofit's first three meetings have been well attended, Matt said, and she expects them to grow in the

"The idea is to be inclusive as possible," Matt said. "Everyone is welcome. Everyone who comes to the meetings is a part of the institute."

Even with the Nkwusm school, Salish Kootenai College and adult language classes taught around the reservation, Matt said "we haven't been able to create new fluent speakers." The elders who are fluent, Matt said, increasingly lack the energy to dedicate much time to teaching language. Matt doesn't want the reservation to lose all Salish fluency once the elders are no longer around.

"We feel that we don't have a lot of time because those elders are old,"

Despite the dearth of fluency, Vanderburg said "people are trying to learn it and I applaud them for trying." Years ago when Vanderburg worked on a cultural committee, she was in frequent contact with her elders, who spoke passionately of language's cultural importance. Even if those elders have passed, their message still resonates.

"I think one of the things that I learned with working with those elders is that you have to know your language to know your true culture," Vanderburg said. "That was one of their hopes and dreams - that the language would stay alive."

COMMENTARY

Advice for Indian students: How to Win Scholarships

AROUND THE CAMPFIRE

DR. DEAN CHAVERS © Copyright 2012

One of my frustrations is the failure of Indian students to apply for and win scholarships. In a research project completed 12 years ago, we found that the average number of scholarships Indian students apply for is only one. The minimum should be about 40. Actually, most Indian students don't apply for any scholarships, and one out of 20 will apply for

There are lots of myths about scholarships. One of the most destructive is that Indian students should apply for Indian scholarships. Wrong! There are only about 100 or 150 Indian scholarships out of 1.5 million scholarships in the U.S. If you are looking for Indian scholarships you are looking in a small pile. There is a much more huge pile out there called "scholarships." That's where students should be.

Another myth is that scholarships are based on need. Most scholarships, at least 90% of them, are based on merit. You could be poor as a church mouse, but if you go to them with a 2.0 GPA you are not going to win. You need excellent grades, high ACT/SAT test scores, and a clear vision if you're going to win scholarships.

A third myth is that scholarships are part of Financial Aid. The FA program, which started in 1966 as part of President Lyndon B. Johnson's poverty programs, is a new and separate program from scholarships. Scholarships, on the other hand, are part of the movement for higher education in the U.S. that goes back to the colonies and the founding of Harvard, Dartmouth, and William and Mary. Until the 1950s you needed to be an Old White Boy to earn these scholarships.

Minorities and women were out. But more and more these scholarships are knocking down the barriers and being fair about the process. The most hard-to-find applicants for scholarships are Native Americans. That's why this is a golden opportunity for Indian kids. We have had only one student, Isaiah Rodriguez from Laguna Pueblo, who went all the way with scholarships.

I helped him find 102 scholarships and he won 70 of them. He had been a dropout for five years, but decided being an assistant fry cook in a restaurant was not the way he wanted to go.

Another myth is that scholarships are only for students who are just finishing high school. Our oldest graduate, Dr. Harriet Skye (Lakota), was 62 years old when she earned her BA degree. She kept going for an MA and then a Ph. D. She just wrote me the other day saying she has finally retired as Vice President of United Tribes Education and Technical College in Bismarck.

Another one of our graduates, Delbert James (Navajo), was 48 years old when he earned his BA in Social Work. But he went to work immediately in child protection for the tribe and has done great work.

Students think they can win scholarships on the first draft of their essay. They probably won't. I help students with their essays all the time, almost every day of my life, and can tell you that almost none of them get it right on the first draft. I mean way less than one percent can do that. In fact, in 25 years of operating our scholarship program, we have only had one essay that was an A+. I want to see one more before I die, but I

The students who have done well, including Isaiah and over 720 others, have worked hard on their essays. I critiqued Isaiah's essay about six times before he had it good enough

Students think they can start to look for scholarships just before they enter college. It breaks my heart to hear from them in June when they are going to start the following September. There are almost no deadlines in May, June, July, and August. There are lots of deadlines in October, November, December, January, February, March, and April.

In other words, by the end of April the scholarship season is practically over. Students need to start a year before they are going to start college, not the month before. I hate it when I hear about a scholarship from the Elks or the Lions that no one applied

Some of the things that students need to have in their essays and normally forget are:

- Their mother's name, occupation, tribe, age, and hobbies.
- Same for dad.
- · Names, ages, occupations, and interests of siblings.
- Name of mentor in high school, what she did for you, what you did
- What their major will be.
- · Where they plan to attend col-

• Their GPA, both raw and percen-

- Their ACT score. Most Indian students are disappointed with their ACT scores. They have a 3.8 GPA in high school, and think they will score at the 90th percentile or higher. They are disappointed when they score at the 40th or 50th. In my experience, it is impossible to score well on the ACT or SAT unless students are heavy readers. This means one to two books a week; almost none of our students read this much. The ACT is largely a test of knowledge, not a test of "academic ability." If you don't know a lot of stuff, you can't score high. Students should start taking the ACT in the tenth grade, and not wait until the last possible time to take it as a senior.
- Their experience with their tribe. This counts for all the handful of Indian scholarships, and counts just as well with the other 99% of scholarships that have nothing to do with Indians.

Seniors in high school should be well on their way with their scholarship search by now, January. But as I have told students for over 40 years, it is never too late to start looking for scholarships.

At one school I visited three months ago, I talked to 200 students. I decided to ask them something I had never asked before. "How many of you have been just messing around, not really trying?" I asked them. About 40% raised their hands. Our schools are not pushing these students hard enough.

"If you want to go to Harvard," I told them, "and you have not been really trying, go to a community college for a year or two, ace it, and I will get you into Harvard or Stanford." And I mean it. I have done that dozens of times.

I hate to see Indian talent wasted. It does my heart good to produce a medical doctor like Dr. Lana Doxtater (Oneida) or a dentist like Dr. Drew Preston (Navajo). We need all the doctors, lawyers, nurses, pharmacists, teachers, veterinarians, and engineers we can get.

Dr. Chavers is the author of "Racism in Indian Country" published by Peter Lang. He is Director of Catching the Dream, which provides scholarships to high-potential Native college students. It also provides grants and technical assistance to Indian schools to help them improve. Contact him at CTD4DeanChavers@aol.com.

An apology is oftentimes never enough

NOTES FROM INDIAN COUNTRY

TIM GIAGO (Nanwica Kciji) © 2012 Unity South Dakota

I have been writing a column nearly every week for 34 years. I started with a Montgomery Ward electric typewriter and graduated to a 1986 Apple Computer that was more of a word-processor than a computer. We had not reached the age of the Internet yet.

My staff at the old and original Lakota Times had to steal away in the middle of the night to get rid of my old typewriter and replace it with a computer. I was steaming mad and threatened to go out and buy another typewriter but by this time they were nearly obsolete and I couldn't have bought one if I tried.

But my column this week is not to reminisce about the good old days, but to try in a humble way to make amends.

There are two people who meant a lot to me that I hurt in a couple of my columns. They were two of the most skilled journalists I have ever known and I have hated myself for writing about them in such a mean way.

I thought I was writing a tongue-in-cheek column about my longtime friend and fellow journalist Jerry Reynolds when he was writing for Indian Country Today even after I sold it to the Oneida Nation of New York.

I wrote about some of the silly things Jerry did when he worked for me at the Lakota Times (later Indian Country Today) when it was based in Martin, S. D. I did not consider that things I wrote about Jerry were funny to all of us at the newspaper simply because we were all there to share it with him but to write about some of Jerry's idiosyncrasies for the consumption of the general public was wrong and hurtful to him and should have been kept in-house.

Jerry wasn't just an employee at my newspaper; he was a true and trusted friend. In fact, after he moved to Washington, D. C. and continued to write for Indian Country Today after I sold it, we still continued our friendship. Whenever I was in Washington we always got together and had dinner. In fact he knew how much I liked the singer Julie London and he went out of his way to find me a great CD of some of her greatest hits.

Let it suffice to say that Jerry Reynolds was one of the greatest newspapermen that ever worked for me. He wasn't afraid to delve into the deepest of stories and turn out articles that even got local banks fined by the U. S. Attorney for discriminating against Native Americans. There are times when some of my old employees and I get together and over a glass of beer recall some the funny things that happened at the Lakota Times and Indian Country Today and Jerry was usually right in the middle of them. But it was always in a good way that we remembered him because he did become a close friend to all of us.

So with the New Year still ahead, I express my sincerest apology to my old Kola (friend) Jerry Reynolds.

One of the finest journalists, reporters and managing editors I have known was Valerie Taliman. Valerie was Navajo and worked for me at Indian Country Today as managing editor in my Arizona branch of the newspaper. She was always a most professional journalist who looked at every angle of a story before she put her byline on it.

Several years ago I wrote a column in which I mentioned a personal part of her life that I had no right to do. We all do stupid things in our life and this was one of those stupid things I did that I wish I could have taken back as soon as it appeared in print.

I recall how hard Valerie worked at Indian Country Today. She was a terrific writer, but she also served as my managing editor at my Scottsdale, Arizona office. This gave her the added responsibility of managing all aspects of preparing the paper for publication. She worked with the writers, photographers and the business office and I did not have to worry at all about the newspaper since I spent much of my time in our South Dakota office. She also did a great job of story selection and the layout and design of the paper.

Two great people and two great journalists got the sharp point of my pen, one inadvertently and the other out of stupidity. There is no way to erase the words I wrote that hurt these wonderful people and all I can do is to offer a weak apology for the harm I did.

Tim Giago

Jerry and Valerie will always be two of the greatest journalists I have ever known and I apologize and doff my hat to both of them in this New Year of 2012. Please forgive my ignorance my old friends.

Tim Giago, an Oglala Lakota, is President of Unity South Dakota. He was a Nieman Fellow at Harvard with the Class of 1990. His weekly column won the H. L. Mencken Award in 1985. He was the founder of The Lakota Times, Indian Country Today, Lakota Journal and Native Sun News. He can be reached at UnitySoDak1@knol-

The viewpoints expressed in columns and letters are the opinions of the writers and not necessarily the opinion or viewpoint of the Native American Times publisher or staff. Letters to the editor are welcome and may be submitted via e-mail to editor@nativetimes.com or mailed to PO Box 411, Tahlequah, OK 74465. To be published, we require you provide your name, tribal affiliation, phone number and city of residence for verification.

VINITA 918-256-5585

LANGLEY 918-782-0011

MONKEY ISLAND 918-257-8869

www.okstatebank.com Equal Housing Lender Native American Owned

'Changing the culture of waste." T

NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES recycles with Tahlequah Recycling Incorporated... shouldn't you?

Reeves Renovations Professional Construction, Remodeling & Repairs

Bathrooms • Kitchens • Paint Tile • Trim • Plumbing Electrical • Solar Panels Windmills • Winterizing Quality Work • Free Estimates

918-637-6736 johnwilliamreeves@juno.com Mayes & Cherokee Counties

Follow Us! www.twitter.com/nativetimes

NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES

Name:
Address:
City:	State: Zip:
Phone:
	- Π ΦΩΩ ΕΩ ( ΩC :

	$65.00 for	52 issues	$3	32.5	O fo	or 21	6 issu	es
_			_			_	_

■ $16.25 for 13 issues ■ $1.25 single copy

Mail this form with a check or money order to: Native American Times • P.O. Box 411 Tahlequah, OK 74465 • 918-708-5838

Create a New You - with a New Job - for the New Year

Corporate executiveturned-novelist says it's never too late

GINNY GRIMSLEY News and Experts

With 7 million Americans receiving unemployment benefits, and many counting the years - instead of months - since their layoff, author Darlene Quinn says now is a good time to reinvent yourself. She cites James Sherk, a senior policy analyst for the Heritage Foundation, who says the jobs people held two or three years ago often simply aren't there anymore. "People are trying to find jobs similar to what they had previously, when those jobs completely don't exist," he told Reuters recently. "So they will spend a good portion of their period unemployed looking for jobs that they are unlikely to find." Quinn is a master of personal reinvention. She started her career as a teacher, then became a contractor, developing self-improvement and modeling programs for hospitals and a store. That segued into a position as a top executive at Bullocks Wilshire department store and "retirement" as a freelance journalist. And now, the 74-year-old is an award-winning novelist. She published her third book, Webs of Fate (www.darlenequinn.net), this fall, continuing her series about deceit and intrigue in the high-end retail industry. She says she was always a story-teller; she just never thought about putting her stories on paper. "Being a victim of the short-lived educational phenomenon called sight-reading, which did not include phonics, I had always been intimidated by the written word," she said. "Somehow none of my teachers appreciated my creativity when it came to spelling. Therefore, my creative writing efforts were sprinkled with so many red marks, they appeared to have broken out with the measles." Maybe, she added, she just needed a great story to tell and a passion to tell it that was stronger than her fear. Quinn became a schoolteacher after earning a bachelor's at San Jose State University. Much later in life, while working as a department store executive during a time of tremendous upheaval in the retail fashion industry, she found her story. But before she tried to tell it, she first sharpened her wit and her pen by writing articles for trade journals, magazines and newspapers. That led to her being drafted by actor Buddy Ebsen to help him with his first novel, a love story called Kelly's Quest. Ebsen was working on a second, a mystery based on his popular TV persona detective Barnaby Jones, when "People change and, sometimes, their dreams have to change with them. "To be releasing my third novel at age 74 is the fulfillment of a dream I never knew I had. Until now."

- Darlene Quinn

he died in 2003. His widow asked

Quinn to finish the book, Sizzling

Cold Case, which was published in 2006. By now, Quinn was ready for her own tale. "I felt compelled to tell the story of our vanishing department stores," she said. "Instead of writing a dour tell-all about the business, I decided to chronicle my experiences in one of my fictional worlds and I filled that landscape with the realistic and dynamic characters that inhabited my daily life. "The age of computers with spell-checking software helped me get over my fear of a red-inked manuscript." By 2008, Quinn had finished her story of intrigue in the retail fashion business. Webs of Power won a 2009 National Indie Excellence Award the following year. Twisted Webs followed in 2010. "One thing I've learned in my life is that things change," Quinn said. "People change and, sometimes, their dreams have to change with them. "To be releasing my third novel at age 74 is the fulfillment of a dream I never knew I had. Until now."

About Darlene Quinn

Darlene Quinn is an author and journalist from Long Beach, Calif., whose novels about deceit, intrigue and glamour in the retail fashion industry were inspired by her years with Bullocks Wilshire Specialty department stores. Her newest, Webs of Fate, won the 2011 Reader's Favorites Award before it hit the bookshelves. It provides the back story for the characters in the first two novels in the series: Webs of Power, winner of a 2009 National Indie Excellence Award, and Twisted Webs, winner of 2011 International Book Award for General Fiction and the 011 National Indie Excellence Awards for General Fiction.

CLASSIFIEDS

NATIVE AMERICAN

HIRING PREFERENCE?

Advertise to Native Americans!

E-mail your ad for a quote to:

lisa@nativetimes.com

The Pawnee Nation of Oklahoma is ac-

EMPLOYMENT / HELP WANTED

HEROKEE $\mathbf{N}$ ATION $^\circ$

Cherokee Nation whose headquarters are located in beautiful Tahlequah, Oklahoma is a national leader in Indian tribal governments and economic development in Oklahoma, We are a dynamic, progressive organization, which owns several business enterprises and administers a variety of services for the Cherokee people in Northeastern Oklahoma. Cherokee Nation offers an exceptional employee benefits plan with Comprehensive Health, Life, 401(k), Holiday Pay, Sick Leave and Annual Leave.

CURRENT OPPORTUNITIES AT W.W. HASTINGS HOSPITAL, TAHLEQUAH

#5768 RPT Medical Technologist (Evening/Weekend Coverage), Position closes – 1/11/12 #5998 TPT Medical Technologist (Evening/Weekend Coverage), Position closes – 1/11/12

#5776 TPT Certified and/or Registered Respiratory Therapist (Hours Vary), Position closes - 1/11/12 #5087 TPT Inpatient Registered Nurse/PRN (12 hour rotations as needed), Position closes 1/11/12 #4713 TPT Inpatient Registered Nurse/PRN (As Needed), Position closes 1/10/12

#4500 TPT Inpatient Registered Nurse/PRN (Evening/ Weekend/On call), Position closes 1/10/12 #5125 TPT Surgical Technician (7:30 am - 4:00 pm), Position closes 1/10/12

#5745 RFT Medical Technologist (10:30 pm - 7:00 am Rotating Weekends), Position closes 1/11/12 Interested applicants please apply at www.cherokee.org

Cherokee Nation Human Resources Department PO Box 948 Tahlequah, OK 74465

Or Visit our website at: www.cherokee.org Employment will be contingent upon drug test results. Indian preference is considered

(918) 453-5292 or 453-5050

Architectural Project Manager

Architectural Project Manager, Tahlequah, OK: Responsible for architectural projects including the plan, design, and construction of residential structures in the rustico style. Reports to owner and designated supervising licensed Architect. Bachelor's degree in Architecture, 1 year's experience in construction projects. Resumes to: Chance Properties, LLC, V. H. Wilhelm, 2210 Golf Course Road, Tahlequah, OK, ### cepting applications for the full-time, regular status position of Title VI Program Coordinator/Department Manager. To apply, please visit our website at http://www.pawneenation.org

Introducing America's First Nations to the World

AIANTA is a nonprofit association of Native American tribes and tribal businesses organized to advance Indian Country tourism. The Association is made up of member tribes from six regions: Eastern, Plains, Midwest, Southwest, Pacific Northwest, and Alaska. The purpose of the Association is to serve as the voice and resource for its constituents in advancing tourism, assist tribes in creating infrastructure and capacity, provide technical assistance, training and educational resources to tribes, tribal organizations and tribal members.

AIANTA currently is seeking to fill two positions, Finance Director and Membership Coordinator. Please visit www.aianta.org/news for complete vacancy announcement. Please submit resume including salary history and two references no later than 5:00 p.m. MST, November 28, 2011 to:

> Attn: Sherrie Bowman 2401 12th Street NW Albuquerque, NM 87104 Or electronically at sbowman@aianta.org

Director of Native American Recruitment

Bacone College is looking for a Director of Native American Recruitment. This is a full-time, 12-month position designed to reach out to the Native American market across America and express Bacone College's primary focus and interest in recruiting and retaining Native American students that reflect its mission and heritage. Recruitment will focus primarily on Native American prospective students interested in attending Bacone College and working as a point of contact with these students throughout matriculation.

This position requires extensive travel within Oklahoma and the United States. The person selected for this position is primarily responsible for recruitment of Native American students and maintaining secondary education relation-

Send letter of application, vita, transcripts, and three references humanresources@bacone. edu or Human Resources, Bacone College, 2299 Old Bacone Road, Muskogee, OK 74403. Bacone College is a private four-year college with a mission to provide opportunities to American Indian students and employees. EOE

Controller

Fort Sill Apache Industries, LLC has an opening for a Controller in the Norman, OK office. Applicant would be responsible for overseeing the accounting department in all aspects and ensuring compliance with policies and procedures. Major requirements for this position would include Bachelors Degree in Accounting or related area from 4 year college, or 5 to 7 years accounting experience. Prior work in tribal environment and federal government contracting experience are highly desirable. Deltek software knowledge would also be advantageous. Salary commensurate with qualifications. Resumes can be submitted to recruiting@fortsillapache. com or faxed to 580.279.0559.

Advantage RN Case Manager

Oak View Health Services is seeking an Advantage RN Case Manager for the Tulsa and surrounding area. Full-time position available Mon-Fri. Work from the comfort of your home. Insurance available, Advantage certification preferred but not required. Please Email resume to sheiladoglady@ yahoo.com or fax to 580-286-6722. No phone calls please.

Look for Native American Times on Facebook and Twitter! Friends get front page scoops, new features and breaking news.

SERVICES

Native American Electrician

1st Call Electric

Reasonable Rates • At Cost Material

918-277-1610

Licensed • Insured • Bonded • OK#70011 Serving Northeast Oklahoma

Advanced Energy Solutions

(Heating & Air Conditioning)

Serving Oklahoma City and the surrounding area. Service, repair and installation of all brands

* * American Standard Dealer * *

405-315-6116 Expert Owner Operation • You can relax when AES is on the job

Commercial Janitorial Services/Supplies ∠ Landscaping Services Big Lime Maintenance Solutions (405) 338-8180 American Indian Owned

Metal Roofing & Siding

Professional Construction and Home Repairs

Free Estimates

Charles Snell 918-507-2902

Native American Contractor

405-933-2474

MORE JOBS, MORE NEWS, MORE EVENTS > VISIT ONLINE AT WWW.NATIVETIMES.COM PLUS LOOK FOR NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES ON TWITTER & FACEBOOK!

Sainthood for Blessed Kateri expected to boost shrine visits in NY's Mohawk Valley

Kateri Tekakwitha was beatified in 1980 when John Paul II waived the first miracle typically required.

CHRIS CAROLA
Associated Press

FONDA, N.Y. (AP) – No one making a religious pilgrimage to Catholic shrines in this scenic yet hardscrabble stretch of New York's Mohawk Valley is going to mistake it for Italy. Yet starting next year, the region can boast of being the home of two of the Roman Catholic Church's newest saints.

The Blessed Kateri Tekakwitha, a Mohawk Indian, spent most of her life here during the 17th century. About 200 years later and 40 miles to the west, the Blessed Mother Marianne Cope began a religious life that focused on providing medical care in central New York and the Hawaiian islands.

On Dec. 20, Pope Benedict XVI certified miracles attributed to the two women, the final step toward sainthood. The women's canonization is expected to happen this year.

When they are elevated to saint-hood, they'll be among just 12 of the Catholic Church's thousands of saints who either were born in America or ministered in what is now the United States.

Elevation to sainthood for Blessed Kateri, a first for a Native American, is expected to boost visits to a pair of local shrines linked to her life. The National Shrine of the Blessed Kateri Tekakwitha in Fonda and the National Shrine of the North American Martyrs in nearby Auriesville are located amid the hilly terrain and faded industrial towns along the Mohawk River Valley that stretches from the Albany area to Utica.

Both shrines had already closed for the winter when word came out of the Vatican that the pope had affirmed the women for canonization. Officials at both sites say they expect bigger crowds next year as a result.

"We've been praying for this for a long time, years and years and years," said Friar Mark Steed, the Kateri shrine's director. "It will mean a bit of work in terms of how we can promote it, how we can present the shrine in a better light."

Spread over 200-plus acres of sloping ground on the river's north bank, the property contains the archaeological site of the Mohawk village where Kateri spent her youth and where she was baptized by French Jesuit missionaries in 1676. The shrine's centerpiece is a 230-year-old barn that doubles as a rustic chapel and museum. Images of Kateri's life decorate the rough-hewn wooden crossbeams in the upstairs chapel where American and Iroquois flags hang side by side.

Blessed Kateri's sainthood could be a big step toward helping to heal centuries of conflict between whites and Native Americans, Friar Mark said.

"That may be her spiritual gift to all of us," he said.

Just downriver on the south bank, officials at the shrine of the North American Martyrs say they're also expecting to see an increase in the tens of thousands of visitors who make pilgrimages each year, some from as far away as Europe and Asia.

Kateri was born in the Mohawk village that sat atop the hill where the Auriesville shrine was founded by the Jesuit order in the late 19th century. A decade before Kateri's birth, Father Isaac Jogues and two fellow Frenchmen were killed in the village by the Mohawks. All three were canonized in 1930, along with five other Jesuit missionaries martyred in Canada in the 1600s.

The Auriesville shrine features a coliseum church that can hold about 10,000 worshippers and a separate chapel dedicated to Kateri, the daughter of an Algonquin mother and Mohawk father. Her parents died of smallpox when she was 4, and the disease left Kateri badly scarred and nearly blind. Later, after enduring scorn from other Mohawks because of her Christian beliefs, she fled to a Jesuit mission near Montreal.

Known for tending to the sick and elderly, Kateri fell ill and died at 24. Her remains are entombed in a marble shrine at St. Francis Xavier Church in Kahnawake, Quebec. Dubbed "the Lily of the Mohawks," her story of devotion and kindness is familiar to many Auriesville visitors, said Beth Lynch, the shrine's event coordinator and museum manger.

BRIAN DAFFRON

Kateri Pahaun Daffron (Kiowa/Wichita/Comanche) holds a card of her namesake, Blessed Kateri Tekakwitha.

Mother Marianne Cope's roots in the Mohawk Valley began in Utica, where her family settled in 1840 after emigrating from Germany the previous year, when she was a year old. A factory worker until she joined the Franciscan sisters in Syracuse in the early 1860s, the young nun worked as a nurse and hospital administrator, helping to found two hospitals - St. Joseph's in Syracuse and St. Elizabeth's in Utica - that are still in operation today. Under her direction, no one was denied medical care, according to Sister Patricia Burkard, general minister of the Syracuse-based Sisters of St. Francis of the Neumann Communities.

"Her policy is very much like the Patients' Bill of Rights today," Sister Patricia said.

In the 1880s, Mother Marianne answered a plea from Hawaii for help providing care for leprosy patients at a settlement on Molokai island run by Father Damien, who gained sainthood in 2009. She died of natural causes at the settlement in 1918 and was buried there. In 2005, her remains were brought to Syracuse, where they're in a reliquary located in the chapel at the St. Anthony Convent, which is also home to a Mother Marianne museum.

Leaders of the Sisters of St. Francis say they expect an increase in visitors at the chapel and museum when Mother Marianne is canonized.

In 2004, Pope John Paul II declared Mother Marianne "venerable," the first step toward canonization after the Vatican recognized her intercession for the unexplained cure of a New York girl dying of multiple organ failure. The Vatican recommended her canonization in December after a second recovery was attributed to her intercession.

Kateri Tekakwitha was beatified in 1980 when John Paul II waived the first miracle typically required. Prayers to her are credited for the second Tekakwitha miracle: the recovery of 6-year-old Washington state boy who had a flesh-eating disease.

"We're considered quote, 'a young country,' compared to Italy, France and Germany," Sister Patricia said. "That we're seeing more saints named from the United States really means that the faith in our country is maturing to the point that we have people who have lived among us who have given us many examples of a good life."

SAINT

Continued from Paae

the healing of Jake Finkbonner of Ferndale, Wash. Finkbonner, of Lummi descent, was suffering from flesh-eating bacteria when prayer circles throughout the nation asked Kateri to intercede on his behalf.

For decades, many Catholic parishes with Native American populations have had "Kateri Circle" chapters to pray for her canonization, holding annual conferences that celebrate both Blessed Kateri's life and Native American culture. One of these is in St. Patrick's Catholic Church in Anadarko, Oklahoma.

"When I received the news, I prayed and then went to our parish to pray at our Blessed Kateri shrine," said St. Patrick's Indian Mission Kateri Circle member Dorothy Whitehorse Delaune. "There aren't many of our original members left. My great-granddaughter and I went to the church to give thanks. Her first name is Kateri."

Saint Patrick's Catholic Church has a unique history among Catholic boarding schools in Indian Country. Founded by Father Isidore Ricklin, O.S.B. in the early 1890's, St. Patrick's Indian Mission served Southwest Oklahoma as both a school and parish through the early 1960's.

Ricklin, the founder, had a strong relationship with the Native people of Southwest Oklahoma, who include the Kiowa, Comanche, Apache, Fort Sill Apache, Wichita, Caddo and Delaware. Native elders still tell stories of Senpaul Zelbe -"Terrible Whiskers" as the Kiowa called Ricklin – participating in peyote meetings and other ceremonials, traveling by wagon. For decades, Native students of St. Patrick's toured the country as a dance troupe, performing traditional dances as a way to raise funds for the mission.

"I can't help but think that the Kateri Circle members who have passed on helped give a push for her sainthood," said Delaune. "Aho Dauqi." (Kiowa for "Thank you, God.")

Navajo weavers turn art into profit

Before the auction begins, there's time for a Navajo taco and soda from a vendor inside the little school, and to look through more than a dozen tables with Native American crafts.

TOM SHARPE
The New Mexican

SANTA FE, N.M. (AP)

On the second Friday of every month, two very different groups of people, most of them New Mexicans, get together at a school on the Navajo reservation for one of the state's most unique commercial customs.

The Crownpoint Rug Auction got started in 1968 as a way for Navajo weavers to profit more from their handspun and woven textiles that were once used casually as saddle blankets, but were quickly becoming expensive works of art.

By 4 p.m., when the doors open to the Crownpoint Elementary School, more than 100 Navajo weavers and their families begin moving into the gymnasium with the results of months of work rolled up in plastic containers.

They unroll their rugs at the registration desk, giving their names and hometowns, which are written onto small cards that are stapled to the rugs that are then displayed on four folding tables.

By 5 p.m., the bidders, almost all of them Anglos, begin to arrive and look through what will be for sale. The biggest contingency is from Albuquerque, with a few from Santa Fe, Rio Rancho, Farmington, Gallup, Las Cruces and other New Mexico towns, a handful from the contiguous states, a smattering from other states, and one European couple

Some of the bidders look as if they are dripping with money. Most of them appear to know what they're doing, taking notes and occasionally measuring the rugs. Sizes are not mentioned on the cards. A few bidders appear to be professional traders. They are the most discreet of all.

On Dec. 9, there were 227 rugs up for auction – ranging from 1-by-2-foot wall hangings selling for as little as $35 to rugs up to 8-by-4 feet that went for up to $1,500. About half of them failed to get a minimum bid. Fifty-five people signed up as bidders – slightly less than average, said to be about 75. The auction lasted about two hours.

Before the auction begins, there's time for a Navajo taco and soda from a vendor inside the little school, and to look through more than a dozen tables with Native American crafts – Acoma pottery, Zuni fetishes, Navajo jewelry.

At 7 p.m., Christina Ellsworth, manager of the Crownpoint Rug Weavers Association, takes to the stage to welcome the bidders and weavers, and warn bidders against trying to buy the rugs outside in the parking lot. That would be unfair to the weavers who pay the association 15 percent of their selling price at auction, she said.

Then the auctioneers, Wayne Connell and Delbert Arty, take over. Mountainair residents who run cattle auctions in Belen, they begin with brief descriptions of each rug as young people display them to the audience. Then they begin their hypnotic sing-songs: "Do I hear nine hundred? Nine hundred, nine hundred. Nine hundred there! Do I hear ten hundred? Ten hundred, ten hundred ..."

If the rug fails to get a minimum bid after 30 seconds, the auctioneers declare it a no sale and direct it to be put in a special pile. Occasionally, the auctioneers drop the minimum price by $100 or so. In those cases, the rugs often draw a single bid from people seated quietly in the back – apparently professional traders seeking a discount.

In most cases, the rugs that do sell go for a third to half what they would be priced in a gallery in Santa Fe or other cities. Payments can be made in cash or personal check at a desk set up beside the auction stage, but no credit cards are accepted. There are no overnight accommodations in Crownpoint, about three hours by car from Santa Fe. The nearest motels are in Thoreau on Interstate 40, with better lodging in Gallup or Grants. The next auction is Ian. 13.

COURTESY

Weavers and their families register their rugs at the entrance to the Crownpoint Elementary School gym. The names of the weavers and their hometowns, but not the size of the rugs, are written on cards attached to the rugs up for auction.

Weavers Association manager Ellsworth said she has taken classes in rugmaking and is an amateur weaver herself. She said she's not a professional, but is experienced enough to understand the amount of work that goes into shearing sheep, carding, dyeing and spinning wool into yarn, setting up a loom and weaving a rug with a unique pattern.

"I've done some weaving, but I don't want to sell what I make," she said. "It's my rug, my design, and then I look at these rugs and I think, 'How can they come up with these designs?' You get these guys from Blue Gap, from Chinle, from Wide Ruins. How do they get these designs in their heads? I sit at my loom and I think, 'What kind of design shall I make?' It's real puzzling."

Ellsworth laughs at the prices paid for Navajo rugs off the reservation – "an arm and a leg" – versus what weavers get. She recalled how she and her mother stopped at a trading post near Farmington years ago to overhear a trader trying to persuade an elderly woman to sell him a big Ganado red at a low price.

"He just wanted to give her peanuts for it," she said, "so my mom told her in Navajo, she said, 'Don't be selling your rug like that. You put a lot of work into it. Take it to the Crownpoint Rug Auction. You'll get better money for it.' So the lady got her rug and she left, and I felt like saying something to that man: 'Why are you just giving them peanuts for those rugs? It's a lot of hard work for them.' "

Information from: The Santa Fe New Mexican, http://www.

sfnewmexican.com

EVENTS

other event info to: Lisa@ nativetimes.com. Name, date, time, place and contact information is free.

EVERY WEDNESDAY Kiowa class, October-November, 6:30 pm, Room 300, Oliphant Hall, Tulsa University. Info call Sarah, (918) 445-5213

EVERY THURSDAY

The Otoe-Missouria Substance Abuse and Behavioral Health Programs sponsor an open group for families touched by addiction from noon to 1 p.m. at the Otoe-Missouria Health Building. This is a confidential group. Call 580-723-4466 x252 or x262 for more information.

SECOND TUESDAY Cherokee Artists Association meeting at 202 E. 5th Street

Tahlequah, Okla. Phone: (918) 458-0008 Web site: www.cherokeeartistsassociation.org

THIRD TUESDAY of even numbered months - The Central Oklahoma Cherokee Alliance meets at Mayflower UCC Church, Oklahoma City at 6 p.m. Phone: (405) 408-0763. The next meeting is Feb. 16.

FOURTH THURSDAY
Each month the American Indian Chamber of Commerce of Oklahoma

– Eastern Chapter hosts a monthly luncheon at Bacone College Muskogee, Okla. 11:30 a.m. at Benjamin Wacoche
Hall. Please RSVP one week

230-3759

EVERY 2ND SATURDAY
Indian Taco Sales - from 11-2:30pm at OK Choctaw
Tribal Alliance, 5320 S.

Youngs Blvd, Oklahoma City

www.okchoctaws.org

ahead of time. Phone: (918)

MONDAYS, WEDNESDAYS AND THURSDAYS
The Marble City Nutrition Center serves hot meals at the Marble City Community Center at 11:30 a.m. Meals are free to anyone over 50, but a small donation is suggested to help with the expense of the program.
Gather for fellowship and friendship. Volunteers welcome. Marble City Nutrition Center, 711 N. Main,

Marble City, Okla. Phone:

(918) 775-2158

YOUTH COUNCIL
The Native Nations Youth Council (NNYC) bimonthly meetings from 6:30pm
- 8:30pm @ the Youth Services of Tulsa Activity Center (311 S. Madison - on 3rd just west of Peoria). Call to confirm location. Info Call:
Chad Gilley (918) 382-2204

or nnyc@ihcrc.org

JANUARY 14 80th Birthday Dance for Moses Starr at Concho Community Hall, Concho, Okla. Gourd Dancing @ 2pm

Supper @ 6pm

JANUARY 19 South Coffeyville Cherokee Community meeting at 6:30 p.m. Call Vickie Brokeshoulder 918-822-2893

JANUARY 24 Vinita Indian Territory Coalition Cherokee Community meeting at 6 p.m. Call Lisa Trice-Turtle 918-453-2988

JANUARY 30-FEBRUARY 5 Tulsa Boat Show, Quik Trip Center, Tulsa, Okla. (918) 519-1219

FEBRUARY 4
Birthday Dance for Richard
D Roubedeaux at Otoe Cultrual Bldg, Red Rock Okla.
Starts at 2:00 p.m. Supper at 5:00 p.m. More Gourd dancing after supper - if anyone wants to bring anything please bring covered

*Email your event information to lisa@nativetimes. com or fax your flyer to 888-689-5245.

Vicki Jones, center, stands with her family, brother Sonny Glass (left) with his daughter Kristal and her son, Samuel Morgan (right), with Sonny's wife Deanna Glass (far right).

Quapaw woman named 'Veteran of the Year'

DOREEN FINNIE Quapaw Tribe

QUAPAW, Okla. – Oklahoma Governor Mary Fallin recently proclaimed Quapaw tribal member MAJ (ret) Vicki (Glass) Jones of Guthrie, Oklahoma as Oklahoma Women Veteran of the Year. Ms Jones, who is Quapaw, Seneca-Cayuga and Cherokee was recognized for her contributions to the Veteran Community.

Ms Jones was the first Native American female to graduate from the Army Rotary Wing (Helicopter) School at FT Rucker, Alabama and was the first female helicopter pilot for the Oklahoma Army National Guard.

In 1997 Senator/Chief Kelly

Haney, Seminole, painted the Heritage of Valor painting depicting a Native American Woman for the Women in Military Service of America Memorial. The picture, which depicts a woman in a battle stance in her native Seneca dress with a view of a modern military woman in a flight helmet in the background, honors all women veterans past, present and future. The model for the painting is Vicki Jones. The original painting is displayed in the Native American Alcove of the 45th Division Museum in Oklahoma City.

Ms Jones said she is very humbled to have been selected as the model. "To be allowed to honor Lady Warriors both past and present is something I will always hold close to my heart. As I sat for the painting, I was always aware of the women who had served before me. And I was always aware of those who will serve their home and country in the future. If the painting is in some small way an inspiration to my sister warriors, I am very pleased."

Ms Jones and her spouse of fifteen years, Paul are involved with Meals on Wheels and the Patriot Guard Riders. To the Oklahoma Women Veterans Organization she gives thanks that they honored her with the Nomination, which she would receive as part of the October 29, 2011 Oklahoma Women Veterans Day celebration. These individuals she says has made her a better Veteran.

The Oak Ridge Boys

Saturday, January 21 • 7 pm Tickets are $35

Osage Event Center • Tulsa

Ticket Info

Order your Event Center tickets at osagecasinos.com!

Visit the Osage Box Office in Tulsa or call (918) 699-7667. Cash and all major credit cards accepted. Must be 18 to attend. No refunds or exchanges.

COMING SOON!

Three Dog Night

Saturday, February 11 • 7 pm Tickets are $25

Glen Campbell – The Goodbye TourWith Special Guest Instant People

Tuesday, March 27 • 7 pm Tickets are $35

Fulfill your thrill.

End of Tisdale Parkway near Downtown Tulsa.

osagecasinos.com

(918) 699-7777

Find us on Facebook!

©2012 Osage Casino. Management reserves all rights.

Inside this issue:

- Choctaw man loves sharing language
- Students embrace Ojibwe sign project
- Museum awards Native grads

TODAY'S INDEPENDENT INDIAN NEWS

- A FREE PUBLICATION

WWW.NATIVETIMES.COM

VOLUME 18 + ISSUE 3

PUBLISHED WEEKLY

JANUARY 20, 2012

Water rights battle likely a long one

Lawsuit claims tribal rights pre-date and supersede any water rights claimed by state officials

TIM TALLEY Associated Press

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) - Simmering conflicts between the state and leaders of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations over water rights in Oklahoma's and regulatory authority fertile southeastern corner will begin a new chapter when the state goes to court to determine the extent of the tribes' water rights - a legal battle that has taken years to resolve in other states with similar tribal disputes.

The litigation, authorized last month by the Oklahoma Water Resources Board, is a response to a separate lawsuit filed by the tribes in U.S. District Court in August that claims tribal rights over water in the historic territories of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations pre-date and supersede any water rights claimed by state officials.

The competing lawsuits complicate the state's efforts to develop and implement a statewide comprehensive water plan and could delay efforts by Oklahoma City officials to tap into new sources of water in southeastern Oklahoma. The region's Atoka pipeline has transported water to the city and surrounding areas in central Oklahoma for almost 50 years.

"It's a wrench," said Jim Couch, Oklahoma City's city manager. "It's a hard issue. It's very complicated. I don't see immediate solutions."

The legal disputes will also delay efforts by rapidly growing areas of North Texas to negotiate the sale

See WATER Continued on Page 4

NATIVE TIMES GRAPHIC / LISA SNELL

The Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations have entered an agreement with the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers to conduct a regional water plan to assess the water resources of their treaty territory, an area that covers 22 counties in southeastern and south central Oklahoma.

AP PHOTO / ERIC LANWEHR / SOUTH DAKOTA STATE UNIVERSITY

In this Dec. 7, 2011, photo Flandreau Indian School students Kevin Lahi, left and Joseph Stillions, a food science student at South Dakota State University, use bison to prepare meat patties at SDSU in Brookings, S.D. The students are part of a pilot project started by the Flandreau Santee Sioux tribe, from Flandreau, S.D., and SDSU researchers to restore the cultural significance of the animal and consumption of bison meat among community members, particularly the youth.

Tribe looks to teenagers to revive bison demand

KRISTI EATON Associated Press

FLANDREAU, S.D. (AP) -It seems an unlikely concept: teenagers forgoing the immediacy of a McDonald's Big Mac to don an apron, grab a meat patty and learn how to cook their own lowerfat version in the kitchen.

But for a group of students at the Flandreau Indian School in South Dakota, they're doing just that while learning about bison, an animal considered sacred in their Native American culture.

The students are part of a pilot project started by the Flandreau Santee Sioux tribe and South Dakota State University researchers to restore the cultural significance of the animal, also called buffalo, and consumption of its meat among community members, particularly young people. Through demonstrations cooking and educational outreach opportunities, the students are learning that there are healthier, tasty options that also connect them to their

See BISON Continued on Page 4

Md. formally recognizes 2 American Indian groups

Before recognition, the Maryland Historical Trust had to consult with out-of-state tribes on the reburial of Maryland Native American Indian remains.

BRIAN WITTE Associated Press

ANNAPOLIS, Md. (AP) – For the first time in Maryland's history, two American Indian groups indigenous to the state were formally recognized in executive orders by Gov. Martin O'Malley on Monday.

O'Malley, a Democrat, signed the executive orders during a crowded ceremony under the Maryland State House rotunda to officially recognize the Piscataway Conoy Tribe and the Piscataway Indian Nation in southern Marvland.

"Today is a day of recognition," O'Malley said. "It is a day of reconciliation, and it is a day of arrival - a day 380 years in the making, a day made possible only by the kindness, the forgiveness, the goodness of the Piscataway people of this beautiful place that we now call Maryland."

The Piscataway Conoy Tribe includes two entities, the Piscataway Conoy Confederacy and Sub-Tribes and the Cedarville Band of Piscataway Indians.

Tribal officials thanked the governor. Mervin Savoy, tribal chair of the Piscataway Conoy Confederacy and Sub-tribes, recalled her mother and father and others who had worked for official state recognition.

"So sorry they weren't here to see this, but they are dancing in heaven," Savoy said, noting the importance of creating a sense of identity to motivate the young.

See GROUPS Continued on Page 3

Byrd wins Cherokee Council seat

TAHLEQUAH, According to unofficial results, Cherokee Nation voters in Cherokee and eastern Wagoner counties have chosen former chief Joe Byrd to represent them on the Tribal Council.

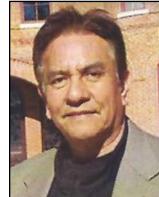

Byrd, who served as chief of the Cherokee Nation from 1995 to 1999, defeated four other candidates to fill seat 1 from District 1, which was vacated when Principal Chief Bill John Baker took office in October 2011. Byrd will serve the remainder of Baker's term, scheduled to expire in August 2013.

With more than 1,800 votes cast, Byrd received 1189, or 65.8 percent, compared to 431 votes for second-place finisher Pam Iron, 106 for Raymond Vann, 48 for Geneva Reves and 32 for Brandon Girty. He will join Hulbert resident Tina Glory-Jordan and Tahlequah resident David Walkingstick in representing Cherokee Nation voters from District 1.

The Jan. 14 results will not become official until they are certified by the Cherokee Election Commission, which is scheduled to meet Jan. 17 at 9 a.m.

"I congratulate all five candidates on their hardfought campaigns," Baker said. "I look forward to working with Mr. Byrd and the rest of the Tribal Council to help bring the Cherokee Nation from good to great."

Joe Byrd

Researchers, tribes clash over Native bones

SUDHIN THANAWALA Associated Press

BERKELEY, Calif. (AP) -On a bluff overlooking a sweep of Southern California beach, scientists in 1976 unearthed what were among the oldest skeletal remains ever found in the Western Hemisphere.

Researchers would come to herald the bones - dating back nearly 10,000 years as a potential treasure trove for understanding the earliest human history of the continental United States. But a local tribal group called the Kumeyaay Nation claimed that the bones, representing at least two people, were their ancestors and demanded them back several years ago.

For decades, fights like this over the provenance and treatment of human bones have played out across the nation. Yet new federal protections could mean that the vast majority of the remains of an estimated 160,000 Native Americans held by universities, museums federal government agencies, including those sought by the Kumeyaay, may soon be transferred to tribes.

A recent federal regulation addresses what should happen to any remains that cannot be positively traced to the ancestors of modern-day tribes. Museums and agencies are required to notify tribes whose current or ancestral lands harbored the remains, then the tribe is entitled to have them back.

Prestigious institutions Harvard to the University of California, Berkeley have already begun working through storehouses of remains uncovered by archeologists, highway and building contractors and others since the 19th Century. A few are surrendering bones to Native tribes, and others are evaluating whether to do so. Tribes have hailed the rule, saying it will help close a long and painful chapter that saw Native peoples' bones stolen by grave robbers, boxed up in dusty storerooms and disrespected by researchers.

"Darn it, these are people," said Louis Guassac, a member of the Kumeyaay Cultural Repatriation Committee. "This isn't stuff. You don't do this to people. I don't care how long they've been there. You respect them."

The Native American Graves Protection and Repatriation Act of 1990 provided for the return of remains connected to modern-day tribes. But it was not until 2010 that a rule on the disposition of so-called culturally unidentifiable remains was finalized by the Department of the Interior. Until then, more 650 universities and other institutions had no clear guidance about how to return those remains, which account for the bones of about 116,000 people in their collections. That rule is still playing out, sometimes fractiously.

See BONES Continued on Page 3

Navajo Nation sues Utah county over voting issues

JENNIFER DOBNER Associated Press

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) - The Navajo Nation filed a federal lawsuit Jan. 12 against San Juan County, claiming its three established voting districts violate the constitutional rights of tribal members living in Utah.

The lawsuit filed in Salt Lake City's U.S. District Court asks a federal judge for an injunction that would force county commission district boundaries to be redrawn ahead of the November election.

No hearings have been scheduled in the case.

Deputy County Attorney Walter Bird didn't immediately return a call seeking comment on the lawsuit.

In court papers, attorneys for the tribe and six of its Utah members contend the current boundaries allow non-Indian voters to hold majorities in two of three districts.

The complaint also says boundary lines have not been redrawn since 1984 and that county commissioners have failed to address changes in population, despite U.S. Census data from 1990, 2000 and 2010.

Population figures included in the court filing show that residents in two of three districts represent about 29 percent of the total population. In the third district, Navajos represent nearly 93 percent of the populous. Two districts have similar populations of roughly 4,600 people, but one has more than 5,300. Court papers say that based on census data from 2010, each district should have about 4,900 residents.

"Because the populations in the three districts are not equal, the votes of residents are not equal in weight," court paper state.

Navajos make up just over 50 percent of San Juan County's population of 14,746 residents, court papers say.

executive Leonard Gorman, director of the Navajo Nation's Human Rights Commission, said he has attended several county commission meetings to urge redistricting but sees no indication that commissioners want to redraw the boundaries.

"What I understand is that every citizen in the union would be balanced. One man, one vote. That is a guarantee that is iterated in the U.S. Constitution," Gorman said in a telephone interview Thursday. "That is not being made available to citizens in San Juan County."

The county and commissioners Bruce Adams, Phil Lyman and Kenneth Maryboy are named as defendants in the lawsuit, along with Norman L. Johnson, the county's clerk/auditor.

Prosecutors offer timeline for Navajo fraud case

FELICIA FONSECA Associated Press

FLAGSTAFF, Ariz. (AP) -Prosecutors accusing dozens of Navajo Nation officials of fraud have asked a judge to give them time to try to defendants.

85 defendants might bring the cases to an end, the Rothstein sent Jan. 13 to a Window Rock court.

A civil complaint alleges that the current and former Navajo officials defrauded the tribal government in the use or day case management order management of $36 million in that sets deadlines for motions discretionary funds.

"We have a good faith belief based on the work we have completed on this matter, including conversations with defendants, that a priority should be placed on attempting to negotiate resolution of some or all of the pending claims," prosecutors wrote.

defendants maintained his clients' innocence and said Friday they would be amendable to talks with prosecutors to tell them that.

"If they think that my clients negotiate settlements with the are going to roll over and just pay them a bunch of money, Candid discussions with the no I don't see that happening," said defense attorney David Jordan. "If the meetings are by Feb. 3 of any third-party Law Firm wrote in documents more of the nature (of) 'we want to interview you to see if you've done anything wrong, I think my clients might take disadvantage the tribe or other him up on that."

Prosecutors requested a 90to dismiss, responses to those, discovery and status updates, to which Jordan said he wouldn't object. The Window Rock District Court received the request Friday and a separate one to further extend a stay on the case so that the order could be considered.

Judicial spokeswoman Karen the case on hold until Feb. 13.

Meanwhile, Judge Carol Perry has asked defense attorneys to declare any conflicts of interest. Jordan represents the most defendants, while another attorney has 14 defendants as clients. Perry said the court needs to be informed payments, representation of clients in related matters, use of information that could relevant matters.

Parties in the case have said the allegations could take years to resolve, with some defendantshavingfiledmotions to dismiss claims against them based on sovereign, legislative or executive immunity. Among those named as defendants are a former tribal president, the current and former attorney general, and the tribe's controller.

The civil charges wouldn't An attorney for two dozen Francis said the latter request lead to any jail time but could was granted late Friday, putting mean fines for anyone proved to have committed wrongdoing and a temporary ban on seeking elected office.

> Prosecutors said request is meant to speed up the case, not delay it, though they said interviewing the 85 defendants will be a daunting

> "Many of the Navajo Nation's key government officials are operating under a cloud of serious accusations of impropriety," prosecutors wrote. "If those accusations are justified, those individuals should be held accountable. If those accusations are not justified, those individuals and the Navajo Nation are entitled to a clean bill of health."

> The civil lawsuit replaced some criminal charges in the investigation of discretionary spending unresolved.

Ex-Mohawk chief gets prison in upstate NY pot bust

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) - A former chief of the St. Regis Mohawk tribe has been sentenced to a year in prison following his arrest more than a year ago at a U.S. Border Patrol checkpoint with two hockey bags filled with marijuana.

U.S. District Judge Thomas McAvoy has also ordered 69-year-old Phillip Tarbell, of Hogansburg, to pay a $10,000

Federal prosecutors say that Tarbell, following his Nov. 12, 2010, arrest in Essex County, pleaded guilty to possession with intent to distribute marijuana. He faces other charges following his Nov. 3, 2011, arrest, accused of trying to sell 1,800 ecstasy pills to an undercover agent in Queens.

Wampanoags sue former tribal leaders

MASHPEE, Mass. (AP) -The Mashpee Wampanoags have filed a complaint in tribal court in an attempt to recoup about $400,000 current leaders say was embezzled by a trio of former tribal officials.

Former tribal council Chairman Glenn Marshall as well as two others are named in the civil complaint filed last month in the newly established tribal court.

Marshall is serving a federal prison sentence after pleading guilty in 2009 to bilking the tribe out of nearly $400,000, and using the money to make illegalcampaigncontributions and for personal purchases.

The other two defendants were never charged, but the lawsuit says they conspired with Marshall.

Current tribal council Chairman Cedric Cromwell tells the Cape Cod Times he is obligated to get the money

Marshall's wife was critical of the suit.

Oklahoma Tobacco Helpline

NOTICE FOR OSAGE COUNTY

(WEATHER PERMITTING)

THE OSAGE COUNTY ASSESSOR WILL BE AT THE FOLLOWING LOCATIONS:

FAIRFAX - SENIOR CITIZENS CENTER - 600 W. HARRISON-JANUARY 18, 11:00 A.M. - 1:00 P.M.

TULSA - GILCREASE HILLS HOMEOWNERS ASSOC. - 1919 W. SEMINOLE - JANUARY 19, 10:00 A.M. - 2:00 P.M. AND MARCH 6, 10:00 A.M. - 3:00 P.M.

> McCORD - SENIOR CITIZENS CENTER-115 MARY RD JANUARYY 20, 10:00 A.M. - 2:00 P.M. AND MARCH 7, 10:00 A.M. - 3:00 P.M.

HULAH - SENIOR CITIZENS CENTER -1924 CR 3575- JANUARY 23, 11:00 A.M. - 1:00 P.M.

PRUE - SENIOR CITIZENS CENTER -209 WAH GRA SEE- JANUARY 24, 10:00 A.M. - 2:00 P.M

BARTLESVILLE - LABADIE HEIGHTS BAPTIST CHURCH - SW OF CITY, JANUARY 25, 10:00 A.M. - 2:00 P.M SPERRY - CITY HALL - 115 N. CINCINNATI - JANUARY 26, 10:00 A.M. - 2:00 P.M

BURBANK - CITY HALL -105 FIRST ST - JANUARY 27, 10:00 A.M. - 12:00 NOON

FOR THE PURPOSE OF

TAKING NEW APPLICATIONS FOR HOMESTEAD EXEMPTION, DOUBLE HOMESTEAD EXEMPTION, SENIOR FREEZE, VETERANS EXEMPTION, REPORTING CHANGES MADE TO YOUR PROPERTY AND/OR BUILDINGS, TURNING IN MANUFACTURED HOMES, RENDERING BUSINESS PERSONALS, REPORTING FARM EQUIPMENT, TRACTORS, BOAT DOCKS, ETC., AND APPLYING FOR AGRICULTURE FUEL EXEMPTION.

DEADLINE FOR FILING IS MARCH 15, 2012

ADDITIONAL HOMESTEAD EXEMPTION: AN ADDITIONAL EXEMPTION WILL BE GRANTED FOR ALL HOUSEHOLDS WITH A GROSS INCOME (COLLECTIVE INCOME OF ANY AND ALL SOURCES OF ALL PERSONS LIVING IN THE HOMESTEAD) NOT TO EXCEED $20,000.00 FOR THE PRECEEDING CALENDAR YEAR. THERE ARE NO AGE REQUIREMENTS. HOWEVER, FOR A PERMANENT EXEMPTION, YOU MUST FILE AT AGE 65, AND YOU MUST BE 65 AS OF MARCH 15TH. IF 66 YEARS OR OLDER AND QUALIFIED IN 2011, NO ANNUAL APPLICATION IS REQUIRED. FOR MORE DETAILS CALL 918-287-3448.

VETERANS EXEMPTION: 100% DISABLED OR SURVIVING SPOUSE MAY NOW APPLY FOR A PROPERTY TAX EXEMPTION THAT WILL ELIMINATE THEIR TAX BURDEN ON HOMESTEAD PROPERTY. APPLICANT MUST PROVIDE A CURRENT U.S.D.V.A. BENEFITS AWARD LETTER WITH QUALIFICATIONS SPECIFIC TO THIS EXEMPTION THAT CERTIFIES THE 100% SERVICE RELATED DISABILITY.

PROPERTY VALUATION FREEZE (AKA: SENIOR FREEZE): THE OWNER MUST BE 65 YEARS OLD OR OLDER AS OF JANUARY 1ST, 2012; AND GROSS HOUSEHOLD INCOME LEVEL CANNOT EXCEED $59,600.00 FOR THE 2011 YEAR. TO QUALIFY THE TAXPAYER MUST PROVIDE COPIES OF 2011 PAPERS TO VERIFY TOTAL HOUSEHOLD INCOME OF ALL OCCUPANTS LIVING IN THE HOMESTEAD PROPERTY. TOTAL HOUSEHOLD INCOME INCLUDES ALL TAXABLE AND NON-TAXABLE INCOME SOURCES. THE STATE OF OKLAHOMA WILL VERIFY ALL APPLICANTS.

IT IS THE RESPONSIBILITY OF THE TAXPAYER TO NOTIFY THIS OFFICE IF INCOME EXCEEDS THE OUALIFIED AMOUNTS.

HOUSE BILL#1724: IF PERSONAL PROPERTY TAXES ARE DELINQUENT, YOUR HOMESTEAD EXEMPTION WILL BE CANCELLED.

> GAIL HEDGCOTH, OSAGE COUNTY ASSESSOR 600 GRANDVIEW, RM 101, OSAGE COUNTY COURTHOUSE PAWHUSKA, OK. 74056 HOURS: 8:30 A.M. - 5:00 P.M. 918-287-3448

GROUPS

The ceremony follows a process established by the General Assembly to formally recognize American Indian tribes, bands or clans.

According to the census, Maryland has 23,162 Native Americans living in the state, and 58,000 people who identify themselves as having American Indian heritage. State law requires that petitioners document that the group has been identified as part of a continuous Native American community from before 1790 until the present and is indigenous to Maryland.

More than $17 million in potential funding may now become available to the state and the Piscataway in education, minority business contracting, housing and public health, according to the O'Malley administration. Recognition also means the Maryland Commission on Indian Affairs will be able to assist in getting federal funding for the reestablishment of the Title VII Indian Education program in southern Maryland.

Before recognition, the Maryland Historical Trust had to consult with out-ofstate tribes on the reburial of Maryland Native American Indian remains. Now, the state can consult with Maryland indigenous Piscataway Tribes.

No charges in death of woodcarver

SEATTLE (AP) - No criminal charges will be filed against a former Seattle police officer who shot and killed a Native American woodcarver while on duty in 2010, the U.S. Justice Department said

John T. Williams had just crossed a street while holding a knife and a block of wood when Officer Ian Birk got out of his patrol car, ordered him to drop the knife, and then shot him to death on Aug. 30, 2010.

The killing outraged many who saw it as an unnecessary use of force.

Birk resigned from the Police Department and the city paid $1.5 million to Williams' family.

Prompted by the killing and other incidents, the Justice Department launched a formal civil rights investigation of the department and eventually determined that Seattle police engaged in a pattern of using excessive force, often against minorities.

The DOJ also conducted a criminal civil-rights investigation of Birk's actions and announced Friday that there is not enough evidence to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the officer willfully violated Williams' rights.

"Prosecutors must establish, beyond a reasonable doubt, that a law enforcement officer willfully deprived an individual of a constitutional right, meaning with the deliberate and specific intent to do something the law forbids," the department said in a news release. "Accident, mistake, fear, negligence or bad judgment is not sufficient to establish a federal criminal civil rights violation."

State officials reached a similar conclusion earlier. Even though a firearms review board found the shooting unjustified, King County Prosecutor Dan Satterberg said the state could not charge Birk because the law required prosecutors to show the officer acted with malice and without good faith.

Attorney Tim Ford, a lawyer for the Williams family, told The Seattle Times the decision "is a great disappointment to his family," which had hoped a jury would have the opportunity to hear the case.

NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES

Publisher & Editor LISA SNELL editor@nativetimes.com

Contributing Writers Dana Attocknie WESLEY MAHAN KAREN SHADE

Advertising Sales KATHLEEN ROBERTSON LISA SNELL ROB WALTON advertising@nativetimes.com

Distribution SHELBY HICKS STEVE LACY WESLEY MAHAN MICHAEL MARRIS KATHLEEN ROBERTSON Brenda Slaughter

The Native American Times, formerly the Oklahoma Indian Times, is published weekly (except the last week of the year) by Lisa Hicks Snell. Mailing address is PO Box 411 Tahlequah, OK 74465. All the contents within the Native American Times are copyrighted material. Any reproduction, redistribution without the written consent of the NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES is strictly

> Each week's issue is available for free download online at: www.nativetimes.com

Subscription rates: $65.00 for fifty-two issues, $32.50 for twenty-six issues, or $16.25 for thirteen issues. A single copy is $1.25 (Rates are for postage and handling) Send check or money order to:

> NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES Attn: Subscriptions P.O. Box 411 Tahlequah, OK 74465-0411

Phone: (918) 708-5838 Fax: (888) 689-4873

Postmaster: Send Change of Address Form 579 to: NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES P.O. Box 411, Tahlequah, OK 74465

WWW.NATIVETIMES.COM - News from the crossroads of Indian Country

RESERVE YOUR

CALL LISA 918-708-5838

Bison relocation plan challenged in court

MATTHEW BROWN

BILLINGS, Mont. (AP) - Opponents of a plan to relocate 68 wild bison filed a lawsuit Wednesday seeking to stop the transfer of the animals to two American during their winter migration several Indian Reservations in Montana.

The plaintiffs contend Montana Fish, Wildlife and Parks should be blocked from relocating the animals until the agency crafts a statewide bison management plan and conducts further environmental reviews.

The suit was filed in state District Court in Blaine County by a coalition of property owners, ranchers, public land access advocates and a state lawmaker. It alleges bison can cause extensive property damage such as tearing down fences and eating hay intended for domestic cattle.

The bison slated for relocation to the Blaine County ranchers whose property those agreements might be finalized.

Fort Peck and Fort Belknap reservations borders Fort Belknap. According to the near Corwin Springs, just north of Yellowstone National park.

They were captured leaving the park and depleting haystacks. sure they were free of brucellosis. That disease, which can cause pregnant animals to abort their young, was for many years the primary argument for preventing Yellowstone bison from roaming freely outside the park.

But the property owners' lawsuit puts greater emphasis on the possible damage that can be inflicted by the animals when they get onto private land.

To back up the assertion, the suit details $20,000 in alleged losses suffered by plaintiffs Dustin and Vickie Hofeldt, are being held in a government quarantine suit, bison from a herd already on the reservation have escaped repeatedly onto the Hofeldts' property, trampling fences

"The state needs to follow the laws set years ago and tested extensively to make to protect landowners and our agriculture producers, not crowd more buffalo onto the range, which makes the problem worse," Dustin Hofeldt said in a statement released by the plaintiffs.

> Fish, Wildlife and Parks spokesman Ron Aasheim said he had not seen the lawsuit and could not comment on it. But he said the 68 Yellowstone bison will not be moved until the state and tribes sign agreements detailing how the animals will be contained and what measures must to be taken to retrieve them if they leave.

Aasheim said there is no date for when

BONES

Continued from Page 1

Universities find themselves tugged one way by the law's mandates, another by faculty research needs.

Some anthropologists say more remains will become off limits, imperiling study of the diets, health, migrations and other habits of ancient peoples without guaranteeing that the remains will wind up with their true descendants. "There really isn't any balance anymore," said Keith Kintigh, associate director of the School of Human Evolution and Social Change at Arizona State University. "The public and scientific interest in (the remains) no longer have any weight."

In recent months, Harvard's Peabody Museum has received requests for about 500 remains and hired additional staff as they respond to the 2010 rule, said Patricia Capone, the museum's repatriation coordinator.

At the University of officials have Michigan, decided to transfer the bulk their 1,580 culturally unaffiliated remains to 13 Native American tribes who want them. In the meantime, they have been put off limits to researchers. "The law is very clear that they will be transferred," said school spokesman Rick Fitzgerald.

At UC-Berkeley, more than 6,000 of the roughly 10,000 remains that were deemed culturally unidentifiable are now subject to potential transfer to tribes. And the Phoebe A. Hearst Museum of Archaeology here has added four new staff members to help match remains to tribes if possible and notify tribes whose lands held the remains.

The small eclectic museum recently celebrated the 100th anniversary of a recording made by Ishi - the last surviving member of the Yahi tribe who emerged from hiding in Northern California in 1911. The museum displays artifacts such as Pomo baskets, an Achumawi rabbitskin blanket and arrowheads Ishi made out of obsidian and glass- but not the remains of Native peoples.

The collection of bones - one of the country's largest - is in storage. Officials declined to show them to The Associated Press during a recent campus visit on grounds that that could be offensive to tribes.

The university currently has four pending requests for remains. And Museum Director Mari Lyn Salvador said the regulation change has caused concern among researchers.

"There are very important opportunities to understand contemporary medicine ... information that could be very useful to these (Native) communities themselves in terms of better understanding diabetes and other illnesses," she said.

The university presents such information to tribes, she said, but lets the tribes decide whether to allow researchers to work with the bones.

Tens of thousands of individual Native American remains have been collected since the mid-19th century. Some grave sites were looted or excavated to support scientific research, including a study of skulls purporting to show that Native Americans were inferior to Caucasians, according to Robert Bieder, an Indiana University professor who has written about the phenomenon.

The bones in dispute at UC San Diego have long since been out of the ground. They were excavated more than three decades ago from land around the university chancellor's house in La Jolla by a professor from another school. But a photo of the original discovery shows the outlines of two skeletons with skulls, buried head to toe.

Since their discovery in 1976, they have been studied at the Smithsonian and carbon dated at the University of Oxford, according to Margaret Schoeninger, a professor in the Department of Anthropology at UCSD and the university's representative on Indian burial issues.

When the Kumeyaay Nation - a dozen Native bands with reservations in San Diego County - first demanded the remains, the university rejected its claim that they were the tribe's ancestors.

Researchers have said Kumeyaay remains were cremated early in the tribe's history, not buried. They have also questioned whether the remains are even Native American, given their age, although the university has concluded that they are.

"In terms of what the Kumeyaay have put forward, the only thing I've heard is their belief, their deep tie to the land and folklore," Schoeninger said. "We need empirical evidence."

Tribal representatives say they have an oral history that goes back thousands of years and connects them to the remains.

In light of the recent rule, university officials did a reevaluation, concluding that the skeletons came from the Kumeyaay's ancestral lands while still maintaining they were not the Kumeyaay's direct ancestors.

In a filing in December, the university said it would turn the remains over to the Kumeyaay although it gave other tribal groups until Jan. 4 to come forward and dispute the Kumeyaay's claim.

Kumeyaay repatriation officials say they will accept the remains.

"It's pleasing to know that these are going to finally be returned and properly taken care of," Guassac said. "They are going to be getting the respectful treatment they deserve."

One option, he said, is that the remains will be reburied.

True American Indian www.flyingeagletradingpost.com

We proudly offer an array of services, from general dentistry to sedation, dental implants, and cosmetic dentistry - all designed expressly to meet our patient's changing needs. With four general dentists and four hygienists, we can maintain your oral health for a lifetime all at one location.

We Accept Contract Health & Sooner Care

We serve patients in the Drumright, Cushing, Stillwater, Stroud, Ponca City, and surrounding areas with personalized service and exemplary care. Call for your appointment today.

918-352-3312 or Toll Free 877-RH Melton drumrightdentalcenter.com

SUPERNAW'S OKLAHOMA INDIAN SUPPLY

Wholesale items for Pow Wow Vendors

Bone chokers $20 per dozen

Handmade lamp worked glass bead bracelets $1.00 each Glass bead stretch bracelets 5 for $2.50

12 Necklaces: Chain w/ pendant and display pad $13.50 36 inch gemstone chip strands Reg. 3.95 now $2.00 36 inch turquoise chip strands Reg. 7.95 now $4.00

Always our regular stock of seed beads from 16/0 to 8/0, findings, leather, hackles, fluffs and thousands of other supply items.

Remember we've moved around the corner 109 North Broadway, Skiatook, OK 74070

New Dealers Cash or Credit Card Only.

Open Noon-6pm Mon. thru Fri. • 10am-5m Sat. • Closed Sun. Local: 396-1713-Countrywide Toll Free 1-888-720-1967

Website: www.supernaw.com • Email: Supernaw@flash.net

Vets aim for easier civilian shift

KRISTI EATON

Associated Press FLANDREAU, S.D. (AP) - Like all soldiers returning from the Iraq War, Dennis Quigley met with a mental health professional before his return to civilian Quigley, a member of the Rosebud Sioux tribe, had the 15- to 20-minute meeting at the Veterans' Administration and he was on his way. But he says that was far too little time for a proper diagnosis and understanding of how his American Indian culture would shape his transition back to civilian life as a veteran.

"So they end up doing a lot of Band-Aiding on these hidden wounds that are so prevalent," Quigley said, adding that post-traumatic stress disorder is prevalent and suicide rates have skyrocketed among American Indian veterans.

Quigley brought together about 60 veterans and tribal leaders from South Dakota's nine tribes for a conference last week in an effort to address the issues facing American Indian veterans. The three-day event focused on better practices and guidelines for Native American veterans struggling to adjust to

The problem, Quigley said, is that many of the mental health professionals take a one-size-fits-all approach to veterans and don't realize the role culture plays among veterans who are Native American.

"Everything is about non-Indian veterans," he said. "So we just struggle along on our own. Our culture says that we don't put ourselves out there. It's hard to get the Indian perspective."

For example, he said, not all Native Americans diagnosed with PTSD or another disorder want to take medication, but they are often told to.

"Some people should be on medication, but you can't expect everyone to willingly submit to all these medications. With our culture, we don't use medication," he Quigley said the conference [was] also a chance to show appreciation for the veterans' service.

Native American veterans, you

LAURA SAVAGE

Native Americans serving in the Many soldiers are physically wounded

- Recurrent nightmares
- Flashbacks to traumatic events
- Loss of interest in favorite activities

- Increased heart rate or sweating
- Difficulty concentrating
- Feeling constantly "on guard"
- Being easily startled
- Withdrawal from family and friends
- Talk of suicide or killing others

These are all natural reactions to unnatural, even horrific, circumstances such as war. The stresses of military service can adversely impact people of all ages, races, ranks, and education levels. It affects those who serve and those who love them.

If you or someone you know has these, or other, symptoms help is available. Psychological wounds; like physical wounds, can be treated. Many professional behavioral health clinicians are well-equipped to provide counseling, education, support, and referrals to veterans and to their families. Most Oklahoma Tribes have behavioral health services which are offered free of charge to anyone holding a CDIB card.

Veterans...know that you are not alone and have not been forgotten; it's not a sign of weakness to reach out for help... it's a sign of strength...the same strength that led you into battle will lead you safely home and to wellness again. Don't suffer needlessly, professional and confidential help is available. For more information and/or to schedule an appointment to see a mental health and/or substance abuse professional, contact your nearest Tribal Health System or refer to the following links and numbers:

National Native Americans Veterans Association: 210-679-6721 http://nnava.org/

U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs; National Center for PTSD www.ptsd.va.gov/public/index.asp Veterans Crisis Line: 800-273-8255 http://www.veteranscrisisline.net/

Not Alone: 888-497-0379 www.notalone.com/site/Default.aspx

Wounded Warrior Project; 877-TEAMWWP (877-832-6997) http://www.woundedwarriorproject. org/warriors.aspx

- Laura Savage can be reached at 918-224-9185 or laura.savage@creekhealth.

of any surplus water from southeastern Oklahoma. Jim Oliver, general manager of the Tarrant Regional Water District that serves the Fort Worth and Arlington areas, said the district is still interested in negotiating a deal for southeastern Oklahoma water.

"The door remains open," Oliver said in a statement.

Attorney General Scott Pruitt's office is preparing a lawsuit that will ask a state court to determine the tribes' rights to water in their historic territories. Oklahoma Solicitor General Patrick Wyrick has said the suit will be filed by Feb. 1 and that the state will seek a stay of the federal lawsuit while the state case is pending.

But similar tribal water rights lawsuits in other states have taken decades to resolve. In 2010, officials in New Mexico settled a lawsuit involving more than 2,500 defendants that was filed in 1966 to resolve water rights issues among four Indian pueblos and non-Indian residents in northern Santa Fe County.

"As they say in the west, whiskey is for drinking and water is for fighting," said David LaFrance, executive director of the Denverbased American Water Works Association. "Water is such an important part of our communities and our economy."

Tribal water rights adjudications are "very cumbersome" cases to litigate, said Michael Burrage, lead attorney for the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations.

"Lasts for years and years and years," Burrage said.

Two years ago, the OWRB agreed to transfer to OklahomaCity the state's water storage contract for southeastern Oklahoma's Sardis Lake in the historic territories of each of the tribes, a decision that was opposed by tribal leaders. The tribes' lawsuit asks a federal judge to stop the board from selling its rights to the lake without an agreement with the tribe.

Burrage said the lawsuit is the culmination of years of unsuccessful efforts by tribal leaders to have state officials recognize their sovereignty and negotiate with them.

"Water is a very important resource," Burrage said. "The Choctaw Nation and Chickasaw Nation do want a seat at the table on such an important issue."

He said the tribes want to assure a sustainable water supply in their treaty areas and properly maintain the region's rivers, streams and lakes. The tribes claim that an 1830 treaty gives them authority over water resources in their jurisdictions but that they have been excluded in negotiations.

"It's important that the Nations have the natural resources for the treaty territories," Burrage said.

A mediator appointed to the federal lawsuit, Duke University law professor Francis McGovern, has met with state and tribal leaders twice this month and more meetings are planned within the next 30 days, according to court records. Burrage said federal court rules prohibited him from discussing the status of the mediation process.

As the state and tribes exchange legal barbs, the tribes have mounted a public relations media campaign that focuses on their goals for the region.

Videos produced the Choctaw Nation that have been broadcast in the Oklahoma City area emphasis Oklahoma's southeastern environment and the need to protect its habitat for the benefit of the region's wildlife and residents.

"Water conservation is a top priority for the Choctaw Nation," Choctaw Chief Greg Pyle says in one video.

Another video focuses specifically on Sardis Lake and stresses the need for a longterm comprehensive water plan that protects the lake and southeastern Oklahoma.

"Its crystal waters are a real blessing to our local economy," Gary Batton, assistant tribal chief, says on the video.

"We can't afford to lose this treasure," says Brian McClain, executive director of the tribe.

Judy Allen, executive director of public relations for the Choctaw Nation, said the videos were designed to showcase the region's natural beauty and the tribe's concern that it be preserved.

"I think the general intent is just to educate people that there is just a beautiful jewel of a lake in southeast Oklahoma that is Sardis Lake," Allen said.

Allen said tribal leaders opposetransferringadditional water from the region until its impact is thoroughly studied.

The tribes have entered an agreement with the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers to conduct a regional water plan to assess the water resources of their treaty territory, an area that covers 22 counties in southeastern and south central Oklahoma. The first phase of the $180,000 study is expected to be completed this summer.

are not alone, not forgotten

Muscogee (Creek) Nation

Behavioral Health Services

military today carry on a time-honored tradition continued from the first settlers on this continent to the ongoing wars in Iraq and Afghanistan. Historically, Native Americans have enlisted in the military at a greater per capita rate than that of any other ethnicity and have proven themselves to be outstanding warriors. The highest award of military valor is the Medal of Honor; there are currently 28, or more, Native American Medal of Honor Recipients.

or even killed. Others have wounds that are not so easy to see such as depression, anxiety, addictions, and Traumatic Brain Injury. Many have Post Traumatic Stress Disorder. Signs and symptoms to be aware of include, but are not limited to, the following:

and elderly veterans.

Noble said.

for Vets" campaign.

Nation Office of Veterans Affairs is again coordinating its annual "Valentines for Vets" drive to honor disabled, hospitalized

"Once again, we are asking individuals, departments, schools, classes, churches, youth groups and civic organizations to let our veterans know how much we appreciate them. We are encouraging everyone to be creative when making your

Valentines," CNOVA representative Rogan

This is the 11th year for the "Valentines

"There are any number of websites and organizations that send things overseas to our troops, as there should be, but too many times the older vets who are confined to VA (Veterans Affairs) hospitals and VA

nursing homes are forgotten," Noble said.

"Remember to address the Valentines

• Feeling distant from others

'Valentines for Vets' drive underway TAHLEQUAH, Okla. - The Cherokee to 'Our Vets' or 'My Hero' or any other appropriate honorific, and have the Valentines signed with a first name only or the name of the group making them. Once we deliver them, we have no idea which vet will be getting them."

Noble said the Valentines will be delivered to the VA hospitals in Fayetteville, Ark., and Muskogee as well as the VA nursing homes in Claremore and Talihina. Veterans at VA clinics in Jay, Vinita and Tulsa also will receive Valentines.

"Last year we delivered over 4,000 Valentines to the different facilities," Noble

The deadline for getting Valentines to the CNOVA office is Feb. 10. For more information, call 918-453-5695 or email rnoble@cherokee.org.

VA Medical Center to hold writing workshop

MUSKOGEE, Okla. - The Jack C. Montgomery VA Medical Center will host a Warrior Writers Workshop for Veterans on January 23 from 1:30 to 3:30 p.m. in the auditorium.

The workshop will teach Veterans how to put their thoughts and feelings on paper and will be led by Iraq War Veteran Amber Stone who will help Veterans write poems, short stories or whatever form of expression Veterans are inspired to use.

For more information, please contact Deborah Moreno at 918-577-4014. The Jack C. Montgomery VA Medical Center is located at 1011 Honor Heights Dr. in Muskogee.

Continued from Page 1

ancestors more than any prepackaged meat or drivethru order could.

"You can't go to Hy-Vee and just pick up ground buffalo to actually get the spiritual connection. I think that's kind of been lost," said Geriann Headrick, acting food service manager at the Flandreau Indian School, referring to a regional supermarket chain.

The school began preparing school meals with fresh bison meat last year as part of the pilot project.

Nearly 20 professors across five departments at SDSU are involved in the project, which they hope will be used as a model among other tribes trying to revive the demand for bison.

Although bison tastes a bit different - some think it has a sweeter, richer flavor than beef

Flandreau Indian School senior Dillon Blackbird said he prefers school meals served with bison because it's "real

One of more than 30 students from the Flandreau Indian School to take part in cooking workshops with bison as the main ingredient, Blackbird said he now knows how to whip up his own dishes with bison, which has less fat and fewer calories than beef.

"I make basic stuff: tacos, enchiladas, spaghetti, lasagna," Blackbird said.

SDSU researchers want other teenagers to follow Blackbird's lead, creating a market within the tribe for the next 40 to 50 years and changing the way members think about the animal.

Like many American Indian tribes, the Flandreau Santee Sioux maintains its own herd as a tie to its ancestors who relied on bison for survival. Established in 1990 with 12 heifer calves and one bull calf acquired from Custer State Park in western South Dakota, the herd swelled to about 250 animals by the spring of 2009.

But the herd has become ceremonial necessity, and when it began costing too much money, tribal officials considered selling the animals until SDSU researchers pitched the idea for a new market via the hearty appetites of teenagers.

"Like all Americans, Native Americans are used to eating traditional American foods. Even though the bison means something to them culturally more than the average American, they are used to eating chicken legs and cooking hamburgers," said SDSU economics professor Scott Fausti. "What we're trying to do, of course, is to lessen the financial burden upon the tribe by further integrating bison into the community, (allowing) the bison to provide greater resources to the community by using it as a substitute protein source."

The Flandreau Santee Sioux tribe has since culled the herd to fewer than 50 animals as it works to rethem organically without hormones or pesticides - which Fausti said is more attuned to traditional American Indian beliefs. Ideally, the herd will return to 160 to 180 organically grown bison, supplying 30 to 40 animals each year for the community.

Until the Flandreau program is self-sustaining, the InterTribal Buffalo Council, a cooperative of more than 50 tribes created in the early 1990s to re-establish bison herds, is donating the animal meat to the Flandreau School. Officials also are hoping to get more money for the project through grants.

Once the herd is reestablished, the hope is that other tribal entities, including the diabetic program, will choose to use the meat over buying from commercial pork, beef and chicken vendors, Fausti said. The tribe also may sell to outside sources as well.

It's been a battle to create a continuous stream of demand for the meat as a protein source due to fluctuating prices, Fausti said, noting that one non-American Indian cooperative in North Dakota went bankrupt several years ago, leaving thousands of dollars' worth of the meat in storage. Prices for bison meat, regardless of cut, were stable in December, the most recent month available, after recent spikes, according to the USDA.

Other tribes have tried similar methods to revitalize their herds: Students at the Southern Ute tribal school rely on bison for their meat, and Ponca tribal members with diabetes can get a prescription for the animal meat - a good option because it's lower in fat and cholesterol.

But the Flandreau tribe is believed to be the first creating a self-sustaining commercial market from production to consumption, said Jim Stone, executive director of the InterTribal Buffalo Council.

Fausti said other tribes can look to the Flandreau model of incorporating organically grown bison into popular dishes as a way to create their own markets and culturalrestoration programs.

Della Flute, for one, agrees. The Flandreau Indian School kitchen aide chose to cook Christmas dinner for her mother and 20-year-old son with bison meat over other protein sources. Flute believes consuming more bison will help young people reconnect with their roots.

"I think a lot of us strayed far from (the culture)," said Flute, 41. "I think reservations would improve."

COMMENTARY

Alcohol is a red flag that has been waving too long

NOTES FROM INDIAN COUNTRY

TIM GIAGO (Nanwica Kciji) © 2012 Unity South Dakota

I got an email from Lonnie Burnett this morning. Lonnie is a Tribal Council Member of the Kaw Nation of Oklahoma. He started by saying he has been a fan of mine for many, many years and then he got to the subject of his letter.

He mentioned a comment I made in a recent column in which I said I met with some old friends "over a glass of beer." He wrote, "Honestly, I was shocked when I read those words."

Lonnie continued, "I mention this not as a teetotaler on a soapbox; I mention it merely to point out that, due to your status and ability to reach thousands of our Native relatives, your reference to your use of alcohol was shocking to me. As we all know, alcohol is a poison to our people and remains an epidemic in our communities."

There is no argument with the assessment of Mr. Burnett. He is absolutely right in saying that alcohol is a poison to our people. I have witnessed firsthand the destruction alcohol has caused in everything to the health of our Nations to the social damages it has wrought. So many valuable lives have been wasted to the ravages of alcohol.

Like many, maybe even most Native Americans, there have been times in the past when I overindulged in my consumption of alcohol, but I never let it come between me and my job. I stopped overindulging, but I still like a cold beer while watching a football game on television or a good glass of wine with a good meal. That is the limit of my alcohol consumption to date. But social drinking has never been a big problem in the white community. No doubt there are an abundance of alcoholics in the white community, but so many more hold themselves to a limit of one or two drinks at social occasions, and that is a lesson that needs to be taught in the Indian community.

One of my oldest friends, Melvin "Dickey" Brewer served as an alcohol social worker on the Pine Ridge Reservation and was in favor of legalizing the sale of alcohol on the reservation. He used to say, "Nobody ever put a gun to my head and said drink that beer."

He believed that learning to drink responsibly was a key issue with Indians.

Making Indian reservations dry often leads to binge drinking. Some of our people go to an off-reservation establishment, purchase a couple of cases of beer, and then try to consume it as rapidly as possible while heading back to their homes on the Indian reservation. Also, because of the lack of a steady job and income, many drinkers are limited to purchasing the cheapest, and probably the most damaging of alcohol, cheap wine, that can be the most devastating.

When I was sixteen I recall visiting my cousin Delbert Tapio at Pine Ridge and we shared a bottle of cheap wine they called "Green Lizard" and I got so sick I never touched any alcohol again until I went into the U.S. Navy. Now I had to deal with two images of alcoholics because the general public often spoke of "drunken Indians" or of "spending money like a drunken sailor." Now I was an American Indian and I was also a sailor.

All of my life and the last 34 years as a newspaper publisher, I have fought the damaging effects of alcohol because I had some of the most talented Native American employees that I had to eventually terminate because they could not control their taste for alcohol. I have fired brilliant writers, cartoonists and press operators because of their false love of alcohol. And every step of the way I encouraged them to get help, but the urge to drink far outweighed their ability to accept their responsibilities. But some I did save and they are brilliant journalists to this day.

In the 1920s America attempted to stop alcoholism by outlawing the sale of alcohol. It was called Prohibition and it was a disastrous failure. It was the initiator of organized crime in America.

I will continue to have a cold beer on occasion or a good glass of wine, but I agree 100 percent that the problems caused by alcohol in the Indian communities has been a nation-wide disaster and somewhere out there is a young Native American man or woman who will find a solution to this social problem that has wrought such harm to an entire race of people. Lonnie Burnett is absolutely right and after this column responding to his comments I will never be using alcohol again in any of my columns.

im Giago

Learning to stop at one and always at two drinks has been my solution.

Tim Giago, an Oglala Lakota, is President of Unity South Dakota. He was a Nieman Fellow at Harvard with the Class of 1990. His weekly column won the H. L. Mencken Award in 1985. He was the founder of The Lakota Times, Indian Country Today, Lakota Journal and Native Sun News. He can be reached at UnitySoDak1@knology.net

Gaining true eyesight: Sometimes it just takes a walk

COREY FLOOD

I got out of bed this morning and immediately felt the coldness from the wood floors on my bare feet. I walked over to my laptop to check the weather for the day. I walk home a lot from school because of sins from my past, and like to see what the weather will be like on my trek home. I'm usually the first one out of bed in the morning, make the first pot of coffee and play with our regal cat Ms. Lucy. Most of my days begin in this peaceful way. As Kim was waking up she asked me what the weather was like and I said, "it's only going to warm up to 30 degrees today." "It's better than 25 degrees," Kim replied.

I have been given so many wonderful things in my life from the so-called mistakes from my past. When people hear that I lost my license for 15 years, they immediately think that my life had stopped turning and are amazed that someone could exist without the almighty car and operator's license. The ones who cannot fathom this are the students who live on campus who fight for parking spots because they refuse to walk 45 yards to class. I felt this way for about a year and remembered all the times I was intoxicated while driving and to miss that was pure selfishness on my part. Kim was once again correct, 30 degrees is much more acceptable than 25 degrees.

It doesn't matter what the situation, it always seems I get where I'm headed, either on foot or by an unexpected ride. I remember back when it was a fun and safe event to hitchhike here or there. I met the most interesting people back in the late 70's in this way. I won't get into the war stories but I enjoyed each event walking gave me. I was never one to stand in one place with my thumb out. I always walked knowing if I didn't get a ride I was one step closer to my goal. It was this motivation that the ones who did pick me up gave as the reason they stopped and offered me

We always feel negative things or feel things could or would be better for us if only... I have found out that when I allow things to happen on their own and stop trying to control the situation, fun and unexpected things occur. I have had many people from the college stop to offer rides. I have had many meaningful conversations from instructors, the youngsters that are younger than my daughters, and also strangers who stop from the kindness of their hearts. This resembles much more a social gathering than a ride home. Bless them all.

When my studies began more than a year and a half ago, I began a daily ritual that brought me pure joy and also became a real test for me. I always notice the many birds that are in flight and especially search the skies for hawks. When walking to and from the college, I pass a stand of trees along the railroad tracks that has a small cornfield close to it. I noticed this hawk as I walked home. I would watch him and wonder what he looked like up close. I made many attempts to try to creep up on him but the sound of the gravel as I walked on the tracks must have spooked him because he wouldn't allow me within

I have learned much in these last 50 years, one of the most important lessons is to never stop trying to improve and when a thought is in your mind and you cannot shake it, there is a good reason and to acknowledge this and allow this to develop.

I made it a daily mission to get as close to this hawk as I could get. He played many games with me at first. He would fly further down and land on the trees far away as I approached him, so I would simply walk further to reach him. He would tease me and allow me to think I was sneaking up on him and then at the last moment he would fly off with all his power and spread his wings and tail as if to say, "Be gone peasant."

This hawk friend of mine has become a symbol to me, one of perseverance, and also pride. This beautiful hawk is a red tail hawk; I cannot get over the beauty of his tail. This symbol of mine will now allow me to stand under him as he sits on his throne. I'm sure there are many students and instructors who think I have flipped a script because they assume that I'm talking to myself. Most don't look around when driving or look up. I have been given this gift from a so-called handicap because I walk instead of drive, unlike the rest of the world who cannot exist without that comfort, and notice all the wonderful and beautiful things these last 15 years have blessed me with.

The most unexpected things come from a so-called hardship, such as walking instead of driving. I'm almost afraid to say this, so I hesitate; the route to riches is to make a complete wreck of your life and when you correct your behaviors and cleanse your mind and soul, you will be given your every heart's desire. For me this has been the case. This walk has led me to many special gifts and healings. I pray each one who is suffering and cannot see the way out of this agonizing lifestyle, I pray you find your hawk to try to get close to, the way I have. Each and every day this brings me closer to my purpose and what Tunkasila has in store for me. Mitakuye Oyasin.

Corey Flood is a Sicangu Lakota who hails from the Rosebud Reservation. He is a non-traditional student who writes from Northeast Community College in Norfolk, Nebraska, where he is majoring in Journalism.

The viewpoints expressed in columns and letters are the opinions of the writers and not necessarily the opinion or viewpoint of the Native American Times publisher or staff. Send letters to editor@nativetimes.com. Please keep letters to 350 words or less. Sign your name, tribal affiliation and city of residence for verification purposes.

Phone:

918-256-5585

LANGLEY 918-782-0011

MONKEY ISLAND 918-257-8869

www.okstatebank.com
Equal Housing Lender
Native American Owned

TIMES
recycles with Tahlequah
Recycling
Incorporated...
shouldn't you?

Reeves Renovations
Professional Construction,
Remodeling & Repairs

Bathrooms • Kitchens • Paint
Tile • Trim • Plumbing
Electrical • Solar Panels
Windmills • Winterizing
Quality Work • Free Estimates

918-637-6736 johnwilliamreeves@juno.com – Mayes & Cherokee Counties –

Follow Us! www.twitter.com/nativetimes NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES

Name:
Address:

C:4	Chaha. Zin.
City:	State: Zip:

□ $65.00 for 52 issues	$32.50 for 26 issues

■ $16.25 for 13 issues

Mail this form with a check or money order to: Native American Times • P.O. Box 411 Tahlequah, OK 74465 • 918-708-5838

■ $1.25 single copy

More Jobs. More News. More Features. Every Day.

www.nativetimes.com

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT / HELP WANTED

Cherokee Nation whose headquarters are located in beautiful Tahleguah, Oklahoma is a national leader in Indian tribal governments and economic development in Oklahoma, We are a dynamic, progressive organization, which owns several business enterprises and administers a variety of services for the Cherokee people in Northeastern Oklahoma. Cherokee Nation offers an exceptional employee benefits plan with Comprehensive Health, Life, 401(k), Holiday Pay, Sick Leave and Annual Leave.

CURRENT OPPORTUNITIES AT W.W. HASTINGS HOSPITAL, TAHLEQUAH

POSITIONS CLOSE 1/17/2012

#5674 Medical Case Manager/R/FT

#4869 Supervisory Clinical Nurse/T/PT #5868 Inpatient/RN/R/FT/OR

#4995 Inpatient RN/PRN/OB

Interested applicants please apply at www.cherokee.org

Cherokee Nation Human Resources Department PO Box 948 Tahlequah, OK 74465

(918) 453-5292 or 453-5050 Or Visit our website at: www.cherokee.org

Employment will be contingent upon drug test results. Indian preference is considered

Architectural Project Manager

Architectural Project Manager, Tahlequah, OK: Responsible for architectural projects including the plan, design, and construction of residential structures in the rustico style. Reports to owner and designated supervising licensed Architect. Bachelor's degree in Architecture, 1 year's experience in construction projects. Resumes to: Chance Properties, LLC, V. H. Wilhelm, 2210 Golf Course Road, Tahlequah, OK, organizations and tribal members.

NATIVE AMERICAN

Advertise to Native Americans! lisa@nativetimes.com

The Pawnee Nation of Oklahoma is accepting applications for the full-time, regular status position of Title VI Program Coordinator/Department Manager. To apply, please visit our website at http://www.pawneenation.org

HIRING PREFERENCE?

E-mail your ad for a quote to:

Tourism Association

Introducing America's First Nations to the World

AIANTA is a nonprofit association of Native American tribes and tribal businesses organized to advance Indian Country tourism. The Association is made up of member tribes from six regions: Eastern, Plains, Midwest, Southwest, Pacific Northwest, and constituents in advancing tourism, assist tribes in creating infrastructure and capacity, provide technical assistance, training and educational resources to tribes, tribal

AIANTA currently is seeking to fill two positions, Finance Director and

Membership Coordinator. Please visit www.aianta.org/news for complete vacancy announcement. Please submit resume including salary history and two references no later than 5:00 p.m. MST, November 28, 2011 to:

AIANTA

Attn: Sherrie Bowman

2401 12th Street NW

Albuquerque, NM 87104

Or electronically at sbowman@aianta.org

Alaska. The purpose of the Association is to serve as the voice and resource for its

Director of Native American Recruitment

Bacone College is looking for a Director of Native American Recruitment. This is a full-time, 12-month position designed to reach out to the Native American market across America and express Bacone College's primary focus and interest in recruiting and retaining Native American students that reflect its mission and heritage. Recruitment will focus primarily on Native American prospective students interested in attending Bacone College and working as a pointofcontactwiththesestudents throughout matriculation.

This position requires extensive travel within Oklahoma and the United States. The person selected for this position is primarily responsible for recruitment of Native American students and maintaining secondary education relationships.

Send letter of application, vita, transcripts, and three references humanresources@bacone. edu or Human Resources, Bacone College, 2299 Old Bacone Road, Muskogee, OK 74403. Bacone College is a private four-year college with a mission to provide opportunities to American Indian students and employees. EOE

Bacone College is currently accepting applications for the following position:

DEAN OF SCHOOL OF HEALTH SCIENCES

Dean for the School of Health Sciences (SOHS) will coordinate all aspects of the SOHS programs to include instruction, accreditation, advising, and supervisory responsibilities; and will provide academic leadership for the SOHS programs including AS in Diagnostic Medical Sonography, AAS in Radiography, BS in Medical Imaging, and ADN and BSN. Master's degree required; doctoral degree preferred and documented instruction in educational theory or techniques, plus documented work experiences in the Health Sciences field and in the supervision of a related health science academic program.

Salary competitive. Send letter of application, vita, transcripts, and three references to: Human Resources, Bacone College, 2299 Old Bacone Rd., Muskogee OK 74403 or email humanresources@bacone.edu. Bacone College is a private four-year college with a mission to provide opportunities to American Indian students and employees. EOE

Look for Native American Times on Facebook and Twitter! Friends get front page scoops, new features and breaking news.

EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR

Catching the Dream (formerly Native American Scholarship Fund) seeks an executive director. Superior writing ability, knowledge of proposals and fund raising, knowledge of private scholarships, knowledge of college admissions process, three years of budget and finance experience, and knowledge of school improvement processes. Send resume, sample of writing, and salary requirements to CTD4DeanChavers@aol.

SERVICES

Native American Electrician

1st Call Electric

Reasonable Rates • At Cost Material

918-277-1610

Licensed • Insured • Bonded • OK#70011

Serving Northeast Oklahoma

Advanced Energy Solutions

(Heating & Air Conditioning)

Serving Oklahoma City and the surrounding area.

Service, repair and installation of all brands

* * American Standard Dealer * *

Expert Owner Operation • You can relax when AES is on the job

405-315-6116

Commercial Janitorial Services/Supplies √& Landscaping Services Big Time MaintenanceSolutions (405) 338-8180 American Indian Owned

Metal Roofing & Siding

Professional Construction and Home Repairs

Free Estimates

Charles Snell 918-507-2902

Native American Contractor

Discount Cigarettes Call to reserve your brand today!

702 E Central • Anadarko, Okla.

EVENTS

*Email your powwow or other event info to: Lisa@ nativetimes.com. Name, date, time, place and contact information is free.

EVERY WEDNESDAY Kiowa class beginning in February at 6:30 pm, Room TBA, Tulsa University. Info call Sarah, (918) 445-5213

EVERY THURSDAY The Otoe-Missouria Substance Abuse and Behavioral Health Programs sponsor an open group for families touched by addiction from noon to 1 p.m. at the Otoe-Missouria Health Building. This is a confidential group. Call 580-723-4466 x252 or x262 for more information.

SECOND TUESDAY Cherokee Artists Association meeting at 202 E. 5th Street Tahlequah, Okla. Info: (918) 458-0008 or www.

cherokeeartistsassociation.

THIRD TUESDAY of even numbered months - The Central Oklahoma Cherokee Alliance meets at Mayflower UCC Church, Oklahoma City at 6 p.m. Phone: (405) 408-0763. The next meeting is Feb. 16.

FOURTH THURSDAY Each month the American Indian Chamber of Commerce of Oklahoma - Eastern Chapter hosts a monthly luncheon at Bacone College, Muskogee, Okla. 11:30 a.m. at Benjamin Wacoche Hall. Please RSVP one week ahead of time. Phone: (918) 230-3759

EVERY 2ND SATURDAY Indian Taco Sales - from 11-2:30pm at OK Choctaw Tribal Alliance, 5320 S. Youngs Blvd, Oklahoma City www.okchoctaws.org

MON/WED AND THURS The Marble City Nutrition Center serves hot meals at the Marble City Community Center at 11:30 a.m. Meals are free to anyone over 50, but a small donation is suggested to help with the expense of the program. Gather for fellowship and friendship. Volunteers welcome. Marble City Nutrition Center, 711 N.

YOUTH COUNCIL The Native Nations Youth Council (NNYC) bimonthly meetings from 6:30pm - 8:30pm @ the Youth Services of Tulsa Activity Center (311 S. Madison - on 3rd just west of Peoria). Call to confirm location. Info Call: Chad Gilley (918) 382-

Main, Marble City, Okla.

Phone: (918) 775-2158

JANUARY 19 South Coffeyville Cherokee

2204 or nnyc@ihcrc.org

Community meeting at 6:30 p.m. Call Vickie Brokeshoulder 918-822-2893 JANUARY 21

Tahlequah Farmers' Market 5th Season's Annual Meeting 7:00 p.m. at the Tahlequah Armory Building, 100 North Water Ave. Info call Marcia Hutchins, (918) 316-5794 or email marcia. hutchins@me.com

JANUARY 24 Vinita Indian Territory Coalition Cherokee Community meeting at 6 p.m. Call Lisa Trice-Turtle 918-453-2988

FEBRUARY 3 Indian Taco Sale 11:00 AM - 2:00 PM at Norman First American UMC, 1950 East Beaumont Drive, Norman, Okla. Call Ahead for Speedy Service. Free Delivery on Orders of 10 or More (405) 321-5640

FEBRUARY 4 Birthday Dance for Richard D Roubedeaux at Otoe Cultrual Bldg, Red Rock Okla. Starts at 2:00 p.m. Supper at 5:00 p.m. More Gourd dancing after supper - if anyone wants to bring anything please bring covered dish.

FEBRUARY 4 Gourd Dance in memory of Dorothy Heap-of-Birds at Clinton Fairgrounds (South on HWY 183), Clinton, Okla. Painting Ceremony 2:00 pm Gourd Dancing 3:00pm Supper 5:00pm. Contact for more info:Choya Hammond (580)309-1992 or Ruth Bearshield (580)303-8378

FEBRUARY 4 Norman First American UMC will be hosting Native Open Hand Games Southern Style, from 2 - 5 PM, at 1950

Beaumont Dr, Norman, Okla. Info call Alan Yeahquo, Coordinator (405) 321-5640. Lunch will be provide after games. Everyone Welcome

February 16-18 Tulsa Indian Art Festival at the Glenpool Conference Center, HWY 75 and 121st Street. Entry forms at www. tulsaindianartfestival.com. FEBRUARY 18 The Arrington -Mcspadden All Indian Rodeo Association will have their first rodeo of 2012 in Tahlequah Okla. For more info email

MARCH 2

Indian Taco Sale 11:00 AM - 2:00 PM at Norman First American UMC, 1950 East Beaumont Drive, Norman, Okla. Call Ahead for Speedy Service. Free Delivery on Orders of 10 or

More (405) 321-5640

dwrshirley@aol.com

Okla. man shares love of Choctaw language

REBEKA RUTLEDGE The Duncan Banner

MARLOW, Okla. (AP) -Learning a new language is sometimes a requirement loathed by high school or college students, or a necessary task for relocation.

However, sometimes becoming versed in more than one language is a goal for which people strive.

Whatever the case may be, there is an opportunity to for area residents to step away from the usual second languages, such as Spanish and French, and learn a dialect that is historically a little closer to home.

In Marlow, Billy York is offering residents the chance to learn the Choctaw language.

For York, the Native American tribe's vernacular is actually his first language. He didn't learn English until enrolling in the public school system at age 6.

And although he quickly became fluent in English, York never lost the desire to know how to speak, read and write what he considers his native language.

"All my relatives spoke (Choctaw), but I wanted to learn how to read and write it," said York. "I wanted to know the grammar of it."

Spurred by that desire, he signed up for classes offered by the School of Choctaw Language. After a while, his teacher transferred elsewhere. York applied to take her place and was given the go-ahead.

Hehasnowbeeninstructing for about four years, although he noted that as the teacher he is constantly learning along with the students. In fact, that is the biggest reason York enjoys the position.

"I like learning at the same time," he said. "Teaching brings back words I haven't thought about in a long time and I learn new words."

As an educator he has heard different opinions from students on whether or not learning Choctaw is difficult. Some believe it is a struggle and some do not, which he notes is about the same consensus most people experience in learning any new language.

York said the Choctaw sentence structure is like talking backwards.

He has heard several people say that the syntax of Choctaw is similar to that of Spanish.

As in most cases, York has discovered it is much easier for young children to pick up a new language, and there are several younger folks who attend his courses each year.

"I get young kids, like my grandson, and they are easier to teach," York said. "But they get to junior high and we lose them and their parents because they get involved with sports."

Generally, York sees about a half-dozen students for each class, although that varies depending on the time of year. When school is in session, the attendance drops, but response picks back up in the summer months.

The class is for anyone learning interested in Choctaw, which colleges will allow to be used for a foreign language credit.

It is a free class and the only fee required is that students must purchase the books required.

Not only is there classroom learning, but sometimes guests come in to teach a little history of the tribe or how to make moccasins, bows or pottery, among other items. Many people return year after year to continue their knowledge and York said their understanding of the language continues to accelerate.

"There are phases one to four and we just go through them," he said.

"If someone new comes, we just go back to the beginning for a while."

York's next session of classes begins soon, with the session running from 6:30 to 8:30 p.m. The class continues to follow that schedule for 16 weeks. The class is held in the Marlow Chickasaw Center Community Marlow Dr.

REBEKA RUTLEDGE / THE DUNCAN BANNER

Billy York is the instructor for the Choctaw language class located in Marlow. He instructs anyone including young children such as his grandson, Kagen.

Students embrace Ojibwe sign project

BEMIDJI, Minn. (AP) - Classrooms in the Bemidji School District are getting some new names - in Ojibwe.

Dozens of signs featuring words in Ojibwe are being made by five students at Bemidji High School and will placed throughout the school district, the Pioneer newspaper reported Jan.

A sign for the health office says "Aakoziiwigamigoons." A cafeteria sign will read "Wisiniiwigamig." And an art room sign will say "Mazinibii'igewigamig."

The project is being funded by Bemidji's Ojibwe Language Project, a branch of Shared Vision, a Bemidji group that's working for friendlier relations between American Indians and the majority culture.

"I think that's a great idea," Bemidji High School Principal Brian Stefanich said. "I think it will benefit all of our students. We want to recognize all cultures and our Native American students are a big part of our high school."

> Other principals also thought the signs were a great idea but the district didn't have the $2,000 needed for them. So project leaders Michael Meuers and Rachelle Houle raised most of the money from local businesses They also received a grant from Ojibwe scholar and Bemidji State University professor Anton Treuer, who has been helping Meuers and Houle find the correct Ojibwe words for the signs. They still need about $250 but were confident they'd get it.

> The signs are made of a twolayered plastic. The lettering is engraved by machine. When the top layer is engraved, it exposes the bottom layer's color. Teacher Bryan Hammit said students not only supervise the engraving machine, but also chose the fonts, colors and sizes of the > Bemidji High School offers Ojibwe language classes, Stefanich said, but not all students and staff know or understand the language.

"I want all our students to feel welcome and feel comfortable at the high school," he said.

Over the past year and a half,

Meuers and Houle have been encouraging local businesses and organizations to install bilingual signage to increase awareness of the Ojibwe language in the community. Their original goal was to have 20 businesses participate. Today, nearly 150 sites in the Bemidji area have gone

Noemi Aylesworth, owner of the Cabin Coffee House, was one of the first to participate. Her shop features table tent signs with numbers, animals and the nearby Red Lake tribe's major clans listed in both English and Ojibwe.

Last year, Bemidji State University and Northwest Technical College added bilingual signs across both campuses, including multimedia materials on Ojibwe translations for nearly 100 English phrases common to northern Minnesota. Treuer also created audio clips that correctly pronounce words and phrases, first in Ojibwe and then in English.

Meuers said often people are not aware an economic benefit as well."

that Ojibwe predates European immigrant languages northern Minnesota. He said he is often asked why more emphasis is not placed on keeping the region's Norwegian heritage

"Ojibwe is the indigenous language of northern Minnesota," he said. "Norwegian and German are imported languages. I want to help preserve the native language. When you lose a language, you lose culture. When you lose culture, who knows what you lose."

Meuers said he Bemidji will become more like the state of Hawaii, where he said the native language is much more a part of the culture.

"This is going to show Indian people 'You are welcome and respected in our community," Meuers said. "It's going to teach non-Indian people about the culture that was here before 1895. And, also, tourists eat it up, so there's also

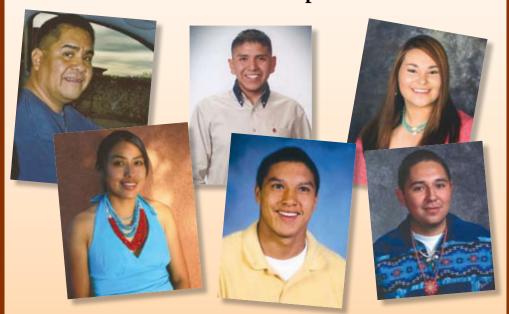

MONTE DRAPER / THE PIONEER

Bemidji High School student Brett Theisen holds a sign that means 'math' in Ojibwe. Theisen, along with students Zach Sauer, Chris Gilbertson, Tyler Bannor and Landon Yerbich, are making numerous signs in the Ojibwe language that will be put up at every school in the Bemidji School District.

College Scholarships

American Indian, Alaska Native & Native Hawaiian Students

$450,000+ awarded each year! All Undergraduate Majors Are Eligible. Graduate Scholarships Available.

Applications Due April 4th!

Download Application: aiefprograms.org

American Indian Education Foundation 2401 Eglin Street • Rapid City, SD 57703 (605) 342-9968

for individuals as well as small and large companies.

A great looking website provides 24 hour advertising and is a key component to a good first impression! Sites starting at $999.95

Email: gadmin@ganica.net for more info.

www.ganica.net -204-376-3428

Outstanding American Indian Masters Graduate Catrina Herbert receives her Heard Museum Eagle Spirit Award from Dr. Laura Burgis and Michele Crank (Diné), Heard Museum director of community and government affairs.

Heard Museum offers new award to Native grads

DEB KROLL

PHOENIX, Ariz. — The Heard Museum recently inaugurated a new award for American Indian graduates who labor to make their tribal communities better places. The American Indian Outstanding Doctoral Masters and Graduate Awards, known as the Eagle Spirit Awards, pay honor to graduates of Arizona State University who are American Indian, and whose careers are creating positive change in their communities. The inaugural awards were given during the American Indian Convocation ceremony on December 15, 2011. Each graduate was given a piece of fine art from an artist representing their tribe and a one-year membership to the Heard Museum. Two Navajo graduates were honored for theircommitmenttoeducation and to their communities.

Jennifer Jackson-Wheeler received her Ph.D. in English while also serving as a full-time faculty at Maricopa Community Colleges. Jackson-Wheeler was responsible for creating Navajo language, culture and humanities curricula for the district as well as teaching courses. She also developed Navajo language curricula for the Phoenix Unified School District and ASU, all while working her way through the master's and Ph.D. programs.

Jackson-Wheeler noted that her experience teaching at a middle school in the Navajo Nation opened her eyes to "how we as educators need to show our American Indian youth that thinking about and having a vision of their future will help shape their educational goals."

Catrina Herbert graduated with a master's of early childhood education degree obtained through the Mashchamtam Early Childhood Education (ECE) program. The online degree program allowed Herbert to live in her home town of Tuba City, Arizona while completing her coursework. The flexibility of this program allowed Herbert, a single mother of three young children, to remain an active and involved member of the community. She assisted in the pre-school class at Tuba City High School and mentored high school students who are participating in the ECE program. Herbert was also inducted into the Delta Kappa Pi Honor Society in Education, and participated in a project to package and distribute books and bears for underprivileged children.

Herbert is currently awaiting approval from the Tuba City School Board to begin her career as a kindergarten teacher. "Educators are the most essential source in contributing wisdom to guide our youth in their vision and planning," said Herbert. "However, teachers are not our only educators; they are found throughout our entire life, at home, in our community, in school, and most importantly found within us."

"The Heard Museum, an informal educational institution, has established the Outstanding Masters Graduate Award and Outstanding Doctoral Graduate Award to celebrate American Indian leadership in educational degree attainment," said Dr. Laura Burgis, vice president of institutional advancement. "It is our hope that with this prestigious recognition, these individuals, whom we celebrate tonight, will serve as role models for other students, to aspire to reach their personal best, and to share their talents with the community."

To learn more about the Heard Museum Eagle Spirit Award for outstanding graduate students, call 602-251-0210.

11th Annual

"TO BRIDGE A GAP" CONFERENCE

April 2 - 5, 2012

Choctaw Casino Resort

The Choctaw Nation of Oklahoma will be hosting the 11th Annual "To Bridge A Gap" Conference, in collaboration with the USDA Forest Service. This conference is designed to strengthen Government-to-Government relationships between federal and state agencies, and federally-recognized Tribes with interests in our forests. Topics for this year include:

Regional Executive Session with Forest Leaders and Tribal Leaders Introductory GPS/GIS Preconference Hands-On Workshop

NEPA and Section 106: Procedures and Issues

Traditional Cultural Properties and Sacred Sites

NAGPRA: Native American Graves Protection and Repatriation Act

Tribal and Federal Collaborative Partnerships

FCC Tribal Consultation

Tribal Relations Report

National Historic Preservation Program: Updates and Application Process

Guest Speaker: TBA

Several federal and state agencies will be present including USDA Forest Service from various regions, Army Corp. of Engineers, State Historic Preservation Offices, National Park Service, and National Resources Conservation Service.

The "To Bridge A Gap" Conference is a wonderful opportunity to discuss tribal relations and cultural preservation issues, and participate with others who are dedicated to improving this relationship.

For more information please contact Dr. Ian Thompson, Choctaw Nation Historic Preservation Department at (580) 924-8280 Ext. 2216, ithompson@choctawnation.com, or Johnnie Jacobs at (580) 924-8280 Ext. 2559, jjacobs@choctawnation.com.

Conference registration and hotel information can also be found on the Choctaw Nation of Oklahoma website at www.choctawnationculture.com/TBAG2012.

More Jobs. More News. More Features. Every Day.

Museum show debunks Twilight movies

PORT ANGELES, Wash. (AP) - An exhibit of 23 Quileute artworks intended to debunk the tall tales of tribal heritage told in the Twilight saga, will open at the Smithsonian's National Museum of the American Indian this week.

"Behind the Scenes: The Real Story of the Quileute Wolves" will open in the Sealaska Gallery on the National Mall at Fourth Street and Independence Avenue SW in Washington, D.C., Friday and be on view through May 9.

During the exhibition's opening weekend, Chris Morganroth III, Quileute tribal member and one of only two fluent speakers left in the tribe, will tell traditional stories for children and families in the imagiNATIONS museum's Activity Center and present Quileute culture and stories in the Rasmuson Theater during the Native Storytelling Festival.

The exhibition was organized by the Quileute tribe and the Seattle Art Museum, where it was on view for one year, beginning in August 2010.

The exhibit brings together rare works of Quileute art as a counterpoint to the supernatural storyline depicted in the popular Twilight books and movies.

Wolves are an important part of Quileute legend.

But werewolves – as depicted in Stephenie Meyer's popular daydream set on the West End - never were part of the LaPush tribe's heritage.

According to oral traditions, the first Quileute people were changed from a pair of wolves into human form by the Transformer, Kwati.

Because of the creation legend, wolf imagery is prominent in Quileute art, and to this day, the tribe continues to enact masked dances to honor the original supernatural connection to wolves.

Among the pieces to be displayed in the Smithsonian exhibit are elaborate wolf headdresses, rattles, baskets and a whale-bone dance club.

"We welcome opportunity we have to educate the world about the true story of the Quileute people," said Chairwoman Bonita Cleveland.

"The Quileute Tribal Council decided to take the global spotlight and attention we have received as a result of the Twilight phenomenon and share with the global audience our history, culture and traditions.

"The Smithsonian exhibit is the perfect forum to tell the authentic story of our people, and we are honored to have our ancestral items displayed at this prestigious venue."

Also on view will be historic drawings created by Quileute teens who attended the Quileute Day School at Mora from 1905 through 1908.

The drawings depict wolf ritual dances and shamanistic performances, house posts that were part of the Potlatch Hall and a whaling scene that shows a crew of eight men coming alongside a whale in their cedar

At one time, whaling was an important endeavor for the Quileute.

The exhibition also includes a map of Quileute language place names of the modern village and the vast aboriginal territories that stretched from the Pacific Ocean to the Olympic Mountains.

Also on display will be a time line of Quileute history and a 12-minute looped video that presents interviews with tribal members and teens as they describe the effect of the "Twilight" films in their own

Replicas of items used in the "Twilight" films include a paddle necklace worn by the character Emily portrayed by actor Tinsel Korey, a traditional Quileute hand drum that hangs in Emily's house, a shell necklace of Olivella shells that was on the wall of her house and the dream catcher that Jacob gives to Bella as a gift.

The National Museum of the American Indian, established in 1989, is the 18th museum of the Smithsonian Institution and is the first national museum dedicated to the preservation, study and exhibition of the life, languages, literature, history and arts of Native Americans.

WASHINGTON STATE HISTORICAL SOCIETY PHOTO

Nuu-chah-nulth Wolf Headdress, Early 20th century, Plywood, paint, string, thread spools, fabric, cedar twigs - Washington State Historical Society, catalog no. 1999.105.1

Inside this issue:

- Muskogee VA hospital gets new director
- Filmmaker Eyre accepts academic post
- Exhibit explores Geronimo's legacy

TODAY'S INDEPENDENT INDIAN NEWS

- A FREE PUBLICATION -

WWW.NATIVETIMES.COM

NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES

VOLUME 18 + ISSUE 4

PUBLISHED WEEKLY

JANUARY 27, 2012

Legislative fight over historic artifacts looms

THOMAS SPENCER The Birmingham News

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (AP) – A battle over historic artifacts hidden below the surface of Alabama's rivers, lakes and bays is surfacing in advance of the opening of Legislature's 2012 regular session on Feb. 7.

Sen. Cam Ward, R-Alabaster, has introduced a bill to amend the Alabama Cultural Resources Act, a law that requires underwater explorers to get a permit from the Alabama Historical Commission before going after submerged wrecks and relics.

In Ward's version, the law would still require permits for recovery of artifacts related to shipwrecks and would forbid disturbing Native American burial sites. But treasure hunters would otherwise be able to search state waters and keep what they find.

"The waters, just like the air, belong to the people," said Steve Phillips, an advocate for the changes to the law. Phillips, an owner of Southern Skin Divers Supply Company of Birmingham, is the only person to ever have been arrested under the Alabama Cultural Resources Act.

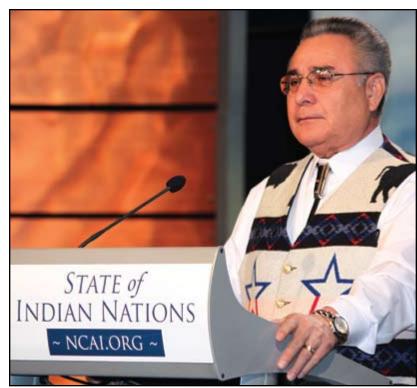

At trial, Phillips was found not guilty of felony theft of a cultural resource but was convicted of misdemeanor third-degree theft. The charge stemmed from Phillips' 2003 expedition in the Alabama River near Selma in search of Civil War relics, which ended with his arrest and the confiscation of a Civil War era rifle he'd found.

The incident sparked a still simmering conflict pitting Phillips and his fellow divers and collectors against the state Historical Commission and professional archaeologists who fear that removing the restrictions would lead to raids on underwater historic sites.

Aside from the protection of burial sites, there are no restrictions on the recovery of historic artifacts on private property, but artifacts on state-owned property -- whether on land or under water - should not be available for wanton scavenging, opponents of the changes say.

Teresa Paglione, president of the Alabama Archaeological Society, said without legal protections, artifacts from the Civil War, the settlement of the state, the age of European exploration and thousands of years of Native American history could be extracted, kept privately or sold, and lost to history. Those

See FIGHT Continued on Page 3

DUOTO COUDTEC

Jefferson Keel, President of the National Congress of American Indians is set to give the State of Indian Nations Address at 9:30 a.m. (CST) Thursday, Jan. 26.

NCAI broadcasting 2012 State of Indian Nations

■ Congressman Tom Cole of Oklahoma to provide congressional response

THOM WALLACE
NCAI News Release

WASHINGTON - Two days after President Obama delivers the State of the Union Address, President Jefferson Keel of the National Congress of American Indians (NCAI), will deliver the annual State of Indian Nations Address to a live studio audience consisting of tribal citizens and leaders, members of Congress, federal government officials, students, and advocates. U.S. Congressman Tom Cole of Oklahoma, an enrolled citizen of the Chickasaw Nation, will provide the Congressional response. The address, which will be webcast live, by tens of thousands of individuals in American Indian and Alaska Native nations, students throughout the United States, and a worldwide audience.

The State of Indian Nations will be a call to action to U.S. presidential candidates, citizens, tribal leaders, and government partners to chart a clear path forward for strengthening the United States and tribal nations.

The Address will be broadcast live online and on a delayed broadcast to radio stations reaching tribal reservations, Alaska Native villages, and urban areas with large American Indian and Alaska Native populations. Viewers can watch the Address on Thursday, January 26, 2012 at 10:30 a.m. (EST) on NCAI. org and listen on radio stations across Indian Country via the Native Voice One (NV1) radio network and NV1's nationally broadcast Native America Calling radio program.

They call her 'Songbird'

Behind the scenes with Joanne Shenandoah

SHELLEY BLUEJAY PIERCE Native American Times

A grandmother waved her over after a concert to tell her that the Inuit believe songs are carried over the ice from the Ancestors' land by the birds.

"She called me a song bird and said that birds bring their songs to me. She could envision where my songs came from. They come from beautiful places," explained Joanne Shenandoah.

In this interview with Native American Times, Shenandoah speaks to some of her personal and cultural history that's guided her to becoming one of the most beloved and awarded Native recording artists in history. Here, she shares from her heart about what has motivated, inspired, and kept her focused on giving to the world community for many decades.

PHOTO BY DOUG WONDERS / COURTESY JOANNE SHENANDOAH Joanne Shenandoah speaks with Native Times about where her music comes from, her upcoming projects, and what it's like going it alone in

NAT- Your music draws on Native tradition and you sing in the Oneida language. Your words may be unfamiliar to some listeners, but the music has global approval. What do you feel the reason for this is?

the music business.

Joanne-The vibration of music touches the soul and

See SHENANDOAH Continued on Page 8

Court rejects appeal by Abramoff partner

WASHINGTON (AP) – An appeals court says it cannot reduce a $20 million restitution order against the public relations consultant who partnered with lobbyist Jack Abramoff to bilk Indian tribes out of millions in inflated fees.

has been viewed annually in the past

Michael Scanlon is serving a 20-month sentence after pleading guilty in part to defrauding the tribes of their right to "honest services."

Abramoff persuaded tribes that hired him for lobbying to pay inflated fees for Scanlon's public relations services, and the two secretly split the profits.

The Supreme Court weakened the honest services law last year and Scanlon argued the $20 million he's been ordered to repay his victims should be lowered to reflect that ruling.

Mexico hit by rumors of Indian famine, suicides

MARK STEVENSON
Associated Press

MEXICO CITY (AP) – Mexicans are rushing aid to Tarahumara communities in the remote northern mountains after a local official announced – apparently falsely – that dozens of the Indians had killed themselves because they couldn't feed their children due to severe cold weather.

The Tarahumara have long been a symbol of fierce pride, strength and self-reliance in Mexico. They have served as an inspiration for ultra-marathoners, because the Tarahumara are known for running 50 and 60 miles at a time through the mountains of their homeland in little more than sandals.

The idea that such a proud people might be losing their spirit stung Mexicans into a flurry of drives to collect food and clothing to the Indians.

Mexico City resident Samuel Lopez showed up at an aid collection set up in the city's main plaza with an armful of rice, beans, crackers and canned tuna.

"We cannot leave them adrift like that," Lopez said as he dropped off his donations. "They are our brothers."

The aid effort sprang up spontaneously over the weekend, when a video was posted on social media sites showing a town official from Carichi, a town in Tarahumara Mountains of northern Chihuahua state, saying the Indians were being driven to despair and suicide after their crops failed because of a combination of severe cold and the worst drought in at least 70 years.

"The Indian women get sad after four or five days when they can't feed their children," Carichi council secretary Ramon Gardea says on the video. "They are so despairing that up through December, 50 men and women went to the mountain valleys ... and threw themselves into valleys. Others hung themselves."

Nobody denies there is a real food emergency in the incredibly rugged mountains, where the Tarahumara have long been so poor that they sometimes live in caves in the winter to take advantage of the earth's heat.

But other officials say they have heard no reports of a mass suicide.

Rafael Gonzalez, spokesman for the Mexican Red Cross, said "we consider this a food emergency." Last year, the Red Cross made two expeditions into the mountains to bring food, but this year there will be three, the latest delivery consisting of 270 metric tons of food and 5,000 blankets. The government says it has also sent millions of dollars in aid.

Gonzalez shares most Mexicans' respect for the Tarahumara, noting "these are people who walk five or six hours to get to aid deliveries." But he has not heard of a single report of any of the estimated 250,000 Tarahumara committing suicide because of

See RUMORS Continued on Page 2

KialegeeTribe moves ahead with casino

JUSTIN JUOZAPAVICIUS Associated Press

BROKEN ARROW, Okla. (AP) - A little-known Oklahoma Indian tribe with fewer than 450 members is moving ahead with plans to build a casino a few blocks from the future site of an elementary school and prekindergarten center in this Tulsa suburb, despite protests from federal lawmakers and hundreds of residents who worry the gaming center could bring a flurry of criminal activity to the area.

The Kialegee Tribal Town, headquartered in Wetumka in southeastern Oklahoma, began bulldozing the 20-acre site near the heavily trafficked Creek Turnpike late last month, even as the tribe's application for a gaming license to operate the casino is still under review by the National Indian Gaming Commission.

Temporary buildings for the tribe's Red Clay Casino are scheduled to open in the spring and join several, larger, casinos already operating in Tulsa County. Oklahoma is home to about 115 gaming centers that hauled in more than $3.1 billion in gambling revenue in 2009, according to the Indian Gaming Industry Report, written by economist Alan Meister.

The casino – about 10 miles from one operated by another tribe quickly drew the ire of residents and school administrators who fear the tribe is attempting to sneak the development by the conservative bedroom community of 99,000.

Recent rallies have drawn hundreds of opponents and more than 4,000 people have signed a petition to keep the casino out. Thursday, jan. 12, about 1,000 residents, preachers and politicians gathered at a church to voice opposition, saying the casino could set a dangerous precedent of allowing property owners to circumvent the law and offer their land to the highest casino bidder.

In a Jan. 6 letter to the gaming commission and Assistant U.S. Interior Secretary Larry Echo Hawk, U.S. Rep. John Sullivan and Sen. Tom Coburn detailed residents' concerns, including the proposed casino's close location to area schools, the squeeze on public resources such as utilities and public safety and "the perceived below the radar path" the development has taken. A spokeswoman for the U.S. Department of the Interior did not return a message seeking comment. Sullivan is expected to meet with the gaming commission this week.

"They are acting under cover of darkness," said local attorney Jared Cawley, co-founder of the group Broken Arrow Citizens Against Neighborhood Gaming.

Cawley said the tribe has failed to meet the basic requirements of any Indian casino project, including obtaining approval of a land lease from the U.S. Bureau of Indian Affairs and conducting environmental impact studies, which could take several months to complete.

The land is currently owned by two sisters who have attempted to transfer their parcel to the tribe, but a district judge has refused to approve the transaction, deferring instead to the federal government to determine whether the land can be leased.

"On a basic level, one of the fundamental questions is, is it even tribal land?" Cawley said. "We would like to see if what the tribe is doing is legitimate and we would like at a minimum to see if there's some compliance with federal law."

Tribal leaders and a Miamibased attorney representing the casino development group did not return requests seeking comment. In a statement issued last month, days after residents discovered that construction had begun, tribal leader Tiger Hobia said the Kialegee have kept the federal government and the city up to date on the casino plans. Hobia also claimed that the casino is necessary because the tribe lacks enough resources to fund programs that serve its members.

But Broken Arrow Councilman Richard Carter disputed Hobia's statement about the project's transparency, saying the tribe has provided the city "almost nothing as far as information."

"That's not the way to be a good neighbor," Carter said. "We are sending our disapproval to every agency we can think of. We seem to be pretty united against this thing and I hope that we can prevail."

If the casino goes forward, it will be located several blocks from an 80acre parcel purchased by the district for a new elementary school and prekindergarten center, where nearly 1,000 students are expected to attend when the buildings open in the fall of 2013. Dozens of angered parents have lobbied the district to oppose the casino because of the proximity and safety concerns, such as inadequate roads and crosswalks to accommodate the increased traffic.

"We're not against the tribe. We live in the middle of Native American lands and Native American groups, and many of us are of Native American descent," said Broken Arrow Superintendent Jarod Mendenhall. "It's just the location and the way this has been done has not set well with anybody in the community."

Broken Arrow resident Seth Spreiter lives roughly a half-mile from the casino site and has helped organize his neighborhood against the project.

"I bought my home four months ago and I bought it because there wasn't a casino in the area," Spreiter said. "A casino changes the tempo of the entire community.

"This is the wrong type of facility at the wrong place at the wrong time," he famine.

Nor has the Rev. Guadalupe Gasca, a Jesuit priest whose oversees the Clinica Teresita in the Tarahumara mountain town of Creel, Chihuahua. The Indians, whose life is a constant struggle to wring food out of scraggly corn plots on steep mountain slopes, don't give up

"We (Jesuits) have a history of almost 400 years working in this area, and we can say that in the Tarahumaras' world view, suicide is not an option."

But Gasca notes that in 2011, his clinic did treat 250 Tarahumara children for malnutrition, including 25 severe cases. One 3-year-old girl died of it.

Gasca also blames the food crisis on the drought and cold.

"There has always been hunger in these hills," Gasca said. "There have always been climate cycles, but these cycles are getting more frequent and more severe."

He notes that logging and deforestation in the once pine-covered mountains may play a role in the drought, and is working with others to promote reforestation.

Chihuahua Gov. Cesar Duarte attacked the mass suicide rumors; in a press statement, his office called them "bad faith and alarmist." Gardea, who originally reported the suicides, did not answer calls Monday to the Carichi town office.

But some drew a lesson from the whole affair, even as they acknowledged the reports were

"It is important to help the Tarahumara," said Mexico City resident Elisa Jimenez, who showed up with food donations Monday. "They need our help always, not just now."

Creek chief comments on casino controversy

OKMULGEE, Okla. (AP) - A a request to the Creek tribal gaming branch of the Muscogee Creek Nation that is seeking to build a casino in a Tulsa suburb hasn't followed proper procedures that would allow for gaming on the site, the tribe's principal chief said in a press conference Jan. 9.

The Creek Nation hasn't received an application from the Kialegee Tribal Town for a business lease from the Bureau of Indian Affairs or commission to conduct gaming operations on a 20-acre site in Broken Arrow, Chief George Tiger said during the conference. The land is owned by two sisters who are seeking to transfer their property to the Kialegees, but Tiger noted that the allotment falls under the Creeks' jurisdiction.

"Since I took an oath to uphold the laws of the Nation, it is my position as the principal chief of the Muscogee (Creek) Nation that the original restricted Creek allotment in question should not be used as the site of a tribal casino by any other tribe or tribal town without the consent of the Nation or without following all proper procedures," Tiger said in a

"To my knowledge, no request has been made to the Nation seeking consent, nor has an application been submitted to our Tribal Gaming Commission seeking a gaming license for that location," Tiger said. He said he planned to consult with the Creek Nation's legislative branch and national council on how to further address the issue.

Kialegee Tribal Town, whose members are Creek Nation citizens, already has broken ground at the site.

Court hears challenge to Voting Rights Act

The Constitution gives the legislature power over decisions that affect the 15th Amendment's protections of voting rights for racial minorities.

NEDRA PICKLER Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) - Appeals court judges expressed concern last week about whether to overrule Congress' determination that some southern states and other jurisdictions still must have federal election monitoring to protect minority voting

Alabama's Shelby County is challenging a requirement under the Voting Rights Act that governments with a history of discrimination obtain federal approval to change even minor election procedures. An attorney for the county argued in federal appeals court in Washington that the South has changed and that extraordinary oversight is no longer needed.

But two of three judges on the panel hearing the case pointed out Congress renewed the provision of the 1965 Voting Rights Act in 2006 after finding that discrimination still exists. A lower court endorsed that finding.

"Why shouldn't we defer to the judgment of Congress?" asked Judge Thomas Griffith, the Senate's former top lawyer and a nominee of President George W. Bush. Judge David Tatel, a former civil rights attorney and appointee of President Bill Clinton, asked similar questions.

Griffith pointed out that lawmakers spent a considerable amount of time weighing evidence of continued racial discrimination and that the Constitution gives the legislature power over decisions that affect the 15th Amendment's protections of voting rights for racial minorities.

"But that can't be without limitation," responded Shelby County's attorney, Bert Rein. He said the numbers of blacks registered to vote and elected to office has increased dramatically since the act was first passed and said those who implemented discriminatory practices in the 1960s are no longer in charge. "The South has changed," he

The county, located just south of Birmingham in central Alabama, sued Attorney General Eric Holder in 2010 to stop the monitoring required under Section 5 of the Voting Rights Act. The provision relies heavily on patterns of past discrimination to determine which state, county and local governments must obtain "preclearance" for election changes as minor as moving a polling place or redrawing school district lines. That clearance can come either from the Justice Department or from a federal court in Washington.

U.S. District Judge John Bates ruled against the county and upheld the law in September after reviewing 15,000 pages of congressional records and deciding that lawmakers were justified in finding that discrimination still existed in the covered jurisdictions.

The judge pointed to several examples of outright discrimination across the South since the 1980s, including legislators in Mississippi and Georgia using racial epithets during redistricting debates and reports of harassment of blacks at the polls in Texas and South Carolina.

According to the Justice Department Web site, Section 5 currently applies to the states of Alabama, Alaska, Arizona, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, South Carolina, Texas and Virginia. It also covers certain counties in California, Florida, New York, North Carolina and South Dakota, as well as some local jurisdictions in Michigan and New Hampshire. Preclearance coverage under the act has been triggered by past discrimination not only against blacks, but also against American Indians, Asian-Americans, Alaskan Natives and Hispanics.

The same three-judge appellate panel, which also includes Ronald Reagan appointee Stephen Williams, is scheduled to hear another challenge to the law brought by North Carolina on Feb. 27.

Justice Department attorney Sarah Harrington argued that Section 5 has stopped discriminatory actions and said its protections are still needed. Although the Voting Rights Act has been called the most successful civil rights legislation in U.S. history, she said, "Things have not gotten better enough. There still continues to be a problem."

But Tatel reminded Harrington that the Supreme Court questioned in 2009 whether Southern states should still need advance approval of voting changes more than 40 years after the law was enacted. In that case, the justices avoided deciding whether the requirement is constitutional, which creates the possibility of the Shelby County or North Carolina cases reaching the high court.

NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES

Publisher & Editor LISA SNELL editor@nativetimes.com

Contributing Writers Dana Attocknie WESLEY MAHAN KAREN SHADE

Advertising Sales KATHLEEN ROBERTSON LISA SNELL ROB WALTON advertising@nativetimes.com

Distribution SHELBY HICKS STEVE LACY WESLEY MAHAN MICHAEL MARRIS KATHLEEN ROBERTSON Brenda Slaughter

The Native American Times, formerly the Oklahoma Indian Times, is published weekly (except the last week of the year) by Lisa Hicks Snell. Mailing address is PO Box 411 Tahleguah, OK 74465. All the contents within the Native American Times are copyrighted material. Any reproduction, redistribution without the written consent of the NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES is strictly

> Each week's issue is available for free download online at: www.nativetimes.com

Subscription rates: $65.00 for fifty-two issues, $32.50 for twenty-six issues, or $16.25 for thirteen issues. A single copy is $1.25 (Rates are for postage and handling) Send check or money order to:

NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES Attn: Subscriptions P.O. Box 411 Tahlequah, OK 74465-0411

Phone: (918) 708-5838 Fax: (888) 689-4873

Postmaster: Send Change of Address Form 579 to: NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES P.O. Box 411, Tahlequah, OK 74465

WWW.NATIVETIMES.COM - News from the crossroads of Indian Country

SPACE IN TH NATIVE TIMES CALL LISA

RESERVE YOUR

carte blanche. I want to make 918-708-5838

commercialization of new technologies, program Vilsack last week announced the launch of a USDA USDA energy resources, including: agricultural, delivery, outreach, and education activities. It also energy website that will provide stakeholders fast forestry, economic, and social data. This is done in and efficient access to USDA energy efficiency and part through a set of new complementary web-based

USDA streamlines access to energy investment info

WASHINGTON - Agriculture Secretary Tom renewable energy data. Today's announcement builds on the Secretary's commitment to develop a modern and efficient service organization as outlined in USDA's Blueprint for Stronger Service announced

"Improving and modernizing access to USDA energy data and resources is essential in today's highly competitive rural business environment," said Vilsack. "Farmers, ranchers and small businesses across the country will benefit from easier navigation and retrieval of energy and renewable energy investments data and funding opportunities."

to all the people of the state,

"(The changes to the law) would allow divers like Mr.

Phillips to conduct little more than scavenger hunts for relics -- like a game of finders-keepers, except individuals get to keep what belongs to the state of Alabama and its

On a recent afternoon,

Phillips was at the Museum of Iron and Steel at Tannehill

Ironworks State Historical

Park where more than 100 artifacts he's loaned -- from

Selma-made bullets to a tree trunk with a large shell lodged

Phillips recovered some of the items by diving but much in it -- are on display.

citizenry," she said.

Paglione said.

USDA's energy website provides access to all tools: the USDA Renewable Energy Investment Map, the Renewable Energy Tool and Energy Matrix. These tools focus on USDA's energy, energy efficiency and renewable energy investments and projects; provide information and data to a broad spectrum of stakeholders; and empower the user with the ability to easily navigate USDA's energy web resources. In addition, the site provides a link to all USDA state and local offices and energy resource coordinators.

Vilsack said this newly designed tool is a great step in a more coordinated and efficient effort to increase public awareness of USDA's energy research, provides a form or technical assistance to people thinking about adopting an energy project. The new site replaces a previous site which was established several years ago. To access the site, go to: www. usda.gov/energy.

USDA Rural Development State Director Terry Brunner joined Secretary Vilsack about the need for new website, "In the past two years we've seen an increased number of applications from ag-producers and small rural businesses wanting to access the funds we have available to make them more energy smart and efficient. I know this web site will help future applicants with an easier way to access our energy program."

of the rest he bought from museums whose collections are overflowing with artifacts. Phillips has more of his personal collection on loan to Confederate Memorial Park in Clanton and other museums, artifacts in state waters belong for loan, too.

His interest in being able to dive the rivers flows from a personal passion, not profit, and the remainder is available

"I haven't sold a relic in 25 years," Phillips said. "I want to know what is under there."

Besides, you couldn't make a living selling relics anyway, Phillips said.

"Not a chance. You couldn't make enough to pay for your gasoline," he said.

Phillips doesn't hide the fact he'd like to see more divers in the waters of the state. It'd be good for business, but, he argued, it would also be good for recovery of lost history.

Without amateurs and collectors, Phillips said, much of the knowledge base professional archaeologists rely on wouldn't exist.

Andbesidessomeshipwreck exploration, there isn't any professional underwater archaeology going anyway. An energized corps of amateurs would likely produce new discoveries.

"Archaeologists don't do it," he said. "Is it better for it to rust and fall apart and be lost forever?"

Paglione and others said that artifacts in freshwater environments are oftentimes off better remaining underwater rather than being brought to the surface where they quickly decay unless carefully preserved. And for archaeologists, random expeditions and finds that might or might not be reported add up to a recipe for lost knowledge.

Knowing where an artifact is found and what is found near it is often more important than the physical artifact itself, Paglione said.

"A popular saying in archaeology is, 'It is not what you find, but what you find out," she said. "If an object is removed from its context with no understanding of its intrinsic informational value, there is a substantial loss to the archaeological record -and the heritage of Alabama," she said.

The conflict over the issue has led to poor relations and name calling between the two sides of the issue. Ward said he hoped that through discussion in the legislative process, the conflict can be resolved. Ward said he found the wording of the current law ambiguous. He said he would be open to amendments that would be more protective of valuable historic sites. He doesn't want to lose valuable archeological sites, either. "That is not my intention at all," he said. At the same time, Ward said, it should be clearer what is permitted. Ward said he'd like to get suggestions from academics and Historic Commission representatives. "I'm glad to sit down and work with them," Ward said. "I don't want to give the divers

True American Indian www.flyingeagletradingpost.com

We proudly offer an array of services, from general dentistry to sedation, dental implants, and cosmetic dentistry - all designed expressly to meet our patient's changing needs. With four general dentists and four hygienists, we can maintain your oral health for a lifetime all at one location.

We Accept Contract Health & Sooner Care

We serve patients in the Drumright, Cushing, Stillwater, Stroud, Ponca City, and surrounding areas with personalized service and exemplary care. Call for your appointment today.

918-352-3312 or Toll Free 877-RH Melton drumrightdentalcenter.com

SUPERNAW'S OKLAHOMA INDIAN SUPPLY

Wholesale items for Pow Wow Vendors

Bone chokers $20 per dozen

Handmade lamp worked glass bead bracelets $1.00 each Glass bead stretch bracelets 5 for $2.50 12 Necklaces: Chain w/ pendant and display pad $13.50

36 inch gemstone chip strands Reg. 3.95 now $2.00 36 inch turquoise chip strands Reg. 7.95 now $4.00

Always our regular stock of seed beads from 16/0 to 8/0, findings, leather, hackles, fluffs and thousands of other supply items.

Remember we've moved around the corner 109 North Broadway, Skiatook, OK 74070

New Dealers Cash or Credit Card Only.

Open Noon-6pm Mon. thru Fri. • 10am-5m Sat. • Closed Sun. Local: 396-1713-Countrywide Toll Free 1-888-720-1967

Website: www.supernaw.com • Email: Supernaw@flash.net

DOJ announces grant solicitation for tribes

$101.4 million is available through the coordinated tribal assistance solicitation

WASHINGTON - The U.S. Department of Justice last week announced that the comprehensive grant solicitation for funding to support improvements to public safety, victim services and crime prevention in American Indian and Alaska Native communities are now posted online at www.justice.gov/ tribal/open-sol.html.

The Community Partnerships Management System will begin accepting electronic applications on Monday, Jan. 23,

"We are committed to helping strengthen and sustain safe and healthy American Indian and Alaska Native communities with a funding process that is responsive and coordinated," said Associate

Attorney General Tom Perrelli. "This effort to streamline the grant application process, with multiple purpose areas, offers tribes and tribal consortia an opportunity to develop a comprehensive and communitybased approach to public safety and support for victims."

A total of more than $101.4 million is available through the Fiscal Year (FY) 2012 Coordinated Assistance Solicitation (CTAS) and is administered by the Office of Justice Programs (OJP), the Office of Community Oriented Policing Services (COPS) and the Office on Violence Against Women (OVW). The funding can be used to conduct comprehensive planning, enhance law enforcement, bolster justice systems, support and enhance tribal efforts to prevent and control delinquency and strengthen the juvenile justice system, prevent youth substance abuse, serve sexual assault and elder victims, and support other efforts to combat crimes. To view the fact sheet on the FY 2012 CTAS, visit www.justice.gov//tribal/ctas2012/ ctas-factsheet.pdf.

The updated FY 2012 CTAS reflects improvements and refinements from earlier versions. Feedback was provided to the department during tribal consultations and listening sessions, from a specially developed assessment tool about the application experience and from written comments from applicants and grantees.

That feedback was incorporated in the following changes to the FY 2012

- a new strategic planning pilot
- a question and answer template
- adjustment to purpose areas to allow for greater flexibility in funding requests; and
- a request for data on tribe demographics to better capture and describe the unique characteristics of each tribe.

For the FY2012 CTAS, a tribe or tribal consortium will submit a single application and select from 10 competitive grant programs referred to as purpose areas. This approach allows the department's grantmaking components to consider the totality of a tribal community's overall public safety needs. The deadline for submitting applications in response to this grant announcement is 9:00 p.m. EST on Wednesday, April 18,

The 10 purpose areas are:

- Children's Justice Act Partnerships for Indian Communities
- Comprehensive Planning Demonstration Program
- Comprehensive Tribal Victim Assistance Program

- Corrections and Correctional Alternatives
- Justice Systems and Alcohol and Substance Abuse
- Juvenile Justice
- Public Safety and Community
- Tribal Governments Program
- Tribal Sexual Assault Services
- Tribal Youth Program

Tribes or tribal consortia may also be eligible for non-tribal governmentspecific federal grant programs and are encouraged to explore other funding opportunities for which they may be eligible. Additional funding information may be found at www.grants.gov or the websites of individual agencies.

Last week's announcement is part of the Justice Department's ongoing initiative to increase engagement, coordination and action on public safety in tribal communities.

Years after Wounded Knee trials, a judge reflects

Some witnesses were allowed to testify in the Lakota language, and Urbom let some tribal leaders sit in the jury box.

LINCOLN, Neb. (AP) - It's been more than 37 years since the federal trials of protesters who took over the Wounded Knee massacre site in South Dakota, and the Nebraska-based federal judge who presided remembers his efforts to respect the Native Americans and their traditions.

U.S. District Judge Warren Urbom spoke last week to students involved in the Native Sovereignty Youth Project, a yearlong leadership project organized by the Nebraska Commission on Indian Affairs with funding from the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services.

Nearly a dozen students from each of Nebraska's tribes - Omaha, Ponca, Santee and Winnebago - have been introduced to university professors, politicians, attorneys, state senators and football

The Lincoln Journal Star said Urbom talked to the students about the 1890 massacre of dozens of Native Americans by U.S. cavalry troops and the 1973 standoff at the site between American Indian Movement protesters and federal

The protesters occupied the village of Wounded Knee on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation in South Dakota and held it for 71 days. One FBI agent was paralyzed and two activists were killed during the siege. The trials of about 150 protesters began in 1974 after the siege ended, and they were consolidated under Urbom.

Urbom said he tried to respect the activists, even allowing many of them to be sworn in using a medicine pipe rather than a Bible. He ignored a warning that accommodating the activists' wishes would lead to chaos in the courtroom.

"Nothing they did signaled to me that they were there to cause trouble," Urbom told the students. "They didn't cause

Some witnesses were allowed to testify in the Lakota language, and Urbom let some tribal leaders sit in the jury box.

The judge dismissed charges against about 100 of the activists. There wasn't enough evidence against them, he said.

Of the remainder, he found six guilty. The 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals overturned four of those convictions, citing insufficient evidence. Convictions against two for assaulting a federal officer and interfering with a federal officer were upheld. Both people got probation.

Cherish Mallory, a 16-year-old from Winnebago, said she was impressed by Urbom's accommodation of the activists' cultural requests.

"He was understanding about the traditions," Cherish said. "It's just interesting."

Residents of SD county sue over early voting

PINE RIDGE, S.D. (AP) of the Constitution's guarantee Twenty-five residents are suing South Dakota's secretary of state and other government officials to extend the early voting period in Shannon County, claiming current provisions violate the Constitution.

The county on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation contracts with neighboring Fall River County for some services, including elections. That leaves residents with no permanent location within Shannon County to register to vote and to pick up and submit an absentee ballot. They must do it by mail or drive to Hot Springs, a trip of more than 2 1/2 hours for some.

The lawsuit filed against Secretary of State Jason Gant and government officials in the two counties claims violations of equal protection under the law and of the Voting Rights Act of 1965.

Shannon County commissioners last month agreed to set up an early voting site in the town of Pine Ridge for six days before the June 5 primary and the Nov. 6 general election. The lawsuit seeks 46 days of early voting before both elections, which is what other counties provide. Shannon County maintains it cannot afford that.

"We don't even have the money to fight this lawsuit," Commission Chairwoman Lyla Hutchison told the Rapid City Journal. Commissioners on Jan. 6 voted to give up their salaries to help with the financial problems.

Less than 14 percent of the land in Shannon County is taxable. The rest is individual trust or tribal land that is not subject to property taxes necessary to support a county government.

Gant is named in the complaint because plaintiffs want him to use federal Help America Vote Act money on early voting. Gant told the Argus Leader that his office's policy has been to reimburse certain costs only after an election, so that there are receipts that prove the expenses. In the past, the dollars have paid for such things as voting machines for people with disabilities and Lakota language interpreters.

"It sounds like Shannon County is low on county funds and they were asking for additional funds ... but all counties struggle with their finances," Gant said.

Muskogee VA Medical Center welcomes new director

NITA MCCLELLAN

MUSKOGEE, Okla. - The Jack C. Montgomery VA Medical Center is pleased to announce the appointment of a Muscogee (Creek) citizen, James R. Floyd, MPA, FACHE, as the facility's new Medical Center Director.

As Director, Floyd will provide leadership strategic guidance to this primary and secondary care center that employs over 1,100 people. The medical center serves a 25-county with approximately 58,000 veterans currently enrolled. The medical center operates an outpatient clinic at the Muskogee facility and community based outpatient clinics in Tulsa, Hartshorne, and Vinita, OK.

Floyd arrives from Missouri where he served as the VA Heartland Network VISN 15 Network Director from October 2008 to January 2012. He administered health care services to Veterans from seven medical centers on nine campuses and more than 47 community based outpatient clinics in Kansas, Missouri, Illinois, Indiana and Kentucky.

"The Jack C. Montgomery VA Medical Center has an excellent track record of providing Oklahoma Veterans with world-class health care," said Floyd. "I am humbled and honored to be able to serve our Veterans in this role."

Floyd is a graduate of the 2009 class of the Department of Veterans Affairs Executive Fellows Program and a 2009 recipient of the coveted federal Presidential Rank Award for outstanding career achievements for leadership in health care. In 2008, he was appointed by the Secretary of Veterans Affairs to serve as a member of the Veterans Rural Health Advisory Committee. Also that year, the Association of Military Surgeons of the United States presented him the Ray E. Brown Award for his advocacy in federal health care leadership.

He was originally appointed within the VA as Director of the VA Salt Lake City Health Care System in 1997. In 2004, he was recognized with the Under Secretary for Health's Diversity Award for his work in establishing innovative outreach and treatment programs to Native American Veterans and, in 2002, he received the VA Secretary's Medal for Meritorious Service for exceptional performance in coordinating federal agencies' medical and security support for the 2002 Winter Olympic and Paralympics' Games.

Prior to working in VA, Floyd served in the U.S. Public Health Service, Indian Health Service, for more than 10 years. During that time, he served as Director of the Portland Area Indian Health Service from 1992 to 1997 and directed the management of federal health care facilities in the states of Washington, Oregon, and Idaho. He also assisted tribal governments in the development of communitybased health care programs.

James R. Floyd

During his tenure with Indian Health Service, he served a special assignment in the U.S. Senate Committee on Indian Affairs developing legislative authority Native American health care programs.

Floyd's health care career began in 1978 with the Muscogee (Creek) Nation of Oklahoma where he served as the Director of Community Services. In that capacity, he designed and established the first tribal-owned and operated health care system in the United States, which consisted of a 39-bed community hospital and four outpatient health clinics.

He is Board Certified by the American College of Healthcare Executives, holds a master's degree in Administration/ Health Administration, post-graduate Certificate in Managed Care Administration.

Steve Ortiz elected co-chairman of HHS Advisory Committee

SUZANNE HECK Prairie Band Potawatomi

MAYETTA, Kansas Prairie Band Potawatomi Nation (PBPN) Chairman Steve Ortiz was elected today as co-chairman of the U.S. Health and Human Services (HHS) Secretary's Tribal Advisory Committee (STAC) in Washington, D.C. Ortiz will co-chair the committee along with Ken Lucero (Tribal Council representative from the Pueblo of Zia), who has been the chair of the committee since it first formed in December, 2010.

The purpose of the STAC is to exchange information and to provide advice and recommendations between HHS and Indian tribal governments in a government-to-government capacity. The committee operates under H.H.S. Secretary Kathleen Sebelius who is in Obama's cabinet and a former governor of

The Secretary's Tribal Advisory Committee is composed of tribal leaders from the twelve U.S. Indian Health Service regions and five at-large representatives and two alternate at-large representatives. Ortiz represents the Oklahoma that region includes Oklahoma, Kansas Texas and has been actively involved in Indian Health Service issues and concerns.

In addition, at the national level Ortiz sits on the Department of Interior's (BIA) Tribal Consultation Committee, and on the Local Government Advisory Committee, made up of tribal leaders who advise Lisa Jackson, the federal administrator for the EPA. At the state level, Ortiz is on Gov. Sam Brownback's Economic Development Council. At the tribal level, Ortiz has been the PBPN chairman since July 2010 and a member of the Tribal Council periodically for several years.

US working with tribes to stem drug trafficking

In May 2010, a Canadian kingpin confessed to running 2,000 pounds of marijuana a week through the forests of upstate New York.

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) - Federal law enforcement agencies will help tribal officers obtain equipment and training on Indian lands near the U.S.-Canadian border as part of the White House's newly released strategy for reducing the flow of illegal drugs and drug proceeds between the two countries.

Tribal officers also should be included in criminal intelligence sharing and interagency task forces, according to the Office of National Drug Control Policy report released

"Drug smugglers have been known to seek out tribal jurisdictions in order to smuggle illegal drugs into the United States," said the report, the first of its kind since being required under the Northern Border Counternarcotics Strategy Act of 2010.

The goal is to stop Canadian marijuana, Ecstasy and methamphetamine from entering the United States and to keep cocaine that originates in South America from flowing north. Authorities have also targeted bulk cash smuggling in both directions that finances criminal organizations.

President Barack Obama and Canadian Prime Minister Stephen Harper signed a Feb. 4 agreement to share more information on travelers and better coordinate cross-border investigations.

The report identified more than 60 miles of the northern border classified as "Indian country" and under tribal jurisdiction. Tribes with lands directly adjacent to the border include Bay Mills Indian Community and the Sault Ste. Marie Chippewa Tribe in Michigan, the Blackfeet Tribe of Montana, the Grand Portage Band and Red Lake Band of Chippewa in Minnesota and St. Regis Mohawk Tribe in New York.

To intercept drugs elsewhere along the more than 5,000-mile border, the policy office recommended enhancing already established partnerships among U.S. and Canadian law-enforcement counterparts, along with intelligence sharing and cooperation among federal and local agencies. The strategy also relies on those living near the long and geographically diverse border to fill in the

"The U.S.-Canada relationship already supports successful bi-national and multiagency task forces, but it must work to improve these entities with limited resources," the report said. "Law enforcement agencies must reach out to community coalitions to develop effective prevention, treatment and law enforcement partnerships."

Agents seized about 9,470 pounds of marijuana along the northern border in fiscal 2011, according to Customs and Border Protection statistics, less than 1 percent of the roughly 2.4 million pounds seized along the southwestern border.

Recent arrests have highlighted the holes in the northern boundary. In May 2010, a Canadian kingpin confessed to running 2,000 pounds of marijuana a week through the forests of upstate New York. Later that year, in December, Canadian officials arrested 29 smugglers on charges of using boats to run tons of marijuana, Ecstasy and methamphetamine across the Great Lakes to Michigan and New York.

"Vast drug networks along our northern border are exacerbating violence in communities all across the state ... This is the right strategy to fight this scourge at its source," Sen. Kirsten Gillibrand, D-N.Y., said of the written strategy.

The 2010 law requires the Office of National Drug Control Policy to release a northern border plan every two years.

"Improving communications between the courts, immigration officials and law enforcement and increasing accountability, as this plan will, should enhance our ability to keep drugs off our streets and out of our schools," said Sen. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y.

COMMENTARY •

Not all crime declining

Ann Dapice

SHERRY CLARK & ANN DAPICE

Recent reports tell us crime is coming down. Stalking Awareness Month reminds us that the reverse is true with stalking.

In 2008, 1 million U.S. women and nearly 400,000 men were stalked. By January 2009, the Bureau of Justice Statistics numbers had risen to 3.4 million. Last month, the Center for Disease Control and Prevention reported stalking numbers to be more than 6 million.

Is it because more stalking crimes are reported? Stalking has long been under-reported, but so are many crimes. Is it because new technology makes it easy to stalk? The crime is now without geographical limits through the Internet, cell phones and global tracking devices.

What we do know, as international expert Reid Meloy said in a recent interview, is that stalkers believe they are above the law and can stalk with impunity. Research shows them to be right since they are rarely arrested or prosecuted.

For other than humanitarian reasons, why should you care? You too are in danger if your neighbors, co-workers and classmates are victims.

Recall the public stalking where innocent nders were killed and d. Stalkers are the most gent and violent of riminals. Unlike other criminals, when incited to violence, stalkers don't just attack their "designated" victims, they attack everyone in their way.

The viewpoints expressed in columns and letters are the opinions of the writers and not necessarily the opinion or viewpoint of the Native American Times publisher or staff. Send letters to editor@nativetimes. com. Please keep letters to 350 words or less. Sign your name, tribal affiliation and city of residence for verification purposes.

and neighbors are often threatened by perpetrators as well - in attempts to force the intended victim to comply with their demands. This was the case in Tulsa in 2005 with Carrie Tudor, who was murdered by her ex-husband after he stalked and harassed her and her family for months.

Research denies stereotypes that stalking victims are either entertainers, public figures or in domestic violence situations. Forty-five percent of victims do know the perpetrators, but they are not in intimate relationships.

Stalkers are co-workers, clients, neighbors, teachers and counselors. Twenty-five percent of perpetrators are strangers or unknown to the victim. Twenty-seven percent of victims are men. Only 30 percent of victims are in present or past relationships.

While stalkers may also batter, in most cases they are physically non-violent at first; they obsessively plan and scheme ways to make their victims' lives miserable so they will give in to their demands. They become violent only when rejected or stopped. The longer they stalk the more desperate and dangerous they become.

all-volunteer, Two nonprofit organizations, T.K. Wolf Inc. and Families and Communities Empowered for Safety (f.a.c.e.s.) began working together a number of years ago to expand knowledge about stalking and to find better interventions.

The groups have worked cooperatively to educate community individuals, groups, professionals, media and law enforcement about

The lives of family, friends a crime that is so poorly understood. Recently a Community Coordinated Response specialist said, "When it comes to fighting crime, we get what the community as a whole demands."

> It is often said that since stalking includes many crimes - identity, mail and bank account theft, wiretapping, breaking and entering, destruction of property and more - long before violence begins, it is a difficult crime to prosecute.

"Not so," said a law enforcement veteran at a recent police training session. "These are all crimes and I can arrest them for each and every one at the time - and I do. I have a list in my patrol car and when I arrest them I go through every single crime on the list to be certain I haven't omitted any. I also don't depend on detectives to do my work. I collect pictures, recordings, emails, journals, and all the evidence they have, and I interview neighbors, co-workers, relatives, bosses everyone who has had access to the perpetrators and victims. I don't leave it to someone else."

This officer sets excuses aside and shows us in specific ways that we as a community can ask for, demand and obtain better enforcement.

Sherry Clark of Tulsa, Okla. is founder and president of Families and Communities Empowered for Safety. Ann Dapice, Ph.D., Lenape/ Cherokee, of Skiatook, Okla., is director of education and research for T.K. Wolf Inc., a 501(c)(3) American Indian organization.

ahlequah

tahlequahrecycling.com

918-316-5856

VINITA 918-256-5585

LANGLEY 918-782-0011

MONKEY ISLAND 918-257-8869

www.okstatebank.com

Equal Housing Lender

Native American Owned

"Changing the culture of waste."  $\top N$ Native TIMES recycles with Tahlequah Recycling Incorporated...

shouldn't you?

·
McCORD - SENIOR CITIZENS CENTER-115 MARY RD	bystan
JANUARYY 20, 10:00 A.M. – 2:00 P.M. AND MARCH 7, 10:00 A.M. – 3:00 P.M.	injure
HULAH - SENIOR CITIZENS CENTER -1924 CR 3575- JANUARY 23, 11:00 A.M 1:00 P.M.	all cr

PRUE - SENIOR CITIZENS CENTER -209 WAH GRA SEE- JANUARY 24, 10:00 A.M. - 2:00 P.M

NOTICE FOR OSAGE COUNTY

(WEATHER PERMITTING)

THE OSAGE COUNTY ASSESSOR WILL BE

AT THE FOLLOWING LOCATIONS:

TULSA - GILCREASE HILLS HOMEOWNERS ASSOC. - 1919 W. SEMINOLE - MARCH 6, 10:00 A.M. - 3:00 P.M.

BARTLESVILLE - LABADIE HEIGHTS BAPTIST CHURCH - SW OF CITY, JANUARY 25, 10:00 A.M. - 2:00 P.M

SPERRY - CITY HALL - 115 N. CINCINNATI - JANUARY 26, 10:00 A.M. - 2:00 P.M

BURBANK - CITY HALL -105 FIRST ST - JANUARY 27, 10:00 A.M. - 12:00 NOON

TAKING NEW APPLICATIONS FOR HOMESTEAD EXEMPTION, DOUBLE HOMESTEAD EXEMPTION, SENIOR FREEZE, VETERANS EXEMPTION, REPORTING CHANGES MADE TO YOUR PROPERTY AND/OR BUILDINGS, TURNING IN MANUFACTURED HOMES, RENDERING BUSINESS PERSONALS, REPORTING FARM EQUIPMENT, TRACTORS, BOAT DOCKS, ETC., AND APPLYING FOR AGRICULTURE FUEL EXEMPTION.

FOR THE PURPOSE OF

DEADLINE FOR FILING IS MARCH 15, 2012

ADDITIONAL HOMESTEAD EXEMPTION: AN ADDITIONAL EXEMPTION WILL BE GRANTED FOR ALL HOUSEHOLDS WITH A GROSS INCOME (COLLECTIVE INCOME OF ANY AND ALL SOURCES OF ALL PERSONS LIVING IN THE HOMESTEAD) NOT TO EXCEED $20,000.00 FOR THE PRECEEDING CALENDAR YEAR. THERE ARE NO AGE REQUIREMENTS. HOWEVER, FOR A PERMANENT EXEMPTION, YOU MUST FILE AT AGE 65, AND YOU MUST BE 65 AS OF MARCH 15TH. IF 66 YEARS OR OLDER AND QUALIFIED IN 2011, NO ANNUAL APPLICATION IS REQUIRED. FOR MORE DETAILS CALL 918-287-3448.

VETERANS EXEMPTION: 100% DISABLED OR SURVIVING SPOUSE MAY NOW APPLY FOR A PROPERTY TAX EXEMPTION THAT WILL ELIMINATE THEIR TAX BURDEN ON HOMESTEAD PROPERTY. APPLICANT MUST PROVIDE A CURRENT U.S.D.V.A. BENEFITS AWARD LETTER WITH QUALIFICATIONS SPECIFIC TO THIS EXEMPTION THAT CERTIFIES THE 100% SERVICE RELATED DISABILITY.

PROPERTY VALUATION FREEZE (AKA: SENIOR FREEZE): THE OWNER MUST BE 65 YEARS OLD OR OLDER AS OF JANUARY 1ST, 2012; AND GROSS HOUSEHOLD INCOME LEVEL CANNOT EXCEED $59,600.00 FOR THE 2011 YEAR. TO QUALIFY THE TAXPAYER MUST PROVIDE COPIES OF 2011 PAPERS TO VERIFY TOTAL HOUSEHOLD INCOME OF ALL OCCUPANTS LIVING IN THE HOMESTEAD PROPERTY. TOTAL HOUSEHOLD INCOME INCLUDES ALL TAXABLE AND NON-TAXABLE INCOME SOURCES. THE STATE OF OKLAHOMA WILL VERIFY ALL APPLICANTS.

IT IS THE RESPONSIBILITY OF THE TAXPAYER TO NOTIFY THIS OFFICE IF INCOME EXCEEDS THE QUALIFIED AMOUNTS.

HOUSE BILL #1724: IF PERSONAL PROPERTY TAXES ARE DELINQUENT, YOUR HOMESTEAD EXEMPTION WILL BE CANCELLED.

> GAIL HEDGCOTH, OSAGE COUNTY ASSESSOR 600 GRANDVIEW, RM 101, OSAGE COUNTY COURTHOUSE PAWHUSKA, OK. 74056 HOURS: 8:30 A.M. - 5:00 P.M. 918-287-3448

NATIVE A	MERICAN	TIMES
----------	---------	-------

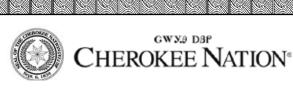

Name:
Address:
City: State: Zip:
Phone:
☐ $65.00 for 52 issues ☐ $32.50 for 26 issues
☐ $16.25 for 13 issues ☐ $1.25 single copy

Mail this form with a check or money order to: Native American Times • P.O. Box 411 Tahlequah, OK 74465 • 918-708-5838

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT / HELP WANTED

Cherokee Nation whose headquarters are located in beautiful Tahlequah. Oklahoma is a national leader in Indian tribal governments and economic development in Oklahoma, We are a dynamic, progressive organization, which owns several business enterprises and administers a variety of services for the Cherokee people in Northeastern Oklahoma. Cherokee Nation offers an exceptional employee benefits plan with Comprehensive Health, Life, 401(k), Holiday Pay, Sick Leave and Annual Leave.

CURRENT OPPORTUNITIES AT W.W. HASTINGS HOSPITAL, TAHLEQUAH POSITIONS CLOSE 1/24/2012

> #5426 Inpatient Registered Nurse/PRN (8-12 Rotations)

#5768 RPT Medical Technologist (Hours Vary/Nights/Weekends/Evenings)

#5745 RFT Medical Technologist 10:30 pm-7:00 am/Rotating Weekends)

#5941 TPT Inpatient Registered/PRN (Hours Vary)

#5433 TPT Inpatient Registered Nurse/PRN (8-12 Rotations)

#5431 TPT Inpatient Registered Nurse/PRN (8-12 Rotations

#5572 TPT Inpatient Registered Nurse/PRN

(12 Hour Shifts as Needed)

Interested applicants please apply at www.cherokee.org Cherokee Nation Human Resources Department PO Box 948

> Tahlequah, OK 74465 (918) 453-5292 or 453-5050 Or Visit our website at: www.cherokee.org

Employment will be contingent upon drug test results. Indian preference is considered

Architectural Project Manager

Architectural Project Manager, Tahlequah, OK: Responsible for architectural projects including the plan, design, and construction of residential structures in the rustico style. Reports to owner and designated supervising licensed Architect. Bachelor's degree in Architecture, 1 year's experience in construction projects. Resumes to: Chance Properties, LLC, V. H. Wilhelm, 2210 Golf Course Road, Tahlequah, OK, organizations and tribal members.

NATIVE AMERICAN HIRING PREFERENCE?

Advertise to Native Americans! E-mail your ad for a quote to: lisa@nativetimes.com

at http://www.pawneenation.org

The Pawnee Nation of Oklahoma is accepting applications for the full-time, regular status position of Title VI Program Coordinator/Department Manager. To apply, please visit our website

Tourism Association

Introducing America's First Nations to the World

AIANTA is a nonprofit association of Native American tribes and tribal businesses

Alaska. The purpose of the Association is to serve as the voice and resource for its organized to advance Indian Country tourism. The Association is made up of member tribes from six regions: Eastern, Plains, Midwest, Southwest, Pacific Northwest, and

constituents in advancing tourism, assist tribes in creating infrastructure and capacity, provide technical assistance, training and educational resources to tribes, tribal

AIANTA currently is seeking to fill two positions, Finance Director and

Membership Coordinator. Please visit www.aianta.org/news for complete vacancy announcement. Please submit resume including salary history and two references no later than 5:00 p.m. MST, November 28, 2011 to:

AIANTA

Attn: Sherrie Bowman

2401 12th Street NW • Albuquerque, NM 87104

Or electronically at sbowman@aianta.org

FORT OAKLAND, OKLAHOMA POLICE DEPARTMENT

SCHOOL RESOURCE OFFICER

The Fort Oakland Police Department is accepting applications for the position of School Resource Officer. All applications will be accepted with Indian applicants receiving preference.

OUALIFICATIONS:

- Must be certified with at least 3 years experience; will accept most State certifications.
- · Must be able to work closely with parents, students and members of the community.
- Must not have been convicted of a felony or convicted of any crimes of moral turpitude.

A medical certificate; drug test and an extensive background investigation and Federal LEO Adjudication is required for this position.

All interested persons may apply at the Fort Oakland Police Department located at 1 Rush Buffalo Rd., Tonkawa, OK 74653

You may also request an application by e-mail to police@tonkawatribe.com.

Go online to nativetimes.com for more jobs!

-New jobs posted throughout the week-

Bacone College is currently accepting applications for the following position:

DEAN OF SCHOOL OF HEALTH SCIENCES

Dean for the School of Health Sciences (SOHS) will coordinate all aspects of the SOHS programs to include instruction, accreditation, advising, and supervisory responsibilities; and will provide academic leadership for the SOHS programs including AS in Diagnostic Medical Sonography, AAS in Radiography, BS in Medical Imaging, and ADN and BSN. Master's degree required; doctoral degree preferred and documented instruction in educational theory or techniques, plus documented work experiences in the Health Sciences field and in the supervision of a related health science academic program.

Salary competitive. Send letter of application, vita, transcripts, and three references to: Human Resources, Bacone College, 2299 Old Bacone Rd., Muskogee OK 74403 or email humanresources@bacone.edu. Bacone College is a private four-year college with a mission to provide opportunities to American Indian students and employees. EOE

Look for Native American Times on Facebook and Twitter!

SERVICES

Native American Electrician

1st Call Electric

Reasonable Rates • At Cost Material

918-277-1610

Licensed • Insured • Bonded • OK#70011 Serving Northeast Oklahoma

Advanced Energy Solutions

(Heating & Air Conditioning)

Serving Oklahoma City and the surrounding area.

Service, repair and installation of all brands

★ ★ American Standard Dealer ★ ★ 405-315-6116

Expert Owner Operation • You can relax when AES is on the job

Metal Roofing & Siding

Professional Construction and Home Repairs

Free Estimates

Charles Snell 918-507-2902

Native American Contractor

702 E Central • Anadarko, Okla.

EVENTS

*Email your powwow or other event info to: Lisa@ nativetimes.com. Name, date, time, place and contact information is free.

EVERY WEDNESDAY Kiowa class beginning in February at 6:30 pm, Room TBA, Tulsa University. Info call Sarah, (918) 445-5213

EVERY THURSDAY The Otoe-Missouria Substance Abuse and Behavioral Health Programs sponsor an open group for families touched by addiction from noon to 1 p.m. at the Otoe-Missouria Health Building. This is a confidential group. Call 580-723-4466 x252 or x262 for more information.

SECOND TUESDAY Cherokee Artists Association meeting at 202 E. 5th Street Tahlequah, Okla. Info: (918) 458-0008 or www.

cherokeeartistsassociation.

THIRD TUESDAY of even numbered months - The Central Oklahoma Cherokee Alliance meets at Mayflower UCC Church, Oklahoma City at 6 p.m. Phone: (405) 408-0763. The next meeting is Feb. 16.

FOURTH THURSDAY Each month the American Indian Chamber of Commerce of Oklahoma - Eastern Chapter hosts a monthly luncheon at Bacone College, Muskogee, Okla. 11:30 a.m. at Benjamin Wacoche Hall. Please RSVP one week ahead of time. Phone: (918) 230-3759

EVERY 2ND SATURDAY Indian Taco Sales - from 11-2:30pm at OK Choctaw Tribal Alliance, 5320 S. Youngs Blvd, Oklahoma City www.okchoctaws.org

MON/WED AND THURS The Marble City Nutrition Center serves hot meals at the Marble City Community Center at 11:30 a.m. Meals are free to anyone over 50, but a small donation is suggested to help with the expense of the program. Gather for fellowship and friendship. Volunteers welcome. Marble City Nutrition Center, 711 N. Main, Marble City, Okla.

YOUTH COUNCIL The Native Nations Youth Council (NNYC) bimonthly meetings from 6:30pm - 8:30pm @ the Youth Services of Tulsa Activity Center (311 S. Madison - on 3rd just west of Peoria). Call to confirm location. Info Call: Chad Gilley (918) 382-

Phone: (918) 775-2158

JANUARY 24 Vinita Indian Territory

2204 or nnyc@ihcrc.org

Coalition Cherokee Community meeting at 6 p.m. Call Lisa Trice-Turtle 918-453-2988 JANUARY 28

Native American Church of Oklahoma Cheyenne Chapter No. 1 benefit dance at Watonga Multipurpose Center. Gourd Dancing at 3pm, Dinner at 5pm. Tiny Tot winner take all contest sponsored by head little girl dancer Tatiana Barcindebar. Vendors welcome, raffle item required.

FEBRUARY 3 Indian Taco Sale 11:00 AM - 2:00 PM at Norman First American UMC, 1950 East Beaumont Drive, Norman, Okla. Call Ahead for Speedy Service. Free Delivery on Orders of 10 or

FEBRUARY 4 Birthday Dance for Richard

More (405) 321-5640

D Roubedeaux at Otoe Cultrual Bldg, Red Rock Okla. Starts at 2:00 p.m. Supper at 5:00 p.m. More Gourd dancing after supper - if anyone wants to bring anything please bring covered dish.

FEBRUARY 4

Gourd Dance in memory of Dorothy Heap-of-Birds at Clinton Fairgrounds (South on HWY 183), Clinton, Okla. Painting Ceremony 2:00 pm Gourd Dancing 3:00pm Supper 5:00pm. Contact for more info:Choya Hammond (580)309-1992 or Ruth Bearshield (580)303-8378

FEBRUARY 4

United Keetoowah Band Council Meeting at 10 a.m. in the Community Services Building, Tahlequah, Okla.

FEBRUARY 4 Norman First American UMC will be hosting Native Open Hand Games Southern Style, from 2 - 5 PM, at 1950 Beaumont Dr, Norman, Okla. Info call Alan Yeahquo, Coordinator (405) 321-5640. Lunch will be provide after games. Everyone Welcome

FEBRUARY 6 - MARCH 12 Free tobacco cessation course from 6 p.m. to 7 p.m. çççççWhitney Nuttle (918) 762-3873 or Suzy Knife Chief (918) 762-2153.

February 16-18 Tulsa Indian Art Festival at the Glenpool Conference Center, HWY 75 and 121st Street. Entry forms at www. tulsaindianartfestival.com.

FEBRUARY 18 All Indian Rodeo Association

The Arrington -Mcspadden will have their first rodeo of 2012 in Tahlequah Okla. For more info email dwrshirley@aol.com

Seminole Tribe of Florida

APPLY TODAY!

www.Seminoletribe.com

Tribal Wide Recreation Director

Administration of recreational programs for the Seminole Tribe of Florida children, youth, adults and senior citizens. Effort includes the planning, organizing, directing, coordinating, controlling and budgeting of recreation activities and programs. Bachelor 's degree in recreation, parks management, public administration or a related field; or any equivalent combination of education and experience, with at least seven (7) to ten (10) years of progressively responsible experience managing a variety of recreation programs.

Tribal Wide Youth Services Director

Develops and implements goals, objectives, policies, procedures and work standards for multiple Programs such as the: Boys & Girls Clubs, Community Youth Centers, the Florida Cooperative (4-H), the Financial Literary Program and the Youth Ranches. Integrates the departments with comprehensive programming of the tribal community/ organization. Bachelor's degree in Public Administration, Business Administration, or similarly related field /and in specialty area/and five (5) years of experience in management/administration services and programs. Seven (7) to ten (10) years in a senior leadership capacity. Knowledge of tribal regulations and business commercial laws and regulations is highly desirable.

Tribal Wide Elder Affairs Director

Responsible for providing leadership and direction to the Elder Affairs Department. Develops and oversees the implementation of a comprehensive gerontological program for Tribal Elders. Provides education for staff and the community on issues facing elders and vulnerable adults, such as: elder abuse, ageism, concepts on aging, and intervention strategies for Alzheimer's prevention and intervention. Act as a liaison with State and Federal Agencies. Bachelor's degree in Sociology, Social Work or Psychology or other related field plus five (5) to seven (7) years of experience working with the aging population. Five (5) years of experience in a leadership capacity, managing a comprehensive program.

Send Resumes to: Fax 954-967-3477 or Email: KaBienaime@semtribe.com

 $\label{thm:complete} \textit{Visit www.semtribe.com} \ for \ complete \ listing \ of \ all \ opportunities \ within \ the \ Seminole \ Tribe \ of \ Florida.$

College Scholarships

American Indian, Alaska Native & Native Hawaiian Students

$450,000+ awarded each year! All Undergraduate Majors Are Eligible. Graduate Scholarships Available.

Applications Due April 4th!

Download Application: aiefprograms.org

American Indian Education Foundation 2401 Eglin Street • Rapid City, SD 57703 (605) 342-9968

MORE JOBS, MORE NEWS, MORE EVENTS.
VISIT ONLINE AT WWW.NATIVETIMES.COM

Eyre named Chair of SFUAD's Film Dept.

SANTA FE, N.M. - Awardwinning filmmaker Chris Eyre has been appointed chair of Santa Fe University of Art and Design's Moving Image Arts Department (film/video), effective Feb. 1. Eyre directed the highly acclaimed Smoke Signals, which won a coveted Sundance Audience Award and the Sundance Filmmakers Trophy. Eyre and his films have amassed numerous other awards, including a Peabody and an Emmy. His latest film, Hideaway, starring Josh Lucas and James Cromwell, is due for release in May 2012.

After graduating from New York University's film school, Eyre was invited to participate as a fellow in the Sundance Institute's Directors Lab under the mentorship of Robert Redford. His relationship with Redford was instrumental in helping Eyre produce his early films: Smoke Signals (1998), which was the first featurelength film directed by a Native American to receive national theatrical release by Miramax Films; Skinwalkers (2002); and A Thief of Time (2003). Eyre's 2004 film Edge of America was selected to show on Opening Night at the 2004 Sundance Film Festival, and it garnered Eyre the highly prestigious DGA Award for Outstanding Directorial Achievement from the Directors Guild of America. He later directed A Thousand Roads (2005) for the Smithsonian's National Museum of the American Indian, followed by Imprint (2007), for which he served as producer.

"I am thrilled to hear of this inspired appointment," said Robert Redford. "Chris Eyre is a successful and authentic voice in cinema and perfect for this position. His vision and imprimatur on this program will be profoundly valuable in ways that Chris, alone, is uniquely positioned to fill," continued Redford. "His influence on a new generation of storytellers will be significant."

Eyre's work for television includes three episodes of the PBS miniseries We Shall Remain (2009)—"After the Mayflower," "Tecumseh's Vision" and "Trail of Tears." He also directed episodes of the critically acclaimed NBC show Friday Night Lights (2009 and 2011).

Filmmaker Chris Eyre

Eyre has received a Foundation Rockefeller Intercultural Film Fellowship, an NHK/Sundance Cinema 100 Award, the Martin Post-Production Scorsese Award, a Humanitas Prize, the Warner Brothers Post-Production Award, a United States Artists fellowship, an Independent Spirit Award, multiple First Americans in the Arts awards and multiple Best Film awards at the American Indian Film Festival.

"We are thrilled to have one of the most charismatic and successful storytellers of our time directing our film program," said Larry Hinz, president of Santa Fe University. "Chris will be a powerful inspiration for our students."

Eyre spoke passionately about his decision to join the faculty. "I am thrilled that I can remain active in the film industry while mentoring and inspiring a new generation of filmmakers," he said. "My goal as department chair is to transform the Moving Image Arts Department into a world-class film school where students understand the power of telling a story in film and making the world a better place through it."

The school's location was also a key element in Eyre's decision. "Santa Fe is a flagship destination for artists," he said, "a place where all forms and expressions of creativity are nurtured by the community as a whole. Santa Fe University is a school with an outstanding faculty and unparalleled resources, from Garson Studios to the sound stages, the Garson Theater and The Screen, which are outstanding on their own."

Eyre holds a BA in Media Arts from the University of Arizona and an MFA in Film and Television from New York University's Graduate Film program. He is a member of the Cheyenne and Arapaho tribes.

About Santa Fe University of Art and Design Santa Fe University of Art and Design is an accredited institution located in Santa Fe, New Mexico, one of the world's leading centers for art and design. The university offers degrees in arts management, contemporary music, creative writing, digital arts, graphic design, moving image arts (filmmaking and video production), performing arts, photography, and studio art. Facultymembersarepracticing artists who teach students in small groups, following a unique interdisciplinary curriculum that combines hands-on experience with core theory and prepares graduates to become wellrounded, creative, problemsolving professionals. As a Laureate International Universities Center Excellence in Education in Art, Architecture and Design, the university boasts an international student body and opportunities to study abroad, encouraging students to develop a global perspective on the arts. Santa Fe University of Art and Design (formerly the College of Santa Fe) is accredited by The Higher Learning Commission and a member of the North Central Association, www.ncahlc.org.

Smithsonian architect to work with UW AI Studies program

LARAMIE, Wyo. – Johnpaul Jones, lead design consultant for the Smithsonian's National Museum of the American Indian, has contracted to work with the University of Wyoming American Indian Studies Program to develop a project profile for a proposed American Indian center on the UW campus.

Jones' work with UW is partially supported by a grant from the Wyoming Cultural Trust Fund.

Jones will visit UW Feb.

21-24 to meet with project stakeholders and begin gathering information for the project profile.

"We are pleased to have an internationally known Native American architect working with us on this project," says Judith Antell, director of the American Indian Studies Program. Jones' tribal affiliation is Cherokee-Choctaw.

The proposed center would house the American Indian Studies Program as well as provide space for cultural events and a research institute.

Jones is a founding partner of Jones & Jones, an architectural firm in Seattle. Some of his other notable projects include the Southern Ute Museum and Cultural Center in Ignacio, Colo., which opened in 2010; and the Institute of American Indian Art in Santa Fe, N.M.

For more information, call the American Indian Studies Program at (307) 766-6520.

Potawatomi to build hotel next to casino

MILWAUKEE (AP) – The Forest County Potawatomi say its casino in Milwaukee is the largest in the nation that lacks a hotel. The tribe is about to change that.

The Potawatomi say they'll begin construction this spring on a $97 million hotel next to the casino in the Menomonee Valley if financing and zoning approval are secured. The 20-story hotel would add another 230 jobs to Potawatomi's workforce, now numbering 2,500. In addition, about 1,000 construction jobs could be generated by the 382-room hotel.

Casino general manager Mike Goodrich says the Potawatomi Bingo Casino draws 6 million annual visits. The Journal Sentinel says the tribe opened a bingo hall at the casino site in 1991 with 100 employees.

Major exhibit exploring Geronimo's legacy opens Feb. 11

movie posters and ephemera.

Using Geronimo's life story as a window into the overall Apache experience, Beyond Geronimo will also portray other significant Apache events and leaders, such as Cochise, Daklugie, Alchesay and others.

DEB KROLL

PHOENIX, Ariz. - Geronimo. The name looms large in the history of the American West, the American Indian legacy and the colorful narratives of popular culture. But who was he really, this figure who has come down to us through a century of legends and a handful of sepia-toned photographs?

A compelling answer to this question, and a fascinating glimpse at the man behind the myth, will be offered by Beyond Geronimo: The Apache Experience, which opens at the Heard Museum on February 11, 2012 and runs through January 20, 2013. Curated by the Heard Museum and presented by JP Morgan Chase, the exhibit is an Arizona Centennial Legacy Project, commemorating the 100th anniversary of Arizona statehood in 2012.

Unprecedented in scope and depth, Beyond Geronimo: The Apache Experience will combine objects from the Heard's world-class collection with exemplary pieces from the Smithsonian's National Museum of Natural History and National Museum of the American Indian, the Autry National Center, the Oklahoma Historical Society, the Southern Plains Indian Museum, Allan Houser, Inc., the Amerind Foundation, the Arizona Historical Society, the Desert Caballeros Western Museum and a number of private lenders. Combining examples cultural and fine art, the exhibit include historic artifacts never before seen by the general public, such as the celebrated Naiche hide painting. Beyond

Geronimo will bring this fascinating figure to life via personal possessions, painted and photographic portraits, and other artifacts. The exhibit will also trace Geronimo's passage into legend via dime novels, portray other significant Apache events and leaders, such as Cochise, Daklugie, Alchesay and others, through personal objects, photographs works of art. Moving into our own time, the exhibit will include the works of 20th and 21st century artists reflecting the Apache experience. Among the celebrated contemporary American Indian artists represented are Allan Houser, Bob and Phillip Haozous, and Oliver Enjady.

"We are fortunate to bring together collections from across thecountry," said Heard Curator Janet Cantley, "including historical ethnographic artifacts as well as contemporary artists' works which help tell the story of the strength and endurance of the Apache people. A personal highlight has been working with individuals from the Apache communities in Arizona, New Mexico and Oklahoma."

> Born in 1829, the person the world came to

Sculpture by Allan Houser

Apache scouts

COURTESY PHOTOS

Skateboard art tribute to know as Geronimo was a medicine man of the Apache people who became a fearless and infamous warrior in the Arizona Indian Wars > of 1880-86. Following his capture in 1886, Geronimo spent the remainder of his life as a prisoner of war, making the best of his fate by becoming a showman, appearing publicly in Wild West shows, at the 1904 World's Fair and in President Theodore Roosevelt's 1905 inaugural parade. Never allowed to return to his homeland, Geronimo died at Fort Sill, Oklahoma on February 17, 1909.

"Supporting renowned Heard Museum this Arizona Centennial Legacy Project is especially gratifying for the bank, which has been serving Arizona customers for 112 years," said Joe Stewart, chairman JPMorgan Chase in Arizona. "Beyond Geronimo: The Apache Experience is an important exhibit showcasing a vital part of Arizona."

Illuminating a dramatic and often misunderstood chapter in American history and culture, Beyond Geronimo: the Apache Experience is an exhibit that will be remembered for years to come.

SHENANDOAH

"Lifegivers" is Joanne Shenandoah's first independent recording from start to finish.

hearts of people. Music has been called the 'universal language' and speaks to us all. While I was in Istanbul, the call to prayer was a constant reminder throughout the land, and affected me although I did not understand the words. Music in different languages is vibrations of sound that bring us to a place of celebration or enlightenment.

A great artist, A. Paul Ortega, a Mescalero Apache Medicine man, once told me that I should never refuse to sing, as my voice will bring people together in a place which may never be otherwise together because of my gift. This is what I aim to do through my music. I have received so many letters and emails from people around the globe whose lives are positively affected by my music. What a blessing!

NAT-You recently participated in a concert held in Bethlehem on Christmas, 2011 with Steve Robertson's, "ProjectPeaceonEarth"(http:// www.projectpeaceonearth. org/) that served as a global, musical prayer for peace. This must have been a lifechanging event for you as you performed live on Christmas Eve at Manger Square, directly in front of the Church of the Nativity and across from a Mosque. On Christmas Day, you performed in the full "Project Peace on Earth" concert at the Bethlehem Convention Palace which is next to the famed Solomon Pools. Bringing thousands of people together live, and tens of millions from every nation and faith through the full concert broadcast, is a powerful experience. How did this concert and visit to the region impact you?

Joanne- Several thousand people were at Manger Square on Christmas Eve day and it was a moving experience to sing and share the message of peace. I was blessed to gift the Iroquois Hiawatha Belt to the minister of Tourism and Women's Affairs of Palestine, Dr. Khouloud Diabes. I told her this flag represented Hiawatha, one of our prophets of peace. At a special dinner held for our delegation, I was given opportunity to explain to her in detail about how our Peacemaker brought the message of peace to the Iroquois through forgiveness.

It was with sacred respect that I visited the birthplace of Jesus and the Garden of Gethsemane and was so moved to sing an Iroquois Women's song with my daughter Leah in the church of Mary Magdalena in Jerusalem. (http://www.youtube.com/ watch?v=26usZUTvQXk)

Going to the Holy Land was an adventure that I never knew was in my future, but it affected me greatly. Since I've had a chance to sing and dance with the Aborigines in Australia, with the Buddhists

> Korea, chant and dance with African women in Cape Town, I have come to realize that each culture has their form of worship along with their prophets peace.

> NAT- What are your plans for 2012 and what priorities do you feel we need to place before us as a global and united human race?

Joannebelieve that a lot of people live in fear of the future. 2012 represents a transition to many people and our prophecies tell us that we will continue to survive as human beings. The key to survival will be the ability to live within sustainable societies which secure balance between basic human resource needs and the rights of other species. Iroquois have a constitutional obligation do nothing that causes harm which qualifies the rights of the unborn to clean fertile water, land and clear skies. To achieve this, the Iroquois incorporate the rights of othersfrom the earth to water, insects, animals, plants and trees-all have legal standing which must be respected.

NAT- You have recently gone out on your own and taken creative control of your music. What benefits has that brought you as an artist?

Joanne- "Lifegivers" is my first independent recording from start to finish. Creative management of the actual recording allows me to have direct control in respect to the buyers and then reaching the fans that have purchased my recordings in the past. I am honored to have been involved with helping to bring about the first Native American Music Awards through Ellen Bello. I am much honored to hold 13 Nammys which is the most any Native artist has received to date. It is wonderful seeing so many artists involved now and many of them are independent.

deeply about the womentheir growth and positive movement forward and your newest CD, "Lifegivers" is a

Joanne Shenandoah plays the flute at the Project Peace on Earth concert held in Bethlehem on Christmas, 2011 with Steve Robertson's, "Project Peace on Earth."

the entire lifecycle that women motivated this recording?

testament to your honoring

Joanne- "Lifegivers" pays tribute to the life cycles of women and each song is meant to celebrate the cycle of life. It has been my great honor to be embraced by many women of the world! The Iroquois hold that every human being is a remarkable gift of life, experience and creativity from the spiritual world. Each being has specific abilities and talents which must be nurtured by the extended family. Communal stability and peace is realized when children are free to explore the world and apply their talents without coercion or qualification. I have written songs to my daughter Leah and to other women directly in respect to our love, peace, and the commitments we hold to our children by helping them realize their dreams.

Ever since my daughter NAT- I know that you care Leah was born, I have been began singing to her. Now, she is a magnificent singer and has been blessed with a golden voice. Her first recording will be out this year. I am so very proud to be her mother. She evolve through. Tell us what is a Cum Laude Graduate of Syracuse University and has her Master's Degree from Rochester Institute Technology. (www. leahshenandoah.com)

> NAT- What is your wish for future generations?

Joanne- My biggest wish is that all people will have clean air, water, and fertile land to grow their food, sing their songs and dance their dances. I hope that people awaken, stand up and be counted, and they will love their children so much that they will care for the earth and use their Creator-given gifts to do so. I will continue my efforts to bring music that lifts the spirit and heals the soul.

Purchase Joanne's new CD "Lifegivers" at: http:// www.cdbaby.com/cd/ joanneshenandoah

Follow her home website at: http://www. joanneshenandoah.com/ WELCOME.html

Joanne Shenandoah's new CD, Lifegivers, may be purchased online at www.cdbaby.com/cd/ joanneshenandoah

MORE JOBS, MORE NEWS, MORE EVENTS , VISIT ONLINE AT WWW.NATIVETIMES.COM PLUS LOOK FOR NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES ON TWITTER & FACEBOOK!

Inside this issue:

- Obama hosts fundraiser for tribal donors
- Weaver uses bullet-proof material in art
- Bead worker makes a statement

TODAY'S INDEPENDENT INDIAN NEWS

- A FREE PUBLICATION -

WWW.NATIVETIMES.COM

NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES

VOLUME 18 + ISSUE 5

PUBLISHED WEEKLY

FEBRUARY 3, 2012

PHOTO COURTESY NCAI

Jefferson Keel, President of the National Congress of American Indians gives the State of Indian Nations Address Jan. 26.

State of Indian Nations: Keel calls for more flexibility

TIM TALLEY
Associated Press

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) – The president of the National Congress of American Indians urged the federal government Thursday to be more flexible in its relationship with tribal governments and put decision-making power back in the hands of the people who live in Indian Country.

Jefferson Keel, who's also lieutenant governor of the Oklahoma-based Chickasaw Nation, said restoring authority to tribal governments would eliminate administrative burdens at the federal level and make programs and spending more efficient because decisions would be made by the people who can best respond to the community's needs.

"We run dozens of social programs previously administered by federal agencies or states," Keel said while delivering the State of Indian Nations address in Washington. "And, we protect reservation environments in the manner that states regulate off-reservation lands.

"Tribal governments have proven our capacity to grow our economies, educate our people and manage our resources."

Federal red tape can deprive tribes of opportunities and jobs, Keel said. As an example, he noted that in Washington state, the Swinomish Tribe had worked out a deal with Wal-Mart for a new store on the reservation that would have given the tribe $1 million a year in lease revenue and created new jobs. But the federal government took more than a year to approve the deal, a delay that led Wal-Mart to make other plans, Keel said.

"This is why our federal partners have already proposed crucial lease reforms to free our economies," Keel said. "We don't need the government involved in all our business decisions, we need flexibility."

Keel urged the government to consult the tribes when developing policies that affect them.

"There would be a public outcry if the federal government tried to impose policy on a state without its consent," he said. "But the concerns of tribal nations are routinely overlooked, even when more than a dozen tribes are larger than some Northeastern states."

Keel called on President Barack Obama to

See KEEL Continued on Page 4

Officials look for payoff in Native Mob sweep

AMY FORLITIAssociated Press

MINNEAPOLIS (AP)

– Members of the Native
Mob gang have shot rivals in Minneapolis, sold drugs in Duluth, and thrown boiling water in a person's face in Crow Wing County. Authorities say they've also assaulted an informant on the White Earth Indian Reservation and shot up houses from Cass Lake to Mille Lacs.

This week's federal indictment of 24 suspected Native Mob members will disrupt the activity of one of Minnesota's most violent gangs and could bring some communities a reprieve from violence, authorities said. But it likely won't dismantle the organization – which is highly structured, active in prison, and wields power from the Twin Cities to reservations throughout Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota and Wisconsin.

"I consider Native Mob to be one of the most significant and problematic Native Americanbased gangs in the country, because of their organization ... their influence in so many communities and because of their clear propensity to engage in criminal behavior," said Christopher Grant, a national Native American gang specialist in Rapid City, S.D.

The gang, made up of mostly American Indian men and boys, started in Minneapolis in the 1990s. Some of its original members were connected to another street gang, but broke off and formed their own group, Grant said.

The gang has about 200 members, according to the

See MOB Continued on Page 3

Tribal leaders sound off on water rights

TIM TALLEY
Associated Press

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) – The leaders of two American Indian tribes that have filed a federal lawsuit with the state and Oklahoma City over water rights in southeastern Oklahoma say the growing legal case was born out of frustration with state officials who they say ignored them while developing plans to transfer water out of their historic homelands.

Choctaw Nation Chief Greg Pyle and Chickasaw Nation Gov. Bill Anoatubby jointly issued a series of statements over the past week hoping to define for the public their goal for a lawsuit filed last August in U.S. District Court. The tribal leaders say they would rather negotiate a water rights agreement than litigate one.

"Our goal is to have our voice - and our rights - respected and included in any decision on proposals to remove waters from our homelands," they wrote. "While we are confident we have strong legal claims, we want to make it clear that we have always preferred negotiation rather than litigation."

In a separate statement,
See WATER Continued on Page 4

Gov. Bill Anoatubby

Chief Greg Pyle

Navajo filmmaker still shining at Sundance

BERNIE DOTSON Gallup Independent

GALLUP, N.M. (AP) – Ramona Emerson swept into Park City, Utah, in 2010 as one of four writers and filmmakers selected to participate in the Sundance Film Festival's Native Filmmakers Ford Foundation Fellowship Program.

As a part of that program, she worked with industry professionals during what was a five-day intensive workshop. That fellowship continued into 2011, when Emerson, originally from Tohatchi, developed even more professional connections at the 2011 Sundance Film Festival.

Emerson's Sundance connection continues through the 2012 festival, Jan. 19-29, with "Opal," a screenplay written, directed and co-produced by Emerson and still making its way through Sundance circles.

"We watched films," Emerson said about the Fellowship. "We thought about films. It was an inspiring experience."

"Opal" is a short film about a young Navajo girl who takes on the town bully. When Opal is beat up by the bully, she and her friend Bunny take matters into their own hands.

"The importance of 'Opal' goes beyond just getting my story on the screen," Emerson explained. "It is also a portrait of a tough little girl who won't take no for an answer. It serves as a metaphor for all of the places that little girls aren't allowed to go, the things they are forbidden to do. This is every little Navajo girl's chance to power through diversity, to push by the people who are keeping you from what you want to do."

Raised in Tohatchi and Santa Fe, where her mother attended art school, Emerson said she gravitates toward subjects she encountered as a youngster growing up around the Navajo Nation. Emerson said she chose the name of the film because it relates to a scene that was taken out of the final draft in which Opal's mother has a large opal ring that she received the night Opal was born, so she got two opals on that day, Emerson explained.

"The scene was cut, but the name stayed," Emerson said.

See NAVAJO Continued on Page 7

COURTESY OF RAMONA EMERSON / ASSOCIATED PRESS

This undated photo shows actors and crew filming a scene from the movie "Opal" in Tohatchi, N.M. Ramona Emerson swept into Park City, Utah, in 2010 as one of four writers and filmmakers selected to participate in the Sundance Film Festival's Native Filmmakers Ford Foundation Fellowship Program. Emerson's Sundance connection continues through this year's festival with "Opal," a screenplay written, directed and co-produced by Emerson and still making its way through Sundance circles.

Tribes join forces to save petroglyph site

PAULINE ARRILLAGA
AP National Writer

TUBA CITY, Ariz. (AP) – In the far reaches of northern Arizona, where city sprawl gives way to majestic canyons and a holy place is defined not by steeple and cross but rather by earth and sky, lies a monument to a people's past and a symbol of the promise of peace between two longwarring Indian nations.

The Hopi people call it Tutuveni, meaning "newspaper rock," and from a distance this place is just that – a collection of sandstone boulders set on a deserted swath of rust-stained land outside of Tuba City, some 80 miles from the Grand Canyon and a four-hour drive north of Phoenix.

It is only when you step closer that you begin to understand what Tutuveni really is: a history of the Hopi Indian tribe carved into stone.

The site contains some 5,000 petroglyphs of Hopi clan symbols, the largest known collection of such symbols in the American Southwest. According to researchers with the Hopi Cultural Preservation Office, the many etchings on the boulders of Tutuveni date as far back as far back as A.D. 1200.

On the dark desert varnish of the boulders are rows of bear paws, corn stalks, spiders, coyotes, kachinas, clouds, cranes. Some of the symbols represent various aspects of Hopi cultural life, but most are the markings of the Hopi clans, or family systems, which are usually named for animals or other natural objects.

The Hopi made these engravings during ceremonial pilgrimages from their land to the Grand Canyon to mark the passage into adulthood for Hopi young men.

would stop at Tutuveni and camp there, and they would peck their clan symbols on those rocks to mark their participation in that pilgrimage. And they did this for four or five centuries at least," said Wes Bernardini, an archaeologist and professor at the University of Redlands who has been studying Tutuveni for years. "When people from the same clan would visit the site, they would put their symbols next to the previous symbol that somebody had left earlier. There's no other site that we know of like that, that shows these repeated visits.

"It's a very important place."

It is also a place threatened by modern-day vandals who view Tutuveni not as the sacred site and archaeological treasure that it is, but rather a canvas for their own graffiti.

College of Law

Scattered among the many ancient impressions are the markings of lovers, history buffs and random visitors looking to leave their mark with etchings such as: "Aaron Myrianna 07," "The Victor 10-20-85," "Van.B," "Ramon Albert," "Ariz. Hy. Dept." Even: "1969-Man Land on Moon."

On one rock is a carved image of the two World Trade Center towers, with a plane heading for them. Elsewhere, clan symbols have been chiseled away or spraypainted over.

The Hopi had long known that what they considered a religious place had become, instead, a gathering spot to drink beer and act out. There was talk over the years of erecting a fence or building berms to help keep out vehicle traffic.

But the question of how to protect Tutuveni was complicated by its mere location: The site, while recognized as a Hopi traditional cultural property, actually sits on land now owned by the Navajo Indians, the result of a decadesold dispute that saw these neighboring tribes fighting over land each considered its own. The conflict was finally resolved in 2006 with much of the disputed 1.5 million acres going to the Navajos, but bitterness lingers still.

It might have been easy for Tutuveni to get caught up in all of that – and its needs overlooked – but for the small group of researchers, archeologists and preservationists from both tribes and beyond who came together in common cause: to save this important cultural resource.

"It's something that's really unique and very special to the Hopi," said Ron Maldonado, supervisory archaeologist for the Navajo Nation. "In my mind, it didn't matter who it belonged to. It needed to be protected, and that was it."

Maldonado talked with Jon Shumaker, a fellow archaeologist at electric utility Arizona Public Service, to see if the company might contribute some funding for fencing materials. APS came up with some $13,000.

Meanwhile Bernardini, in collaboration with the Hopi Cultural Preservation Office, nominated Tutuveni for inclusion on the World Monuments Fund 2008 "watch list" of endangered cultural sites around the world. Among the treasures listed in years past: the Great Wall of China, India's Taj Mahal and ancient Pompeii, Italy. The fund pitched in some $100,000 toward a protective fence and surveillance cameras, but also a laser-scanning project that captured many of the petroglyphs for an educational website that was launched this past December.

Today, a chain-link fence stretches around the rock site, with only a narrow opening to allow for visitors on foot. Hidden cameras capture the movement of people and animals. Some beer bottles still litter the ground, but far fewer than what once was found at Tutuveni.

On a recent visit, Lee Wayne Lomayestewa of the Hopi Cultural Preservation Office and Patrick Secakuku, who works with the Hopi schools, walked slowly among the boulders, stopping to run their fingers over the clan symbols and talk about their significance to their people. It was Secakuku's first visit to Tutuveni, and he stared in awe as he discovered just how many engravings represented his own ancestry in the bear strap clan.

"I'm really amazed. I didn't realize there were this many," he said. "This tells you a lot of history about our tribe, our Hopi people, and for people to desecrate, vandalize ... you're losing a lot of rich culture, history. It's sad. But how do you control it? You just wish that out of respect they'd leave them alone."

Lomayestewa comes out to the site regularly to check that the surveillance cameras are still working and to document any new vandalism with his digital camera. The fence, completed in 2010, has helped, he said. But educating both outsiders and the Navajo and Hopi people who live near Tutuveni about the importance of the site is the only real way to help preserve the place – and allow the past to live on.

"I wish we could have protected it before all this happened," Lomayestewa said, as he sought to explain just what Tutuveni means to the Hopi. "White people don't understand that we have these places where we pray. Their way of thinking is that you have to pray in a church.

"Ours is out here," he said, standing on the earth where his ancestors walked so long ago, on the soil that is his sanctuary.

PETE SOUZA / WHITE HOUSE PHOTO

President Barack Obama delivers remarks on Dec. 2 during the 2011 Tribal Nations Conference at the Department of Interior in Washington.

Obama holds fundraiser with tribal supporters

KEN THOMASAssociated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) – President Barack Obama, raising money for his campaign among tribal leaders, said Jan. 27 he wants American Indians to be "full partners" in the economy.

Obama met with 70 to 75 supporters from Native American tribes. Democratic officials said the fundraiser would benefit the Obama Victory Fund, a joint committee of the Obama campaign and the Democratic National Committee. Tickets started at $15,000.

Obama told participants that he has worked to include American Indians in his administration and wants Native Americans to be "full partners in our economy." The president noted that he had signed laws to improve health care for Native American tribes and pushed for better educational opportunities and more improvements to tribal economies.

"We want new businesses and new opportunities to take root on the reservations," Obama said. Attendees included Democratic National Committee chairwoman Debbie Wasserman Schultz, a Florida congresswoman, and former Rep. Patrick Kennedy, D-R.I.

Obama raised more than $220 million for his re-election campaign and the Democratic National Committee in 2011. The president returned to Washington after completing a three-day, five-state trip following his State of the Union address.

When Obama ran for president in 2008, he visited Montana's Crow Indian reservation and was adopted into the nation during a private ceremony.

Obama quipped, "If my adoptive parents were here, I know what they'd say, "Kids just grow up so fast."

The transcript of the President's remarks are posted along with this article online at www. nativetimes.com and filed under News/Politics.

We're all paying the bill.

Native American Pre-Law Day

Saturday, March 3, 2012 • 8:15 a.m. - 5:30 p.m.
University of Tulsa College of Law • 3120 East 4th Place, Tulsa Ok 74104

Thinking about a Career in Law?

Come see whether law school is for you & learn how you can prepare for law school. Prominent Native American attorneys will discuss their backgrounds and careers, law school representatives will provide information about the law school admissions process and how to finance a legal education, and current Indian law students will talk about what law school is really like!

The workshop, sponsored by The Law School Admissions Council and DiscoverLaw.org, is co-hosted by Oklahoma City University School of Law, the University of Oklahoma College of Law, and the University of Tulsa College of Law, is open to all American Indian college and senior high school students. A limited number of scholarships are available to assist with travel costs for students outside easy driving distance of Space is limited, and registration is on a first come first serve basis. Please register in advance. Walk-ins are available only as space permits. To register, please contact University of Tulsa College of Law, at lawadmissions@utulsa.edu or 918-631-2406 by February 21, 2012.

Following the Native American Pre-Law Day, all attendees of the pre-law event are invited to a private tour of the Enduring Spirit Exhibit of Native American art and artifacts at The Gilcrease Museum from 4;40-5:30 p.m.

The University of Tuba College of Law provides equality of opportunity in legal education for all persons, including faculty, employees, applicants for admission, enrolled students, and graduates, without discrimination or segregation on the ground of race, color, religion, national origin, gender, age, disability, or sexual orientation.

Every Oklahoma household pays $548 each year in state and federal taxes related to smoking.

Visit StopsWithMe.com to learn how you can help improve Oklahoma's fiscal and physical health.

Tobacco-FreeOklahoma Week

January 29th - February 4th, 2012

TOBACCO STOPS WITH ME.

StonsWithMe.com

TSET. Better Lives Through Better Health.

Complying with NAGPRA: Museum gives back artifacts

■ NAGPRA has resulted in attitudes changing over time regarding the final placement of Native American remains.

ANDY FITZPATRICK Battle Creek Enquirer

BATTLE CREEK, Mich. (AP) - In the basement and back rooms of Kingman Museum, the remains of people from long ago wait to return home.

That's the goal of the federal Native American Graves Protection and Repatriation Act, which became law in 1990. Since then, the museum has been working to return the remains of Native American people and artifacts back to the tribes from which they originated.

It can be a daunting task, correctly identifying and returning such materials for any institution; notices of the remains have to be sent to the relevant tribes and the National Park Service's NAGPRA Program, which then publishes notices for Native American tribes to review to see if there are remains to be repatriated to them.

Kingman is no exception and has been working on becoming fully compliant with NAGPRA while dealing with, they say, understaffing and limited space. That's why the museum has announced an opening for an intern to help with the task of returning a dozen or so items and "Because of snail mail it takes a little while," Collections Manager Beth Yahne said. "Between that and in 2000, with the museum kind closing down for a couple of years, we tried to pick it back up since the museum's been open. The Internet has made it a little easier."

Western Michigan University Professor Archaeology Michael Nassaney said the remains would be given to museums with an eye toward scientific

"The idea was that these would have some research potential, that they would be studied and so forth, and in some instances they were," he said. "In other instances, they just lay in boxes and bags on museum shelves."

One of the items Kingman would like to return is a mummified human head originating from the Alaskan Tlingit tribe.

Yahne said it was sent to Dr. John Harvey Kellogg from a missionary named Esther Gibson about 100 years ago. The inventor of Corn Flakes and proprietor of the Battle Creek Sanitarium gave it to the museum.

Being carefully watched over in the Kingman basement, the head is in a box and covered with a protective wrap.

Nearby, in another container, sits a buckskin sack found with the head.

According missionary's letter to Kellogg, the box also contained the long-lost man's ashes, but she could not send them.

Taking the lid off the box recently, Yahne revealed the face of someone undoubtedly with a story to tell. The top of his head was full with long hair. His face was thin, even when accounting for the decay Above his top lip, a thin layer of facial hair still clung.

Whatever story this man had that led to his remains being found in a box in an Alaskan cave by two Native American boys is long gone. A few marks on his face show where Yahne thinks the two boys struck him with an axe while opening the box before they knew what was inside.

"We think it's a shaman or a warrior; someone that's pretty important," she said.

Other human remains were returned to places such as Muskegon and Mesa Verde, Colo., over the years the museum has been working on compliance.

There are other objects that need to be returned that are still important, if not as dramatic. For example, a rattle-like device made out of a tortoise shell and head sits in a storage room near Kingman's large collection of artifacts.

It, too, needs to find its way back home.

That's because the museum receives federal funds, and any institution that does is required to conform to NAGPRA. Nor is the museum allowed to display such artifacts and remains, or allow photography of them, out of deference to the tribes.

Nassaney said NAGPRA has resulted in attitudes changing over time regarding the final placement of Native American remains.

"In the past, archaeologists didn't have much to say to Native people," Nassaney said. "Understandably, Native people didn't want to talk to archaeologists because they were seen as grave robbers. Now those relationships are beginning to change, partly as a result of NAGPRA."

After an archaeological dig uncovers remains, Nassaney said the first step is to contact local police, a medical examiner or a state official, such as the Michigan Office of the State Archaeologist. Once it is determined that the remains are not from a person who has been missing, then the ethnicity must be determined through genetic

If they are from a Native population, the search for the relevant tribe is made and it will determine what is to be done with the remains. Sometimes any handling of the remains is not permitted, resulting in them being reburied.

Still, some artifacts can be displayed, and Kingman is planning an exhibit featuring local Native American pieces of history.

gang members and the outside world is monitored but isn't cut off entirely, Rothstein said, because part of a prisoner's rehabilitation includes contact with family members and the Bill Ziegler, president and chief executive of Little Earth of United Tribes, an American Indian housing community in Minneapolis, said his community is a gang-free zone, but the indictments will have an impact on violence in the

He said the American Indian community needs to use this break from violence to show kids other ways to feel a sense of belonging and

"We failed these kids somewhere along the line," he said. "We as a community better view this as maybe we have a little bit of a reprieve, surrounding neighborhood.

outside world.

NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES

Publisher & Editor LISA SNELL editor@nativetimes.com

Contributing Writers Dana Attocknie WESLEY MAHAN KAREN SHADE

Advertising Sales KATHLEEN ROBERTSON LISA SNELL ROB WALTON advertising@nativetimes.com

Distribution SHELBY HICKS STEVE LACY WESLEY MAHAN MICHAEL MARRIS KATHLEEN ROBERTSON Brenda Slaughter

The Native American Times, formerly the Oklahoma Indian Times, is published weekly (except the last week of the year) by Lisa Hicks Snell. Mailing address is PO Box 411 Tahlequah, OK 74465. All the contents within the Native American Times are copyrighted material. Any reproduction, redistribution without the written consent of the NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES is strictly

> Each week's issue is available for free download online at: www.nativetimes.com

Subscription rates: $65.00 for fifty-two issues, $32.50 for twenty-six issues, or $16.25 for thirteen issues. A single copy is $1.25 (Rates are for postage and handling) Send check or money order to:

> NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES Attn: Subscriptions P.O. Box 411 Tahlequah, OK 74465-0411

Phone: (918) 708-5838 Fax: (888) 689-4873

Postmaster: Send Change of Address Form 579 to: NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES P.O. Box 411, Tahlequah, OK 74465

WWW.NATIVETIMES.COM - News from the crossroads of Indian Country

VINITA 918-256-5585

LANGLEY 918-782-0011

MONKEY ISLAND 918-257-8869

www.okstatebank.com

Equal Housing Lender Native American Owned

Maine Indian tribe aims to build wind project

COLUMBIA FALLS, Maine (AP) - Maine's Passamaquoddy Indian tribe wants to build a commercial wind farm in eastern Maine.

The Bangor Daily News reported the tribe has reached an agreement with Idaho-based Exergy Development Group to build a $120 million project in a remote area of dirt roads, blueberry barrens and cranberry bogs north of Columbia

Former lawmaker John Richardson, who's has been hired as an adviser, said the tribe expects to purchase the land and finalize plans by the end of the year. He said the project would have between 18 and 50 turbines, depending on the results of an ongoing environmental study.

Passamaquoddy Chief Joseph Socobasin of the Indian Township reservation said the project should result in 50 to 100 construction jobs and 15 to 20 permanent jobs once it's built.

MOB

Continued from Page 1

According to the Department of Corrections, as of Dec. 30, 144 of the state's 9,158 inmates had some affiliation with the Native Mob.

indictment, and is actively recruiting new ones, including

Inspector Mike Martin, a gang expert with the Minneapolis Police Department, called the Native Mob one of the most violent gangs in Minnesota and said it is feared by other community members. He said the gang has been especially problematic on Indian reservations, which typically have fewer resources to deal with crime.

He said week's this indictment - one of the largest indictments gang-related in Minnesota - will have an impact because of its scope. It contains 47 counts going back several years, and charges all 24 defendants with conspiracy to participate in racketeering, alleging they used violence and intimidation to keep the gang in power.

"One of the problems traditionally has been these individuals feel they can commit crimes in the city or on one reservation and then go hide in another reservation or another state," Martin said. "I think the federal authorities and state authorities here have sent a message to them that you can run but you can't hide and we will bring them to

The indictment paints a picture of a structured, violent gang that held monthly meetings where members encouraged the assault or murder of their enemies, including rival gang members, government witnesses, informants or anyone who showed disrespect.

While there are hundreds of American Indian gangs in the country, Grant said, most are loosely organized and might have as few as five members.

According to indictment, the Native Mob is different. It's led by a chief and a co-chief, who delegate and encourage criminal acts, maintain discipline, and facilitate meetings. Other leaders are responsible for duties such as responding to external threats or punishing those who disobey the gang's rules and bylaws. And leaders from other regions represent their area at meetings.

New members need a current member to vouch for them, and members identify themselves through gang tattoos, clothing or jewelry. They also refer to each other by gang names or use the term

"fam" - short for family, the indictment said.

The indictment shows a clear connection between gang members on the street and its members in prison. About half of the people indicted already were in custody, authorities said, and the indictment prompted a statewide prison lockdown to keep word about arrests from getting out.

According to the Department of Corrections, as of Dec. 30, 144 of the state's 9,158 inmates had some affiliation with the Native Mob - with roughly 60 of those people classified as active members.

Don Rothstein, assistant director of Department of Corrections' office of special investigations, said the Native Mob is one of many active, violent groups in the state's prisons. Only about one-third of all inmates are affiliated with gangs, he said, yet that population accounts for about two-thirds of violent crimes inside prison walls.

Communication between a little bit of breathing room, and we better plug something in to replace gang violence." Elying Eagle Trading Post protection.

True American Indian www.flyingeagletradingpost.com

DRUMRIGHT DENTAL CENTER Advanced Dental Technology

We proudly offer an array of services, from general dentistry to sedation, dental implants, and cosmetic dentistry - all designed expressly to meet our patient's changing needs. With four general dentists and four hygienists, we can maintain your oral health for a lifetime all at one location.

We Accept Contract Health & Sooner Care

We serve patients in the Drumright, Cushing, Stillwater, Stroud, Ponca City, and surrounding areas with personalized service and exemplary care. Call for your appointment today.

918-352-3312 or Toll Free 877-RH Melton drumrightdentalcenter.com

SUPERNAW'S OKLAHOMA INDIAN SUPPLY

Wholesale items for Pow Wow Vendors Bone chokers $20 per dozen

Handmade lamp worked glass bead bracelets $1.00 each Glass bead stretch bracelets 5 for $2.50 12 Necklaces: Chain w/ pendant and display pad $13.50

36 inch gemstone chip strands Reg. 3.95 now $2.00 36 inch turquoise chip strands Reg. 7.95 now $4.00

Always our regular stock of seed beads from 16/0 to 8/0, findings, leather, hackles, fluffs and thousands of other supply items.

Remember we've moved around the corner 109 North Broadway, Skiatook, OK 74070

New Dealers Cash or Credit Card Only.

Open Noon-6pm Mon. thru Fri. • 10am-5m Sat. • Closed Sun. Local: 396-1713-Countrywide Toll Free 1-888-720-1967

Website: www.supernaw.com • Email: Supernaw@flash.net

WATER

Continued from Page 1

the tribal leaders suggested a plan to manage the region's water resources that includes meeting the growing needs of urban centers like Oklahoma City and Tulsa while maintaining a sustainable supply in the region for recreation and tourism, agriculture and other rural uses and as a defense against drought. The tribes are currently working with the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers to develop a regional water plan that meets those goals.

"The seven-point plan we have developed outlines the key points – the essentials, if you will – that any water management plan must address in order to ensure the continued sustainability of our water supply and prosperity of our great state," Anoatubby says in the statement.

"The lawsuit filed against state officials and Oklahoma City was designed to ensure that our rights are taken into account in any future plan to remove additional water from our historic homelands," Pyle states.

J.D. Strong, executive director of the Oklahoma Water Resources Board, said the tribes' public statements do not match the allegations and demands in their lawsuit.

"The Tribes talk about protecting the water needs of Oklahoma City, yet they asked a federal court to declare Oklahoma City has no right to use the pipeline that currently supplies its citizens with water," Strong said. Among other demands, the lawsuit asks the court to declare that Oklahoma City has no right to transport water through the Atoka pipeline, which has delivered water to the city and other areas in central Oklahoma for almost 50 years.

"The State of Oklahoma has spent more than a century managing and regulating Oklahoma's precious water resources with great success," Strong said. "The State has long been, and intends to remain, the protector of all Oklahomans' water rights."

The tribes' lawsuit asks a federal judge stop a plan approved by the resources board in 2010 to sell its water storage rights to Sardis Lake in southeastern Oklahoma to the Oklahoma City Water Utility Trust without first reaching an agreement with the tribes. The trust wants a water-use permit to withdraw water from the reservoir, which is within the historic territories of both tribes.

In exchange, the city agreed to pay the $22 million balance owed to the federal government for the lake's construction in the 1970s and 1980s.

Pyle told The Associated Press the agreement followed years of unsuccessful attempts by the tribes to work with state officials to reach a water rights agreement that would benefit the state and the tribes.

"For over a decade, we made repeated attempts to establish productive government-to-government dialogue with the state on our shared water issues. But our efforts were never able to get the state to meaningfully engage," Pyle said in an email.

The Choctaw Nation even offered to pay the balance on what was owed on the Sardis Lake project, but the board wouldn't consider it, Pyle said.

"This, once again, made it clear the state would ignore our requests and our rights and our interests," he said.

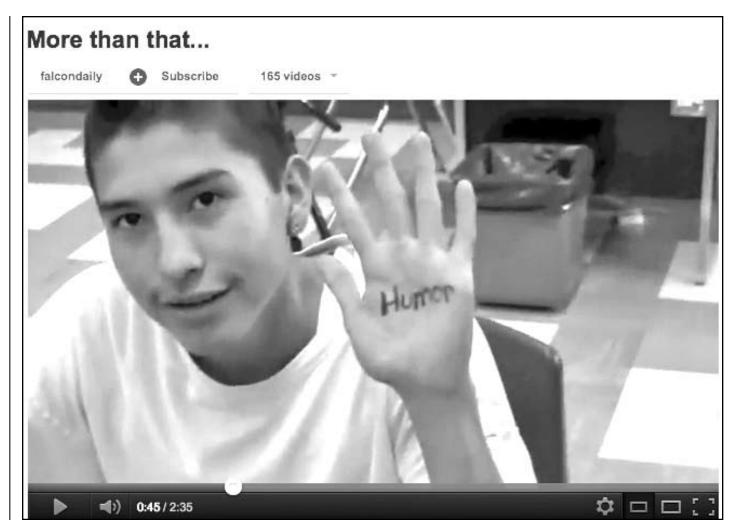

Anoatubby said the tribes want a seat at the table when plans for usage of water in southeastern Oklahoma are being developed by the state.

"We do have rights that must be recognized. And it's my responsibility and Chief Pyle's responsibility to make sure that our rights are protected as a nation," Anoatubby told The Associated Press in a telephone interview.

"Water was something that we needed to settle," he said. "We had talks with various people at the state level. However, there was never any acknowledgement of our rights"

The tribes claim that an 1830 treaty gives them authority over water resources in their southeastern Oklahoma jurisdictions. State and city officials say the tribes relinquished those rights in subsequent treaties.

State officials have announced plans to file a separate lawsuit in state court to determine the extent of the tribes' water rights in the region, something the tribes say could takes years to resolve and will not settle the water rights dispute.

VIDEO STILL IMAGE YOUTUBE

A YouTube video posted by students from Todd County High School in Mission, S.D. responds to the stereotype of those living on Indian reservations: 'We're more than that.'

Students combat Indian stereotypes

KRISTI EATON

Associated Press

SIOUX FALLS, S.D. (AP) – They're powerful words routinely used to stereotype people living on American Indian reservations: poor, violent, alcoholic and obese.

Students at one high school on the Rosebud Reservation in South Dakota, home to the Rosebud Sioux tribe, have one response: We're more than that.

Behind the attention-grabbing headlines and pictures of reservation life, there's a rich culture and sense of pride that often goes unnoticed, students from Todd County High School in Mission, S.D., said.

Students describe their life in a YouTube video with terms such as bravery, determination and love. The video was created to refute a recent "20/20" special, "A Hidden America: Children of the Plains," which details the hardships of growing up on the Pine Ridge Reservation. According to U.S. Census statistics, Todd County, part of the Rosebud Reservation, and Shannon County, which is part of the Pine Ridge Reservation, are the secondand third-poorest counties in the nation.

In the special that aired last October on ABC, Diane Sawyer spoke with Robert Looks Twice, 12, who is the quarterback of his middle-school football team, a prize-winning powwow performer and who dreams of becoming the first American Indian president. He lives in a dilapidated trailer with his grandmother, uncle and eight cousins. In another segment, Sawyer speaks with a 12-year-old girl who lives without heat and little food, and is dealing with her mother's alcoholism. The girl tried to hang herself but survived.

After watching the "20/20" special, several of the students at Todd County High School worried that American Indian students were being incorrectly portrayed and decided to create a rebuttal, said Steve Elwood, assistant principal at the high school.

Instead of simply talking to the camera, the students – about 50 in total – came up with the idea of presenting one word that described a personality or character trait that would showcase what they do have on the reservation. The students shot, directed and edited the video, said Johnny Whirlwind Soldier, a 17-year-old senior

The YouTube video, titled "More Than That," has been watched more than 40,000 times since it was uploaded in December, and several of the students who created it have been invited to attend a national conference on Native American education

Whirlwind Soldier is among six students traveling to Washington next month to present the video at the National Association of Federally Impacted Schools conference. NAFIS is a nonprofit organization created to educate Congress on the importance of federal aid.

The students will take part in a question-and-answer session about the video on Feb. 27 to share how they battle stereotypes.

Feather Colombe, an 18-year-old senior at Todd County High School, also is going to Washington. She said she wants people to understand that she and other American Indian students don't need money or possessions for a rich life. Colombe is featured in the video with the word "honesty" written on her arm.

"I think we wanted to make this video and needed to, because what the other people – the outsiders – they don't know is that us Natives, we choose to live a certain way and we never wanted all this poverty. We just live our lives happily ... We see ourselves rich," she said.

Colombe said the stereotypes about American Indians used to bother her, but she has learned to focus on herself and the positives.

"I focus on sports, school, focus on graduating. It really keeps me going, taking that leadership role and moving forward, basically believing in myself and knowing I'm capable of it," she said.

ABC has not responded to an email seeking comment about the students' video.

Whirlwind Soldier is among six Indian education for about 10 years, udents traveling to Washington next said the video is helping to change nonth to present the video at the National perceptions.

"We want people to know outside the reservation system that we have great kids here and they have a lot of potential and have the means to do great things," he said.

Watch the video:

http://www.youtube.com/ watch?v=FhribaNXr7A

Tribes talk with Colorado on Animas-La Plata water rights

CATHERINE TSAI
Associated Press

DENVER (AP) – Colorado and the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation are getting closer to finalizing a contract for the state to pay for its share of water from the Animas-La Plata Project and costs for building it.

The half-billion-dollar project, decades in the making, fulfills a settlement of water-rights claims of the Southern Ute and Ute Mountain Ute tribes, but it also will provide water for the state of Colorado and four other entities in Colorado and New Mexico.

Colorado's Legislature

has authorized paying $36 million to the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation for its share of 10,460 acre-feet of water, plus interest on construction costs. But the interest has been building, and the $36 million likely won't cover everything Colorado owes.

The tribes had proposed that Colorado allow its share of water to revert back to the tribes, which weren't assessed for construction. The tribes would then sell the water back to the state at what they say would be a much lower price than what the state would pay the bureau.

"When we heard what the state would spend to get water, our first thought was, "Why?" said Peter Ortego, general counsel for the Ute Mountain Ute tribe. "We can make it cheaper for the state. Sure, it puts money in our coffers, but it keeps it in Colorado."

However, after two years of talking with tribal representatives, the Colorado Water Conservation Board has directed its staff to move forward on contract talks with the Bureau of Reclamation, board director Jennifer Gimbel said.

Gimbel said the board took the tribes' proposal "very seriously." However some board members questioned whether outside parties would challenge the proposal in court. Though legislators have already approved $36 million for project water, some board members also questioned how willing legislators would be in future years to spend on Animas-La Plata project water.

Gimbel noted the state may still have to talk with the tribes in the future about buying project water, especially if it turns out Colorado is unable to afford its entire share today.

Ryan Christianson of the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation said that following a meeting with state officials last week, he is optimistic a final contract could be reached this year. Another date for negotiations has not yet been set.

Native American hiring preference?

Advertise to Native Americans!
E-mail your ad for a quote to lisa@nativetimes.com

KEEL

Continued from Page

send a message to Congress on the importance of the nation-to-nation relationship between the federal government and sovereign Indian tribes and establish a permanent, yearly nation-to-nation summit that would institutionalize the Tribal Nations Summit started in 2009.

Keel also urged the federal government to appoint American Indians to important government positions, including the federal courts, and to create an office for Native American programs at the Office of Management and Budget. He encouraged presidential candidates to engage tribal members in their campaigns.

"We invite each candidate to visit Indian Country to outline your policy positions," Keel said. "We also urge the campaigns to make sure tribal nations are part of the discussion at the presidential debates."

Keel said the Interior Department is working to streamline lease approvals for renewable energy development and he urged Congress to pass legislation to expand leasing reform and create an Indian energy self-determination law. He also urged the Senate to pass the Violence Against Women Act Reauthorization and other legislation to address violence against tribal women.

Rep. Tom Cole, R-Okla., provided a congressional response to Keel's comments in which he said there is bipartisan cooperation on American Indian issues in Congress.

"Native American issues are not partisan issues," said Cole, who is also a member of the Chickasaw Nation.

Cole said Congress has made "substantial progress" in addressing tribal issues, including increasing funding for Indian health programs. But he said there needs to be more bipartisan cooperation between the Republicancontrolled House and Democratic-controlledSenate concerning appropriations issues.

Cole also said tribal governments should not rely solely on the federal government for their needs but turn to self-reliance and self-determination to move forward.

Miss An Issue?
Download back issues for FREE
www.nativetimes.com

COMMENTARY

Tribal Constitution is supposed to be 'law of the land'

NOTES FROM INDIAN COUNTRY

TIM GIAGO (Nanwica Kciji) © 2012 Unity South Dakota

How can a tribal court be fair if the judges are afraid of losing their jobs? Therein lays the dilemma facing Native American tribal courts all around Indian country.

In 2007 a group of Sicangu ladies (Rosebud) formed a group they called Lakota Women for Change. They petitioned the Bureau of Indian Affairs to conduct a specially monitored election to oversee an election amending the Constitution of the Rosebud Sioux Tribe.

Seventy one percent of the RST voters approved Article XI that the tribal court is a "separate and distinct from the legislative and executive branches of the tribal government." One distinguished law professor wrote in 2010 that the "Rosebud Sioux Tribe had "insured its legitimacy by adopting Article X1. The odd thing is that the RST has never fully adopted this amendment to their Constitution.

As a portion of the new amendments the election also set a time limit on the tribal council members to two consecutive terms in office. Now mind you, this was a legal amendment to the RST Constitution. A law to be obeyed? Not at Rosebud because despite the amendment setting time limits to terms in office a member of that august body ran for and was elected to his third consecutive term in office.

There is fear among some members of the Rosebud community that this Constitutional amendment will be ignored in total when the next election comes around because several council members, including the office of tribal president, will face term limits in the 2012 elections and may decide to follow the example of the council representative now serving his third term and completely ignore the Constitutional amendment. In this case the Rosebud Supreme Court ruled orally that it would not be fair to enforce the term limits. The RST Supreme Court ignored the voices of the people who voted for the Constitutional amendment on term limits.

This presents an odd situation for the Rosebud Sioux Tribe. The 20 elected members of the tribal council and the four elected officers can only stay in power if they ignore the Constitutional amendment blocking them from more than two terms in office. The Tribal Court judges are selected by a Judiciary Committee that is appointed by the Tribal Council. In other words, the jobs of the judges are in the hands of the Tribal Council and few people, if any, can recall the last time the Rosebud Tribe or a Tribal official lost a case in Rosebud Tribal Court.

The big problem is one that was overlooked by legal scholars and a BIA wearing blinders: The Rosebud Tribal Council refused to implement the decision of the voters for an independent tribal court.

According to the dictates of the Indian Reorganization Act of 1934, the authenticity of tribal constitutions is the law of the land.

One tribal official described it this way; "In 2008 at least 217 criminal cases were dismissed at the demand of the Rosebud Judiciary Committee because the arresting officers had not properly renewed their certification under a tribal ordinance. The lesson is clear, if minor failure to comply with a tribal ordinance leads to a dismissal of criminal cases, what is the obvious remedy for blatant violation of the Rosebud Constitution?"

There are those members of the Rosebud Sioux Tribe who see no effective remedy. They fear that during the next election more council members will be elected to serve third consecutive terms in direct violation of the Rosebud Constitution.

Todd County (home of the Rosebud Reservation) beat out Shannon County (home of the Pine Ridge Reservation) as the second poorest county in America. Shannon County came in a very close third. Rosebud receives an estimated $150 million annually from the federal government to sustain a variety of tribal programs including the judiciary.

When tribal governments ignore the dictates of their own Constitutions, and this is happening at Pine Ridge also, they also ignore the rights of their own people. Constitutions are written by the people for the people and they are the foundation of legitimate governments.

Every tribal member should ask for a copy of their tribal Constitution. Read it and memorize it because those Constitutions are the basis of your freedom and rights. A tribal judge is only as strong as his or her fear of losing a job because of conflict with the tribal council.

If the tribal council is also the boss over the tribal judges they also have the right to fire them at will. This is exactly the thing the

Tim Giago

Lakota Women for Change had in mind when they brought this touchy issue to an election to get it changed. Remember, 71 percent of the Rosebud voters approved the change. Does the RST Supreme Court have the authority to overrule the Constitution of the tribe?

One RST member said that the problem is not the Indian people: The problem is the Indian government.

Tim Giago, an Oglala Lakota, is President of Unity South Dakota. He was a Nieman Fellow at Harvard with the Class of 1990. His weekly column won the H. L. Mencken Award in 1985. He was the founder of The Lakota Times, Indian Country Today, Lakota Journal and Native Sun News. He can be reached at UnitySoDak1@knology.net

Scientists link racism, prejudice to simply being dumb

S.E. RUCKMAN

Even the article was blunt and to the point. It seems there's no sweet way to sugarcoat the findings of a recent study conducted by psychologists at Brock University in Ontario, Canada. This longitudinal study followed a group of babies born in 1958 who had their intelligence assessed at various ages.

The study concluded they found a correlation to racism and prejudice were linked to simply being dumb.

I was not stunned, but rather fascinated. This is a bit like discovering a long suspected truth for which there was no particular answer but merely a sharpened intuition. And to make it clearer, the study asserted that low intelligence individuals were more apt to hold to conservative political ideologies.

Findings postulated that an individual's willingness to cling to simplified beliefs (like, the world is a dangerous place, etc.) were more consistently resistant to change. Those who fit this belief category were also more likely to clutch onto a hierarchy in which people or things are classified. I was giddy, flushed, and savored every word of their findings.

We know that prejudice is a preconceived opinion or feeling. In almost any human social setting, this sorting phenomenon is inevitable. People of a like mind seem to gravitate toward one another. Understandable, after all, who wants to hang out with folks whose views are radically different than yours? We find comfort in consensus.

But carried too far in the other direction, it becomes xenophobia. That is to say, it morphs into an unreasonable fear of that which is strange or foreign from oneself. To me, this is the life's blood of racism. The article goes on. These faithful scientists said they found a correlation to lowered intelligence in childhood with a tendency to polarized thoughts on race in adulthood. Brains and bias were linked with a tendency to social conservatism and a lack of abstract reasoning. Plus, they found people with lower cognitive abilities (smarts) had less real contact with those from other racial backgrounds.

These were loaded statements. As a disclaimer, the study emphasizes it did not want to over generalize that there was no such thing as bright conservatives or dumb liberals. Since I know people who fit into both categories, this is reasonable.

Now the context of this study is plain. Not so much that prejudice exists, but why it exists. It is alive and thriving not only in this country, but in virtually any nation where ethnologies mix. The purging of such polarizing views is one of the first steps to social equality.

While the study linking dumbness and racism can probably be disproved, the evolution of civil rights in the 1960s is a prime example of how xenophobic societies can legally exist. We can see that state laws backed up the artifice of categorizing people within their hierarchal position. At the time, it was one that the larger society felt comfortable with and perpetuated.

Besides the obvious, the bright spot here remains that efforts to alter prejudiced thinking encourages folks to see a broader point of view, scientists said. They speculate that prejudice is often based on emotional, rather than cognitive factors. If so, then the key to changing racial bias lies with modifying peoples' different feelings about groups. This implies that belief systems, even long held ones, have the ability to evolve. These are seeds of hope even in a modern society.

Name:

"Nothing in the world is as dangerous as sincereignorance or conscientious stupidity," wrote Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. over forty years ago. The reasonable conclusion of which seems to be backed up by this remarkable Canadian study.

S.E. Ruckman is a citizen of the Wichita and Affiliated

S.E. RUCKMAN

Tribes in Anadarko, Okla. She graduated from the University of Oklahoma's School of Journalism and has written for the Tulsa World and the Native American Times. She is a freelance writer who is based in Oklahoma.

The viewpoints expressed in columns and letters are the opinions of the writers and not necessarily the opinion or viewpoint of the Native American Times publisher or staff.

Send letters to editor@nativetimes.com. Please keep letters to 350 words or less. Sign your name, tribal affiliation and city of residence for verification purposes.

VINITA 918-256-5585

LANGLEY 918-782-0011

MONKEY ISLAND 918-257-8869

www.okstatebank.com
Equal Housing Lender
Native American Owned

NATIVE
TIMES
recycles with Tahlequah
Recycling
Incorporated...

Reeves Renovations Professional Construction, Remodeling & Repairs

Bathrooms • Kitchens • Paint
Tile • Trim • Plumbing
Electrical • Solar Panels
Windmills • Winterizing
Quality Work • Free Estimates

918-637-6736 johnwilliamreeves@juno.com – Mayes & Cherokee Counties –

Follow Us! www.twitter.com/nativetimes

NAH	VE A	MEKI	CAN	IIMES

Address:
City:	State:	_ Zip:
Phone:

□ $65.00 for 52 issues□ $32.50 for 26 issues□ $16.25 for 13 issues□ $1.25 single copy

Mail this form with a check or money order to: Native American Times • P.O. Box 411 Tahlequah, OK 74465 • 918-708-5838

More Jobs. More News. More Features. Every Day.

shouldn't you?

www.nativetimes.com

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT / HELP WANTED

Cherokee Nation whose headquarters are located in beautiful Tahlequah Oklahoma is a national leader in Indian tribal governments and economic development in Oklahoma, We are a dynamic, progressive organization, which owns several business enterprises and administers a variety of services for the Cherokee people in Northeastern Oklahoma. Cherokee Nation offers an exceptional employee benefits plan with Comprehensive Health, Life, 401(k), Holiday Pay, Sick Leave and Annual Leave.

CURRENT OPPORTUNITIES AT W.W. HASTINGS HOSPITAL, TAHLEQUAH POSITIONS CLOSE 1/31/2012

#4500 INPATIENT/RN/PRN/OR/T/PT

#4869 SUPERVISORY CLINICAL NURSE/T/PT Interested applicants please apply at www.cherokee.org

> Cherokee Nation Human Resources Department PO Box 948 Tahlequah, OK 74465

(918) 453-5292 or 453-5050

Or Visit our website at: www.cherokee.org Employment will be contingent upon drug test results.

Indian preference is considered

Architectural Project Manager

Architectural Project Manager, Tahleguah, OK: Responsible for architectural projects including the plan, design, and construction of residential structures in the rustico style. Reports to owner and designated supervising licensed Architect. Bachelor's degree in Architecture, 1 year's experience in construction projects. Resumes to: Chance Properties, LLC, V. H. Wilhelm, 2210 Golf Course Road, Tahlequah, OK,

NATIVE AMERICAN HIRING PREFERENCE?

Advertise to Native Americans! E-mail your ad for a quote to: lisa@nativetimes.com

The Pawnee Nation of Oklahoma is accepting applications for the full-time, regular status position of Title VI Program Coordinator/Department Manager. To apply, please visit our website at http://www.pawneenation.org

FIELD INVESTIGATOR (ELECTRICAL TRADES)

Construction Industries Board Responsible for enforcing licensing act. Gathers information, prepares reports, and testifies at hearings on inspections and violations.

DEADLINE FOR APPLICATIONS:

FEBRUARY 10, 2012 (4 p.m.) See full job description and job requirements on agency website at www.cib.state.ok.us.

Salary Range: $37,956 - $41,700 E-mail resumes to HR@cib.state.ok.us

Mail to: Human Resources Construction Industries Board 2401 N. W. 23rd St., Suite 5 Oklahoma City, OK 73107

OR

Look for Native American Times on Facebook and Twitter!

OKLAHOMA INDIGENT DEFENSE SYSTEM

RECEPTIONIST

The Oklahoma Indigent Defense System (OIDS) has a position opening within the Executive Division, Norman office. Duties of this position involve answering multi-line phone system and handling various projects for the executive division.

Salary for this position is commensurate with qualifications and within agency salary schedule range. Excellent benefits.

Any interested applicant should submit a letter of interest and resume by February 3, 201 to:

Angie L. Cole, Personnel Officer Oklahoma Indigent Defense System P.O. Box 926 Norman, OK 73070

OIDS is an Equal Opportunity Employer

EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR

Catching the Dream (formerly Native American Scholarship Fund) seeks an executive director. Superior writing ability, knowledge of proposals and fund raising, knowledge of private scholarships, knowledge of college admissions process, three years of budget and finance experience, and knowledge of school improvement processes.

Send resume, sample of writing, and salary requirements to CTD4DeanChavers@aol.com.

Go online to nativetimes.com for more jobs! -New jobs posted throughout the week-

SERVICES

Native American Electrician

1st Call Electric

Reasonable Rates • At Cost Material

918-277-1610

Licensed • Insured • Bonded • OK#70011

Serving Northeast Oklahoma

Metal Roofing & Siding Professional Construction and Home Repairs

Free Estimates

Charles Snell 918-507-2902

Native American Contractor

Advanced Energy Solutions

(Heating & Air Conditioning)

Serving Oklahoma City and the surrounding area.

Service, repair and installation of all brands

* * American Standard Dealer * *

405-315-6116

Expert Owner Operation • You can relax when AES is on the job

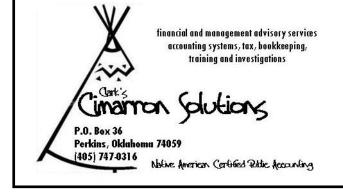

Call to reserve your brand today!

405-933-2474

702 E Central • Anadarko, Okla.

EVENTS

*Email your powwow or other event info to: Lisa@ nativetimes.com. Name, date, time, place and contact information is free.

EVERY WEDNESDAY Kiowa class beginning in February at 6:30 pm, Room TBA, Tulsa University. Info call Sarah, (918) 445-5213

EVERY THURSDAY The Otoe-Missouria Substance Abuse and Behavioral Health Programs sponsor an open group for families touched by addiction from noon to 1 p.m. at the Otoe-Missouria Health Building. This is a confidential group. Call 580-723-4466 x252 or x262 for more information.

SECOND TUESDAY Cherokee Artists Association expense of the program. meeting at 202 E. 5th Street Tahlequah, Okla. Info: (918) 458-0008 or www. cherokeeartistsassociation.

THIRD TUESDAY of even numbered months - The Central Oklahoma Cherokee The Native Nations Youth Alliance meets at Mayflower Council (NNYC) bimonthly UCC Church, Oklahoma City at 6 p.m. Phone: (405) 408-0763. The next meeting is Feb. 16.

FOURTH THURSDAY Each month the American Indian Chamber of Commerce of Oklahoma - Eastern Chapter hosts a monthly luncheon at Bacone FEBRUARY 3 College, Muskogee, Okla. 11:30 a.m. at Benjamin Wacoche Hall, Please RSVP one week ahead of time. Phone: (918) 230-3759

EVERY 2ND SATURDAY Indian Taco Sales - from 11-2:30pm at OK Choctaw Tribal Alliance, 5320 S. Youngs Blvd, Oklahoma City www.okchoctaws.org MON/WED AND THURS The Marble City Nutrition Center serves hot meals at the Marble City Community Center at 11:30 a.m. Meals are free to anyone over 50, but a small donation is suggested to help with the Gather for fellowship and friendship. Volunteers welcome. Marble City Nutrition Center, 711 N. Main, Marble City, Okla. Phone: (918) 775-2158

YOUTH COUNCIL meetings from 6:30pm - 8:30pm @ the Youth Services of Tulsa Activity Center (311 S. Madison - on 3rd just west of Peoria). Call to confirm location. Info Call: Chad Gilley (918) 382-2204 or nnyc@ihcrc.org

Indian Taco Sale 11:00 AM - 2:00 PM at Norman First

American UMC, 1950 East Beaumont Drive, Norman, Okla. Call Ahead for Speedy Service. Free Delivery on Orders of 10 or More (405) 321-5640

FEBRUARY 4 Birthday Dance for Richard D Roubedeaux at Otoe Cultrual Bldg, Red Rock Okla. Starts at 2:00 p.m. Supper at 5:00 p.m. More Gourd dancing after supper - if anyone wants to bring

FEBRUARY 4 Gourd Dance in memory of anything please bring covered dish.

Dorothy Heap-of-Birds at Clinton Fairgrounds (South on HWY 183), Clinton, Okla. Painting Ceremony 2:00 pm Gourd Dancing 3:00pm Supper 5:00pm. Contact for more info:Choya Hammond (580)309-1992 or Ruth Bearshield (580)303-8378

FEBRUARY 4 United Keetoowah Band Council Meeting at 10 a.m. in the Community Services Building, Tahlequah, Okla.

FEBRUARY 4 Norman First American UMC will be hosting Native Open Hand Games Southern Style, from 2 - 5 PM, at 1950 Beaumont Dr, Norman, Okla. Info call Alan Yeahquo, Coordinator (405) 321-5640. Lunch will be provide after games. Everyone Welcome

FEBRUARY 6 - MARCH 12 Free tobacco cessation course from 6 p.m. to 7 p.m. çççççWhitney Nuttle (918) 762-3873 or Suzy Knife Chief (918) 762-2153.

FEBRUARY 9 Blood drive hosted by Cherokee Nation in the Ballroom/Restaurant building, 9 am to 3:30 pm. Donors will receive an ice scraper, choice of t-shirt, free health screenings and Donor Rewards Points. Donors from 11:30 until the end of the drive will enjoy free pizza. For more info or to make an appointment, contact Oklahoma Blood Institute at 877-340-8777 or visit www.obi.org.

FEBRUARY 11 Freedmen History Program at the Martin Luther King

Center, 627 N 3rd Street, Muskogee Okla. at 1pm. Free and open to the general public. For more info call 918-683-2753, 405-227-9810 or visit www.

freedmen5tribes.com

February 16-18 Tulsa Indian Art Festival at the Glenpool Conference Center, HWY 75 and 121st Street. Entry forms at www. tulsaindianartfestival.com.

FEBRUARY 18 The Arrington - Mcspadden All Indian Rodeo Association will have their first rodeo of 2012 in Tahlequah Okla. For more info email dwrshirley@aol.com

FEBRUARY 22 & 29 Smoke-Free Homes workshops sponsored by Osage Nation and Native American M-Power from 10 a.m. until Noon. sponsored by Osage Nation and Native American M-Power, are held from 10 a.m. until noon. Info call Osage Nation Native American M-Power at (918) 287-5380.

FEBRUARY 25 3rd Annual Hoops Basketball Tournament - Men's 5 on 5 Basketball Entry Fee: $110 Deadline:

Feb. 22. Prizes: 1st place long sleeve shirts, 2nd place - t-shirts Contact: Cristine Hooper-Ben 918-316-1111

MARCH 2 Indian Taco Sale 11:00 AM

- 2:00 PM at Norman First American UMC, 1950 East Beaumont Drive, Norman, Okla. Call Ahead for Speedy Service. Free Delivery on Orders of 10 or More (405) 321-5640

MARCH 10 Red Earth Run, Regatta Park, Oklahoma City

MARCH 17 2011 OKC Princess Honor

Dance at Heart of Oklahoma Expo Center, 1700 W. Independence, Shawnee, OK. Info contact Shirley Wapskineh 405-632-5227 or swapskineh@sbcglobal.net

Miss Indian Oklahoma City

MARCH 23

Competition & Performance at 6:30 pm, 3801 SE 29th St. Del City, OK. Info contact Shirley Wapskineh 405-632-5227 or swapskineh@ sbcglobal.net

Tlingit artist using bulletproof material for weaving work

Teri Rofkar plans to draw on the tradition of robe-making for ceremonial use in Native American culture, by weaving modern composite materials into robes.

SHANNON HAUGLAND Daily Sitka Sentinel

SITKA, Alaska (AP) – Artist Teri Rofkar is going boldly into the future with new artwork that features modern materials and a political edge.

"It's not your grandfather's regalia," Rofkar said, with her customary sense of humor.

Creation of the two pieces for her "Tlingit Superman" series is being made possible with the help of a 2012 Creative Capital grant for visual artists, announced last week.

Rofkar was one of two dozen artists or art groups in the U.S. to receive the grant, and the first Alaskan chosen in the history of the program. The grant is worth about $90,000 over two years in funding and other assistance.

Creative Capital is known for giving a leg up to artists who push the envelope. A news release from the organization said the goal is to provide support for projects that are "singularly bold, innovative, genre stretching and of this moment; ideas of scope and ambition expressed through audacious combinations of form and content; varied projects that engage or even create new technologies and works that take traditional approaches into new carriers, teaching something new about the world and ourselves."

Rofkar's plans for projects that combine traditional weaving techniques with bulletproof material, and nano technology, definitely qualify in several of the categories.

Artist Teri Rofkar

Rofkar was pleased to receive the news about the grant, since she will be able to stretch her abilities and creativity, while combining her art with a political message.

"It's kind of fun; it's kind of exciting," she said.

Rofkar plans to draw on the tradition of robe-making for ceremonial use in Native American culture, by weaving modern composite materials into robes.

The first will be "Bulletproof Regalia," woven from Kevlar, which will symbolically address such issues as homeland security and the loss of land by tribes across the U.S.

Rofkar, who is Tlingit, loves the black and white poster of four Native Americans with rifles that says: "Homeland Security: Fighting Terrorism since 1492." She said she likes the idea of creating a traditional Tlingit robe that would offer protection in modern times, as a way of "integrating the homeland security concept."

The second piece, "Robe of Illumination," will be "programmable" with lights activated by sound or movement, and suitable for choreography rooted in – or new to – Native American ceremonial dancing. She said it will be light-sensitive and possibly woven out of optical fiber

"These are political," she said. "I guess art sometimes is that; sometimes it's history and sometimes it's political. ... I want something that's going to inspire younger people to get involved and have integrated technology with dance, song and regalia."

Rofkar said Native art is seen as traditional art, and most people have a preconceived notion of what "Native art looks like." She likes the idea of changing those prejudices and expectations.

"In a few hundred years, this will be traditional," she said. "(Art) is our written language. If that's the medium for the language, we have to start thinking about what's happening today, and using materials that are available now."

She said she doesn't know whether either piece will be "marketable," but the grant from Creative Capital takes the pressure off. She hopes to feature the Kevlar piece at an international wearable art show in New Zealand, and has to be ready for auditioning the piece in June 2013. She also plans to exhibit one or both at Celebration 2014 in Juneau.

Rofkar has been busy lately, working on a mountain goat robe featuring a double-helix design representing DNA strains of two distinct mountain goat populations on Baranof Island. In November, she lectured at Oxford University in England about the science embedded in the traditional methods of spruce root basketry.

Besides getting started on her "Tlingit Superman" series, Rofkar is looking ahead to June 2012, when she will host a group of visiting conservators from the National Museum of the American Indian from the Smithsonian Institution in Washington, D.C., who are interested in the spruce root baskets discovered in Southeast that are more than 5,000 years old.

In Sitka, Rofkar said she plans to pair up the conservators with kids from the Sitka School District and staff from the Sitka Native Education Program for a project. Sheldon Jackson Museum will host public presentations. In Juneau, the Washington, D.C., scholars will study the ancient baskets currently housed at the Alaska State Museum. The project is the kickoff event for the Sitka Fine Arts Camp "Our Town" program.

The mountain goat robe Rofkar is working on is the 15th she has created. The two "Tlingit Superman" robes will be numbers 16 and 17. She estimated that each robe takes about 2,000 hours to create, since she follows the traditional freehand weaving techniques from some 6,000 years ago.

Information provided by Creative Capital said that Rofkar's goal is "to continue broaden research and awareness about traditional Native American crafts by expanding the discourse to include new stories. By combining innovative materials and themes with traditional techniques, Rofkar reflects the expanded relationship of Native people to a more global community."

Rofkar's work is on display at the National Museum of the American Indian in Washington, D.C., and gives presentations nationally and internationally.

Arvel Bird pays tribute to RMS Titanic with new album

JODY ROBERTS

NASHVILLE, Tenn. - On the night of April 14, 1912, the passenger liner RMS Titanic struck an iceberg on her maiden voyage and sank on April 15, resulting in the deaths of 1,517 people, making it one of the deadliest peacetime maritime disasters in history. On the 100th anniversary of that tragic event, world renowned violinist Arvel Bird pays tribute to the "unsinkable" ship and honors the survivors and those lost in a powerful new album Titanic Centennial: Commemorative Special Edition. In Titanic Centennial, Bird has created an hour-long musical journey dedicated to the passengers, crew and musicians aboard RMS Titanic in April 1912.

Titanic Captain Edward Smith, the radiomen, bandleader Wallace Hartley and a host of others who sailed on that fateful voyage come to life in a powerful, musically cinematic and an emotionally riveting performance that will immerse the listener in the sights and sounds of the tragic events in the North Atlantic in 1912. The album features eight original compositions, including a beautifully haunting violin solo and soul-stirring "a cappella" vocal song, along with three popular previously released songs. The album includes a 20page booklet with factual stories and historic pictures of the people and the mighty ship Titanic. No doubt, this is Bird's finest work to date.

"Titanic is one of the most emotional albums I've ever recorded," said Arvel Bird. "I felt like an actor preparing for each new role with each composition I wrote. Bandleader Wallace Hartley and three band members, for example, continued playing and doing what they loved best until the very end, comforting the distraught passengers. I hope that I would have been that brave and done my best to keep the scared passengers calm, but no one knows for sure until they're in that situation. The music created an exciting range of emotions in me, and the studio musicians on the album experienced the same emotions in their performance of the scores."

Traditional songs that were performed on the Titanic, "Nearer My God to Thee" and "Songe D'Automne," are beautifully woven throughout the original arrangements "Adrift in the Dark" and "Over the Airwaves." In "Fire & Coal," the Celtic violin melody pounds out a swift, lilting beat, in rhythm with the speed and intensity with which the 177 firemen and stokers worked to shovel 630 tons of coal a day to keep Titanic moving at her optimum speed. "Over the Airwaves," begins with melodic Morse Code, recreating the frantic distress signals tapped by Marconi wireless operator Jack Phillips in attempt to summon help from passing ships.

This Collector's Item CD, on the Singing Wolf Records label, includes a 20page booklet of fascinating, factual stories and pictures to follow along on the voyage as the music unfolds. The booklet was developed by Pat Cummins, an authority on Titanic history and of the only known photos taken aboard Titanic by Father Francis Browne, who disembarked the Titanic in England, before it began crossing the Atlantic.love.

- For more on Arvel Bird, visit www.arvelbird.com.

NAVAJO

Continued from Page

The film, shot mostly around To' hajiilee, is in the final stages of the editing process for yet another evaluative go-round at Park City.

"We began production in late

August through October of 2011," Emerson said. "Since everyone on the cast is under 12 years old, we had to work around schedules, during weekends and when we could get our lead actress (Magdalena Begay) into town from Flagstaff, Ariz. The production was spread out over three months, was plagued with unpredictable weather and was very challenging in just about every aspect. But we had a great cast and crew that helped us battle through it all – and we got it done on the first week of October, right before the first big winter storm."

Emerson, along with her husband Kelly Byars, runs an Albuquerque production company called Reel Indian Pictures. Byars, 48, is an actor, educator and film producer. The company makes films and sponsors film programs for young adult filmmakers. Emerson explains that officials at Sundance's Native Film Program were the first to see "Opal," after which it got passed on to the shorts jurors. The Native Film Program scouts Native American artists, taking them through the mechanisms of support at the bigger Sundance Institute to get their work made and shown.

"Yes, Ramona Emerson's film is still technically a part of Sundance," N. Bird Runningwater, who oversees the Native program, said. "I would say it's in the process of development. The institute continues to work with (Emerson)."

Emerson, 38, said she's eager to enter "Opal" again at Sundance come 2013. She said she's also considering putting it up for Sundance's

Ramona Emerson

Screenwriting Labs - if not this year, then

"I also continue my work with the Milagros at Los Luceros writers program, which is part of (Sundance founder) Robert Redford's new program up in northern New Mexico," she said.

The film festivals where Emerson's films – "The Back Road" (2000), "The Last Trek" (2006) and "The Return Home" (2008) – have been shown include: ImagineNative in Canada, the Native American Film and Video Festival in New York City, and the American Indian Film Festival in San Francisco.

"I knew at a very young age that I wanted to make films and somehow I have managed to keep at it for many years. The ability to transfer those early memories on the reservation of going to the movies with my grandmother, to the actual reality of making films, has been a dream come true," she said. "'Opal' is a reflection of that and of the personal stories I love to tell. My hope is to create a story that reflects a very true representation of what it's like to grow up on the Navajo Nation, but more importantly, questions the roles of women and girls both on and off the reservation."

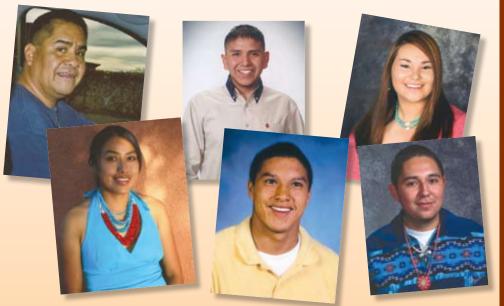

Besides readying "Opal" for entry into the 2013 Sundance Film Festival, Emerson said she's working on finishing a documentary entitled "Hidden Talents," about Navajo painter James Woolenshirt King, of Shiprock, N.M.

MORE JOBS, MORE NEWS, MORE EVENTS.
VISIT ONLINE AT WWW.NATIVETIMES.COM

College Scholarships

American Indian, Alaska Native & Native Hawaiian Students

$450,000+ awarded each year! All Undergraduate Majors Are Eligible. Graduate Scholarships Available.

Applications Due April 4th!

Download Application: aiefprograms.org

American Indian Education Foundation 2401 Eglin Street • Rapid City, SD 57703 (605) 342-9968

More than pretty things

Artist makes critical statement with beadwork

KAREN SHADE

Native American Times

TULSA, Okla. - Native beadwork artists are proud of their skills when dancers wear their work at powwows. Molly Murphy Adams knows the feeling, but you're more likely to see her craft in an art gallery.

The Tulsa bead worker from Montana is finishing details of a new piece to be included in a group art show featuring artists connected to Oklahoma. H2OK: Native Response to the Water Issues in Oklahoma opens at Mainsite Contemporary Art, 122 E. Main St., Norman, on March 10.

The piece, titled Water Serpent, is different for even this contemporary artist, who uses the traditional craft to make statements on the world Indian people face today. She is anxious to show it with the other works.

"Sometimes artwork can be a little egotistical. You're always talking about yourself and your ideas and there's not as much opportunity to say, 'Well I'm interested in art, not just because I want to make art, but because there's amazing artwork out there," Murphy Adams said. "I'm interested in all of it."

Her interest likely began with her mother, Laurie Tynes of White Fish, Montana. Tynes, part Oglala Lakota, was born on the Pine Ridge Reservation in South Dakota. After moving to Great Falls, Montana, as a child, she quickly connected with the Cree people living at the nearby Hill 57, an acreage of land where a band of thenlandless Cree settled after having obtained squatter's rights to be there.

After Murphy Adams was born, Tynes began beading with a Cree woman named Ruby StiffArm. StiffArm helped single mothers learn as they waited for their children's headstart lessons to finish each day.

Adams recalls the "guild mentality" prevalent among those who beaded in that day.

"In any traditional skill - whether it's singing or drumming or beadwork or ceremonies - sometimes the person who teaches you has the right to put restrictions on how you use that skill because you have a community role when you learn that skill," Murphy Adams said.

StiffArm forbade anyone she taught to bead images. The teacher felt that she and her own sister had been restricted from creating anything but abstract patterns and floral designs. That belief was reinforced when StiffArm's sister lost her sight soon after making a buckle with an eagle Tynes did not impart restrictions on her daughter. Around the time that she began beading full dance regalia, Murphy Adams became interested, too. Her first project was beading three straight lines on a keychain fob. It was an exercise in patience and the first of many lessons she would learn.

"You weren't allowed to have materials until you could prove that you weren't going to waste them, and you weren't allowed to make your own stuff until you could prove that you were willing to iust do the background work," she said. "Most people who say they want to learn how to bead ... have no idea how much time and patience and sometimes just drudgery that goes into making the pattern, getting the beads, endlessly threading needles and just filling in background."

"Very little of it is that fun part where you make all the colors come together," she said. "The rest of it is sewing, doing the edge work, making sure it's strong and tying off your knots."

Soon, Murphy Adams began beading images. Later, she earned a Bachelor's in Fine Arts from the University of Montana. It wasn't until after she finished school that she stepped beyond her known boundaries. Murphy Adams began making beadwork projects that didn't fit the criteria she had used before. Her work was not made just for powwows, ceremonies or as family heirlooms. Neither was it functional. She also began using untraditional

"And then I really wondered, 'Does this cross the line and become something that doesn't relate to my culture anymore?' Because beadwork has to function. It's not just a picture to go on the wall. That would be a white way of making art. The Native way is to make something that has function," she said.

Gradually the work began to make statements about Indian peoples' lives, such as the triple-extra large T-shirts she beaded to look like warrior shirts reading "Rez Ball Legend" and other praises of Indians' "natural athleticism" made obsolete by rampant obesity and diabetes rates among tribal people.

They went on exhibit, and she expected outrage, but it never came.

"It was scary to put it out there and say, 'I'm going to use beadwork to be critical of my own people, to use something traditional and positive to say something critical, but I never did get a backlash so I felt a little more free to use it and make artistic messages and not just to make pretty things for people to wear," she said.

For H2OK, her water serpent will draw on the myth of the creature's descent into the three levels of the world to reflect the water cycle. She's already exhibited work based on plant cells - a logical step for a former pre-med major.

"I'm a total nerd, and I like doing this just for its own sake," she said. "I would bead anything."

H2OK runs through March 10 in Norman before moving to Bacone College's McCombs Hall Art Building in Muskogee from April 6-May 13. For more, go to www.ahalenia. com/h2ok.

For more about the Molly Murphy Adams, visit online at www.mollymurphybead.com.

KAREN SHADE / NATIVE TIMES PHOTOS

Molly Murphy Adams puts the finishing touches on some pieces last week in her Tulsa

Three Dog Night

Saturday, February 11 • 7 pm Tickets are $25

Osage Event Center • Tulsa

COMING SOON!

Glen Campbell The Goodbye Tour With Special Guest Instant People

Tuesday, March 27 • 7 pm Tickets are $35

Ticket Info

Order your Event Center tickets at osagecasinos.com!

Visit the Osage Box Office in Tulsa or call (918) 699-7667. Cash and all major credit cards accepted. Must be 18 to attend. No refunds or exchanges.

End of Tisdale Parkway near Downtown Tulsa.

osagecasinos.com (918) 699-7777 | f Find us on Facebook!

Tulsa Bartlesville Sand Springs Ponca City Skiatook Hominy Pawhuska

©2012 Osage Casino. Management reserves all rights.

- Leader says casino could help tribe
- Haskell teams with EPA on program
- Woman makes charity runs for 'the rez'

TODAY'S INDEPENDENT INDIAN NEWS

- A FREE PUBLICATION -

WWW.NATIVETIMES.COM

NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES

VOLUME 18 + ISSUE 6

PUBLISHED WEEKLY

FEBRUARY 10, 2012

Cobell Class Members question settlement, attorney conduct

■ Attorneys released names, addresses and phone numbers of the four case appellants in an email to the public and media Jan. 20

DANA ATTOCKNIE

Native American Times

WASHINGTON – Class Counsel for the Cobell v. Salazar class action lawsuit sent out a letter Jan. 20 to Class Members throughout Indian Country explaining the reason for the delay in their monetary payment rests with four Class Members who are appealing the settlement.

"What they did by sending out this letter is very, very unethical," Mary Lee Johns, Cheyenne River Sioux/Lakota, said. "They sent out this email to all the individuals and listed our names, addresses and telephone numbers. One of the individuals that appealed is getting death threats and now they got her address. This is not the way to conduct business in Indian Country."

Johns is appealing the settlement along with Carol Eve Good Bear, Fort Berthold Reservation, and Charles Colombe, Rosebud Sioux. They are represented by David Harrison, an attorney based out of Albuquerque, N.M. They are in the early stages of their brief, which is due to be filed in March with oral argument set for May 15.

Harrison said the suggestion in the letter, dispersed by the plaintiff's counsel, that the appellants don't believe fellow Class Members are entitled to relief or payment from their trust funds is not true.

"It's not that they're just trying to make sure that nobody's paid; they're trying to make sure that this deal is legal," Harrison said.

AP FILE PHOTO / GERALD HERBE

This Dec. 8, 2009, file photo shows Elouise Cobell, center, posing for a photo with her legal team in the law offices of Kilpatrick & Stockton in Washington. From left are Bill Dorris, Cobell, Keith Harper, Dennis Gingold and Geoffrey Rempel, the attorneys involved in a class-action lawsuit by American Indian land trustees against the U.S. government over the alleged mismanagement of Native American land royalties.

Another appeal is from Class Member Kimberly Craven, Sissten-Wahpeton Oyate, who is represented by Ted Frank, an attorney with the non-profit Center for Class Action Fairness located in Washington, D.C. The Craven brief was complete Jan. 6 and

See COBELL Continued on Page 4

Casino tribes culling citizenship, cutting scores from profit shares

■ Other tribal citizens have had their benefits suspended through banishment.

SUDHIN THANAWALA
Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) – Two casinoowning tribes in California have thinned their membership ranks over the last several months, cutting off scores of people from a share of casino profits and other benefits of tribal membership.

Officials with The Picayune Rancheria of the Chukchansi Indians and the Pala Band of Mission Indians say the former members' ancestral blood lines disqualified them.

Critics, however, have a different explanation: greed.

They accuse tribal officials of trying to increase their share of profits from their casinos, a charge that tribal officials vehemently deny.

 $Many\,expulsions\,have\,occurred\,around$ the country, but they are particularly numerous in California, where many tribes reconstituted over the last several decades then entered the casino business, advocates say.

Exact expulsion figures are hard to come by, but Laura Wass, Central California director for the American Indian Movement, estimates that about 2,500 tribal members have been purged since 1997, most in California.

The Chukchansi, owners of the Chukchansi Gold Resort and Casino in the Sierra foothills near Yosemite National Park, have expelled dozens of members since around November. The Pala Band of Mission Indians in northern San Diego County – owners of the Pala Resort and Casino – expelled more than 150 people on Feb. 1.

Still other tribal citizens have had their benefits suspended through banishment – the fate recently of several members of the United Auburn Indian Community, operator of the Thunder Valley Casino Resort outside Sacramento.

Expelled and banished tribal members can be cut off from thousands of dollars in monthly stipends and other benefits. With the tribes claiming sovereign status, experts say these people have little recourse to challenge tribes' enrollment decisions in courts

"Native people to this day have no voice," Wass said. "We can't go anywhere with this to get human rights or civil rights upheld."

Nancy Dondero, 58, said she lost a $1,000-a-month stipend and her daughter, Nikah, stopped receiving college funding and had to drop out of California State University, Fresno when she and her family were removed from the Chukchansi tribe in November.

"I know who I am," Dondero said. "I know who my dad is. I will always be Chukchansi."

Dondero traces her heritage back to her great grandfather, Jack Roan. Tribal officials say a 1929 application with the state and Roan's own will list him as

See PROFIT Continued on Page 3

Interior seeks comments on Cobell Land draft plan

NEDRA DARLING Bureau of Indian Affairs News Release

WASHINGTON - The Department of the Interior today announced important steps in the ongoing commitment to fulfilling this nation's trust responsibilities to Native Americans. Today, Interior announced the publication of a draft plan and a request for comment on implementing the potential Cobell Land Consolidation Program. Additionally, Interior announced that the first meeting of the Commission established to undertake a forward-looking, comprehensive evaluation of Interior's trust management of Native American trust funds is set for the first week of March.

"Interior's continued rapport and outreach

U.S. Interior Department

through consultations with Indian Country are crucial components to accomplishing truly open government-to-government communication," said Deputy Secretary of the Interior David J. Hayes. "We are thankful for the participation of all of the tribal leaders as we continue to move forward with this landmark program in a

See INTERIOR Continued on Page 4

PHOTO COURTESY COMANCHE NATIONAL MUSEUM Josephine Myers-Wapp turns 100-years-old Feb. 10, 2012.

Oldest living Comanche elder hits the century mark, celebrates

Family, friends, and former students all invited to celebrate Josephine Myers-Wapp's 100th birthday

CANDY MORGAN

LAWTON, Okla. – When Josephine Myers-Wapp was born in Apache, Okla., on Feb. 10, 1912, the Sooner State was just four-years-old. One hundred years later, family and friends will gather to celebrate the life of this accomplished artist and beloved teacher. A very special birthday gathering is being held at the Comanche Nation Elderly Center Feb. 10 at 3:00 p.m. A special invitation is being extended to Wapp's family, friends and to her former Indian school students. The center is located at 1107 SW H Avenue in Lawton.

Wapp, an enrolled citizen of the Comanche Nation of Oklahoma, grew up on her parents' ranch south of Apache. She attended school at St. Patrick's Mission in Anadarko and continued her education at Haskell University in Lawrence, Kansas. The turning point in her life came when the Bureau of Indian Affairs established an art education program at the Santa Fe Indian School, in Santa Fe, New Mexico. Under the Indian Reorganization Act of 1934, a curriculum was designed to educate American Indians as art teachers and place them in American Indian boarding schools.

Wapp entered the program, choosing fiber and traditional arts as her major areas of study.

After completing her education, she taught arts and crafts at Chilocco (Oklahoma) Indian School. In 1963, she joined the faculty at the Institute of American Indian Arts (IAIA) in Santa Fe, where she taught American Indian traditional arts and culture.

Wapp was involved in all aspects of arts including Native dance. She helped coordinate a dance exhibition at the 1968 Summer Olympic Games in Mexico City featuring IAIA students.

She retired from teaching in 1973 to focus on creating traditional and contemporary finger weaving. Her creative work has been exhibited throughout the United States, Canada, Europe, South America and the Middle East. She has received many awards for her artwork and teaching and has influenced thousands of people with her extraordinary talent.

Historical Facts:

- · William Howard Taft was president the year Mrs. Wapp was born.
- ·18 U.S. Presidents have taken office in her lifetime.· She lived through the
- · She lived through the Great Depression and the Oklahoma Dust Bowl of 1930.
- · The United States has participated in 7 wars since she was born.

Interior releases $1.9B plan to buy Indian land

MATT VOLZ Associated Press

HELENA, Montana (AP) -Federal officials released their proposal Feb. 2 on how they plan to spend up to $1.9 billion to buy up Native Americanowned fractionated lands and turn them over to tribes.

The program is a major part of the $3.4 billion settlement of a class-action lawsuit brought by the late Elouise Cobell of Browning, Montana, over American Indian land royalties mismanaged by the government for more than a century.

The program aims to reduce the number of fractionated lands within 10 years by prioritizing tracts with the most individual owners, finding landowners willing to sell and targeting land that can be bought with little preparatory work and where controlling interest can be gained quickly. The program is for voluntary for people willing to sell their individual allotments.

Land fractionation was caused by the 1887 Dawes Act, which split tribal lands into individual allotments often inherited by multiple heirs with each passing generation. In some places, individual allotments now have dozens to more than 1,000 individual owners.

The Interior Department has identified 88,638 fractionated land tracts owned by nearly 2.8 million people.

John Dossett, the general counsel for the Native Congress of American Indians, said the draft proposal appears to address most of the tribes' major concerns. Of particular importance was that the tribes be involved in implementing and administering the land consolidation program through cooperative agreements, which addressed in the draft plan.

There is still room for discussion in other areas. such as how the lands are to be appraised and whether the Interior Department should place liens on the acquired land, but it appears the government is making good on its pledge to have an open discussion, Dossett said.

"It's a problem that has been sitting around for a hundred years or more," he said. "I think tribes are really interested in doing this right. You don't get a do-over on $1.9 billion."

Out of the $1.9 billion allotted the program through the Cobell settlement, only 15 percent, or $285 million, can be used for administrative costs. Another $60 million will be used for scholarships for Native American students.

The draft plan was compiled after a series of meetings last summer and fall with tribal representatives in Montana, Minnesota, Washington, New Mexico, Arizona, Oklahoma and South Dakota.

The proposal is open to public comment for the next 45 days. The Cobell settlement is still being appealed, and the land consolidation plan won't be implemented until those appeals have run their course.

Under the settlement, another $1.4 billion would go to compensate individual Native American account holders. The settlement is being challenged by four people in separate appeals.

Their issues with the settlement include claims that it did not achieve the lawsuit's goal of accounting for how much money actually went missing from those land trust accounts and that the tribes should have been involved in the lawsuit from the beginning.

Cobell died in October, just months after the settlement was approved by federal judge in Washington, D.C.

Okla. Gov. asks tribes to drop water rights suit

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) - Gov. Mary Fallin wants two tribal leaders to dismiss their lawsuit against the state over tribal water rights in southeastern Oklahoma.

Fallin sent a letter Feb. 2 to Chief Greg Pyle of the Choctaw Nation and Gov. Bill Anoatubby of the Chickasaw Nation. Fallin asks them to dismiss their federal lawsuit and allow an ongoing mediation process to resolve disputes between the state and the tribes.

In exchange, Fallin says the state will not file a separate state court action to determine the extent of tribal water rights in their historic territories.

The tribes said in statement they hope a resolution can be reached at

The lawsuit asks a federal judge stop the state's plan to sell water storage rights to Sardis Lake to Oklahoma City.

Kialegee leader says casino would help tribe

Opponents say the casino will sit too close to a vocational-technology campus, a proposed daycare center and a church.

WETUMKA, Okla. (AP) - The head of a branch of the Muscogee Creek Nation says his tribe has jurisdiction over land in Broken Arrow where a proposed casino is to Kialegee Tribal Town King Tiger Hobia told the Tulsa World the Red Clay Casino is an economic opportunity that would mean more self-sufficiency for the tribe and less reliance on the federal government.

The Creek Nation was once a confederacy of about 44 tribal towns that were eventually removed from their homelands in what is now Alabama and Georgia. Tribal town members also are members of the Muscogee Nation.

Opponents have criticized the proposed venue, saying it will sit too close to a vocational-technology campus, a proposed daycare center and a church. Sen. Tom Coburn and Rep. John Sullivan have sent letters expressing residents' concerns to the National Indian Gaming Commission, which must approve the gaming license.

Commission members have said they haven't yet approved a gaming license for the site. The landowners, two Creek members, are leasing the property to the tribal town, which is subleasing it to a development company.

Kialegee Tribal Town, which has about 400 members, is one of dozens of tribal towns that made up the Muscogee Creek Nation when members lived in the southeastern United States.

The Kialegees have their own housing program and a contract with the Department of Human Services for its Temporary Assistance for Needy Families program. The Creek Nation has a food distribution center in Wetumka and last year opened its Southern Regional Offices in Wetumka.

Kialegee Tribal Town, which has about 400 members, is one of dozens of tribal towns that made up the Muscogee Creek Nation when the tribe lived in their southeastern homelands.

Hobia's sister, Mary Givens, previously served as a "town king."

"The funding we receive isn't enough for the things we would like to do for education, housing and health," she said.

The Alabama-Quassarte Tribal Town, of similar size to the Kialegee, operates the Red Hawk Gaming Center in Wetumka within the same structure as the U.S. Post Office.

The Thlopthlocco Tribal Town has the Golden Pony Casino on Interstate 40 near Clearview.

for ourselves. for our families. for future generations.

Oklahoma ranks 48th nationally for health. That is unacceptable. We can no longer sit idle when our health hangs in the balance.

There is a plan to create healthier lives for all Oklahomans - the Oklahoma Health Improvement Plan. Endorsed by the legislature, this plan outlines a clear path of action to save lives and improve our health. Join us by supporting:

- Restore the rights of local communities to pass smokefree policies that are stronger than state law
- Assure health education is taught in sixth, seventh or eighth grade for all state public schools
- Prohibit the use of a hand-held electronic device while driving for all drivers under the age of 18

Let's pull together to Shape Our Future. Your state is counting on you.

Find out more at ShapeOurFutureOK.com

THE JOURNAL RECORD

get lean tulsa

CITIES AROUND US HAVE CLEAN INDOOR AIR.

It's time we catch up. Oklahoma communities are great places to live and should have every chance to compete for regional jobs. Oklahoma communities should have the right to choose to have clean indoor air in public places and workplaces.

Clean indoor air... It's good for health and great for business.

TOBACCO STOPS WITH ME.

StopsWithMe.com

Task force eyes rural, tribal exposure to violence

SUSAN MONTOYA BRYAN Associated Press

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) – The epidemic of children being exposed to violence in communities across the nation will have to become more of a public discussion before the cycle can end, members of a national task force assembled by U.S. Attorney General Eric Holder said Tuesday.

The National Task Force on Children Exposed to Violence held its second public meeting in Albuquerque to gather testimony from victims and experts on violence in rural and Native-American communities – two areas often plagued by higher incidents of poverty and child abuse but with fewer options for help.

Robert Listenbee Jr., cochair of the 13-member task force, ticked off a list of statistics that painted a grim picture of the challenges facing those communities.

Native Americans and Alaska Natives have the highest poverty rate of any racial group in the nation, he said. They also have a higher rate of gang involvement than Latinos and African-American youth, and suicide ranks among the leading causes of death for young Native boys.

"These facts are staggering," Listenbee told the crowd. "But perhaps even more alarming is the difficulty many children and families face in getting help."

The isolation of tribal and rural communities complicates matters. Victims of domestic violence and clergy sex abuse testified about having nowhere to turn for help and the difficulties of finding help outside their communities.

Elsie Boudreau of the Alaska Native Justice Center said there are no roads in or out of some of Alaska's Native communities and a $600 plane ticket to the nearest city is out of reach for many.

In New Mexico, many reservations are far from population centers, and public transportation doesn't exist.

Another challenge is the private nature of domestic violence. Experts and task force members said it's a difficult conversation to have when victims – and even community leaders – are not willing to talk about the problem.

"We address drug and alcohol abuse, domestic violence, all of these things, but we never look at the impacts on our children," said Gil Vigil, a former governor of Tesuque Pueblo who testified Thursday. "We address symptoms but never the whole problem. That's what we're trying to do here."

The task force will be hosting additional hearings in Miami and Detroit later this year. In December, it plans to issue a final report to Holder that will include policy recommendations and a national blueprint for preventing and reducing the negative effects of children being exposed to violence.

That blueprint won't be based on just one recipe, said U.S. Attorney Kenneth Gonzales of New Mexico. He said the needs of children and their families can be drastically different depending on whether they are Native American or Alaska Native, from a rural area in middle America or from the big city.

Despite the differences, Gonzales said the lasting effects of being exposed to violence can lead to similar results, with children acting out and getting tangled up in the justice system. Finding a solution could help keep children from becoming defendants in the future, he said.

Joe Torre, former New York Yankees manager and cochair of the task force, shared his own story. His father abused his mother, but it was never talked about. It was only decades later that he came to understand the implications.

"The lasting effects were feelings of fear and embarrassment, and I thought I was the only one who felt this way, that there was something wrong with me," Torre said. "The feelings of inadequacy that I was experiencing were really tied to what went on in my home during my childhood."

Torre acknowledged that limiting children's exposure to violence, whether it be on a reservation or elsewhere, won't be easy.

"You have to take baby steps and start making inroads and getting some tools to work with," he said. "Then down the road, we anticipate that we can make a big impression. It's not going to be easy and it's not going to be quick."

PROFIT

Continued from Page 1

For those who have been disenrolled or banished, fighting the tribe can be nearly impossible, said David Wilkins, a professor of American Indian Studies.

Pohoneechee, a Miwok band.
But Dondero said her great grandfather didn't understand English, so someone else may have filled out the forms and inserted the wrong tribal affiliation. He was allotted land as a Chukchansi, she said.

Ricginda Dryer, 50, another Chukchansi member, said she received a letter from the tribe last month informing her that she had been expelled. Tribal officials said she failed to petition to be a member after the tribe was reconstituted in the 1980s, according to Dryer.

"They're trying to lower the numbers down to be exclusively a couple of families, so they can make as much money as possible a month," she said.

But Rob Rosette, an attorney for the Chukchansi, said the expulsions have nothing to do with casino profits. The remaining tribal members will only see an approximate $25 increase in their monthly checks, he said.

"It's painful, it's not easy," he said of the removals. "But these leaders are doing their jobs. They are elected to office to follow the tribe's Constitution and laws."

For those who have been disenrolled or banished, fighting the tribe can be nearly impossible, said David Wilkins, a professor of American Indian Studies at the University of Minnesota and a Lumbee tribe citizen.

When tribes do have their own judicial branches, Wilkins said they tend not to be independent from political influence. And the federal Bureau of Indian Affairs has largely stayed out of enrollment decisions since a 1978 U.S. Supreme Court decision affirmed tribal sovereignty in citizenship decisions.

"They have no recourse in either tribal proceedings or federal court proceedings," he said. "They're in a legal wonderland."

Jessica Tavares, 62, said she and several other United Auburn members were recently banned from tribal lands and had their per capita payments suspended just for speaking out against the tribal council.

Tavares and the other suspended citizens were involved in a petition to recall the council, accusing it, among other things, of denying funding for tribal schools and pledging $1 million to the Sacramento Kings basketball team without proper consultation.

Now, Tavares cannot set foot on tribal land for 10 years and won't receive per-capita payments for four years.

"This banishment means a lot because some of those properties we played on as kids," said Tavares, a former tribal chairwoman. "That's a piece of me."

In a Nov. 29 letter explaining their decision, the tribal council said Tavares was not suspended for the petition itself, but defamatory statements that violated tribal law. The tribe has maintained its commitment to tribal schools and did not need the entire tribe's approval for the casino advertising commitment to the Kings, the council said.

Tribe spokesman Doug Elmets declined comment, saying the suspensions were an "internal tribal matter."

Elmets, who also represents the Pala tribe in San Diego County, said expulsions there had nothing to do with casino profits and noted disputes over tribal citizenship have been going on since the late 1980s, well before the tribe even thought of a casino.

But Fred Hiestand, Tavares's attorney, said his client's free speech was violated.

"The irony here is we spend trillions of dollars trying to export our Bill of Rights to other countries," he said. "But in our own country we have these pockets of despotism that we allow to exist under the guise of sovereign immunity."

NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES

Publisher & Editor
LISA SNELL
editor@nativetimes.com

Contributing Writers
DANA ATTOCKNIE
WESLEY MAHAN
KAREN SHADE

Advising Sales
KATHLEEN ROBERTSON
LISA SNELL
ROB WALTON
advertising@nativetimes.com

Distribution
SHELBY HICKS
STEVE LACY
WESLEY MAHAN
MICHAEL MARRIS
KATHLEEN ROBERTSON
BRENDA SLAUGHTER

The Native American Times, formerly the Oklahoma Indian Times, is published weekly (except the last week of the year) by Lisa Hicks Snell. Mailing address is PO Box 411 Tahlequah, OK 74465. All the contents within the Native American Times are copyrighted material. Any reproduction, redistribution without the written consent of the NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES is strictly prohibited.

Each week's issue is available for free download online at: www.nativetimes.com

Subscription rates: $65.00 for fifty-two issues, $32.50 for twenty-six issues, or $16.25 for thirteen issues. A single copy is $1.25 (Rates are for postage and handling) Send check or money order to:

NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES Attn: Subscriptions P.O. Box 411 Tahlequah, OK 74465-0411

Phone: (918) 708-5838 Fax: (888) 689-4873

Postmaster: Send Change of Address Form 579 to: NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES P.O. Box 411, Tahlequah, OK 74465

WWW.NATIVETIMES.COM - News from the crossroads of Indian Country -

Native American hiring preference?

Advertise to Native Americans!
FREE ONLINE with PRINT BUY
E-mail your ad for a quote to
lisa@nativetimes.com

We proudly offer an array of services, from general dentistry to sedation, dental implants, and cosmetic dentistry - all designed expressly to meet our patient's changing needs. With four general dentists and four hygienists, we can maintain your oral health for a lifetime all at one location.

We Accept Contract Health & Sooner Care

We serve patients in the Drumright, Cushing, Stillwater, Stroud, Ponca City, and surrounding areas with personalized service and exemplary care. Call for your appointment today.

918-352-3312 or Toll Free 877-RH Melton drumrightdentalcenter.com

	yk propa
Cylinders RV_Motor Homes Motor Fuels Residential Commercial	Service Area:  Blackwell  Raiston  Yost	Toll Free: 855, 723, 4433 Phone: 580, 723, 4433 PKpropane.com
NOW	GY UN WIM PKI

NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES

Name:
Address:
City:	State: Zip:
Phone:
	s 3 $32.50 for 26 issues

Mail this form with a check or money order to: Native American Times • P.O. Box 411 Tahlequah, OK 74465 • 918-708-5838

Kaw company completes renewable energy project

PONCA CITY, Okla. - In the first joint project of its kind in north central Oklahoma, Southwind Energy, an enterprise of the Kaw Nation partnered with Pioneer Technology Center, and Ponca City Energy to assemble and install a wind and solar lighting unit in Ponca City.

Career tech students and instructors received hands experience assembling and wiring the turbine and solar panels. Students were enthusiastic about the experience of participating in a green energy project.

Ponca City Energy supervisors and crews assisted with technical and foundation advice, raising and setting the hybrid unit.

Luttrell, Southwind Energy spokesperson said "the Kaw Enterprise Development Authority has been excited to work with these students from career tech and with Ponca City Energy to bring innovative alternative energy technology to the area. The Kaw Nation, known as The Wind People has a long heritage and relationship with the south wind and a commitment to renewable green energy."

Southwind Energy is a distributor and installer of wind and solar hybrid lighting. Cost effective and easy to install the devices provide strong, bright lighting for large parking lots such as shopping, medical and corporate centers. Streets, sidewalks, bike paths, security, farm and ranch lighting are all perfectly suited for their application.

Businesses interested in lowering energy costs, reducing their carbon footprint and pollution find hybrid lighting products as a viable economical option.

Designed to operate with no line voltage, trenching or metering the units offer significant benefits over traditional grid based electrical lighting reducing pollution, power consumption and carbon dioxide emissions. The LED lighting should last 100,000 hours compared to conventional lights 10,000 hour life with substantial energy savings. Turbines and solar panels have a life expectancy of 20-25 years with virtually no maintenance. There is a substantial cost savings over five years compared to usual systems. .

Southwinds upcoming projects include career tech involvement in a vertical axis wind turbine generator assembly and the installation of a lighting unit at the Kaw Nation tribal complex in Kaw City illuminating the Warrior and Horse statue.

David Myers, Ponca City Development Executive wrote about the project in his weekly update. "Our friends at the Kaw Enterprise Development Authority have themselves a wind and solar dual energy generator for their newest public lighting project. The Sepstar Hybrid system is a customized stand alone, self-sufficient clean energy power source that can generate electricity through both solar and wind resources and store it off the utility grid in high performance batteries." "The unit installed by KEDA uses a 400 watt wind turbine and two 75 watt solar panels to power the lighting and store the excess energy. The light created by the high efficiency low voltage LED unit is impressive. Congratulations on their sustainability efforts."

INTERIOR

manner that incorporates tribal priorities and promotes tribal participation in reducing land fractionation in a timely and efficient

The Cobell Land Consolidation Program will not be implemented until all court approvals are final; however, Interior has prepared the draft plan to continue the tribal consultation on the development of the program. In May, 2011, the District Court allowed representatives of the United States to communicate with Cobell class regarding to the land consolidation component of the settlement. Since then, Interior has conducted seven regional government-to-government tribal consultations on the issues.

In accordance with the $3.4 billion Cobell Settlement, a $1.9 billion land consolidation fund is to be used to purchase fractionated interests in trust from willing sellers to benefit tribal communities and aid in land consolidation. Up to $60 million of the $1.9 billion will be set aside to provide scholarships for post secondary higher education and vocational training for American Indians and Alaska Natives.

Last week's publication in the Federal Register opens a 45-day comment period on the draft implementation plan that seeks to remedy the proliferation of thousands of new trust accounts caused by the increasing subdivision or "fractionation" of trust and restricted fee land interests through succeeding generations. The draft implementation plan proposes a voluntary buy-back and consolidation of fractionated trust and restricted fee land interests that would occur over a 10-year period after the Cobell Settlement becomes final.

Deputy Secretary Hayes also announced that the first meeting of the National Commission on Indian Trust Administration and Reform is scheduled for March 1-2, 2012 in at the Interior Department in Washington, D.C. The March meeting will mark the first time the five recently-named members of the Commission will meet to move forward on their comprehensive evaluation of Interior's management and administration of the trust assets, as well as recommendations for improvement.

"Building upon the progress made with the historic Cobell Settlement, this commission will help usher in a new era of trust administration," added Hayes. "Our trust administration must be more transparent, responsive, customer-friendly accountable in managing these substantial funds and assets."

More information on the Cobell Trust Land Consolidation Program can be found at: www. doi.gov/cobell.

Tribe teams with lab on energy policy

FELICIA FONSECA

Associated Press

FLAGSTAFF, Ariz. (AP) - One of the country's largest American Indian tribes has partnered with a national laboratory to study what technologies would be best for developing natural resources on the vast reservation.

The Navajo Nation has large deposits of coal and uranium, along with potential for wind and solar energy, but it hasn't historically been a major player in developing those resources. The tribe signed a three-year agreement with Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory on Wednesday to look into carbon capture and sequestration, clean coal technology and renewable energy, among other things.

Navajo President Ben Shelly said the expertise of leading scientists and engineers will lead to better investments for the tribe.

"With the lab's help, we will have a better picture of what technologies are best for our resources and nation," Shelly said in a prepared speech. "This assistance will carry us for many generations and position our nation to compete with the rest of the world."

Under the agreement, the tribe and the laboratory also could look into power plant design and siting, combustion and geothermal technologies and energy security. The agreement comes as the Navajo Nation is revising its energy policy and considering whether to adopt renewable energy standards.

Lawrence Livermore, along with Los Alamos and Sandia national laboratories in New Mexico, is part of team that is laying the groundwork to provide long-term technical assistance to tribes on energy development and resource management. American Indian tribes own about 15 percent of the country's natural resources, according to Lawrence Livermore.

Navajo officials visited the Livermore, Calif.-based lab last July to discuss a formal partnership. It was signed in the tribal capital of Window Rock - the only such agreement the lab has reached with an American Indian tribe, said Lawrence Livermore spokeswoman Linda Lucchetti.

The Navajo Nation has long depended on revenue from coal mining, oil and gas, and lease payments to support its general fund. But tribal officials know those revenue sources could dry up and always are looking for ways to guarantee funding for future generations and to boost the tribal economy, where unemployment hovers around 50 percent.

The advantage for the Navajo Nation, which reaches into parts of New Mexico, Arizona and Utah, is its land base. At 27,000 square miles, the reservation is larger than that of any other American Indian tribe and is about the size of West Virginia.

The tribe already has some wind and solar projects in the works through its utility authority, including the Boquillas Wind Farm to be built on land owned by the Navajo Nation near Seligman. The Navajo Tribal Utility Authority is the majority owner, a position the tribe will seek with any large-scale energy projects moving forward, tribal officials have Studies on carbon capture and sequestration, clean coal technology, and power plant design, engineering and siting appear to be geared toward another generating station on the reservation. The tribe once touted a planned $3 billion, 1,500 megawatt coal-fired plant as one of the cleanest such plants in the nation even without capturing carbon emissions and storing them. Critics said there was no such thing as clean coal.

Shelly once denounced the so-called Desert Rock Energy Project but has said more recently that it's still on the drawing board.

The tribe's energy policy also covers uranium mining, which was banned on the reservation in 2005 over concerns about disease and death it brought upon Navajos. Shelly has said the tribe would monitor technology and techniques to extract the ore, as well as market conditions, to determine whether it might be viable in the future.

COBELL

Continued from Page 1

oral argument is scheduled for Feb. 16 in Washington, D.C. before a three judge panel.

Frank said Craven believes the settlement is illegal and it's in the best interest of the Indian community that it be overturned. He said the Historical Accounting Class is not giving Class Members an opportunity to opt out if they feel their right to an injunction is more valuable than the monetary relief. In addition the structure of the settlement payments contradict what the D.C. circuit said would be permissible in earlier Cobell litigation, because it's not rationally related to the damages Class Members have suffered, he

"So you have a problem that Class Members who have suffered the most injury are getting the same as or less than Class Members who have suffered no injury at all," Frank said. "(Also) There's the problem of conflict of interest created by the fact that Ms. Cobell negotiated a settlement that would pay $12.5 million dollars to herself."

The beneficiaries of the settlement fall into two groups; the Historical Accounting Class and the Trust Administration Class. Harrison's clients also question the fairness of the Accounting Class and the blanket $1,000 payment everyone would

"The courts have been saying all this time, and the plaintiffs have said, the case is about an accounting, we want an accounting, and now they're saying 'Oh heck with the accounting, just give everybody $1,000 and we'll call it even," Harrison said, adding that some account holders have a great deal of money go through their account while some people have very little. "One hundred and seven thousand Indians, collectively, only have $15,000 between the whole bunch of them in their accounts in recent years, but every one of those 107,000 people is going to get $1,000 ... to them the settlement probably seems like a very good deal."

Harrison also said the leftover money to be divided between land owners is based on a formula that measures how much money has gone thru a person's account, which would not be fair either.

"They're not going to be paid out based on how much (a person) lost or how much you have coming; it's going to be based on how much you got. The people who got paid improperly; If they got paid more than they had coming they get unjustly enriched again and if they got paid less than they had coming they're going to get victimized again, and that's just the way the formula works."

Last year some Individual Indian Money (IIM) account holders also questioned why their attorneys may receive more money than them from the $3.4 billion settlement. The Class Counsel is requesting $223 million, which is 14.75 percent of the 1.5 million dollars to be dispersed to Class Members. Lead attorneys for the settlement include Keith Harper, of Kilpatrick Townsend & Stockton LLP, and Dennis Gingold.

Harper toured Indian Country last year with other Cobell attorneys explaining the settlement and defended their request for remuneration. During a March 2010 meeting in Anadarko, Okla., Harper said the amount requested by the attorneys is not double the expenses. He then quoted Gingold, who said they are only asking for what their expenses were, and at the end of the day it's up to the courts to decide what they will get paid.

Class Counsel's letter to Class Members stated there is little doubt the appellants do not have the same desires or care about the needs of their fellow Class Members, and the appellants' behavior does not seem to be in the best interest of Class Members.

Johns said she hasn't received many calls because of the letter, but most callers were supportive and one person just wanted to understand the settlement and the appeals.

"This has nothing to do with Elouise Cobell, please understand that. People always use her passing away and all that to try and make us feel bad, but this has nothing to do with her. The reason why I did what I did was based upon what I believe was wrong with the suit," Johns said. "Now it has nothing to do with the money, it has nothing to do with any of that. It has to do with the protection. I'm doing it because I believe that they're opening up the gate to a lot of serious problems for Indian Country in the next 20

Johns said she was upset when she initially found out that IIM account holders were, "jerked into this class action suit without our consent" and also that tribes weren't involved. She said since the class action was brought about by four individual Indians there was not the unique government-togovernment relationship. She feels individualizing Indians will help break up the tribes and references the Dawes Act to illustrate her point.

"You know the intent of the Dawes Act was to break up these tribes so that's one of the reasons why I was very concerned," she said. "We're standing basically by ourselves without the protection of our tribe."

Another concern is the land. Johns said the settlement was originally supposed to be about an accounting and not about the land. She said the lands were severely mismanaged by the federal government and people put too many cattle on their land so it was overgrazed and ended up with prairie dogs and the grasses were just not the same.

"...the biggest rip off was when the federal government sat down with the Cobell lawyers and made this deal because they were basically getting away free for this amount of mismanagement...," Johns said. "The federal government is winning on this one. They got home free without ever having to restore lands, and they didn't ever have to pay individual Indians for mismanagement of their land. They made this deal, and to me, it's an unholy deal that these attorneys have negotiated with the federal government so that they could collect $99 million dollars. So who loses on this? They keep saying, 'Oh, you know, you're going to get this money.' What kind of money? You know maybe everybody is going to get maybe $1,200 dollars ... and yet look at what we're losing."

Johns said the Cobell attorneys should have made sure the lands were restored back to their original state before an agreement was made. She said Class Counsel sat down with the federal government when they originally lost the case and that's when the government said it would throw in $3.5 billion if an Administration Class was included for the mismanagement of lands, plus some of the money would be used to purchase lands that were fractionated shares. "Now, there's another part of this that people didn't understand, was this whole $1 billion dollars that they're giving the federal government to buy the land back. That's a bait and switch deal," she said. "Before that land that they purchased for $100 can be given back to your tribe, your tribe has to pay the federal government $100. So basically, all it did was give the federal government$1 billion dollars to buy Indian land ... to me it's a shell game and the Indians are the ones who are losing out."

Johns other concerns are: the settlement is a complicated process, the Bureau of Indian Affairs could not participate in explaining to the individual Indians what their rights were, and it was not clear how to opt out. She said there are cases, with members of the Three Affiliated Tribes for example, where Indian people are seeking justice in court but because of the class action settlement they cannot seek a claim against the federal government.

"If you didn't opt out, you're forever barred from ever going to court on mismanagement," Johns said. "One of the things that the federal government wanted to do was hurry up and get this done so they could wash their hands of us. They opted out."

Frank also mentioned the case of Ramona Two Shields v. United States, where "the government is arguing that the Cobell settlement is preventing these Indians from getting their fair recovery."

Johns also questions who the lead plaintiff is now. In other words who is directing Class Counsel? Lead Plaintiff Elouise Cobell died Oct. 16, 2010. The remaining plaintiffs are James Louise Larose, Thomas Maulson and Penny Cleghorn.

Johns said people may say she's being unfair by appealing the case but questions who is looking out for the Indian people - "People like the four of us that really truly want to make sure that this is good for the people," she said.

"Everybody's glad that I did it," Johns said. "My tribe passed a resolution that was totally against the Cobell (class action suit/settlement). I feel very confident that what I'm doing is in the best interest of ... my family and those who got up and objected to Cobell all along."

spokesperson McAllister told Native Times that Class Counsel is not commenting on the case.

Craven appeal be found online at http:// centerforclassactionfairness.blogspot. com/2011/08/cobell-v-salazarindian-trust-appeal-no.html

COMMENTARY

Slamming the door on the government thieves

NOTES FROM INDIAN COUNTRY

TIM GIAGO (Nanwica Kciji) © 2012 Unity South Dakota

Before you decide to throw rocks at Carol Good Bear, New Town, N. D., Kimberly Craven, Boulder, Colo., Charles Colombe, Mission, S. D., or Mary Lee Johns, Lincoln, Neb., the four plaintiffs appealing the Cobell settlement, stop and think about it because these four souls may be the last line of defense between you and another government rip-off.

Two of the complaints say the settlement does not include an accounting for how much money was lost. This is what Cobell's original suit set out to prove and they say that many of the class action members did not understand that they could have opted out of the entire settlement. The others object to the class of landowners that the settlement creates because they believe that each is different. They also believe that the Indian nations should have been involved in the process from the beginning.

What started out as a lawsuit that would address all of the land, oil, timber, money, grazing and other resources ripped off from the Indian people and the tribes for all of these years was pared down for expediency and rolled into the pitiful settlement that eventually evolved.

And now rather than address the very legitimate complaints of the four plaintiffs, the case has become one of finger pointing and accusations that overlook the main objections of the plaintiffs.

A year ago I wrote about one of the areas of the settlement that was extremely onerous. The settlement gives $2 billion dollars to the government to buy up fractionated tribal lands from individuals willing to sell and then turn them over to the tribes. We are talking about $2 billion dollars which is two-thirds of the money secured in the settlement. This amounts to taking $2 billion dollars and giving it back to the very government responsible for creating the mess in the beginning. It was the Bureau of Indian Affairs that failed so miserably to adequately maintain the land records which became such a mess that in some cases there are hundreds of relatives owning a single 160 acre allotment. Talk about fractionated. The poorly maintained records and the lack of a system to probate the wills of the Indian landowners was the main reason the land is so fractionated and it is the very government now willing to take $2 billion dollars from the cash poor Indians to straighten out the mess they created that really bothers me and many, many Indian people.

Do you see the ridiculous joke that is being played upon the Indian people? It goes like this: "You (Indians) won $3.4 billion dollars from us thieves, but we believe you should give us back $2 billion of that money so we can straighten out the land mess we made while we were stealing from you."

The Cobell attorneys led by Dennis Gingold of Washington, D. C.,, wrote a letter on Jan. 20 that says, "The hopes and wishes of 500,000 individual Indians had been delayed by those four people. If it weren't for them the first payments would have been made before Thanksgiving" of not sharing the desires of the 99.9 percent who support a prompt conclusion to "this longrunning acrimonious case," what was he trying to say?

When Gingold accused the complainants

The Indian people entered this case with high hopes. At one time a settlement could have been reached without litigation and the outcome would have put more than $10 billion into the hands of the poorest people in America, and without all of the deal-making that finally deprived the Indian people of those extra billions.

How much money will eventually go to those Indian individuals Mr. Gingold is so concerned about? $1,000? $2,000? How about just enough to buy a good used car? The federal government is responsible for the theft of untold billions from the Indian people and to offer them a pittance and then demand that two-thirds of it is returned to clean up a mess they made is simply ludicrous.

The ways and means of achieving the settlement were never clearly made to the 500,000 plaintiffs in the case. The plaintiffs had no input in how the money was to be divided and disbursed. Should it not be the job of the attorneys in any case to keep the plaintiffs informed and to ask for their input?

Elouise Cobell is no longer with us. She died last year and she will never see the end results of the case she pushed for nearly 16 years. The Indian people have waited for more than 100 years and the one thing they have learned in dealing with the federal government is patience.

Appeals must be heard by a federal appeals court before any money can be distributed.

Tim Giago

The first appeals court hearing will take place on Feb. 16 in Washington, D. C. at the U. S. District Court of Appeals. For all Indians that can afford to be there, please be there.

So put that rock back in your pocket because Good Bear, Craven, Colombe and Johns may be your last hope to get a just and deserving settlement from the United States government after centuries of dishonor. Do not put a lid on this settlement for a few ounces of silver.

Tim Giago, an Oglala Lakota, is President of Unity South Dakota. He was a Nieman Fellow at Harvard with the Class of 1990. His weekly column won the H. L. Mencken Award in 1985. He was the founder of The Lakota Times, Indian Country Today, Lakota Journal and Native Sun News. He can be reached at UnitySoDak1@knology.net

Letters to the Editor:

Tribal leaders prefer negotiation to litigation for water rights

Chickasaws and Choctaws share many things with other Oklahomans, including the desire to pave the way for a better future for our children and grandchildren.

We, the Chickasaw and Choctaw Nations, currently working among others, the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers to develop a regional water plan. Having a science-based plan is critical to sustainable management of water resources to support economic development, recreation, household use and to provide for the environmental health of our lakes, rivers and streams. It is vital that state and tribal leaders work together to ensure a water future that will meet the needs of every Oklahoman in urban and rural areas while still preserving the natural beauty and environmental health of Oklahoma.

We cannot state strongly enough that the tribes have no interest in disrupting any individual's current use of water that is made pursuant to a valid permit. The lawsuit filed against state officials and Oklahoma City was never intended to take action against individuals. We stand united with the farmers, ranchers, business owners and residents who depend upon our shared water resources.

Our goal is to have our voice – and our rights – respected and included in any decision on proposals to remove waters from our homelands. While we are confident we have strong legal claims, we want to make it clear that we have always preferred negotiation rather than litigation.

We intend nothing in our legal claim that would require the general stream adjudication proposed by the State of Oklahoma. This type of massive legal process places a serious burden on thousands of Oklahomans, who would have to bear the enormous expense of the state's legal action, potentially lasting for decades, and it would not address or resolve the issues that demand our immediate attention.

State and tribal leaders are fully capable of resolving differences without undergoing the long and tedious process of general stream adjudication that has the potential to have such negative consequences for all the citizens of Oklahoma.

We propose, once again, that state and tribal leaders reach across the table, roll up our sleeves and work together to develop a plan for sustainable management of this most precious resource for the greater good of all Oklahomans.

Together, we can all work toward a sustainable water future for Oklahoma.

Governor Bill Anoatubby, Chickasaw Nation

Chief Gregory E. Pyle, Choctaw Nation

Burden of proof on Vietnam War veterans

Vietnam veterans who never had boots-on-ground Vietnam, who are sick from presumptive exposure to agent orange dioxin poisoning are tied up in paperwork. The burden of proof is placed solely upon the veteran. Burden of proof is mainly directed to those service members who never had boots-on-ground. Presumptive exposure for these service members is most difficult of all to provide evidence for.

In nearly all cases, the Veterans Affairs (VA) requires evidence relative to exposure to this deadly herbicide. The mere fact that the service member without boots-onground can show proof of military service, and proof of having been awarded the Vietnam Service Medal and medical proof of illness is in nearly all cases, not evidence enough for VA disability.

Except for those who had boots-on-ground.

The herbicide was sprayed on the lands of the Republic of Vietnam.

Consequently, much of this herbicide found its way miles out into the South China Sea because of run-off. This spraying was authorized by the Department of Defense and our Federal Government. The governing authorities knew the use of this deadly herbicide could be harmful to members of the U.S. Armed Forces engaged in the Vietnam War on land, at sea and in the air. The Institute Of Medicine (IOM) report has proven the toxicity of Agent Orange Dioxin. This was an irresponsible action on the part of our Government to poison we who served. That authority should be held accountable. In 1991, the Congress passed a Bill that authorized the VA to approve all Agent Orange exposure claims for disability. In 2002, the Bush administration took away authorized disability claims from those service members who did not have boots-on-ground Vietnam.

Ask why do we who served and fought in this war need insurmountable evidence of proof? Evidence other than the above evidence provided by the veteran? Is the afore mentioned evidence not enough that we were there?

No matter if we were on land, at sea or in the air? Is this just another way our Government has authorized the VA to make disability claims impossible to get, by creating unnecessary paperwork placed upon the service member? The reality is, we were there and we were poisoned.

If more evidence is required by the VA, then that burden of proof should be on the VA, other than evidence the veteran has submitted for disability health care claim for dioxin poisoning, to include due compensation.

Our Legislators must be urged to do what is right and correct the errors made in times past.

The Senate and Congress Veterans Affairs Committees need to approve Senate Bill S-1629 and House Bill HR-3612. These Bills then need to be sent to the Floor of both Houses and swiftly passed.

John J. Bury, US Navy/retired Vietnam Veteran Media, Pa.

The viewpoints expressed in columns and letters are the opinions of the writers and not necessarily the opinion or viewpoint of the Native American Times publisher or staff.

Send letters to editor@nativetimes.com. Please keep letters to 350 words or less. Sign your name, tribal affiliation and city of residence for verification purposes.

918-256-5585

LANGLEY 918-782-0011

MONKEY ISLAND 918-257-8869

www.okstatebank.com
Equal Housing Lender
Native American Owned

NATIVE
TIMES
recycles with Tahlequah
Recycling
Incorporated...

shouldn't you?

Reeves Renovations Professional Construction, Remodeling & Repairs

Bathrooms • Kitchens • Paint
Tile • Trim • Plumbing
Electrical • Solar Panels
Windmills • Winterizing
Quality Work • Free Estimates

918-637-6736 johnwilliamreeves@juno.com – Mayes & Cherokee Counties –

Follow Us! www.twitter.com/nativetimes

SUPERNAW'S OKLAHOMA INDIAN SUPPLY

Wholesale items for Pow Wow Vendors
Bone chokers $20 per dozen

Handmade lamp worked glass bead bracelets $1.00 each

Glass bead stretch bracelets 5 for $2.50

12 Necklaces: Chain w/ pendant and display pad $13.50

36 inch gemstone chip strands Reg. 3.95 now $2.00

36 inch turquoise chip strands Reg. 7.95 now $4.00

Always our regular stock of seed beads from 16/0 to 8/0, findings, leather, hackles, fluffs and thousands of other supply items.

Remember we've moved around the corner 109 North Broadway, Skiatook, OK 74070

New Dealers Cash or Credit Card Only.

Open Noon-6pm Mon. thru Fri. • 10am-5m Sat. • Closed Sun.

Local: 396-1713-Countrywide Toll Free 1-888-720-1967

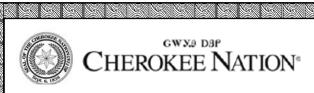

Website: www.supernaw.com • Email: Supernaw@flash.net

www.nativetimes.com

More Jobs. More News. More Features. Every Day.

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT / HELP WANTED

Cherokee Nation whose headquarters are located in beautiful Tahlequah Oklahoma is a national leader in Indian tribal governments and economic development in Oklahoma, We are a dynamic, progressive organization which owns several business enterprises and administers a variety of services for the Cherokee people in Northeastern Oklahoma. Cherokee Nation offers an exceptional employee benefits plan with Comprehensive Health, Life, 401(k), Holiday Pay, Sick Leave and Annual Leave.

CURRENT OPPORTUNITIES AT W.W. HASTINGS HOSPITAL, TAHLEOUAH POSITIONS CLOSE 2/7/2012

> #5768 Medical Technologist/R/PT #5745 Medical Technologist/R/FT #6105 Medical Technologist II/R/FT

Interested applicants please apply at www.cherokee.org

Cherokee Nation Human Resources Department PO Roy 948 Tahlequah, OK 74465 (918) 453-5292 or 453-5050 Or Visit our website at: www.cherokee.org

Employment will be contingent upon drug test results. Indian preference is considered

RFQ / RFP

Ponca Nation of Oklahoma • 20 White Eagle Drive • Ponca City, Oklahoma 74601

Request for Qualifications

The Ponca Nation is seeking qualified Design-Build Construction firms for renovation  $of single family Tribal homes. \ The scope of the design-build services includes, but is not the scope of the design and the scope of the s$ limited to; limited engineering services and design, concrete, electrical, mechanical, doors and windows, drywall, carpentry, insulation, roofing, and structural aspects to provide the Tribal tenants/occupants a safe and livable environment. Initially, five (5) homes will be let by the Ponca Nation, and upon satisfactory completion, another 25 potential homes will be added by modification. The total project will be valued at approximately $750,000. Selection of a Design-Build construction firm will be based on evaluation of the following criterion:

Firm Experience with renovation of potentially occupied homes, with points available from 0-25;

Staff Renovation Construction Experience / Qualifications, with points available from 0-25;

Partner A-E firm renovation code evaluation experience, with points available from 0 - 15;

Firm must demonstrate the ability to manage multiple subcontractors at multiple locations, with points available from 0-15;

Demonstrate the ability to meet a total renovation schedule of 300 calendar days, with points available from 0-10;

Verifiable Indian Preference (51% CDIB verifiable) with points available of five (5) for the construction firm and five (5) points for the design firm

This project is subject to Section 3 of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1968 12 USC 1701u and 24 CFR part 135 which implement the Act. These regulations will be incorporated into all contracts and sub-contracts. Applicants can be a partnership, corporation, association, and/or other legal entity which will have contractual responsibility for the project. A proposed joint venture should provide profiles for all firms in the joint venture. This project will be performed using U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) grant funding. The Corps of Engineers will provide technical support at every phase of the project. Provide four (4) Qualification packets, including all items as stated above, for selection. Qualifications packets must be received no later than 4:00 pm, CST, February 24, 2012, at the Ponca Nation, Mailing Address: 20 White Eagle Drive, Ponca City, OK 74601, Attention: Mr. Stanley Smith, Construction Manager. Further information may be obtained by calling (580)

Muscogee (Creek) Nation Office of the Administration

Request for Resumes

January 7, 2012 marked the beginning of a new era in the long and proud history of the Muscogee (Creek) Nation and the beginning of a new Tribal Administration.

The newly elected Principal Chief has a new vision for the Muscogee (Creek) Nation. It is a vision that includes upholding traditional Muscogee ways and values while at the same time elevating the Nation's government and business operations to unprecedented levels of effectiveness, accountability and service. To accomplish this ambitious vision, we need to fill multiple leadership positions across the Nation's administrative, health, education, social services, law enforcement, judiciary, and business operations.

Potential candidates should possess the following

- Experience
- Education
- Proven track record of leadership and accomplishment
- Demonstrate a winning attitude
- Work well in a team environment
- Strong commitment to the Administration's vision and goals for the Muscogee (Creek) people.

If you meet the qualifications...

Submit your resume or C.V. to LSpaulding@MekkoTiger.com and Include the following:

- Experience
- Skills in field of endeavor
- Explanation of why you feel you are a good fit for this Tribal Administration

Attach examples of your winning attitude, how you have made a difference, your leadership successes and how you have worked well in a team environment to achieve ambitious goals and a shared vision.

We want you! Join us and make a difference!

Ce'puyacetos ce!

For more information about Muscogee (Creek) Nation, visit our website at www.muscogeenation-nsn.gov.

All positions are subject to Muscogee (Creek) Nation and Native American hiring preference

SERVICES

Metal Roofing & Siding

Professional Construction and Home Repairs

Free Estimates

Charles Snell 918-507-2902

Native American Contractor

EVENTS

meeting at 202 E. 5th Street Tahlequah, Okla. Info: (918) 458-0008 or www. cherokeeartistsassociation.

THIRD TUESDAY of even

EVERY WEDNESDAY Kiowa class beginning in February at 6:30 pm, Room TBA, Tulsa University. Info call Sarah, (918) 445-5213

*Email your powwow or

nativetimes.com. Name,

date, time, place and

other event info to: Lisa@

contact information is free.

EVERY THURSDAY The Otoe-Missouria Substance Abuse and Behavioral Health Programs sponsor an open group for families touched by addiction from noon to 1 p.m. at the Otoe-Missouria Health Building. This is a confidential group. Call 580-723-4466 x252 or x262 for more information.

SECOND TUESDAY Cherokee Artists Association EVERY 2ND SATURDAY numbered months - The Central Oklahoma Cherokee Alliance meets at Mayflower UCC Church, Oklahoma City at 6 p.m. Phone: (405) 408-0763. The next meeting is Feb. 16. FOURTH THURSDAY Each month the American Indian Chamber of Commerce of Oklahoma - Eastern Chapter hosts a monthly luncheon at Bacone College, Muskogee, Okla. 11:30 a.m. at Benjamin Wacoche Hall. Please RSVP

Phone: (918) 230-3759

one week ahead of time.

Indian Taco Sales - from 11-2:30pm at OK Choctaw Tribal Alliance, 5320 S. Youngs Blvd, Oklahoma City www.okchoctaws.org MON/WED AND THURS The Marble City Nutrition Center serves hot meals at the Marble City Community Center at 11:30 a.m. Meals are free to anyone over 50, but a small donation is suggested to help with the expense of the program. Gather for fellowship and friendship. Volunteers welcome. Marble City Nutrition Center, 711 N. Main, Marble City, Okla. Phone: (918) 775-2158

YOUTH COUNCIL The Native Nations Youth Council (NNYC) bimonthly meetings from 6:30pm - 8:30pm @ the Youth Services of Tulsa Activity

Center (311 S. Madison - on 3rd just west of Peoria). Call to confirm location. Info Call: Chad Gilley (918) 382-2204 or nnyc@ihcrc.org

THROUGH MARCH 12 Free tobacco cessation course from 6 p.m. to 7 p.m. çççççWhitney Nuttle (918) 762-3873 or Suzy Knife Chief (918) 762-2153.

FEBRUARY 9 Blood drive hosted by Cherokee Nation in the Ballroom/Restaurant building, 9 am to 3:30 pm. Donors will receive an ice scraper, choice of t-shirt, free health screenings and Donor Rewards Points. Donors from 11:30 until the end of the drive will enjoy free pizza. For more info or to make an appointment,

contact Oklahoma Blood

Institute at 877-340-8777 or visit www.obi.org.

FEBRUARY 11 Freedmen History Program at the Martin Luther King Center, 627 N 3rd Street, Muskogee Okla. at 1pm. Free and open to the general public. For more info call 918-683-2753, 405-227-9810 or visit www. freedmen5tribes.com

February 16-18 Tulsa Indian Art Festival at the Glenpool Conference Center, HWY 75 and 121st Street. Entry forms at www. tulsaindianartfestival.com.

FEBRUARY 18 The Arrington - Mcspadden All Indian Rodeo Association will have their first rodeo of 2012 in Tahlequah Okla. For more info email

dwrshirley@aol.com

FEBRUARY 22 & 29 Smoke-Free Homes workshops sponsored by Osage Nation and Native American M-Power from 10 a.m. until Noon. sponsored by Osage Nation and Native American M-Power, are held from 10 a.m. until noon. Info call Osage Nation Native American M-Power at (918) 287-5380.

FEBRUARY 25 Wild Onion Dinner 11am to 3pm at Indian Fellowship Baptist Church, 6130 So. 58th W. Ave, Oakhurst, Okla. Info call Mary Kelly 918-636-8394

FEBRUARY 25 3rd Annual Hoops Basketball Tournament - Men's 5 on 5 Basketball Entry Fee: $110

USEPA Region 7 Haskell University graduates, January 24, 2012. (Left to right) Stan Holder, Kristina Stine, Amber Tucker, Tyrone

Haskell, EPA promote environment, science careers

LAWRENCE, Kan. (AP) - Haskell Indian Nations University is partnering with the Environmental Protection Agency to promote science and environmental careers.

The university in Lawrence and the EPA's office in Kansas signed an agreement Wednesday to promote interaction between Haskell students and EPA staff.

Karl Brooks, the EPA district's regional administrator, says he hopes the agreement will encourage more Haskell students to apply for internships and jobs with the EPA.

He says it also should prompt EPA staff to help Haskell faculty with research, and give Haskell students knowledge they could use to help their tribes with environmental issues.

The Lawrence Journal-World reports EPA staff members also will be considered for adjunct faculty positions at the school.

Fighting Sioux backers plan signature push for name

BISMARCK, N.D. (AP) - Supporters of the University of North Dakota's Fighting Sioux nickname plan a final push for petition

They're setting up Thursday in the North Dakota Capitol and in Fargo's West Acres shopping mall.

Nickname backers have two petitions. One would restore a state law that requires UND to keep the nickname. The other would change the North Dakota Constitution to say UND teams will always be known as the Fighting Sioux.

The proposed constitutional amendment petition doesn't need to be submitted until August. But the petition that restores the pronickname state law is due at midnight Tuesday. It needs at least 13,500 signatures.

The university is phasing out the name. The NCAA contends the nickname is offensive to American Indians and says UND will face sanctions for its continued use.

College Scholarships

American Indian, Alaska Native & Native Hawaiian Students

$450,000+ awarded each year! All Undergraduate Majors Are Eligible. Graduate Scholarships Available.

Applications Due April 4th!

Download Application: aiefprograms.org

National Relief Charities
Building Strong, Self-Sufficient American Indian Communities

American Indian Education Foundation 2401 Eglin Street • Rapid City, SD 57703 (605) 342-9968

MORE NEWS EVERY DAY | WWW.NATIVETIMES.COM

FJJMA names Heather Ahtone assistant curator

NORMAN, Okla. - The Fred Jones Jr. Museum of Art at the University of Oklahoma has added Heather Ahtone to its ranks as a new assistant curator. Ahtone, who has served as a research associate for the Diversity in Geosciences Project at the OU School of Geology and Geophysics, joins the museum as the new James T. Bialac Assistant Curator of Native American and Non-Western Art.

"The University Oklahoma and the Fred Jones Jr. Museum of Art are excited to announce Heather Ahtone's new role as assistant curator," said Ghislain d'Humières, director of the museum. "Heather's experience and education in Native American studies will make her a valuable member of the museum's staff."

Ahtone completed her master's degree at OU in 2006 and received her associate's degree at the Institute of American Indian Arts in 1993. Her new title is named in honor of James T. Bialac, a private art collector based in Phoenix, Ariz. Bialac donated to the university his collection of nearly 4,000 works in 2010 and established the James T. Bialac Native American Art Collection at the Fred Jones Jr. Museum of Art.

Previously, Ahtone worked Southwestern

Association of Indian Arts and the Institute of American Indian Arts Museum, both in Santa Fe, and for Ralph Appelbaum Associates in New York. She has curated independently and has taught Native American art as an adjunct instructor at the OU School of Art and Art History for the past four years. Ahtone is a member of the Chickasaw Nation and is a descendent of the Choctaw

She has published articles multiple journals, including American Indian Horizons, International Journal of Arts in Society, Indian Market Magazine and Wicazo Sa.

"We are excited to have Heather Ahtone as a new addition to the staff of the FJJMA," said Mark A. White, the Eugene B. Adkins Curator and Chief Curator. "Her experience and enthusiasm for Native American art will be a wonderful asset to the

Since 2007, Ahtone has taught American Indian Women in Art at OU. She also has instructed students in historical bookmaking within the context of Native American culture. In 2007, Ahtone was recognized in Oklahoma Magazine's 40 Under 40, an annual feature recognizing the state's distinguished young professionals in business, law, politics and the arts.

Ahtone has received several fellowships from multiple organizations, including the Chickasaw Nation Higher Education, the American Indian College Fund and the University of Kansas. She also has given presentations at multiple conferences, including the College Art Association.

"OU has a legacy of supporting Native American art and artists that is known worldwide," said Ahtone. "I am excited to join my esteemed colleagues in building on this legacy. I believe the vision for the museum's future is bright."

The Fred Jones Jr. Museum of Art is located in the OU Arts District on the corner of Elm Avenue and Boyd Street, at 555 Elm Ave., on the OU Norman campus.

WE HAVE YOU COVERED

Arvest Bank provides the financial solutions you need.

Personal & Business Checking Accounts*

All Arvest checking accounts come with the FREE services you need to do your day-to-day banking - Arvest Online Banking, Mobile Banking**, Arvest CheckCard, and 24-Hour Account Information Line.

Mortgage Loans:

Rural Development

FHA, VA or Bond

Discount.***

Section 184 Indian Home Loan

- Lower Monthly Payments
- No Monthly Mortgage Insurance
- Lower Down Payment - Low Fixed Rate

Mention this ad for a $75 Closing Cost

*$100.00 minimum required to open a checking account. **Your wireless carrier may assess a fee for data services. Please consult your wireless plan or provider for details.

***Some restrictions may apply. See associate for details.

(918) 631-1000

arvest.com

Member FDIC TENOR

Native American Pre-Law Day

NIVERSITY Saturday, March 3, 2012 • 8:15 a.m. - 5:30 p.m. University of Tulsa College of Law • 3120 East 4th Place, Tulsa Ok 74104

Thinking about a Career in Law?

Come see whether law school is for you & learn how you can prepare for law school. Prominent Native American attorneys will discuss their backgrounds and careers, law school representatives will provide information about the law school admissions process and how to finance a legal education, and current Indian law students will talk about what law school is really like!

The workshop, sponsored by The Law School Admissions Council and DiscoverLaw.org, is co-hosted by Oklahoma City University School of Law, the University of Oklahoma College of Law, and the University of Tulsa College of Law, is open to all American Indian college and senior high school students. A limited number of scholarships are available to assist with travel costs for students outside easy driving distance of

Space is limited, and registration is on a first come first serve basis. Please register in advance. Walk-ins are available only as space permits. To register, please contact University of Tulsa College of Law, at lawadmissions@utulsa.edu or 918-631-2406 by February 21, 2012.

Following the Native American Pre-Law Day, all attendees of the pre-law event are invited to a private tour of the Enduring Spirit Exhibit of Native American art and artifacts at The Gilcrease Museum from 4;40-5:30 p.m.

The University of Tube College of Law provides equality of opportunity is legal education for all persons, including faculty, employers, applicants for adminstor, enrolled students,

Handcrafted Native American Flutes MADE BY NATIVE HANDS WWW.JWCUSTOMFLUTES.COM

Navajo Code Talker dies in Arizona

WINDOW ROCK, Arizona (AP)

– Another Navajo Code Talker has died.

Thurmon Begay says his father, Sgt. Jimmie Begay, died Feb. 1 after a fall. He was 86.

Begay was one of about 420 Navajos trained to transmit messages in a code based on the then-unwritten Navajo language. The Code Talkers sent thousands of messages without error on Japanese troop movements, battlefield tactics and other communications, helping to win World War II.

Jimmie Begay enlisted in 1942 at age 17 and served in the 1st Marine Division, 2nd Battalion. He eventually returned to the Navajo reservation and retired from the Navajo Forest Products Industries in 1985.

Flags are being lowered across the reservation through Sunday in Begay's honor. Funeral services are set for Saturday in Fort Defiance. Burial will follow at a family plot.

Jimmie Begay

Woman makes charity runs for 'the rez'

The goods were bound for the town of Oglala on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation in South Dakota, a place that continues to suffer from extreme poverty.

TOM FAGIN
Gillette News Record

GILLETTE, Wyo. (AP) – Dee Stotts wished that she had brought a bigger trailer.

In 45 minutes, donations to her third "Run for The Rez" had already filled up the bed of her pickup truck and most of the two-horse trailer attached to its bumper. She would have brought the bigger one, but hadn't counted on the big turnout to the old Great Western Auto Brokers parking lot on a recent morning.

"It looked like a drive-thru," Stotts said of the line of vehicles that came to drop off toys, food, dishes, clothing and appliances.

The goods were bound for the town of Oglala on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation in South Dakota, a place that continues to suffer from extreme poverty. Other donations would go to the people who were put out of their homes by a fire along Emerson Avenue on Jan. 21.

The 45-year-old can relate to the struggles on the reservation because she grew up in poverty in Seattle, wearing donated clothes.

Stotts also has a soft spot for stray dogs that go hungry on the reservation. She will haul out a total of 200 pounds of dog food from Joe's Pet Depot.

The big outpouring of support was a thrill to Stotts, who has been filling trailers and driving them to the reservation since November.

The owner of D&G Cleaners is no stranger to acts of charity. For the past two years, her business has offered to clean the houses of cancer patients for free.

An ovarian cancer survivor herself, strands of pink run through

STEVE REMICH / GILLETTE NEWS RECORD / AP PHOTO

Jamie Clark, left, and Dee Stotts organize donations on Thursday, Jan. 26, 2012 in Gillette, Wyo. When Stotts learned about the intense poverty on the Pine Ridge reservation in South Dakota, she decided to collect donations of clothing, food, toys and other items and bring them to the people there.

her long, dark hair as a sign of solidarity.

Stotts rides a hog and hangs out with local motorcycle groups. Her Harley-Davidson jacket covers her tattoo-covered arms.

Tough appearances aside, she was sentimental when she recounted the last run, before Christmas.

She remembers vividly the expressions of children on the reservation when they found Christmas gifts loaded on a handmade sleigh. It was built on the reservation and the gifts came from people in Gillette and were put in 386 hand-knit stockings.

"When they come up and they start giving you hugs and they really are appreciative, you know that you're doing right," Stotts said.

She has Christmas pictures on her iPad and smartphone. They show stray dogs and smiling children cuddling up with new stuffed animals.

It had been a photo on Pine Ridge that sparked her interest in starting the drives. The image of poverty was from a CBS documentary that she spotted on a friend's Facebook wall.

The trailer she will take for her latest run will be packed with items that include canned goods and used clothing. Donations from Back to The Rack filled out about half of the trailer. Stuffed animals and a three-foot-tall plastic superman joined the haul.

Extra doors, windows and plywood for renovations came by way of her friend Tracii Shutters from Lickety Split Cleaning and Property Preservation Service.

"One piece of plywood can help someone fix a hole in the wall," Shutters said.

Angie Smith was one of those who came to drop off clothes that she no longer needed. She said that she could relate to the hardship on the reservation because she had been hurt in an accident three years ago and still can't work.

Stotts plans to continue hosting drives every two months for the reservation.

It is a small effort with a big reward to the woman who grew up with so little herself.

Win your share of over

$90,000 in Cash!

Saturday, February 25 6 pm – 10 pm

Catch some beads and join us for Masquerade of Money at Osage Casino! On Saturday, February 25 from 6pm–9pm we're holding $500 Cash drawings five times every hour at each location. Then at 10pm, 21 lucky guests will take home $1,000 Cash across all locations! Play with your Club Osage card February 12–23 to enter. Find your fortune this February at Osage Casino during Masquerade of Money!

JOIN CLUB OSAGE TODAY!

Visit osagecasinos.com for details.

Tulsa Bartlesville Sand Springs Ponca City Skiatook Hominy Pawhuska • (918) 699-7777 • osagecasinos.com •

©2012 Osage Casino. Must be 18 to participate. Guests must be actively playing with their Club Osage card to be eligible for promotional drawings. Must be present to win $500 Cash drawings. Need not be present to win $1,000 Cash grand prize. Grand prize must be claimed within 30 days. Management reserves all rights. If you think you have a gambling problem, please call 1-800-522-4700.

Inside this issue:

- Choctaw singer performing this weekend
- Tulsa Indian Art Festival in Glenpool
- Art exhibit addresses water issues

TODAY'S INDEPENDENT INDIAN NEWS

- A FREE PUBLICATION -

WWW.NATIVETIMES.COM

NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES

VOLUME 18 + ISSUE 7

PUBLISHED WEEKLY

FEBRUARY 17, 2012

Freedmen descendants seek own Okla. tribe

JARREL WADETulsa World

TULSA, Okla. (AP) – The descendants of former slaves of Muscogee (Creek) Nation members have petitioned the U.S. government to be recognized as their own tribe - a move that could set a legal precedent for thousands of Indian freedmen descendants around the country.

The petition meets the requirements set by the U.S. Bureau of Indian Affairs and should be accepted, the freedmen group's leader told the Tulsa

If accepted, the petition could make the Creek freedmen descendants the first such group to become their own separate tribe.

The group's leaders are now waiting for BIA officials to confirm that they have accepted the petition and have begun reviewing it.

Ron Graham, the 47-year-old president of the Muscogee Creek Indian Freedman Band, was raised as a Creek Indian until he was 15.

But he and other Creek freedmen descendants were kicked out of the Creek Nation in 1979 by a vote of the nation's members.

Graham's father, Theodore "Blue" Graham, practiced the

See FREEDMEN Continued on Page 5

VILLIAM LAUER/LINCON JOURNAL STAR FILE

In this June 3, 2004 file photo, Pine Ridge police officers Mirian Laybad, left, Sgt. Oscar Hudspeth, center, and Lt. Mitch Wisecarver confiscate cases of beer at a checkpoint just north of Whiteclay, Neb. The Oglala Sioux Tribe announced Thursday, Feb. 6, 2012, that it will file a $500 million federal lawsuit against some of the nation's largest beer distributors, alleging that they knowingly contributed to the chronic alcoholism, health problems and other social ills on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation. The lawsuit also targets the four beer stores in Whiteclay, a Nebraska town (pop. 11) on the South Dakota border that sells about 5 million cans of beer per year.

Fired Cherokee Nation employees file lawsuit

DANA ATTOCKNIE Native American Times

TAHLEQUAH, Okla. – Some former Cherokee Nation employees call their last day on the job "Bloody Thursday."

On Oct. 20, 2011, one day after newly elected Cherokee Nation Principal Chief Bill John Baker took the Oath of Office, a series of alleged mass firings spread throughout the Cherokee Nation headquarters.

Chief Bill John Baker

"There were several people he let go at that time; at a higher level than what I was," Rachel McAlvain, former director of health policy for Health Services, said. "(Then) It was Nov. 8 (2011); a Tuesday morning when they called my supervisor and let her know ... the Chief wanted me out of the organization. I had no idea. I went home that day and was placed on administrative leave until that Friday. Obviously I didn't have any idea (that would happen) because it's illegal. According to the constitution, you can't do that."

McAlvain along with Felicia Olaya, Sammye Rusco, and Paula Ragsdale have filed suit against Baker for violation

See LAWSUIT Continued on Page 4

Tribe suing beer companies for alcohol problems

GRANT SCHULTE Associated Press

LINCOLN, Nebraska (AP) – A Native American tribe sued some of the world's largest beer makers Feb. 9, claimingtheyknowinglycontributed to devastating alcohol-related problems on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation in the state of South Dakota.

The Oglala Sioux Tribe of South Dakota said it is demanding $500 million in damages for the cost of health care, social services and child rehabilitation caused by chronic alcoholism on the reservation, which encompasses some of the most impoverished counties in the United States

One in four children born on the reservation suffer from fetal alcohol syndrome or fetal alcohol spectrum disorder, and the average life expectancy is estimated between 45 and 52 years – the shortest in North America except for Haiti, according to the lawsuit. The average American life expectancy is 77.5 years.

The lawsuit filed in U.S. District Court of Nebraska also targets four beer stores in Whiteclay, a Nebraska town near the reservation's border that, despite having only about a dozen residents, sold nearly 5 million cans of beer in 2010.

Tribal leaders and activists blame the Nebraska businesses for chronic alcohol abuse and bootlegging on the Pine Ridge reservation, where all alcohol is banned. They say most of the stores' customers come from the reservation, which spans southwest South Dakota and dips into Nebraska.

"You cannot sell 4.9 million 12-ounce cans of beer and wash your hands like Pontius Pilate, and say we've got nothing to do with it being smuggled," said Tom White, the tribe's Omaha-based attorney.

Owners of the four beer stores in Whiteclay were unavailable or declined comment Thursday when contacted

See BEER Continued on Page 3

AG asks Okla. high court to decide water case

TIM TALLEY

Associated Press

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) – Oklahoma Attorney General Scott Pruitt asked the state Supreme Court Feb. 10 to decide the rights of two Oklahoma-based American Indian tribes to water in major streams in their historic territories in southeastern Oklahoma.

Pruitt filed a lawsuit on behalf of the Oklahoma Water Resources Board, asking the court to assume original jurisdiction over a comprehensive stream adjudication of the water rights of the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations. The Supreme Court did not immediately schedule a hearing.

The request was made six months after the tribes filed a federal lawsuit to bar the state and Oklahoma City from transporting water from the region and just one week after Gov. Mary Fallin asked the tribes mediate a solution. The tribes refused to drop the federal lawsuit.

In a statement, Fallin said state officials were reluctant to file the Supreme Court case. She said she hopes a water policy can still be developed through negotiation "without a prolonged and expensive legal battle."

The tribes' attorney, Michael Burrage, said he had not seen the state's petition and declined to comment.

Choctaw Nation Chief Greg Pyle and Chickasaw Nation Gov. Bill Anoatubby released a joint statement that said the state's legal action will not resolve the federal court issues that are at the heart of the water rights dispute.

"We have made plain in writing that we want to protect the existing permitted uses of water for all Oklahomans and have hopes of reaching a resolution outside of the courtroom," the statement said.

The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers built Sardis Lake, which straddles Latimer and Pushmataha counties. The tribes claim that an 1830 treaty gives them authority over water resources in their southeastern Oklahoma jurisdictions. State and city officials say the tribes relinquished those rights in subsequent treaties

The state's filing is the first step in what could become a lengthy, complicated process to determine who has the rights to stream and surface water in the Kiamichi, Clear Boggy and Muddy Boggy basins. The state's petition identifies almost 200 defendants and says

See WATER Continued on Page 5

Okla. boxer sets sights on trip to London Olympics

KAREN SHADE Native American Times

PAWHUSKA, Okla. – The Midway Café is calm for a Saturday morning, but perhaps not for Pawhuska, the sleepy town in Osage County. People quietly chat at tables and the counter.

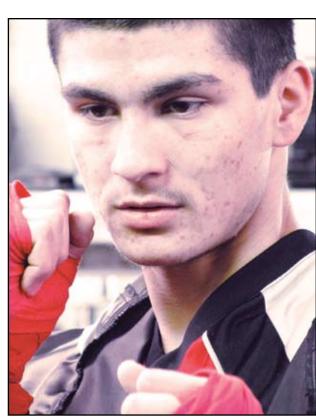

"Have you heard of Ben Cottingham?"

When asked, a waitress at the cash register thinks before replying she has never heard of him. That could change in a matter of weeks.

The 20-year-old Pawhuska native is a boxer who can see a straight shot to London and the Summer Olympics. Cottingham, Osage and Seneca-Cayuga, is the only prospect for this level of competition coach Earl Gilkey has trained in his 40 years of boxing and mixed martial arts experience.

"I've had several other champions, but not at this magnitude, of the

See BOXER Continued on Page 7

KAREN SHADE / NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES PHOTO

Ben Cottingham prepares to spar Feb. 11. Cottingham's goal is to box for the USA during the London Olympics this summer.

Navajo official agrees to restitution for bonuses

FELICIA FONSECA
Associated Press

FLAGSTAFF, Ariz. (AP) – The last of five elected officials in the Navajo Nation community of Tuba City has resolved allegations that she received part of $80,000 in bonus money in violation of tribal ethics laws.

Charlene Nezentered an agreement Tuesday with the tribe's Ethics and Rules Office to repay the $20,000 she received to the Tuba City Chapter. She'll keep her position as secretary and treasurer of the chapter until the community picks new leaders. She also cannot seek elected office for five years and until the money is paid back in full.

"I made the decision, so I have to face the consequence, and that's the consequence," Nez said.

Tuba City is one of the Navajo Nation's largest communities, about 75 miles northeast of Flagstaff, and borders the Hopi reservation. It also is among about 30 of the reservation's 110 chapters that have been granted increased authority over local finances.

Tribal ethics and rules investigator Lewnell Harrison said the elected officials, who make up the Council of Naat'aanii, received the bonus money from late 2009 to 2011. The investigation into the chapter's finances is ongoing, he said.

Cases against the other four officials – Helen Herbert, Jimmy Holgate, Robert Yazzie and Max Goldtooth – have been resolved. Yazzie and Goldtooth were found in violation of ethics laws following a hearing, while Herbert signed a deal with the Ethics and Rules Office. The office was granted deferred judgment in Holgate's case because he failed to show up for his hearing, Harrison

Each of the elected officials, whose four-year terms would have expired in January, has been ordered to pay restitution to the chapter house and was removed from office.

Undertriballaw, the elected officials are paid for attendance at chapter meetings and can be reimbursed for travel, but Harrison said the tribe doesn't allow for Christmas bonuses and other compensation to them for doing their jobs.

"I think it sends a message out to other chapters that these type of activities, they won't be tolerated on the Navajo Nation," Harrison said.

Nez said she was under the impression for months that it was OK to receive bonus money but at some point realized it was wrong and contacted the Ethics and Rules Office. Ethics charges were filed against the five in August.

Nez said she now will work with the Tribal Council Delegate Joshua Lavar Butler, who represents Tuba City, to find replacements for the elected officials who are honest, accountable and transparent. The community can appoint people to serve in the positions until an election is held.

"I'm hoping the people do vote someone in like that, individuals that have those same values," she said. "Yes, I had them, and I have to find them again."

Meanwhile, two members of the chapter's administrative staff were relieved from duties Tuesday, and the chapter house was shut down for the day. The Tuba City District Court recently granted an injunction against those staff members to protect financial and other documents.

Butler said the chapter's accounts also have been frozen and he would seek to have the locks changed at the chapter house but work to ensure services to the community aren't interrupted.

"I'm embarrassed," he said. "I'm very embarrassed because this is a black eye for local governance on the Navajo Nation."

Oklahoma AG sues tribe over casino

ROCHELLE HINES
Associated Press

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) – Oklahoma's attorney general filed paperwork Feb. 7 to stop the Kialegee Tribal Town from building a controversial casino in a Tulsa suburb.

The lawsuit, submitted by Attorney General Scott Pruitt in U.S. District Court for the Northern District of Oklahoma, seeks a preliminary injunction to keep the Kialegee Tribal Town and developers from continuing work on the proposed Red Clay Casino in Broken Arrow. The Wetumka-based tribal town hasn't secured federal approval of a lease for the property and has no jurisdiction over the land, which Pruitt argues violate state compact requirements for Indian gaming.

The Kialegees do not have the authority to pick and choose which steps to follow in the federal or state approval process of establishing casinos," Pruitt said. "The complaint filed today is to protect the interests of Oklahoma and its citizens, and ensure the rule of law is being followed."

The casino has drawn protests from hundreds of residents in the city of about 99,000 who worry the gaming center is too close to a proposed elementary school and pre-kindergarten facility and could bring a flurry of criminal activity to the area. The residents have contacted members of the state's congressional delegation, who also have voiced opposition.

"I took up this fight to stop the casino because I believe our community should have their voice heard and the rule of law should be followed," said Rep. John Sullivan, R-Okla., whose congressional district includes Broken Arrow.

The land is owned by two Muscogee Creek Nation members who tried to transfer their parcel to the tribal town. A judge deferred a decision on whether the land can be leased to the federal government. The tribal town's members are affiliated with the larger Creek tribe, which has jurisdiction in the area.

Crews already have begun bulldozing the 20-acre site near the Creek Turnpike, even though the land issue is unresolved and the tribal town's application for a gaming license is still under review by the National Indian Gaming Commission.

Dennis Whittlesey, an attorney representing the tribe of about 450, believes further approval is not needed to the build the casino. He said Tuesday he hadn't seen the lawsuit, and called it "premature."

"There is no federal jurisdiction over this matter until and unless Class III gaming commences and that is months away," Whittlesey said by telephone from Florida. "We will be filing a motion to dismiss when and if it (the lawsuit) is ever served."

Pruitt submitted the 21-page lawsuit to the court, but said the court hadn't filed it yet. His spokeswoman, Diane Clay, said a lawsuit isn't considered filed in the Northern District until the court assigns a number to the document, which hadn't been done by late Tuesday.

In Oklahoma, Class III gaming includes electronic games that are similar to Las Vegas-style slot machines and skill games like video poker. Tribes are required to enter into state compacts to offer Class III games.

A telephone listing for the tribal town's leader, or king, Tiger Hobia, couldn't be found on Tuesday. Hobia has said the casino is an economic opportunity that would help the tribe become more self-sufficient and less reliant on the federal government. The tribe plans to build a temporary facility in the spring.

Okla. receives more $90M for Indian housing

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) – The U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development has awarded more than $90 million in Indian Housing Block Grant allocations to 31 tribes in Oklahoma.

HUD officials said last Wednesday Oklahoma's share is part of more than $400 million that was distributed nationwide. The money is intended to benefit low-income families living on Native American reservations or in other communities.

According to HUD, the Cherokee Nation of Oklahoma received the largest single amount of any tribe in the state – more than $29 million. The Muscogee Creek Nation was awarded more than $15 million; the Chickasaw Nation got more than $12 million and more than $11 million went to the Choctaw Nation.

The funding can be used for housing development, crime prevention and safety and housing services to eligible families.

for ourselves. for our families. for future generations.

Oklahoma ranks 48th nationally for health. That is unacceptable. We can no longer sit idle when our health hangs in the balance.

There is a plan to create healthier lives for all Oklahomans - the Oklahoma Health Improvement Plan. Endorsed by the legislature, this plan outlines a clear path of action to save lives and improve our health. Join us by supporting:

Restore the rights of local communities to pass smokefree policies that are stronger than state law

Assure health education is taught in sixth, seventh or eighth grade for all state public schools

Prohibit the use of a hand-held electronic device while driving for all drivers under the age of 18

Let's pull together to Shape Our Future. Your state is counting on you.

Wash. court upholds tribal fishing rights

SHANNON DININNY

Associated Press

YAKIMA, Wash. (AP) - State wildlife authorities had no right to cite a Yakama Nation fisherman for catching undersized fish at a Columbia River tribal fishing site, the Washington Supreme Court ruled Feb. 9 in a split decision.

The case stems from a 2008 citation at the Maryhill Treaty Fishing Access Site, one of several sites set aside by Congress exclusively for five Northwest tribes to exercise their treaty fishing rights.

The state had argued it rightfully assumed criminal jurisdiction there, but the high court disagreed in a 6-3 decision from Olympia, Wash.

"The state lacks criminal jurisdiction at Maryhill because the treaty fishing access site is tribal land, established and reserved by Congress for the exclusive use of tribal members," the court wrote.

In 1998, Congress established several fishing sites along the Columbia River to replace accustomed tribal fishing areas that had been previously guaranteed by treaty but were destroyed by dams.

At the Maryhill site, state wildlife officials cited Lester Ray Jim, an enrolled Yakama, on June 25, 2008 for unlawfully retaining undersized

Jim caught five undersized sturgeon in his gill net while fishing commercially from the Maryhill site, and said he planned to follow tribal practice and release the live fish to the river from shore.

Sturgeon can survive out of water for several hours.

Both state and tribal laws bar fishermen from retaining undersized sturgeon, but only state law requires that the unauthorized fish be returned to the water immediately.

Jim filed a motion in Klickitat County District Court, challenging the state's jurisdiction to prosecute him. The court dismissed the case, and the state appealed. Higher courts alternately ruled in both sides' favor, with the state ultimately appealing a Washington state Court of Appeals ruling to the high court.

Three justices dissented from the majority

Creation of an Indian reservation must be "more purposeful" than simply authorizing the Army to purchase sites and improve them for fishing access, Justice Charles K. Wiggins wrote.

Not letting go: Fighting Sioux nickname lives again in ND

DALE WETZEL

Associated Press

BISMARCK, N.D. (AP) - The University of North Dakota will resume using its contentious Fighting Sioux nickname despite threats from the NCAA, the school's president said Wednesday, marking the latest twist in a protracted fight about a name that critics consider offensive.

A state law requiring the university to use its longtime nickname and logo, which shows the profile of an American Indian warrior, was repealed in November. The university has since been trying to retire the moniker, but nickname supporters filed petitions late Tuesday demanding that the issue be put to a statewide vote.

University President Robert Kelley said the school decided to resume using the name and logo to respect the state's referendum process, which requires the pronickname law be in effect while the secretary of state reviews the petition signatures over the next month.

'As soon as that petition was filed last night, the law reverts,' Kelley told The Associated Press. 'I don't want to violate the law.'

The NCAA has told the university that continued use of the nickname and logo would expose the school to sanctions. The school could not host postseason tournaments, and its athletes could not wear uniforms with the logo or nickname in postseason play.

Emails and phone messages left with the NCAA were not immediately returned Wednesday. The university and leaders in Grand Forks, where the school is located, had opposed the law.

Kelley said the men's and women's hockey teams and the women's basketball team have a chance for post-season play in the coming months, and it was unclear how the teams would be affected.

'I don't know whether this is going to put us back on the (sanctions) list or not, Kelly said. 'But clearly, by being mandated by state law to be Fighting Sioux, we are right back to where we were before the repeal.'

The state Board of Higher Education will likely meet with North Dakota Attorney General Wayne Stenehjem on Monday to discuss whether to go to court to block reinstatement of the law, board President Grant Shaft said.

The dispute began in 2006, when the NCAA prodded 19 schools to get rid of American Indian nicknames, logos and mascots that it considered 'hostile and abusive' to Indians. The University of North Dakota is the only school left where the issue is in serious dispute.

The NCAA said the schools, to avoid sanctions, had to change their nicknames or obtain permission from local tribes. Most changed their names, although the Florida State Seminoles and the Central Michigan Chippewas were among the schools that got tribal permission to keep their nicknames.

North Dakota challenged the NCAA edict in court. In a settlement, the school agreed to begin retiring its nickname if it couldn't obtain consent to continue its use from North Dakota's Standing Rock and Spirit Lake Sioux tribes by Nov. 30, 2010.

Spirit Lake tribal members endorsed the name. But the Standing Rock Sioux's tribal council, which opposed the nickname, has declined to support it or to allow its tribal members to

The law forcing the school to use the name and logo was approved last March, despite opposition from university officials and Grand Forks legislators. Supporters of the proposal included some prominent university alumni.

The law's chief sponsor, Republican House Majority Leader Al Carlson, said he resented the NCAA's bullying and what he regarded as the Board of Higher Education's clumsy handling of the matter. Carlson hoped the law would make the NCAA reconsider its opposition to the nickname and logo, but the NCAA was adamant.

The law was repealed during a special legislative session in November, with many former supporters switching sides and saying it had not accomplished its purpose of influencing the NCAA.

Supporters of the nickname, including some members of the Standing Rock Sioux, said they turned in petitions with more than 17,000 signatures late Tuesday in support of the law. The required minimum is 13,452 names.

Reed Soderstrom, chairman of the referendum campaign, hailed the university's decision Wednesday and discouraged education board members from going back to court.

'They would seem to be following a method of trying to disenfranchise the voters, and I don't think they have the power to do that, he said.

NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES

Publisher & Editor LISA SNELL editor@nativetimes.com

Contributing Writers Dana Attocknie WESLEY MAHAN KAREN SHADE

Advertising Sales KATHLEEN ROBERTSON LISA SNELL ROB WALTON advertising@nativetimes.com

Distribution SHELBY HICKS STEVE LACY WESLEY MAHAN MICHAEL MARRIS KATHLEEN ROBERTSON Brenda Slaughter

The Native American Times, formerly the Oklahoma Indian Times, is published weekly (except the last week of the year) by Lisa Hicks Snell. Mailing address is PO Box 411 Tahleguah, OK 74465. All the contents within the Native American Times are copyrighted material. Any reproduction, redistribution without the written consent of the NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES is strictly

> Each week's issue is available for free download online at: www.nativetimes.com

Subscription rates: $65.00 for fifty-two issues, $32.50 for twenty-six issues, or $16.25 for thirteen issues. A single copy is $1.25 (Rates are for postage and handling) Send check or money order to:

NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES Attn: Subscriptions P.O. Box 411 Tahlequah, OK 74465-0411

Phone: (918) 708-5838 Fax: (888) 689-4873

Postmaster: Send Change of Address Form 579 to: NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES P.O. Box 411, Tahlequah, OK 74465

WWW.NATIVETIMES.COM - News from the crossroads of Indian Country

Continued from Page 1

Lawmakers are considering legislation this year that would allow the state to limit the types of alcohol sold in areas like Whiteclay.

by The Associated Press. A spokeswoman for Anheuser-Busch InBev Worldwide said she was not yet aware of the lawsuit, and the other four companies being sued - SAB Miller, Molson Coors Brewing Company, MIllerCoors LLC and Pabst Brewing Company - did not immediately return messages.

The lawsuit alleges that the beer makers and stores sold to Pine Ridge residents knowing they would smuggle the alcohol into the reservation to drink or resell. The beer makers supplied the stores with "volumes of beer far in excess of an amount that could be sold in compliance with the laws of the state of Nebraska" and the tribe, tribal officials allege in the lawsuit.

The vast majority of Whiteclay's beer store poverty standards. customers have no legal place to consume alcohol since it's banned on Pine Ridge, which is just north, state law prohibits drinking outside the stores and the nearest town that allows alcohol is more than 20 miles (32 kilometers) south, said Mark Vasina, president of the group Nebraskans for

The Connecticut-sized reservation has struggled with alcoholism and poverty for generations, despite an alcohol ban in place since 1832. Pine Ridge legalized alcohol in 1970 but restored the ban two months later, and an attempt to allow it in 2004 died after a public outcry.

The reservation spans impoverished areas, including

Shannon County, Dakota, which U.S. census statistics place as the thirdpoorest in the U.S. It has a median household income of $27,300 and nearly half of the population falls below federal Tribal President John Yellow Bird Steele said the tribe council authorized the lawsuit in an effort to protect the reservation's youth.

"Like American parents everywhere, we will do everything lawful we can to protect the health, welfare and future of our children," he said.

The tribe views the lawsuit as a last resort after numerous failed attempts to curb the abuse through protests and public pressure on lawmakers, White added. He said the tribal council voted unanimously about four months ago to hire his law firm.

"The illegal sale and trade in alcohol in Whiteclay is open, notorious and well documented by news reports, legislative hearings, movies, public protests and law enforcement activities," the lawsuit states. " All of the above have resulted in the publication of the facts of the illegal trade in alcohol and its devastating effects on the Lakota people, especially its children, both born and unborn." Nebraska lawmakers have struggled for years to curb the problem, and are considering legislation this year that would allow the state to limit the types of alcohol sold in areas like Whiteclay. The measure would require local authorities to ask the state to designate the area an "alcohol impact zone." The state liquor commission could then limit the hours alcohol sellers are open, ban the sale of certain products or impose other restrictions. Nebraska state Sen. LeRoy Louden, whose district includes Whiteclay, said he introduced the measure with support from county officials who have seen their health care and jail incarceration costs rise.

Metal Roofing & Siding

Professional Construction and Home Repairs

Free Estimates

Charles Snell 918-507-2902

Native American Contractor

VINITA 918-256-5585

LANGLEY 918-782-0011

MONKEY ISLAND 918-257-8869

www.okstatebank.com

Equal Housing Lender Native American Owned

We proudly offer an array of services, from general dentistry to sedation, dental implants, and cosmetic dentistry - all designed expressly to meet our patient's changing needs. With four general dentists and four hygienists, we can maintain your oral health for a lifetime all at one location.

We Accept Contract Health & Sooner Care

We serve patients in the Drumright, Cushing, Stillwater, Stroud, Ponca City, and surrounding areas with personalized service and exemplary care. Call for your appointment today.

918-352-3312 or Toll Free 877-RH Melton drumrightdentalcenter.com

SUPERNAW'S OKLAHOMA INDIAN SUPPLY

Wholesale items for Pow Wow Vendors

Bone chokers $20 per dozen

Handmade lamp worked glass bead bracelets $1.00 each Glass bead stretch bracelets 5 for $2.50 12 Necklaces: Chain w/ pendant and display pad $13.50

36 inch gemstone chip strands Reg. 3.95 now $2.00 36 inch turquoise chip strands Reg. 7.95 now $4.00

Always our regular stock of seed beads from 16/0 to 8/0, findings, leather, hackles, fluffs and thousands of other supply items.

Remember we've moved around the corner 109 North Broadway, Skiatook, OK 74070

New Dealers Cash or Credit Card Only.

Open Noon-6pm Mon. thru Fri. • 10am-5m Sat. • Closed Sun. Local: 396-1713-Countrywide Toll Free 1-888-720-1967

Website: www.supernaw.com • Email: Supernaw@flash.net

Enthusiasts track history of Quanah Parker

RAY WESTBROOK

Lubbock Avalanche-Journal

LUBBOCK, Texas (AP) - Line by line, arrow by arrow, the lifetime of Quanah Parker is being pieced together by historians of the Texas Plains Trail Region.

From the shadowy, undocumented time around the 1870s when he rode across the staked plains as a leader of Comanche tribesmen, Parker - half Anglo, half Native American - was a force to be reckoned with.

Anglos sometimes paid with their lives when the force was encountered, and Comanches fell also in the friction of a hit-and-run war that produced outrageous suffering for both sides.

Parker and his mounted warriors so intimately knew the South Plains and Panhandle region, they were able to attack suddenly, then fade into the prairie like ghosts.

Now, cities across a 52-county area are looking for evidence showing Quanah Parker and his Comanches once visited their neighborhoods.

Historian Tai Kreidler of the Southwest Collection/Special Collections Library at Texas Tech, describes how the research is recovering bits and pieces of the mosaic that was Parker's life.

"The grassroots aspect of this project continues as each county and city that applied for an arrow had to research and provide documentation of a Comanche or Quanah Parker connection," he said.

The arrow, one of gigantic dimensions designed by Charles Smith of the New Home area, can be planted as a marker in a town along the Texas Plains Trail if the Comanche chief came that way.

"The Southwest Collection and Randy Vance of Reference Services assists cities and counties with this process by providing reference source assistance to any of these groups needing background information," Kreidler said.

Vance is willing to help:

"We have created a Comanche finding aid for the journals we have here in the Southwest Collection. They can come here, or for some who are further away and know of articles or photographs, we can photocopy that material and send it to them."

An unexpected treasure has been discovered in the work:

"What has been a really amazing part of the process is that each county has emerged with their own folklore and history surrounding the Comanche or Quanah presence," Kreidler said.

According to Smith, the 21-foot arrow is made of 4-inch diameter pipe, then painted in Comanche colors.

"We put 20 inches into the ground, so about 19 feet is above ground," he Feathers are forged from quarterinch steel rods.

Research consultant Holle Humphries said the counties in the region have a particular identity: "We realized what all of our counties shared in common was this past history of having had a common Comanche presence prior to the arrival of white settlers."

She said, "The Texas Panhandle was the last area where Native Americans lived free and unrestricted - to roam as they had always roamed in nomadic fashion."

new arrow locations became an unforeseen learning experience.

"There is not a place you go that you don't learn something special: They have Quanah Parker peyote robes at the museum in Tulia; they have Quanah Parker moccasins in the little museum that is in the old courthouse of old Tascosa at Boys Ranch; you can go by Quanah Parker's birthplace at Cedar Lake."

films to relate that history to visitors when the jail restoration is complete," she said.

Parker, like West Point graduate Ranald Mackenzie, apparently found his element in war, and was able to hold the Panhandle territory for a time against even the United States Fourth Cavalry.

When Col. Mackenzie was unsuccessfulintrackingandsubduing from the U.S. Army and suffering from hunger, surrendered and moved to the Kiowa-Comanche reservation southwestern Oklahoma, according to Hosmer.

But the depths of Parker could be seen more in defeat than in victory. On the reservation lands, he began raising cattle and encouraging his people to learn both the yoke and blessings of civilization. He also was learning to greet other cattlemen of the time – and presidents.

Mosser said, "For me personally in all of this, was learning about Quanah Parker as a cattleman, a statesman, the politician type - he was hobnobbing with presidents. I think it was Theodore Roosevelt who came and hunted with him."

She added, "The statesman side of this Native American - just in a very short time he went from battling buffalo soldiers and following buffalo herds to being in an inaugural parade."

Humphries said, "Right here in Spur, Texas - in their Dickens County Museum, they have the war bonnet that Quanah Parker wore in Teddy Roosevelt's 1905 inaugural parade."

Hanaba Munn Welch, who set up the web site www.quanahparkertrail. com for the Texas Plains Trail Region to make some of the connections to Quanah Parker available to the public, said he was a skilled politician who looked out for the members of his tribe as best he could.

"Some Comanches faulted him for giving in too much, but I think he was doing what he thought was

She said of her research, "We have him captured in a black and white silent movie, riding a horse, and driving up to the bank in Cache, Okla., in his stage coach and chasing the bad guys as part of a posse. It was the early 1900s, and Quanah had been killing white people back in the 1870s, maybe 30 years before."

Mosser said Parker likely became the wealthiest Native American of the time because of his cattle operations.

Parker apparently didn't completely adopt civilization's ways: He declined to give up his seven wives and the 22room house they lived in.

In February 1911, he became ill while visiting a Cheyenne Reservation, and returned to his home, where he died.

He was buried at the Post Oak Mission Cemetery beside his mother, Cynthia Ann Parker. Later, in an expansion of a missile base, they were reburied at Lawton, Okla., in a section of the Fort Sill Post Cemetery

When this region's descendants both settlers and Native Americans - look back across time, they can see the reality of the years:

called Chief's Knoll.

Then it was a time of war, now a

Quanah Parker stands on the porch of his home in this historic photo.

She alludes also to a poetic imagery of the marker arrow first envisioned by Gid Moore of New Home, and then discovered while she and Dolores Mosser were working on the Plains Trail Region together. Moore had commissioned Smith to make an arrow for his business reminiscent of a Longfellow poem titled "The Arrow and the Song."

Humphries said, "Right at the top of it, the fletching ("feather") vibrates in the wind and it sings. So, it's the arrow and the song."

Mosser, a board member of the Texas Plains Trail Region, said the project initially was designed to provide a kind of cultural trail across the 52 counties that could attract travelers to the region and encourage economic development.

But along the way, the search for Marisue Potts of Matador, the first town to receive one of the arrows, said, "Quanah Parker, the man, left not only his tracks in Motley County, but imprinted his charisma and diplomacy upon the many friends he made among the ranchers and townspeople."

She is a writer, chairwoman of the Motley County Historical Committee and vice president of the West Texas Historical Association.

"People who notice the arrow are curious and since there is no signage yet, they stop and ask questions about its significance. That gives the local historians a chance to relate the colorful history of the Comanche camping at Roaring Springs, Dutchman Creek and Ballard Creek near the historic Motley County Jail. In the works are documentary short the Indians in 1871 and 1872, Parker boldly raided the cavalry campsite at Blanco Canyon on the morning of Oct. 9, 1871, taking a number of horses, according to research done by Brian C. Hosmer, writing for the Texas State Historical Association's Handbook of Texas.

"Afterward, the Indians seemingly disappeared onto the plains, only to reappear and attack again. Mackenzie gave up the search in mid-1872," Hosmer wrote.

Mackenzie But successfully defeated Kiowas, Cheyennes and some Comanches under another chief in Palo Duro Canyon in late 1874, and essentially finished the wars by destroying the Indians' horses and food supplies.

Within a year, Parker and his warriors, under continuing pressure time of peace.

LAWSUIT

of their constitutional, civil and employee rights. The suit, filed on Jan. 26, states, "Plaintiffs were openly political affiliates of his opponent during the Principal Chief's election. After he took office, Defendant Baker embarked on a course of retaliation against Plaintiffs ..."

At least 10 employees were sent home on "Bloody Thursday" in an allegedly public manner.

"I was terminated as soon as Baker took office," Olaya stated. "I was fired in a distasteful and unprofessional manner. Baker brought in his political cronies, the marshals and the media to watch his firing of staff. This action was purely political revenge because I supported Chad Smith and because I am a Mankiller. Who an employee votes for or supports should never be cause for termination. It is against the law."

Olaya had been Smith's executive assistant since 1999 and is the lead defendant on the case.

The brief states McAlvain, Rusco and Ragsdale were told they were laid off and Olaya was told her expired employee agreement was not renewed.

"My supervisor was in pure shock. They actually told her that they wanted me gone. She asked if I could get transferred, she asked if maybe I could be moved out of the administration area, they said no," McAlvain said. "I actually called Chief Baker and asked why he wanted me out ... he couldn't give me a reason. I actually heard him have a brief conversation with someone else that said 'We told her that we reorganized.' You reorganize an organization; you don't reorganize one person ... His words to me were 'You know I want to bring my own people in at the top ... and you can apply for other positions.' I said why don't you just let me transfer out and he said 'no."

McAlvain had worked for the Cherokee Nation since 2007.

Ragsdale, the former government relations officer and former member of the tribal council, was sent home Oct. 20 on administrative leave. She said she didn't hear anything about her job until she received a certified letter on Jan. 5 letting her know her position was eliminated. Until then, she said her employment record was unblemished and she scored at high performance levels on all her evaluations through the years.

"I know he can't know about my performances if I haven't worked for him for more than a day ... and it should be about performance," Ragsdale said. "The principal chief took an Oath of Office to uphold the law and policies of the Cherokee Nation. He took an oath the night before, and I feel he violated his Oath of Office that very first day by sending us home."

Ragsdale said on Baker's first day in office, all the employee computers were swept as well, "So they got information off everyone's computer."

Olaya and McAlvain's case has been heard by the Cherokee Nation Employee Appeals Board (AEB), however it was ruled there is a lack of jurisdiction because they were allegedly laid off. McAlvain said her appeal will now go before the Cherokee Nation Supreme Court. Ragsdale and Rusco have not been before the three-member EAB yet. The civil suit by the four former employees against Baker is filed with the Cherokee Nation District Court.

"Illegally and unjustly denying someone employment is serious; everyone needs the ability to pay for food and shelter," Rusco stated. "These employee terminations were political prejudice; the law was not followed, much less policy. If we don't stand up against this injustice other employees won't be safe from wrongful termination as well."

Rusco is the former director of communications.

The suit looks into violations of due process, human resource polices and processes, and rights to freedom of speech and association. Representing McAlvain, Olaya, Rusco, and Ragsdale is former Cherokee Nation Principal Chief Chad Smith.

Smith, who is representing the women pro bono, told the Associated Press last week that he has no agenda in bringing the case against Baker, to whom he lost his bid for Chief in last year's contentious election.

"These particular people, they cannot afford an attorney otherwise," Smith said. "I believe they were wronged."

According to the suit, the plaintiffs are asking for $250,000 in general damages; a special damage amount to be determined during trial; $1,000,000 in punitive damages; cost of suit and attorney fees; and other relief the court may deem proper.

"This is for me and everybody else. If he's (Baker) going to do it to me, he's going to do it to you; anyone who lets him do it. That's why the constitution's there ... so no one walks around feeling like on any given day they could lose their job," McAlvain said. "I thought about this battle and I thought about it long and hard and it's not just about me. It's about every other employee who might be put in the same position and be without a job and trying to support their family as well."

McAlvain said she would like her back pay and her job back. Ragsdale said she would like her job back too.

"I love my job. There's nothing better than working for your own people. It was family. I put my heart and soul into it and just to be walked out like that is pretty humiliating," Ragsdale said.

Cherokee Nation Deputy Director of Communication Lenzy Krehbiel-Burton said, "The Baker administration has no comment on pending litigation."

FREEDMEN

traditions of his Indian heritage, including his participation in stomp dances, in his hometown of Okmulgee, which is also the headquarters of the Creek Nation, Graham said.

"That's why this is so dear to me," he said. "I was born and raised in the Creek Nation right there in Okmulgee. ... We just want to be federally recognized, because that's who we are."

Edwin Marshall, Creek Nation chief of staff, said the tribe has no comment because the freedmen descendants now have no affiliation with the Creek Nation.

Marshall said the tribe properly conducted a referendum to remove the freedmen descendants from the Creek Nation rolls and that the descendants are starting a new Freedmen were the former slaves of Indians and were guaranteed full rights and privileges to the tribes to which they had belonged in the U.S. Treaty of 1866.

"We're Creek Indians. We are also of African descent. It's hard for people to believe, but ... we're both, though, That's how it is," Graham

The descendants have since become a central part of tribal sovereignty issues, as several tribes, including the Cherokee Nation, have also voted to expel freedmen descendants from their ranks.

Tribal leaders often attribute a resentment of the treaty to the U.S. government's repeated violation of it while forcing tribes to adhere to

The votes to expel freedmen descendants are the result of tribes' seeking to allow enrollment only of Indians with traceable bloodlines to the tribe.

However, Graham and other Creek freedmen descendants can show bloodlines tracing back to nonfreedmen Indians, unlike other groups of freedmen.

Additionally, the criteria for becoming a federally recognized tribe doesn't require proof of Indian blood, Graham said. The standards just require proof that the tribe's members have ancestors on the original Indian rolls, which the Creek freedmen descendants have,

They were just designated freedmen descendants along the way because they also had African lineage, Graham said.

Based on those and other arguments, Graham said the Muscogee Creek Indian Freedmen Band should be federally recognized.

"This is precedent. They haven't dealt with anyone in our position right now," he said. "We're not sure what to expect. If they go by facts and documents, we believe we will be federally recognized. ... It will be shocking to me if they do deny us. But I strongly believe that we have our documents well in hand."

COMMENTARY

Indians as mascots for America's fun and games

NOTES FROM INDIAN COUNTRY

TIM GIAGO (Nanwica Kciji) © 2012 Unity South Dakota

"The dogs may bark, but the caravan moves on," is an old Arab proverb.

I quoted this old saying more than 25 years ago when I first broached the subject of the use of Indians as mascots for America's fun and games. An article I wrote for Newsweek Magazine in 1991, the year the Washington professional football team played in the Super Bowl in Minneapolis, Minnesota, brought a deluge of hate mail of the likes I have never experienced before.

This was before the Internet and email so the letters came to me as snail-mail and they weren't just letters because the page my article appeared on under the heading "I Hope the Redskins Lose," was torn from the magazine and sent to me with big, red lettering that, in most cases, read "F - -K you Giago." As I wrote many times since, I did not write that headline. It was like waving a red flag in the face of the Redskin football fanatics. Since then whenever I have to use the Redskin word I always refer to it as the "R-Word." And why should it not carry the same inference as the "N-Word?"

An article I wrote on the same topic several years later for the New York Times also brought an outpouring of similar hate mail. But it convinced me that there was no easy way to point out to America that most Native Americans do not appreciate their use as mascots especially in many of the extremely insensitive ways they are depicted.

The classic example I often use is the time a pig was painted red, a feathered war bonnet attached to its head, and then the painted pig was chased around the football field at half-time at a Washington "R-Word" game. Would the cheering fans have felt the same if a pig had been painted black and an Afro-wig attached to its head? Of course not, you say? Then kindly let me know what the difference is? One painted pig is clearly an Indian and the other an African-American so which pig connotes racism?

The topic of Indians as mascots is on my mind because a die-hard group of fans at the University of North Dakota refuse to let their Fighting Sioux mascot rest in peace.

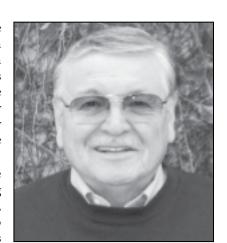

There is one tribe in North Dakota that approves of their use as mascots: the Spirit Lake Sioux Tribe. I wish members of this tribe would have accompanied me to the University of Illinois campus several years ago when I covered the Indians protesting the use of Chief Illiniwek as the school's mascot.

Two of the people leading the protest are now deceased; Vernon Bellecourt and Michael Haney. Protests across America have diminished tremendously since their passing. I was appalled to witness the hostility against the protesters at U of I that day. While the protestors marched to the stadium, passengers in passing cars flipped burning cigarettes at them while cursing them with the worst forms of profanity. Stadium police stopped a group of Illini fans from dumping a huge vat of water from the stadium wall as the protestors marched beneath it. Objects were hurled at the protestors as they marched. "Go home you dirty Indians" reverberated around the stadium.

And I wish the members of the Spirit Lake tribe who think being used as mascots is hunky dory, would have been standing next to us at the Super Bowl in Minneapolis in 1991. The police waded into the protesting Indians swinging their batons knocking Indian men and women to the ground. Charlene Teeters, one of this Nation's foremost leaders in the fight to quash the use of Indians as mascots, was knocked to the ground. Later she said, "I will never go to Minneapolis again. The police were absolutely brutal."

Yet, after all of this, the University of North Dakota, in the face of censorship by the NCAA, will bring back the Fighting Sioux mascot despite the restrictions that will be placed upon it by the NCAA and despite the protests of Native Americans everywhere. Is using this symbol of racism that important to an institution of higher learning?

I pray that the more intelligent and sensitive people at Spirit Lake and at UND prevail and convince those who still refuse to speak out against this travesty will let it be known that most Native Americans do not consider it an honor to be mimicked, insulted and demeaned by sports fans across America in the name of a high school, college or professional sports team mascot.

Tim Giago

I would also remind those insistent upon denigrating Native Americans in the name of sports teams that the year is 2012 and racial epitaphs that rang across America for more than 500 years are now passé and in continuing this archaic practice, they are also denigrating themselves. And please try to understand that Native Americans are human beings and not mascots for America's fun and games.

So let the dogs keep barking because I and thousands of other Native Americans will be a caravan moving on to change bad things in America.

Tim Giago, an Oglala Lakota, is President of Unity South Dakota. He was a Nieman Fellow at Harvard with the Class of 1990. His weekly column won the H. L. Mencken Award in 1985. He was the founder of The Lakota Times, Indian Country Today, Lakota Journal and Native Sun News. He can be reached at UnitySoDak1@knology.net

anyone who claims the right to use water from any of the basins could be included.

In August, the tribes sued the state and Oklahoma City in U.S. District Court to stop the Water Resources Board from selling the rights to water storage in southeastern Oklahoma's Sardis Lake to the Oklahoma City Water Utility Trust. The state has asked a federal judge to dismiss the tribal lawsuit.

Burrage has said the lawsuit's goal was to have the state recognize the tribe's sovereignty over water in territories covered by treaties with the federal government and to determine how much water is actually in the region to make sure tribal needs are met.

State and city officials have expressed alarm over the tribe's water rights claims in 22 southeastern Oklahoma counties. An amended federal lawsuit filed last month also claimed the 100-mile long Atoka Pipeline that has delivered water to homes and businesses in Oklahoma City and other central Oklahoma communities for almost 50 years.

"In short, the tribes, over the past decade, have made various attempts to inject uncertainty into the state's ability to regulate the waters within the southeastern corner of the state, and in particular the basins, threatening water rights under existing and pending state permits - all part of a concerted effort to coerce the state into entering a compact or agreement giving the tribes water rights, including the power to regulate waters in the basins," the state's Supreme Court lawsuit says. Jim Couch, Oklahoma City's city manager and a trustee for the Water Utility Trust, said the state had no choice but to seek adjudication.

"We acknowledge that the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes have some rights to water in the basins, but their broad claims are unprecedented and threaten the economy and well-being of all of Oklahoma," Couch said.

"Further, the tribes own less than 5 percent of the land in these water basins and fewer than 10 percent of the people in this part of the state identify themselves as members of the tribes to the U.S. Census," he

The viewpoints expressed in columns and letters are the opinions of the writers and not necessarily the opinion or viewpoint of the Native American Times publisher or staff. Send letters to editor@nativetimes.com. Please keep letters to 350 words or less. Sign your name, tribal affiliation and city of residence for verification purposes.

Name: ___

Phone:

VINITA 918-256-5585

LANGLEY 918-782-0011

MONKEY ISLAND 918-257-8869

www.okstatebank.com Equal Housing Lender Native American Owned

Native TIMES recycles with Tahlequah Recycling Incorporated... Reeves Renovations Professional Construction, Remodeling & Repairs

Bathrooms • Kitchens • Paint Tile • Trim • Plumbing Electrical • Solar Panels Windmills • Winterizing Quality Work • Free Estimates

918-637-6736 johnwilliamreeves@juno.com Mayes & Cherokee Counties

Follow Us! www.twitter.com/nativetimes

NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES

Address:
City:	State:	_ Zip:

■ $65.00 for 52 issues ■ $32.50 for 26 issues

■ $16.25 for 13 issues ■ $1.25 single copy

Mail this form with a check or money order to: Native American Times • P.O. Box 411 Tahlequah, OK 74465 • 918-708-5838

More Jobs. More News. More Features. Every Day.

shouldn't you?

www.nativetimes.com

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT / HELP WANTED

Absentee Shawnee Tribal Health Authority, Inc. AST Counseling Center

AST Counseling Center is an outpatient behavioral health counseling center within the AST Health Systems. AST Counseling Center provides services to Native Americans as well as non-Native Americans who are on Medicaid/Medicare. AST Counseling Center is currently located in our expanded SHAWNEE CLINIC and will move soon to our newly constructed (76,000 sq. ft) AMBULATORY CARE CLINIC in LITTLE AXE, OK

AST Counseling Center is looking for highly motivated and career oriented professionals to complement the current staff and to provide a larger range of quality care for our patients.

ASTHA is looking for Psychologists and Psychiatrist as well as BH Clinicians who are LADC, LSCW, LMFT or LPC credentialed professionals.

We offer competitive salaries (Clinicians-$45k to $65K; Psychologist & Psychiatrist are negotiable) as well as employer paid benefits for employees such as: medical and dental insurance, group life, short term disability, 401K with matching contribution, AAA. We also offer voluntary products such as vision insurance, add'l group life, accident insurance, and other voluntary insurance products. Position descriptions and application information are available online at www.astribe.com

If you have any questions about the ASTCC please contact Kristy Morrell @ 405.878.5850 or Briana Ponkilla @ 405.878.4702. Applications/resumes can be emailed to bponkilla@astribe.com or faxed to 405.878.4540.

Native American Preference/EEO/Smoke Free/Drug Free Workplace

Absentee Shawnee Tribal Health Authority, Inc. Recruiting for the following positions:

Board Certified Family Physician Nurse Practitioner/Physician Assistant Behavioral Health Clinicians Registered Nurses

Financial Director

Budget Tech Personnel Assistant Network Administrator Medical Coder Patient Benefit Advocate

Insurance Specialist Located in our expanded SHAWNEE CLINIC and newly constructed (76,000 sq. ft)

AMBULATORY CARE CLINIC

in LITTLE AXE, OK

Position descriptions and application information are available online at www.astribe.com Ouestions/Inquiries: Contact Briana Ponkilla, Dir. Of Personnel, at bponkilla@astribe.com or 405.878.4702

Native American Preference/EEO/ Smoke Free & Drug Free Workplace

Sac & Fox Nation Casino is accepting Applications for

Security Manager Facilities Manager Floor Manager Assistant Accounting Manager Accounts Payable Specialist

Applicants must pass background and drug screen. Native American preference is recognized.

Submit resume by fax @ 405-395-0790 or visit our website at sandfcasino.com to apply online

Sac & Fox Nation Casino is accepting Applications for

General Manager

Qualifications: Bachelors Degree in Business / Marketing Strong Leadership Skills Casino Management Experience

Applicants must pass background and drug screen. Native American preference is recognized.

Submit resume by fax @ 405-395-0790 or visit our website at sandfcasino.com to apply online

Environmental Director

Kialegee Tribal Town requests resumes for the position of Environmental Director. Must have four years experience in Environmental Protection and/or related field. Must be able to follow Tribal policies and have at least three years experience with Federal Policies. Salary negotiable, Indian preference applies, others welcome. E-mail resumes to: kialegeetribaltown@ymail.com or send to Administrator @ P.O. Box 332 Wetumka, OK 74883. Closing date: February 17,2012 @ 4:30 P.M.

OK PUBLIC EMPLOYEES RETIREMENT SYSTEM

CALL CENTER REP

Responsible for large volume of inbound calls, providing benefit information and troubleshooting memberissues. Excellent interpersonal and customer service skills required. Must be proficient in current software applications including Word and Excel. Hiring rate: $33,489/yr. Deadline for applications: 2/23/2012. For more information and application procedures, go to http://www.opers. ok.gov/jobs. EOE

Look for Native American Times on Facebook! Friends get front page scoops and breaking news.

EVENTS

*Email your powwow or

nativetimes.com. Name,

date, time, place and

EVERY WEDNESDAY

Kiowa class beginning

in February at 6:30 pm,

Oliphant Hall, Room 141,

Tulsa University. Info call

Sarah, (918) 445-5213

EVERY THURSDAY

The Otoe-Missouria

Substance Abuse and

sponsor an open group

for families touched by

addiction from noon to 1

Health Building. This is a p.m. at the Otoe-Missouria

confidential group. Call 580-

Cherokee Artists Association

meeting at 202 E. 5th Street

723-4466 x252 or x262 for more information.

SECOND TUESDAY

Tahlequah, Okla. Info:

(918) 458-0008 or www.

THIRD TUESDAY of even numbered months - The

cherokeeartistsassociation.

Behavioral Health Programs

other event info to: Lisa@

contact information is free.

will have their first rodeo of 2012 in Tahlequah Okla. For more info email

FEBRUARY 22 & 29 Smoke-Free Homes workshops sponsored by Osage Nation and Native American M-Power from 10 a.m. until Noon. sponsored by Osage Nation and Native American M-Power, are held from 10 a.m. until noon. Info call Osage Nation Native American M-Power at (918) 287-5380.

FEBRUARY 25

Wild Onion Dinner 11am to 3pm at Indian Fellowship Baptist Church, 6130 So. 58th W. Ave, Oakhurst, Okla. Info call Mary Kelly 918-636-

FEBRUARY 25 Bake Sale & Native Crafts, 10 am-1pm at Sapulpa Library, 27 W Dewey, Sapulpa, Okla.

Info: 918-852-6780

FEBRUARY 25 3rd Annual Hoops Basketball Tournament - Men's 5 on 5 Basketball Entry Fee: $110 Deadline: Feb. 22. Prizes: 1st place - long sleeve shirts, 2nd place – t-shirts Contact: Cristine Hooper-Ben 918-

MARCH 2

316-1111

Indian Taco Sale 11:00 AM - 2:00 PM at Norman First American UMC, 1950 East Beaumont Drive, Norman, Okla. Call Ahead for Speedy Service. Free Delivery on Orders of 10 or More (405) 321-5640

MARCH 3

Peoria Tribal Election for Treasurer and First Councilman. Polls open 9am-Noon, Peoria Tribal Administration Building Conference Room, 118 South Eight Tribes Trail in Miami, Okla.

MARCH 3-31

Tulsa Library's Festival of Words, a series of systemwide events to honor the achievements and celebrate the history of American Indians. For events and times, call the AskUs Hotline, 918-549-7323, or visit the library's website, www.tulsalibrary.org.

MARCH 10 Red Earth Run, Regatta Park, Oklahoma City

MARCH 17

Skate Jam Competition 10 am - dark at the "Skate Park Off Broadway," 105 Reynolds in Poteau Okla. www.nativeskateparks.com

MARCH 17

2011 OKC Princess Honor Dance at Heart of Oklahoma Expo Center, 1700 W. Independence, Shawnee, OK. Info contact Shirley Wapskineh 405-632-5227 or swapskineh@sbcglobal.net

MARCH 17 Wild Onion Dinner from 11 am til 3 pm at Haikey Chapel UMC, 8815 E 101st St, Tulsa. MARCH 23

Miss Indian Oklahoma City

Competition & Performance at 6:30 pm, 3801 SE 29th St. Del City, OK. Info contact Shirley Wapskineh 405-632-5227 or swapskineh@ sbcglobal.net

APRIL 6

Indian Taco Sale 11:00 AM - 2:00 PM at Norman First American UMC, 1950 East Beaumont Drive, Norman, Okla. Call Ahead for Speedy Service. Free

Delivery on Orders of 10 or More (405) 321-5640

APRIL 14 All Gourd Honor Dance for Micheal Tsotaddle at Red Carnegie, OK, 2p.m. - ? For more information call Darla Tsotaddle (405) 432-8377 or Mavis Tsotaddle (580) 654-1704.

MAY 4

Indian Taco Sale 11:00 AM - 2:00 PM at Norman First American UMC, 1950 East Beaumont Drive, Norman, Okla. Call Ahead for Speedy Service. Free Delivery on Orders of 10 or More (405) 321-5640

JUNE 1

Indian Taco Sale 11:00 AM - 2:00 PM at Norman First American UMC, 1950 East Beaumont Drive, Norman, Okla. Call Ahead for Speedy Service. Free Delivery on Orders of 10 or More (405) 321-5640

JUNE 8-10 Red Earth Festival, Cox Convention Center, Oklahoma City

JUNE 10-16

Jim Thorpe Native American Games at Remington Park, Oklahoma City. Proceeds benefit the Jim Thorpe Bright Path Youth Programs and Awakening The Spirit Diabetes Prevention and

www.jimthorpegames.com

Control program. Contact

Annetta Abbott: 405-208-

JULY 6

Indian Taco Sale 11:00 AM - 2:00 PM at Norman First American UMC, 1950 East Beaumont Drive, Norman, Okla. Call Ahead

for Speedy Service. Free

Delivery on Orders of 10 or More (405) 321-5640

JULY 9 - SEPT 28 The Potter & The Painter: Works by Lisa Rutherford and Jim Van Deman at Red Earth Museum & Gallery,

AUGUST 3

Oklahoma City

Indian Taco Sale 11:00 AM - 2:00 PM at Norman First American UMC, 1950 East Beaumont Drive, Norman, Okla. Call Ahead for Speedy Service. Free Delivery on Orders of 10 or More (405) 321-5640

SEPTEMBER 7

Indian Taco Sale 11:00 AM - 2:00 PM at Norman First American UMC, 1950 East Beaumont Drive, Norman, Okla. Call Ahead for Speedy Service. Free Delivery on Orders of 10 or More (405) 321-5640

OCTOBER 5

Indian Taco Sale 11:00 AM - 2:00 PM at Norman First American UMC, 1950 East Beaumont Drive, Norman, Okla. Call Ahead for Speedy Service. Free Delivery on Orders of 10 or More (405) 321-5640

NOVEMBER 2

Indian Taco Sale 11:00 AM - 2:00 PM at Norman First American UMC, 1950 East Beaumont Drive, Norman, Okla. Call Ahead for Speedy Service. Free Delivery on Orders of 10 or More (405) 321-5640

DECEMBER 7

Indian Taco Sale 11:00 AM - 2:00 PM at Norman First American UMC, 1950 East Beaumont Drive, Norman, Okla. Call Ahead for Speedy Service. Free Delivery on Orders of 10 or More (405) 321-5640

Central Oklahoma Cherokee Alliance meets at Mayflower UCC Church, Oklahoma City at 6 p.m. Phone: (405) 408-0763. The next meeting is Feb. 16. FOURTH THURSDAY

Each month the American Indian Chamber of Commerce of Oklahoma - Eastern Chapter hosts a monthly luncheon at Bacone fundraiser for Miss Yuchi/ College, Muskogee, Okla. 11:30 a.m. at Benjamin Wacoche Hall. Please RSVP one week ahead of time. Phone: (918) 230-3759

EVERY 2ND SATURDAY Indian Taco Sales - from 11-2:30pm at OK Choctaw Tribal Alliance, 5320 S.

FEBRUARY 18

Euchee 2011-2012 Janna Rolland, 7 a.m. - 11 a.m. at the Covenant Harvest Church, 722 N. Hodge Street Sapulpa, Ok (Over by Hickory house going west behind the convenience store) Proceeds to help with travels to appearances

www.okchoctaws.org

MON/WED AND THURS The Marble City Nutrition Center serves hot meals at the Marble City Community Center at 11:30 a.m. Meals are free to anyone over 50, but a small donation is suggested to help with the expense of the program. Gather for fellowship and

friendship. Volunteers welcome. Marble City Nutrition Center, 711 N. Main, Marble City, Okla. Phone: (918) 775-2158 YOUTH COUNCIL The Native Nations Youth Council (NNYC) bimonthly meetings from 6:30pm

- 8:30pm @ the Youth Services of Tulsa Activity Center (311 S. Madison - on 3rd just west of Peoria). Call to confirm location. Info Call: Chad Gilley (918) 382-2204 or nnyc@ihcrc.org

THROUGH MARCH 12 Free tobacco cessation course from 6 p.m. to 7 p.m. çççççWhitney Nuttle (918) 762-3873 or Suzy Knife Chief (918) 762-2153.

FEBRUARY 16-18 Tulsa Indian Art Festival at the Glenpool Conference Center, HWY 75 and 121st Street. Entry forms at www. tulsaindianartfestival.com.

All you can eat breakfast

Singer/songwriter Samantha Crain, Choctaw, has become a formidable name in the folk-rock music scene.

Choctaw artist playing shows in Tulsa, Norman

KAREN SHADE

Native American Times

TULSA, Okla. – Singer and songwriter Samantha Crain is headed back for Oklahoma with shows booked in Tulsa and Norman this weekend.

The Shawnee musician has been trotting the globe extensively in support of her most recent album, You (Understood), since its release in 2010. With the release of a brand new single, A Simple Jungle, Crain has set out on a new tour that started in Connecticut and will take her to Paris and London before heading to Texas. She plays Fassler Hall in Tulsa on Feb. 18 and Norman's Performing Arts Studio on Feb. 19.

Crain has been heavily followed by the music industry since the release of her EP The Confiscation in 2007. She has been covered in Rolling Stone and Paste magazines – two of the biggest and most popular entertainment publications today – and she has been interviewed for media around the world.

Showcased at hot music and arts festivals such as SXSW (South by Southwest) in Austin, Texas, and Tennessee's Bonnaroo, Crain has quickly become a formidable name in the folkrock scene of independent music and art as well known for her narrative storytellingstyle as for her rich alto voice.

In a November interview for the National Endowment for the Arts' Art Works blog, Crain explained how her Choctaw heritage and American identity inform her views and work.

"I am a product of American pop culture AND the Choctaw community. It would be dishonest for me to make completely traditional Native music and art because I was so heavily influenced by the secular world in which I grew up," she told Art Works. "However, I think it's important to keep traditions alive and to respect the ways that our relatives and ancestors lived. I think an artist that spoke of this same vision was Fritz Scholder, who is a huge inspiration to me."

Crain has been a nominee for the Aboriginal People's Choice Music Awards, Native American Music Awards and the Indian Summer Music Awards for songwriting, best new artist and folk music categories.

Fassler Hall is located at 304 S. Elgin Ave., in downtown Tulsa. For more, go to www.fasslerhall.com or call (918) 576-7898. Show begins at 8 p.m. Tickets are $7.

Performing Arts Studio is located at 200 S. Jones Ave., in Norman. For more go to www.pasnorman.org or call (405) 307-9320. Show begins at 7 p.m. Tickets are $15.

For more about the artist, go to samanthacrain.com

BOXER

Continued from Page 1

Olympics," Gilkey said.

Down from the café on Main Street, Gilkey's Karate studio sits against a background of tall brick and stone buildings recalling the town's heyday when, nearly a century ago, the headquarters of the Osage Nation flourished with the discovery of oil on tribal lands. The street is still impressive. Inside the studio, Cottingham warms up for a training session with his coach.

At 165 pounds on a 6-feet-2inch frame, Cottingham is fit for middleweight contention. Gilkey wants to keep it that way. The pair will leave for the 2012 USA Boxing National Championships in Colorado Springs, Colorado, on Feb. 24 to improve on his record of 14-2. They plan to drive and will stay until the end on March 3. They hope Cottingham will be the last fighter standing. Having captured the state and regional championship title last month in Tulsa, Cottingham will square off against other contenders. Doing well in Colorado means he qualifies to participate in the Olympic trials in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil. The next stop, of course, is London.

He's quiet and keeps to himself mostly. When you watch him in training, however, Cottingham makes his presence known.

Training is everything to Cottingham, the son of Charles and Patricia Cottingham. In 2005, he was looking for something to do. At the local Girls & Boys Club, he met Gilkey, a grand master in karate who taught karate, boxing and mixed martial arts.

Even then, Cottingham stayed to himself, but he kept going back. Soon, he was competing in local boxing matches for his age group.

"Out of the group we had up there, he stayed with me, the only who stayed; and I could see that he had some potential, and I'm a real patient person. I'll work with you if you'll only commit yourself," Gilkey said.

Cottingham is hesitant to talk much about the years that followed. At 15, he was placed in juvenile detention for things he would rather forget, among them burglary. It was a rough period in his young life that, in the end, offered him something priceless – a chance to start over and focus.

Months of counseling helped, he said.

When he was released from detention a year later, he was 50 pounds heavier than when he went in, and it wasn't the kind of weight athletes put on intentionally. Cottingham wanted to get back in shape and train again.

Gilkey, who welcomed him back, remembers when Cottingham approached him. Today, he trains the boxing up-and-comer for free at his Main Street studio.

"I'm the type of person that I'll give you a second chance," Gilkey said. "... The past – that's his. We look at now and let go of the past. It's behind us. I'm going forward."

Cottingham is going with him. He's a stand-out student, his coach said. Gilkey gives his pupils guidance in the physical and mental exercises athletes must endure to go the rounds. But it's the student's decision that will decide how far and long Gilkey will lift them up.

Cottingham wasn't interested in winning titles. He was driven to get in shape and train. Titles give him purpose and focus to be better. When asked to talk about himself, he said, "I just work out and eat. I don't know. What do you mean?"

Most days, the boxer can spend between 3-4 hours total in a workout that includes roadwork (running on the road), cardio, strength training, foundation work on the legs, speed bags for speed and coordination, and jump rope. Everything is done on a three minute timer so the fighter gains a sense for when a 3-minute round is up.

Gilkey said he has increased his times to prepare him for Colorado Springs and its high altitude and lower oxygen concentration.

Now as before, Cottingham is a quiet, distant person, his coach said. He doesn't have a lot of friends, "which is good. I don't have any problem with that. He has a good attitude towards the workout. He's real comfortable with that world. He'll do whatever I ask him to do. If I said, 'Go out there and run right now with your shorts on,' he'll do it."

All in all, Cottingham is a good kid who opens up in the ring with a strength that's startling up close. If student and coach can make it Brazil and on to London, both will be all too happy to see the words "Olympics games" stamped on his record. But first, there is Colorado, and they both need help getting there, Gilkey said.

The coach and Cottingham's supporters are raising money to cover travel and accommodation expenses allowing him to participate in the championships. Earlier this week, they had an Indian taco dinner and silent auction in Pawhuska for donations that would pay for his travel expenses. Civic groups like Pawhuska's Elks Lodge have also contributed, but they have a long way to go to reach the $3,000 they will need. They are asking for help to meet the goal through donations and/ or sponsorship.

Only one other Oklahoman, Daniel Logan of Oklahoma City, will compete at the national event, and he is also a middleweight fighter.

As his focus shifts to competing and making it as far as possible, Cottingham has found that faith helps too, even if it doesn't come easy.

"I just ask Him for guidance," Cottingham said. "I don't really know how to pray, so it's kind of hard to really figure it out."

He need only ask Gilkey, as patient as ever.

"I don't mind because I see the end results ... it's a reward," Gilkey said.

If you would like to help send Cottingham and his coach to next week's USA Nation Boxing Championships, contact Gilkey by phone at (918) 287-2663. He may also be reached by mail at 2730 Grandview, Pawhuska, Okla., 74056.

25th Anniversary

FEBRUARY 16-17-18, 2012

GLENPOOL CONFERENCE CENTER
Hwy 75 and 121st Street (beside WalMart)
Glenpool, Oklahoma

Daily Admission - $8.00 3-Day Pass - $10.00

Thursday: 11 am - 4 pm
Friday: 10 am - 8 pm
(Friday is Student & Senior Citizens Day - $5.00)
Saturday: 10 am - 8 pm
American Indian Food Daily

2012 Featured Artist:

Debbe Edwards

Cherokee

PREMIERE NIGHT BENEFIT DINNER

Thursday, February 16, 2012 - 7:00 p.m.

PERRYMAN RANCH

www.perrymanranch.com
11524 S. Elwood Ave., Jenks, OK (1 Mile from the Festival)

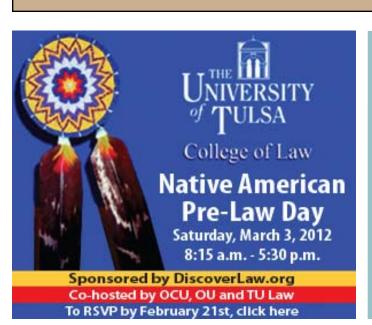

JURIED ART AWARDS • SCHOLARSHIP AWARDS
Silent & Live Auctions • Entertainment • Native Foods Dinner Buffet $35 - Individual • $500 - Table (Reservations Necessary)

TULSA INDIAN ART FESTIVAL
P.O. Box 2140, Tulsa, Oklahoma 74101
918.298.2300 • info@tulsaindianartfestival.com

www.tulsaindianartfestival.com

SPIRITUAI HEALING

ADVICE ON

Love, Marriage, Business, Health, Past, Present, Future Tarot Card, Psychic, readings by phone, not for entertainment. Only for those in need of help. At any time

(785) 841-1159

By Tina Guaranteed Results

Tulsa Indian Art Festival happening this weekend

KAREN SHADE

Native American Times

GLENPOOL, Okla. - The 26th Annual Tulsa Indian Art Festival returns for another exciting year exhibiting new work from talented painters, artisans and crafters.

The Glenpool Conference Center, located at U.S. 75 and 121st Street South in Glenpool, houses extensive collections of fine art, pottery, carvings, textiles and more. This year's featured artist is Debbe Edwards, Cherokee, of Miami. Her sculptures, often depicting wildlife and horses, are carved in wood, stone and marble. They are also produced in bronze and have earned her many awards at fine art and Indian art shows around the country.

"At past shows, she has been very popular because of the realism of her wild sculptures," said Robert Trepp, chairman of the board of the National Indian Monument & Institute. NIMI organizes the festival

COURTESY / TULSA INDIAN ART FESTIVAL

The 2012 Tulsa Indian Art Festival featured artist will be Cherokee sculptor Debbe Edwards. Look for her work beginning Feb. 16.

along with the American Indian Theatre Co.

Past showcased artists include Jon Tiger, Jane Osti and Dana Tiger. This year, more than 40 artists are expected to participate in the festival.

"We are looking forward to our new location and the feedback we've been getting from artists and volunteers is real positive," Trepp said, "and it looks like the weather will be with us this year."

Last year's festival had to be rescheduled to a later date in May when winter weather shut down traffic in the Tulsa historic Perryman Ranch, south of Tulsa in Jenks, will be host to the festival's premiere night benefit dinner and scholarship fundraiser. The event begins at 7 p.m. Feb.

16 and will feature a buffet of Native foods, silent and live auctions and entertainment. Tickets start at $35 and reservations are required.

The festival is open to the public daily. Hours are 11 a.m.-7 p.m. on Feb. 16; 10 a.m.-8 p.m. on Feb. 17-18. In addition to the art market, there will also be flute playing, exhibition powwow and traditional dancing, storytelling from Mahenwahdose and fiddle playing.

Admission to the festival is $8 per person per day or $10 for a three-day pass. Students and seniors will be admitted for $5 on Friday. For more call the NIMI office at (918) 298-2300 or go to www. tulsaindianartfestival.com.

Exhibit addresses Okla. water issues

NORMAN, Okla. – A new art exhibition that showcases water issues in Oklahoma opened on Feb. 10 in the MAINSITE Contemporary Art Gallery. The exhibition, titled "H2OK: Native Responses to Water Issues in Oklahoma," will run through March 10 at 122 E. Main St.

Artists from across Oklahoma's diverse tribal landscape are participating, including Cherokee artists Roy Boney Jr., Joseph Erb, Tom Fields, Yatika Fields, Troy Jackson and America Meredith.

Other participating artists are Norman Akers, Marwin Begaye, Anita Fields, Sue Fish, Brent Greenwood, Sam Atakra Haozous, Matt Jarvis, Linda Lomahaftewa, Bob Martin, Molly Murphy, Juanita Pahdopony, Tom Poolaw and Tony

Tiger. The artists' work expresses cultural attitudes to water in all of its forms such as rivers, oceans, rain and drinking water: environmental aspects of water; confront political realities of dwindling water supplies; and the aesthetics of water within culture practices.

Organized around this broad theme, artists are working in media ranging from underwater photography, to digital art, sculpture, printmaking, painting and installation. All the artists are either living in Oklahoma or are affiliated with at least one of Oklahoma's 39 tribes.

After the exhibition closes, it will travel to Bacone College's Art Gallery in the McCombs Hall Art Building at 2299 Old Bacone Road in Muskogee and be on view from April 6 through May 13. MAINSITE Contemporary Art, a non-profit gallery operated by the Norman Arts Council, is open from 11:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesdays through Saturdays.

For more information, visit the show's website at www.ahalenia. com/h2ok or call 405-360-1162.

The Bacone Arts Gallery is located on the second floor of the McCombs Hall Art Building and is open during school hours. For more information, call Bacone College at 918-822-1402.

SIGNED

Pawhuska athletes Jeremy Iron (left) and Gene Big Soldier III, sign letters of intent to play football at Haskell Indian Nations University as their coaches watch Feb. 10 at Pawhuska High School, Pawhuska, Okla..

Win your share of over

in Cash!

Saturday, February 25 6 pm - 10 pm

Catch some beads and join us for Masquerade of Money at Osage Casino! On Saturday, February 25 from 6pm-9pm we're holding $500 Cash drawings five times every hour at each location. Then at 10pm, 21 lucky guests will take home $1,000 Cash across all locations! Play with your Club Osage card February 12-23 to enter. Find your fortune this February at Osage Casino during Masquerade of Money!

JOIN CLUB OSAGE TODAY!

Visit osagecasinos.com for details.

Tulsa Bartlesville Sand Springs Ponca City Skiatook Hominy Pawhuska • (918) 699-7777 • osagecasinos.com •

©2012 Osage Casino. Must be 18 to participate. Guests must be actively playing with their Club Osage card to be eligible for promotional drawings. Must be present to win $500 Cash drawings. Need not be present to win $1,000 Cash grand prize. Grand prize must be claimed within 30 days. Management reserves all rights. If you think you have a gambling problem, please call 1-800-522-4700.

- ND higher ed board suing to drop logo
- Film with Eskimo cast opens in US
- Bacone's health programs enjoy success

TODAY'S INDEPENDENT INDIAN NEWS

- A FREE PUBLICATION -

WWW.NATIVETIMES.COM

VOLUME 18 + ISSUE 8

PUBLISHED WEEKLY

FEBRUARY 24, 2012

Tribes want order denying Oklahoma water rights

KEN MILLER Associated Press

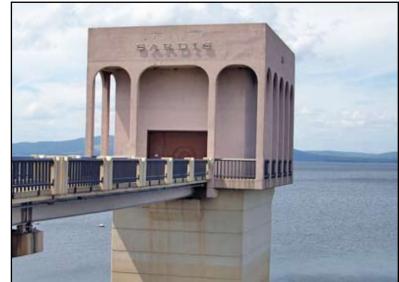

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) - Two tribes have asked a federal judge to declare that the state of Oklahoma and its capital city have no jurisdiction over water in southeastern Oklahoma and, therefore, have no right to transport

Four days after Attorney General Scott Pruitt asked the state Supreme Court to address a dispute over water rights, the Chickasaw and Choctaw tribes were back in U.S. District Court asking that a judge settle part of their federal lawsuit without extended proceedings.

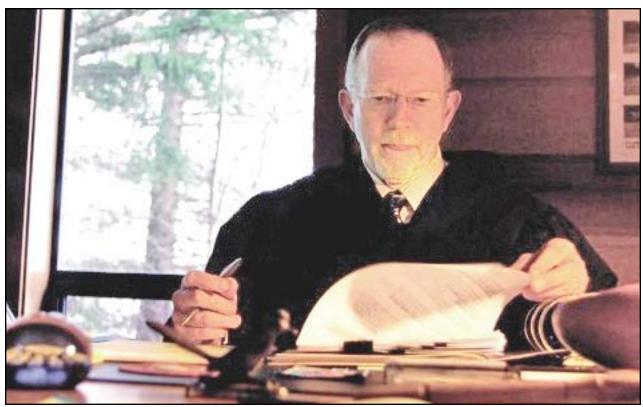

The request for partial summary judgment asks that a judge declare the tribes hold regulatory authority over water in southeastern Oklahoma under an 1830 treaty. The tribes also want an order that says their water rights preempt state law, though the state and city say the tribes relinquished their rights in later pacts.

Southeastern Oklahoma waters

See WATER Continued on Page 3

The Chickasaw Nation and Choctaw Nation claim control ov all water in 22 counties in the southeastern corner of Oklahoma, including Sardis Lake, a U.S. Army Corps of Engineers creation.

Don Costello shuffles through paperwork in his office at the Coguille Indian Tribe. Costello previously served as a tribal and state judge in other locations before bringing his restorative-justice system to Oregon's South Coast.

Ore. tribal courts deliver 'restorative justice'

TYLER RICHARDSON

The World

COOS BAY, Ore. (AP) - For years, Judge Donald Costello sentenced offenders to jail and prison terms, only to see them back in his courtroom with nothing to show for their time

Costello doesn't work that way anymore. Instead, he practices an innovative spin on the judicial system that has become an effective restorative-justice program.

"Our recidivism rate is around 5 percent," said Diane Whitson, court clerk for the Confederated Tribes of Coos, Lower Umpqua and Suislaw Indians. "There is as much as a 67 percent failure rate of people who are incarcerated. We haven't had anyone re-offend since we started this system."

That system is known as the Peacegiving Court. Costello was part of a team that invented it in Deschutes County, and now it's part of the judicial systems for both the Coquille Indian Tribe and the Confederated Tribes of Coos, Lower Umpqua and Suislaw Indians.

Restorative justice emphasizes repairing the harm caused by the crime, making offenders take accountability for their actions and their crimes' effect on victims. The victims are active participants, providing insight on a crime's impact and helping devise solutions.

Joe Ward could tell by the look on his cousin's face he was in trouble. There would be no warnings or second chances this time.

The cousin, a Coquille tribal police officer, stopped Ward in 2004 for driving with a suspended license. Ward had neglected to pay nearly $6,000 in traffic fines. Little did he know, Ward was set to become the poster boy for a new peacegiving process that many tribal members still doubted.

"Joe was really the model case to answer people's questions if this would work," Costello said.

Costello could have imposed additional fines and revoked Ward's driver's license. But that would have left Ward unable to work and provide for his family.

Instead, Costello referred him to the Peacegiving Court. There, Ward was connected with a peacegiver, a mentor handpicked to create a plan for Ward's future.

Ward was then put into a peacegiving circle, in which the people affected by his poor decisions spoke to him. The circle included the peacegiver, Ward's aunt and his boss, among others.

A contract was then drawn up that allowed Ward to borrow money from his aunt and boss to pay off the fines while he continued to work. He also had to go through every tedious step to regain his driver's license.

"There was a lot of appointments and running around," he said. 'That piece of license is gold, and that whole process made me realize that."

Within four months, Ward regained his license, which he happily showed to Costello. Soon after that, he paid his debts.

"It really taught me to be responsible," he said. 'It was a good way to get me to learn a lesson." Costello is the father of the Peacegiving Court. He began practicing restorative justice in the state court system in Deschutes County in 1984.

Costello said he did away with such words as "punishment" and concepts like leniency. He focused instead on ways to teach offenders the real consequences of their actions.

Soon, Costello and his fellow judges were seeing lower recidivism rates.

In 1997, Costello was approached by the leaders of the Coquille Tribe. They were concerned about leadership within the tribe. They wanted to challenge the community to find other ways of justice. Costello became the Coquille Tribe's chief judge and began working with tribal leaders. The Confederated Tribes joined the project in 2002, and soon both tribes had their models in place.

"He is the god when it comes to the

See JUSTICE Continued on Page 3

2013 Indian Affairs budget shows cuts

WASHINGTON - President Obama's fiscal year 2013 budget request for Indian Affairs, which includes the Bureau of Indian Affairs and the Bureau of Indian Education, is $2.5 billion – a $4.6 million decrease below the FY 2012 level.

Officials said the proposed budget maintains the president's commitment to meeting the government's responsibilities to the 566 American Indian and Alaska Native tribes, while toeing fiscal responsibility line and improving government efficiency.

"The budget request maintains President Obama's commitment to strengthening tribal nations by making targeted increases in Indian Affairs programs that support tribal self-determination managing BIA-funded programs, increase public safety in tribal communities by strengthening police capabilities, improve the administration of tribal land, mineral, timber and other trust resources and advance Indian education," Assistant Secretary-Indian Affairs Larry Hawk said. "Indian Affairs is sensitive to the need for achieving greater results at a lower cost, and the proposed budget reflects the tough choices that will make us more cost efficient in carrying out our missions."

The request includes $43.8 million in nation-to-nation relationships (up $12.3 million), protecting Indian Country (up $11 million), improving trust land management (up $15.4 million) and advancing Indian education (up $5.2 million).

Under nation-to-nation relationships, the budget request for Contract Support is $228.0 million – an $8.8 million increase - which enables a tribe operating BIA-funded programs to meet administrative costs without decreasing program funds. It also includes an increase of $3.5 million for land and water claim settlements.

The request for BIA Law Enforcement is $353.9 million with targeted increases of

See BUDGET Continued on Page 4

Ariz. senator introduces tribal water rights deal

FELICIA FONSECA Associated Press

FLAGSTAFF, Ariz. (AP) -Two northeastern Arizona tribes would waive further claims to water from the Little Colorado River system in exchange for the promise of groundwater delivery under legislation projects introduced last Tuesday in Congress.

Arizona Sen. Jon Kyl, who has shepherded other key American Indian water rights settlements through Congress, had asked negotiators for the tribes and 30 other entities to lower the cost of what was once an $800 million agreement so he could introduce the legislation ahead of his planned retirement.

Arizona Sen. Jon Kyl

"I believe this bill represents the best opportunity for all of the parties and for the American taxpayer to achieve a fair result," Kyl, a Republican, said in a

See DEAL Continued on Page 2

ND higher ed board to sue to drop Fighting Sioux

DALE WETZEL
Associated Press

BISMARCK, N.D. (AP) – North Dakota's Board of Higher Education voted Monday to sue to attempt to block a public vote on a state law that requires the University of North Dakota's athletics teams to be called the Fighting Sioux.

The board approved the lawsuit after meeting by telephone with state Attorney General Wayne Stenehjem, who said he was confident the law violates the North Dakota Constitution. The constitution gives the board broad powers to manage the state's 11 public colleges, Stenehjem said.

Board members described their decision as a defense of their constitutional prerogatives, while nickname supporters described it as an affront meant to silence voters.

"In the wake of very serious problems within the North Dakota university system, our state Board of Higher Education has instead decided their priority should be trying to use the legal system to disenfranchise the voters of North Dakota," a spokesman for the referendum campaign, Sean Johnson, said in a statement.

The university has been trying to retire the nickname and a separate logo that shows an American Indian warrior's square-jawed profile. Last November, the North Dakota Legislature repealed a state law that required UND to use the nickname and logo.

However, nickname supporters filed referendum petitions last week with North Dakota's secretary of state, Al Jaeger, to revive the pro-nickname law. It is now back in effect.

If Jaeger decides the petitions are valid, the question could be put on North Dakota's June 12 statewide primary election ballot. Voters would then decide whether to uphold the law, which requires the university to keep the nickname and logo, or repeal it.

DALEWETZEL / ASSOCIATED PRESS EIL

In this March 22, 2010, file photo, hockey sweaters displaying the University of North Dakota's Fighting Sioux nickname and logo are displayed in a souvenir shop inside Ralph Engelstad Arena in Grand Forks, N.D. North Dakota's Board of Higher Education voted Monday, Feb. 13, 2012, to sue to try to block a state law requiring the university's athletics teams to be called the Fighting Sioux.

Stenehjem said he expects to file paperwork with the North Dakota Supreme Court within a week, asking the court to block the issue from going to a statewide vote. Stenehjem said he believes the Supreme Court has to take the case immediately, without having it first handled in a North Dakota district court

He said he hopes the Supreme Court will hear arguments in the case by mid-March.

The NCAA has imposed sanctions on the university for using the nickname and logo. The association says the school cannot host post-season tournaments, and its teams won't be able to wear uniforms with the nickname or logo in post-season play.

During Monday's meeting, board members argued about whether the law requires UND teams to wear uniforms with the nickname and logo. They decided to leave that issue up to the university, which favors uniforms without them.

DEA

Continued from Page

speech on the Senate floor. "The settlement resolves significant legal claims, limits legal exposure, avoids protracted litigation costs and, most importantly, saves lives."

Tribes often trade what could be huge water claims for the promise of federal funding to deliver water to tribal communities. While Kyl's legislation identifies funding sources, the groundwater projects are largely dependent on appropriations and are expected to cost more than $315 million.

The Little Colorado River runs through the southwestern portion of the Navajo Nation. Some Navajos and Hopis strongly believe the tribes have rights to most, if not, all the water and that their governments should fight for it in court.

They were angry at the news that the settlement, which has been in the works for decades, went to Congress before the tribal councils. The settlement also requires the approval of the state, its major water providers, cities and ranches.

"Sen. Kyl has betrayed us by rushing this legislation without the Hopis getting an opportunity to have their voice be heard," said Vernon Masayesva, a former Hopi chairman and co-founder of the Black Mesa Trust.

Jihan Gearon, executive director of the Black Mesa Water Coalition, said the group wouldn't support the settlement when it means signing away rights to surface water for groundwater without funding to access it.

"As every Navajo knows, you can't drink paper water," she said.

Navajo water rights attorney

Stanley Pollack, who has been working on the tribes' claims to the Little Colorado River since 1985, is set to brief Navajo lawmakers this week on the deal. He said he remains optimistic that the Navajo Nation Council, whose members differ from those who approved a version of the deal last year, will agree

"For more than 20 years or for more than one-fifth of the time Arizona has been a state, we've been in negotiations over this issue," he said.

The water rights deal once included claims to water from the lower Colorado River basin and a $515 million pipeline project to deliver it to Navajo communities, as well giving the Navajos any unclaimed flows in the Little Colorado River and settling the Hopis claims to the tributary.

The settlement legislation reserves a portion of Colorado River water for a future Navajo Nation claim. The tribe also would drop legal claims against the federal government over its management of the Little Colorado River under the legislation, though a breach of trust claim can be refiled.

Hopi Chairman Le Roy Shingoitewa said about 40 percent of Hopi families have water hookups in their homes. The rest still haul water because some villages have no water system and others do not have full sanitation facilities. The groundwater projects would benefit Navajos in and near Ganado and Leupp, and Hopis in each of the tribe's villages.

"We all agreed to what we placed before Kyl," Shingoitewa said. "We're just happy that we've come to a point we can look forward to better services for our people."

Phone: (580) - 931 - 3061 | info@intertribalsoftware.com

Neb. bill targeting Whiteclay faces scrutiny

GRANT SCHULTE Associated Press

LINCOLN, Neb. (AP) – A proposal to allow for stricter alcohol rules in certain parts of Nebraska would give local governments the tools they need to fight public drunkenness, a state lawmaker said Feb. 13.

But the bill faced skepticism from some state lawmakers and industry leaders, who questioned whether the measure unfairly singled out certain areas. Critics also said they doubted the measure would solve persistent alcohol abuse in problem areas.

Ellsworth Sen. LeRoy Louden told the Legislature's General Affairs Committee he introduced the measure, LB 829, to help local governments fight alcohol abuse in Whiteclay, a town blamed for rampant alcohol abuse and bootlegging on South Dakota's Pine Ridge Indian Reservation, and specific neighborhoods in Omaha.

Louden said the bill allows local governments to control alcohol problems without imposing blanket restrictions.

"This type of business has to be scrutinized much more than the sale of beer and alcohol at a local grocery store frequented by the general public,"

Louden said. The bill's intention "is not to create a lot of impact zones throughout the state. It is a tool for counties to have but in reality will probably not be used all that often."

Whiteclay is often blamed for widespread alcoholism and bootlegging on South Dakota's Pine Ridge Indian Reservation, where alcohol is banned. The town has fewer than two dozen residents - yet its four offsite beer stores sold nearly 5 million cans in 2010, according to the state alcohol commission.

The bill would let local governments seek a state "alcohol impact zone" designation for specific problem neighborhoods. The state liquor commission could then limit the hours the alcohol sellers are open, ban the sale of certain products or restrict single-can sales. The bill would require a public hearing before the commission creates an alcohol impact zone.

Industry advocates said the bill would simply move the alcohol problem to other areas and punishes beer store owners who are running lawful businesses. Those who violate alcohol-sales laws could face license suspensions or revocations, said Kathy Siefkin, executive director of the Nebraska Grocery Industry Association.

"Why should an existing license holder be punished for something when they haven't done anything wrong?" Siefkin said. "They haven't broken the law."

But activists who have battled alcohol problems in Whiteclay said the industry has failed to stop illegal drinking around the town and smugglers who consume or resell it on the reservation.

Mark Vasina, the president of Nebraskans for Peace, who has produced a documentary about Whiteclay, said tribe members have recounted stories of beer sellers peddling alcohol for sex, pornography and food stamps. He acknowledged that the bill might not solve the alcohol problems but said it would "send a message" that Nebraska lawmakers are clamping down.

The Oglala band of the Lakota nation, known to outsiders as the Sioux, has struggled with alcoholism and poverty for generations. The debate over alcohol sales rose to national prominence in 1999, when two tribal members were murdered near Whiteclay. Their unsolved deaths inspired a yearly march from Pine Ridge to Whiteclay, and activists have occasionally staged blockades to block the flow of alcohol into the reservation.

The Oglala Sioux Tribe filed a $500 million federal lawsuit earlier this month against some of the world's largest beer makers, their distributors, and the four beer stores in Whiteclay.

Several states have joined forces with local governments in recent years to target problem areas, often in downtown urban areas and highpoverty neighborhoods.

In Washington state, the state Liquor Control Board has placed alcohol impact areas in several Seattle neighborhoods. The board restricts the sale of 29 types of beer and wine, with a focus on cheap, high-sugar brands. Local governments target specific neighborhoods and ask the Liquor Control Board to ban certain types of alcohol or limit the hours when customers can buy.

In 2010, the City Council in Memphis, Tenn., established an alcohol impact zone that banned single-beer sales downtown because of alleged ties between sales, aggressive behavior and panhandling.

NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES

Publisher & Editor LISA SNELL editor@nativetimes.com

Contributing Writers Dana Attocknie WESLEY MAHAN KAREN SHADE

Advertising Sales KATHLEEN ROBERTSON LISA SNELL ROB WALTON advertising@nativetimes.com

Distribution SHELBY HICKS STEVE LACY WESLEY MAHAN MICHAEL MARRIS KATHLEEN ROBERTSON Brenda Slaughter

The Native American Times, formerly the Oklahoma Indian Times, is published weekly (except the last week of the year) by Lisa Hicks Snell. Mailing address is PO Box 411 Tahlequah, OK 74465. All the contents within the Native American Times are copyrighted material. Any reproduction, redistribution without the written consent of the NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES is strictly

> Each week's issue is available for free download online at: www.nativetimes.com

Subscription rates: $65.00 for fifty-two issues, $32.50 for twenty-six issues, or $16.25 for thirteen issues. A single copy is $1.25 (Rates are for postage and handling) Send check or money order to:

> NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES Attn: Subscriptions P.O. Box 411 Tahlequah, OK 74465-0411

Phone: (918) 708-5838 Fax: (888) 689-4873

Postmaster: Send Change of Address Form 579 to: NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES P.O. Box 411, Tahlequah, OK 74465

WWW.NATIVETIMES.COM - News from the crossroads of Indian Country

by him."

JUSTICE

Peacegiving Court unless they violation or dispute on tribal admit their guilt. Person-to- lands in these counties can to jail in my life, I have never person disputes also can go to be referred to a Peacegiving really noticed anything Peacegiving Court. The party or parties are then said. 'We have all been trained referred as well.

'Multiple people are affected. tribal court. We find out everybody who is involved and give them the volunteers, and the system them restore."

chance to speak."

The Coquille Tribe and the By Confederated Tribes oversee estimates incarcerating an areas within Coos, Curry, offender costs nearly $32,000 Peacegiving Court," Whitson Lane and Douglas counties. a year. The Coquille Tribe also violate tribal law can't get into reach Lincoln County. Any

The court handles only connected with a peacegiver, what a state system would 'It's just time spent. I have who guides them through call misdemeanors, mostly an agreed-upon plan. Most dealing with vandalism, theft, peacegiving cases involve person-to-person violence, It has never happened." juveniles, but adults can be custodial interference and some drug- and alcohol-"When a person commits an related offenses. Any tribal offense, it's not just one person member who commits a involved," Whitson said. federal felony goes to non-costs the tribe almost nothing. comparison, Whiton

Costello dismisses any stretches to Jackson County, suggestion that his restorative members who and the Confederated Tribes justice system is soft on

"Having sent a lot of people productive happen while they were there," he said. never had anybody say to me (peacegiving) is not effective.

Whitson agrees.

"If people think the peacegiving court is easy, they are mistaken," she said. "The peacegivers make the children acknowledge and accept what The peacegivers are they have done. They make

Miccosukee tribe says citizens owe $26M to IRS

MIAMI (AP) Miccosukee Indian tribe in South Florida says its citizens could owe nearly $26 million to the Internal Revenue Service because of bad legal advice.

The tribe is blaming its former attorney Dexter Lehtinen, who is also a former Miami U.S. attorney and husband of U.S. Rep. Ileana Ros-Lehtinen, R-Fla. The tribe claims Lehtinen gave misleading advice about whether individual members had to pay federal income taxes out of casino gambling distributions.

The tribe itself is considered a sovereign nation not required to pay income taxes. But the IRS says individual members do have to pay.

Lehtinen's attorney told The Miami Herald that the Miccosukees are trying to shift blame to him to cover up mistakes by their own leaders. Lehtinen represented the tribe on a variety of issues from 1992 until he was fired in 2010 following a change in Miccosukee leadership.

The tribe has filed a malpractice lawsuit seeking damages against Lehtinen over the tax issue; Lehtinen is seeking to have it thrown out.

"Those folks left him high and dry," said Lehtinen's lawyer, Joseph Klock. "Their case is absolutely ridiculous."

Klock did not respond Monday to an email seeking further comment from The Associated Press. There was also no response from two tribe attorneys.

According Miccosukees, more than 100 of its members could owe the IRS $25.8 million in back taxes, penalties and interest from money they got from the tribe's casino west of Miami.

The IRS, meanwhile, is continuing to audit the tribe's 600 members. A hearing is set Feb. 24 in federal court on an IRS effort to subpoena personal financial records from 2010, which the tribe contends is overbroad.

Lehtinen contends that he privately advised the tribe about its members' potential tax liability and that they should create a reserve fund in case the IRS prevailed in their dispute. Under past leaders, $20 million was set aside but Lehtinen said the fund was "dissipated" after the new leadership took over in 2009.

VINITA

918-256-5585 LANGLEY

918-782-0011

MONKEY ISLAND 918-257-8869

www.okstatebank.com

Equal Housing Lender Native American Owned

include Sardis Lake, a U.S. Army Corps of Engineers creation that has provided Oklahoma City other central Oklahoma communities with water for about 50 years.

Pruitt filed papers Friday, Feb. 17 asking that the state Supreme Court take up the matter; the tribes submitted their motion Feb. 14 in a lawsuit filed last August against Gov. Mary Fallin, the Oklahoma Water Resources Board and both the city of Oklahoma City and the city's water trust.

Attorney Michael Burrage, who represents the tribes, said Pruitt's state lawsuit doesn't address the issues in the federal court case.

"The issues addressed in the federal court case deal with long-established rights that the tribes have under the treaties and case law that interprets those treaties," Burrage said.

Pruitt said in a statement that the tribes claim control of all water in 22 counties in the southeastern corner of the state but no longer want to discuss water use.

"They indicated in their original lawsuit that the stream adjudication process was necessary. Since then they have reversed their position," Pruitt said in a statement relayed by spokeswoman Diane Clay. "They are once again demonstrating they do not want Oklahoma citizens at the table when their water rights are decided."

The tribes' federal lawsuit seeks to bar the state and Oklahoma City from transporting water from the region, but Burrage said the tribes "are not seeking to disrupt anyone's water supply

The two tribes have refused Fallin's request to drop their

DRUMRIGHT DENTAL CENTER Advanced Dental Technology

We proudly offer an array of services, from general dentistry to sedation, dental implants, and cosmetic dentistry - all designed expressly to meet our patient's changing needs. With four general dentists and four hygienists, we can maintain your oral health for a lifetime all at one location.

We Accept Contract Health & Sooner Care

We serve patients in the Drumright, Cushing, Stillwater, Stroud, Ponca City, and surrounding areas with personalized service and exemplary care. Call for your appointment today.

918-352-3312 or Toll Free 877-RH Melton drumrightdentalcenter.com

SUPERNAW'S OKLAHOMA INDIAN SUPPLY

Wholesale items for Pow Wow Vendors

Bone chokers $20 per dozen

Handmade lamp worked glass bead bracelets $1.00 each Glass bead stretch bracelets 5 for $2.50

12 Necklaces: Chain w/ pendant and display pad $13.50 36 inch gemstone chip strands Reg. 3.95 now $2.00 36 inch turquoise chip strands Reg. 7.95 now $4.00

Always our regular stock of seed beads from 16/0 to 8/0, findings, leather, hackles, fluffs and thousands of other supply items.

Remember we've moved around the corner 109 North Broadway, Skiatook, OK 74070

New Dealers Cash or Credit Card Only.

Open Noon-6pm Mon. thru Fri. • 10am-5m Sat. • Closed Sun. Local: 396-1713-Countrywide Toll Free 1-888-720-1967

Website: www.supernaw.com • Email: Supernaw@flash.net

Film with novice Eskimo cast opens in

US theaters

RACHEL D'ORO Associated Press

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) - Two Inupiat Eskimo teenagers from a remote Arctic town find themselves at the center of a tragic killing brought on by a crystal meth-fueled fight during a seal hunt in the frozen north. The childhood best friends try to cover up the death but struggle to elude suspicions, forcing them to confront the limits of friendship and

The fictional dilemma is the heart of "On the Ice," a thriller filmed in Barrow, Alaska, in 2010 with novice Inupiat actors. The 2011 Sundance Film festival entry will make its theatrical premiere Friday in New York and the Alaska cities of Anchorage and Fairbanks, then expand to cities including Los Angeles, Chicago, Seattle and San Barrow, an isolated whaling community of 4,300, is far from Alaska's limited road system. Located about 320 miles (515 kilometers) north of the Arctic Circle, it is the northernmost town in the United States. Winter means endless nights and summer constant daylight, and temperatures can dip to minus 40 degrees Farenheit (minus 40 Celsius). Everyone knows everyone, often through family connections.

For the filmmakers, it was important to capture the setting. It was crucial to cast Inuit people as Inuit people.

"I didn't want to cast Japanese people or Korean people, which is what I grew up watching," said its New York-based director and screenwriter, Andrew Okpeaha MacLean. "It's just like, no way. That has to stop."

The 96-minute film is the first feature-length movie from the 39-year-old MacLean – who is part Inupiat and spent much of his youth in Barrow and was co-produced by his wife, Cara Marcous. It was loosely based on their short film "Sikumi," which means on the ice in Inupiaq. The period film, shot in Barrow in the Inupiaq language, won the jury prize for short filmmaking at Sundance in Both movies used novice Inupiat actors, though the short film starred older ones - mostly MacLean's friends. But few Inuits work as professional actors, especially teenagers, who were the focus of the story. Casting calls throughout Alaska, as well as in Arctic Canada, attracted about 700 hopefuls.

Josiah Patkotak (left) and John Miller star as two friends at the center of a tragic killing brought on be a crystal meth-fueled fight....

"They did an amazing job," Marcous, 36, said of the cast. "It's really incredible what they were able to do. They literally had no experience with the camera at all."

After the success of "Sikumi," the couple returned to Sundance to help develop the feature film, participating in Sundance Institute programs and getting paired up with advisers such as actor Ed Harris. Harris said he learned that MacLean's Native heritage is important to him and he has a keen passion for storytelling.

"I think he has a fine career in front of him because he gives a damn about the human condition, knows how to tell a story, is passionate about his work, and gaining confidence with every film he makes," Harris said in an email to The Associated Press.

The film, made on a budget of less than $1 million, has won several awards at other venues, including best first feature at the Berlin film festival. At the Sundance debut, "On the Ice" had the audience leaning forward, fully engaged in the plot, said Michelle Satter, founding director of the Sundance Institute feature film program.

The death at the center of the teens' plight – and the source of their ever-growing guilt - is open to interpretation as either an accident or a murder, as intended by MacLean.

"So much of what the film is about is about a kind of moral gray area," said MacLean. "Exactly what causes the killing is in question and who's responsible for it is really debatable. You could make a case for several different ways, and the response to it kind of builds on that, on that kind of moral ambiguity."

MacLean has an "exquisite eye" for the specific, presenting a little-known world with passion and clarity, Satter said.

"He's telling stories in such an honest and authentic place and with such rich detail that those stories will resonate for a much bigger audience,"

Cree dancer recaptures hoop dance title

DEB KROL Heard Museum

PHOENIX, Ariz. — In a stunning comeback, 2006/2007 World Hoop Dance Champion Dallas Arcand (Cree) of Calgary, Alb., Canada reclaimed his title at the 22nd Annual Heard Museum World Championship Hoop Dance Contest. An estimated audience of 7,000 came to cheer on one or more of their favorites from a roster of 56 hoop dancers from the U.S. and Canada. The Jay Kahn Memorial Fund sponsors the teen competition on the Arts is a supporter of the Arcand had been absent from the competition for a few years, so his triumphed over the 2011 champion, Tony Duncan of Mesa, Ariz. (San Apache/Mandan/Hidatsa/ Arikara), who took third place, as well as another former champion, Rancho Cucamonga, Calif. Alex Wells (Salish/Lil' Wat Nation) of prizes and the Arizona Commission Jensen (Navajo/Pima/Maricopa) of Dilkon, Ariz., scored second; former teen champion Jasmine Rae Pickner-Bell (Crow Creek Dakota) of Riverton, Wyo., took fourth place; another return was welcomed by many. He crowd favorite, Navajo hoop dancer Lowery Begay of Jonesborough, Tenn., won fifth place; and rounding out the adult division was Michael Goedel (Lumbee/Yakima/Tulalip) of Three-time youth champion Tyrese Mount Currie, B. C., Canada. (Wells Jensen, son of Lane Jensen, won his did not place in the finals this year.) first teen division world championship Longtime hoop dance favorite Lane over Talon Ree Duncan, Tony Band of Ottawa & Chippewa) of categories. In recent years, as hoop Peshawbestown, Mich.

Brian Hammill (Ho Chunk) of division title, with Moontee Singuah (Hopi/Tewa) of Glendale, Ariz., smaller. taking second place and longtime hoop dancer Terry Goedel (Yakima/ Tulalip), father of Michael Goedel, winning third place.

In the youth division, Tiana Schocko, the younger sister of Vanessa Schocko, won the world title; Nedallas Hammill (Navajo/Ho Chunk), the son of Brian Hammill, won second place; and Jacob Cabarrubia (Little River Band of Ottawa Indians) from Manistee, Mich., took home a third place showing.

Hoop dancing incorporates speed and agility as dancers maneuver their bodies through one to more than 50 hoops. Dancers also integrate creative designs and difficult manipulations of the hoops to present a unique variation of the dance.

This year's competition saw the introduction of new moves and no

Duncan's younger brother; and less than three tiebreaker dance-Vanessa Schocko (Grand Traverse offs in the adult, teen and senior dancers continue to refine and grow their routines, the points scored have New River, Ariz., held onto his senior climbed, and the point spreads for the adult division continue to grow

> The judges included: Jocy Bird (Mandan/Hidatsa/Arikara/Dakota), of Brookings, South Dakota: Victor Bob (Navajo), from Gallup, New Mexico; Kevin Connywerdy, Comanche, Norman, Oklahoma; Bruce LeClaire (Rosebud Sioux) from Durango, Colorado; and James Pheasant (Eastern Band of Cherokee) from Cherokee, North Carolina.

> In other developments, the Sixkiller family of Gila River Indian Community has pledged an extra $200 for the Tiny Tots division for the 2013 Hoop Dance in honor of their 57th wedding anniversary.

> The 23rd Annual Heard Museum World Championship Hoop Dance Contest will be held Feb. 9-10, 2013. Visit heard.org/hoop for details.

Rights set for medical care

DENVER (AP) - A civil rights complaint that a Colorado Native American woman did not get proper medical treatment has been settled.

The settlement between the Colorado Civil Rights Commission and Southwest Systems Health establishes new policies to ensure tribal members who come off reservations for medical treatment don't face discrimination.

The complaint filed by the commission indicated there had been a persistent problem with American Indians being turned away from Southwest Memorial Hospital in Cortez for years. According to the Denver Post, the complaint was filed by the commission because the woman who said she had been raped did not want to get involved.

Tribes welcome ruling

DENVER (AP) - A coalition of Indian tribes is welcoming a court ruling that tribes cannot be held in contempt for commercial ventures such as personal loans offered over the Internet.

The Native American Lending Alliance says Monday's ruling by a Denver District Court judge means that tribal immunity has no territorial boundaries.

The Colorado Attorney General's office is reviewing the opinion. The tribes involved include the Miami Tribe of Oklahoma and the Santee Sioux Nation.

Volunteers repair gravesite arch at Wounded Knee

WOUNDED KNEE, S.D. (AP) – A group of volunteers repaired an archway that marks a mass grave where Sioux men, women and children were killed near Wounded Knee Creek.

Julian Brown Eyes owns a masonry company in Rapid City. He and a group of volunteers did the repair work.

Brown Eyes' daughter Juliana is doing a documentary on the site. She says the archway repair is a Valentine's Day gift of love. KELO-TV of Sioux Falls reports the documentary will make its debut in May.

The massacre happened in 1890. U.S. Army cavalry soldiers were searching a Sioux camp for weapons when gunfire broke out. More than 150 Sioux were indiscriminately shot.

The site on South Dakota's Pine Ridge Indian Reservation was also the location of an American Indian Movement protest in 1973.

BUDGET

The request includes $24.6 million for tribal courts to support the enhanced capabilities given to them in the Tribal Law and Order Act of 2009.

$11 million for law enforcement operations, detention operations and tribal courts. The request for law enforcement operations builds on increases from previous years - for a total of $189.7 million - for criminal investigations and police services to enable the BIA to improve its recruitment and hiring for law enforcement officers and detention center staff, including

The request includes $88.2 million for detention center operations - an increase of $6.5 million – for staffing, training and equipment to increase capacity to hold and process detainees and to fund operations at newly constructed detention facilities.

The request includes $24.6 million for tribal courts to support the enhanced capabilities given to them in the Tribal Law and Order Act of

The funding also supports the expansion of a 2010 program launched to reduce crime on four reservations with high violent crime rates. The program resulted in a 35 percent combined reduction in violent crime. Two additional reservations with high crime rates will be added to this initiative.

The DOI has also undertaken an overhaul of the federal fee-totrust process. As a result, between 2009 and 2011 the DOI processed 697 applications. The 2013 budget request supports improving trust land management through a program increase of $15.4 million for:

- Rights Protection Implementation (up $3.5 million) to support implementing federal court orders resulting from decisions in offreservation treaty rights litigation,
- Tribal Management Development Program (up $2.0 million) to support tribes in the management of their on-reservation fish and game
- Cooperative Landscape Development (up $800,000) to support participation for the bureau and tribes in the Landscape

Conservation Cooperatives,

- Invasive Species (up $500,000) to support tribal programs that control, manage and eradicate harmful plant and animal species from reservations,
- Forestry Programs (up $1 million) that develop, maintain and enhance tribal forest resources,
- Trust Services (up $5.5 million) to support the BIA's responsibilities of trust services, probate and land titles and records, and
- Litigation Support/Attorney Fees (up $1.5 million) to assist tribes in protecting trust resources.

The budget also addresses educational needs from elementary through post secondary and adult education, including security issues at school facilities to ensure environments are safe for students and an educational reform to increase student academic achievement in BIE schools.

The request for the BIE is $796.1 million, an increase of $653,000 above the 2012 level, with increases

• Tribal Grant Support Costs (up $2.0 million) to help tribes operating BIE schools cover administrative and indirect costs,

• Tribal Colleges and Universities (up $2.5 million) to assist in the economic development of tribal communities as they offer resources and facilities to teach community members workplace skills and to support tribal plans for development, and

• Scholarships (up $710,000) for the BIE's Scholarships and Adult Education and Special Higher Education Scholarships programs to help adults obtain a GED, provide job skills training and provide financial aid for post secondary and graduate students pursuing degrees in professions that meet tribal communities' needs.

The budget also requests $36.3 million for BIA Land and Water Claim Settlements to fund settlements that help deliver clean drinking water to Indian communities and provide certainty to water users across the West.

In accordance with a 2011 Obama's memo, the 2013 budget request includes reductions and identifies efficiencies that can be achieved through consolidation, cost cutting, realignments and program decreases such as:

• Improved Management (down

$19.7 million) includes measures taken and those anticipated to ensure that tribal needs and priorities are addressed to reduce Indian Affairs administrative costs,

- Realignment (up $1.3 million) includes an increase to reflect the transfer of the Indian Arts and Crafts Board from the Office of the Secretary to Indian Affairs, which would oversee the implementation of the Indian Arts and Crafts Act of 1990, as amended,
- Law Enforcement Special Initiatives (down $2.6 million) reflecting reduced participation on activities such as intelligence sharing,
- Information Resources Technology (down $6.1 million) due to standardization and consolidation of IT infrastructure,
- The Indian Student Equalization Program (down $4.5 million) to reflect a decline in student population,
- Replacement School Construction (down $17.8 million) as it focuses on improving conditions of existing school facilities, and
- The Indian Guaranteed Loan Program (down $2.1 million) for evaluating of effectiveness.

PNC, Bacone hosting academic info session

TONI HILL

Pawnee Nation College

PAWNEE, Okla. - Pawnee Nation College (PNC), Bacone College and the City of Pawnee present an Oklahoma Native Leadership Initiative (ONLI) Informational Session, Q&A and Community Social.

The event will be held Feb. 23 at 6 p.m. at the Albin Leadingfox Hall located in the circle on the Pawnee Tribal Reserve at 861 Little Dee Drive.

Staff from Bacone College and PNC will present information about the academic opportunities available locally to individuals of diversity. Specific topics include admission procedures, enrollment guidance and financial aid options. Free food, great giveaways and networking opportunities compliment the occasion.

For more information, contact PNC at (918) 762-3343 or the following staff members. Marcella Stephenson at mstephenson@ pawneenationcollege.org Staci Glyckherr at sglyckherr@ pawneenationcollege.org.

UKB hosting indoor Stomp Dance

M. THOMAS JORDAN UKB Communications Office

TAHLEQUAH, Okla. -The United Keetoowah Band is holding its 1st Indoor Stomp Dance at the UKB Wellness Center Feb. 25.

Starting at 5 p.m., weather permitting, a stickball game is being held and a chili dinner follows at 6 p.m. Bring your lawn chairs, shells and hats.

The stomp dance commences at 7 p.m. Concessions are available during the dance.

Come and join the festivities of this Keetoowah tradition.

For more information call the UKB Culture Center at (918) 772-4372.

COMMENTARY

Addressing the most discriminatory bill ever passed in South Dakota

NOTES FROM INDIAN COUNTRY

TIM GIAGO (Nanwica Kciji) © 2012 Unity South Dakota

Representative Steve Hickey (R-Sioux Falls) introduced a bill to repeal a bill that was passed last year that set a statute of limitation for child sex abuse civil suits.

House Bill 1104 was slipped quietly through the state legislature last year even drawing the support of the Representative from the Pine Ridge Reservation, Jim Bradford. The bill limited the time to file civil suits to three years from the time a victim was abused or three years from the time a victim reasonably discovered they were harmed by the abuse. The bill also read that those that had not reached the age of 40 could still file a suit.

Since nearly all of those involved in lawsuits against the Catholic Church for child sexual abuse are far past the age of 40 and nearly all of them are Native Americans, House Bill 1104 was clearly one of most discriminatory bills ever introduced and passed by the South Dakota State legislators.

But here is the clincher as explained by Rep. Hickey. "In 2010 an attorney for a Catholic Church who is presently litigating cases for the Church in our state drafted Bill 1104 to place an arbitrary and discriminatory statute of limitations on childhood sex abuse civil litigations. The bill was not circulated for co-sponsors and no opponent testimony. Those affected by it did not know about it until it passed. The fact that it was drafted by a church attorney so it would shelter his client; those details were not mentioned on the House or Senate floor."

"I would suggest that the way that House Bill 1104 came to this body in 2010 re-enforces a church cover-up of abuses which has been extensively documented in our state and throughout the world," Hickey

Bill 1104 was retroactive so that dozens of suits filed by Native Americans were automatically thrown out. Attorney Marci Hamilton put it this way, "In part this bill, House Bill 1218 (the bill to repeal 1104) is needed because of the unfortunate House Bill 1104 that passed in 2010, targeted Native American victims of priests within the Roman Catholic Church and I think it opens South Dakota to liability for having violated the U. S. Constitution based on race."

Isadore Zephier, a member of the Yankton Sioux Tribe, was there to give testimony. He said, "I am a survivor and I went through a lot of suffering when I was seven year old until I was 10 years old. Since there isn't much time left, I just want to give you something for you to understand where I am coming from. If all of you can imagine yourself being forced to perform oral copulation on a priest for three or four years, constantly, then I hope that will help you understand. To make this law for the victims is all I ask."

So far the state legislators appear to be on the fence. The first time around the bill to repeal HB 1104, failed, but it may be brought up again. In other words HB 1218 still has life, but it needs the support of more legislators.

It is hard for most Native Americans to understand why a bill aimed solely at them is not considered discriminatory. There is little doubt that sexual abuse of Indian children took place within the confines of the Catholic Indian boarding schools in South Dakota. St. Joseph's Boarding School in Chamberlain, South Dakota was one of the most notorious and it is the attorney for this school, who also happens to be a state legislator, who introduced HB 1104 in the first place. But stepping upon the civil rights of Indians that have been abused is going about it in the wrong way.

The U. S. Department of Justice, Civil Rights Division, is monitoring the actions of the South Dakota legislative body and if violations of the civil rights of Native Americans are perceived, the state may be open to injunctory relief and monetary

Rep. Hickey said, "For as little as $1,000 premium a year liability insurance can be obtained to protect an institution form the expense of litigation. They do not need laws skewed in their favor. It is understandable that institutions opposing this today are in a selfprotection mode doing everything possible to avoid exposure, scandal and accountability."

It is a crying shame that South Dakota legislators should put a law in place that would protect the Catholic Church from lawsuits filed by so many Native Americans who have suffered all of these years from the sexual abuse heaped upon them by a clergy that held them in near inescapable institutions. The children were in the boarding schools under the complete control of the priests and nuns charged with their protection.

Tim Giago

Lives were damaged nearly irreparably and someone has to assume the responsibility for these atrocities. Wake up South Dakota; and please do not add to the harm already done.

Tim Giago, an Oglala Lakota, is President of Unity South Dakota. He was a Nieman Fellow at Harvard with the Class of 1990. His weekly column won the H. L. Mencken Award in 1985. He was the founder of The Lakota Times, Indian Country Today, Lakota Journal and Native Sun News. He can be reached at UnitySoDak1@knology.net

The viewpoints expressed in columns and letters are the opinions of the writers and not necessarily the opinion or viewpoint of the Native American Times publisher or staff. Send letters to editor@nativetimes.com. Please keep letters to 350 words or less. Sign your name, tribal affiliation and city of residence for verification purposes.

Business consultant speaking at Pawnee meeting

PAWNEE, Okla. - World renowned author and businessman, Dr. Henry Migliore will speak at the Pawnee Tribal Development Corporation Board of Directors meeting Feb. 28, 5:30pm at the Roam Chief building located at 810 Morris Road in Pawnee. He will give an overview of "Planning for Success" followed by a Q & A session.

Migliore is presently Professor Emeritus at Northeastern State University and president of Managing For Success, an international consulting company. He teaches at the graduate and undergraduate levels for a number of universities worldwide and has been a small business consultant for the Oklahoma Small Business Development Center for 13 years.

Due to his vast background in strategic planning, Migliore is being considered for an advisory position with the Pawnee Tribal Development Corporation Board. In this capacity, he will provide input and give an assessment and determination in regard to strategic planning for the organization.

To RSVP for the Feb. 28 meeting, leave a message (918)762-4832 Ext.12 or Ext.17.

SMC hosting photo contest

STILLWATER, Okla. - The Stillwater Medical Center Foundation is requesting submissions for its premier photographic art show, to be held in May. Photographers, both young and old, advancedamateur to professional, are encouraged to submit entries.

The show will be open to the public on May 11 and 12, 2012, at the Stillwater Community Center. Four awards will be selected by judges and show attendees will vote for a "People's Choice" selection. All awards include a cash prize.

The "Healing Through Art" project began when SMC Foundation board members learned about the positive impact of art on patient well-being and recovery. They became excited about engaging the community to partner with them to bring art into Stillwater Medical Center. Selections from the show, including the award winners, will be utilized to bring art into patient rooms at the hospital

"The research is clear and convincing. Art in hospitals has a positive impact on patients," Dr. Lee Bird, SMC Foundation board member and "Healing Through Art" chair, stated. "Images that create an appropriate response, such as hope, joy, or dignity, enhance the healing process. Art is also of great benefit to family caregivers, as well as hospital staff and physicians, by helping relieve stress and fatigue."

Name: _

An artist can provide up to three entries for show selection. There is no cost to enter, but specific guidelines have been set for the unframed submissions. You download an entry packet at www.smc-foundation.org, or pick one up at the foundation's office in the SMC Annex at 6th and Walnut, Stillwater. Entries and documentation can be submitted daily April 9-12 at the Foundation office.

The Stillwater Medical Center Foundation is an independent non-profit that provides fundraising support to Stillwater Medical Center. The vital funding raised by the SMC Foundation allows the hospital to continue its long history of providing quality healthcare to Stillwater and surrounding communities.

For additional information, you may call Teresa Hopkins or Jeffery Corbett at the SMC Foundation at 405-742-5728.

VINITA 918-256-5585

LANGLEY 918-782-0011

MONKEY ISLAND 918-257-8869

www.okstatebank.com Equal Housing Lender Native American Owned

NATIVE TIMES recycles with Tahlequah Recycling Incorporated... Reeves Renovations Professional Construction, Remodeling & Repairs

Bathrooms • Kitchens • Paint Tile • Trim • Plumbing Electrical • Solar Panels Windmills • Winterizing Quality Work • Free Estimates

918-637-6736 johnwilliamreeves@juno.com Mayes & Cherokee Counties -

Follow Us! www.twitter.com/nativetimes

NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES

Address:
City:	_ State:	_ Zip:
Phone:

■ $65.00 for 52 issues ■ $32.50 for 26 issues

■ $16.25 for 13 issues ■ $1.25 single copy

Mail this form with a check or money order to: Native American Times • P.O. Box 411 Tahleguah, OK 74465 • 918-708-5838

More Jobs. More News. More Features. Every Day.

shouldn't you?

www.nativetimes.com

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT / HELP WANTED

Bacone College is currently accepting applications for the following position:

Assistant/Associate Professor of Exercise Science

Full-time Assistant/Associate Professor of Exercise Science beginning Fall 2012. Doctorate required in Exercise Science or related field, ABD considered. College teaching experience preferred. Duties include instruction and advising in coursed leading to a BS in Exercise Science, establishing and overseeing internship sites, and engaging in college/professional services.

Salaries are competitive and commensurate with experience and credentials. Review of application will begin immediately and continue until position is filled. Candidates should submit letter of intent, vita, and three professional references to: Human Resources, Bacone College, 2299 old Bacone Road, Muskogee, OK 74403 or email, humanresources@ bacone.edu. Bacone is a private fouryear college with a mission to provide opportunities to American Indian students and employees. EOE

Go online to nativetimes.com for more jobs! -New jobs posted throughout the week-

Sac & Fox Nation Casino is accepting Applications for

General Manager

Qualifications: Bachelors Degree in Business / Marketing Strong Leadership Skills Casino Management Experience

Applicants must pass background and drug screen. Native American preference is recognized.

Submit resume by fax @ 405-395-0790 or visit our website at sandfcasino.com to apply online

OK PUBLIC EMPLOYEES RETIREMENT SYSTEM

CALL CENTER REP

Responsible for large volume of inbound calls, providing benefit information and troubleshooting member issues. Excellent interpersonal and customer service skills required. Must be proficient in current software applications including Word and Excel. Hiring rate: $33,489/yr. Deadline for applications: 2/23/2012. For more information and application procedures, go to http://www.opers. ok.gov/jobs. EOE

Absentee Shawnee Tribal Health Authority, Inc. AST Counseling Center

AST Counseling Center is an outpatient behavioral health counseling center within the AST Health Systems. AST Counseling Center provides services to Native Americans as well as non-Native Americans who are on Medicaid/Medicare. AST Counseling Center is currently located in our expanded SHAWNEE CLINIC and will move soon to our newly constructed (76,000 sq. ft) AMBULATORY CARE CLINIC in LITTLE AXE, OK

AST Counseling Center is looking for highly motivated and career oriented professionals to complement the current staff and to provide a larger range of quality care for our patients.

ASTHA is looking for Psychologists and Psychiatrist as well as BH Clinicians who are LADC, LSCW, LMFT or LPC credentialed professionals.

We offer competitive salaries (Clinicians-$45k to $65K; Psychologist & Psychiatrist are negotiable) as well as employer paid benefits for employees such as: medical and dental insurance, group life, short term disability, 401K with matching contribution, AAA. We also offer voluntary products such as vision insurance, add'l group life, accident insurance, and other voluntary insurance products. Position descriptions and application information are available online at www.astribe.com

If you have any questions about the ASTCC please contact Kristy Morrell @ 405.878.5850 or Briana Ponkilla @ 405.878.4702. Applications/resumes can be emailed to bponkilla@astribe.com or faxed to 405.878.4540.

Native American Preference/EEO/Smoke Free/Drug Free Workplace

Absentee Shawnee Tribal Health Authority, Inc. Recruiting for the following positions:

Board Certified Family Physician

Nurse Practitioner/Physician Assistant Behavioral Health Clinicians Registered Nurses Financial Director Budget Tech Personnel Assistant Network Administrator Medical Coder Patient Benefit Advocate

> Located in our expanded SHAWNEE CLINIC and newly constructed (76,000 sq. ft) AMBULATORY CARE CLINIC in LITTLE AXE, OK

Insurance Specialist

Position descriptions and application information are available online at www.astribe.com Questions/Inquiries: Contact Briana Ponkilla, Dir. Of Personnel, at bponkilla@astribe.com or

405.878.4702 Native American Preference/EEO/ Smoke Free & Drug Free Workplace

Look for Native American Times on Facebook! Friends get front page scoops and breaking news.

EVENTS

*Email your powwow or

nativetimes.com. Name,

date, time, place and

EVERY WEDNESDAY

Kiowa class beginning

in February at 6:30 pm,

Oliphant Hall, Room 141,

Tulsa University. Info call

Sarah, (918) 445-5213

EVERY THURSDAY

The Otoe-Missouria

Substance Abuse and

sponsor an open group

for families touched by

addiction from noon to 1

Health Building. This is a

p.m. at the Otoe-Missouria

confidential group. Call 580-

Cherokee Artists Association

meeting at 202 E. 5th Street

723-4466 x252 or x262 for more information.

SECOND TUESDAY

Tahlequah, Okla. Info:

(918) 458-0008 or www.

THIRD TUESDAY of even

numbered months - The

Central Oklahoma Cherokee

Alliance meets at Mayflower

UCC Church, Oklahoma City

at 6 p.m. Phone: (405) 408-

0763. The next meeting is

Each month the American

Eastern Chapter hosts a

College, Muskogee, Okla.

Wacoche Hall. Please RSVP

one week ahead of time.

Phone: (918) 230-3759

11:30 a.m. at Benjamin

FOURTH THURSDAY

Indian Chamber of Commerce of Oklahoma

Feb. 16.

cherokeeartistsassociation.

Behavioral Health Programs

other event info to: Lisa@

contact information is free.

www.okchoctaws.org

MON/WED AND THURS The Marble City Nutrition Center serves hot meals at the Marble City Community Center at 11:30 a.m. Meals are free to anyone over 50, but a small donation is suggested to help with the expense of the program. Gather for fellowship and friendship. Volunteers welcome. Marble City Nutrition Center, 711 N. Main, Marble City, Okla.

YOUTH COUNCIL The Native Nations Youth Council (NNYC) bimonthly meetings from 6:30pm - 8:30pm @ the Youth Services of Tulsa Activity Center (311 S. Madison - on 3rd just west of Peoria). Call to confirm location. Info Call: Chad Gilley (918) 382-

Phone: (918) 775-2158

THROUGH MARCH 12 Free tobacco cessation course from 6 p.m. to 7 p.m. Whitney Nuttle (918) 762-3873 or Suzy Knife Chief (918) 762-2153.

2204 or nnyc@ihcrc.org

FEBRUARY 25 United Keetoowah Band is holding its 1st Indoor Stomp Dance at the UKB Wellness Center. Starting at 5 p.m., weather permitting, a stickball game is being held and a chili dinner follows at 6 p.m. Bring your lawn chairs, shells and hats. The monthly luncheon at Bacone stomp dance commences at 7 p.m. Concessions are available during the dance. For more information call the UKB Culture Center at (918) 772-4372.

EVERY 2ND SATURDAY FEBRUARY 25 Indian Taco Sales - from Wild Onion Dinner 11am to 3pm at Indian Fellowship 11-2:30pm at OK Choctaw Baptist Church, 6130 So. Tribal Alliance, 5320 S.

58th W. Ave, Oakhurst, Okla. Administration Building Info call Mary Kelly 918-636- Conference Room, 118

8394

FEBRUARY 25 Bake Sale & Native Crafts, 10 MARCH 3-4 am-1pm at Sapulpa Library, 27 W Dewey, Sapulpa, Okla. Info: 918-852-6780

FEBRUARY 25 3rd Annual Hoops Basketball Tournament - Men's 5 on 5 Basketball Entry Fee: $110 Deadline: Feb. 22. Prizes: 1st place - long sleeve shirts, 2nd place – t-shirts Contact: Cristine Hooper-Ben 918-316-1111

FEBRUARY 29 Smoke-Free Homes workshops sponsored by Osage Nation and Native American M-Power from 10 a.m. until Noon. sponsored by Osage Nation and Native American M-Power, are held from 10 a.m. until noon. Info call Osage Nation Native American M-Power at (918) 287-5380.

MARCH-MAY Free beginner-level Cherokee language classes in communities throughout the tribe's jurisdiction starting in March. Once a week for ten weeks. For locations or to register, call Bill Andoe at 918-453-5151.

MARCH 2 Indian Taco Sale 11:00 AM - 2:00 PM at Norman First American UMC, 1950 East Beaumont Drive, Norman, Okla. Call Ahead for Speedy Service. Free Delivery on Orders of 10 or More (405) 321-5640

MARCH 3 Peoria Tribal Election for Treasurer and First Councilman. Polls open 9am-Noon, Peoria Tribal South Eight Tribes Trail in Miami, Okla.

Yard sale and $5 food menu fundraiser for S.P.I.R.I.T. from 7:30 am to 5:00 pm each day. 2715 NW 11th, Oklahoma City, OK. Call Brenda a405-471-7610 or Kathryn at 405-830-0626 if you can volunteer, donate or have questions.

MARCH 3-31 Tulsa Library's Festival of Words, a series of systemwide events to honor the achievements and celebrate the history of American Indians. For events and times, call the AskUs Hotline, 918-549-7323, or visit the library's website, www.tulsalibrary.org.

MARCH 10 Red Earth Run, Regatta Park, Oklahoma City

MARCH 17 Skate Jam Competition 10 am - dark at the "Skate Park Off Broadway," 105 Reynolds in Poteau Okla. www.nativeskateparks.com

MARCH 17 2011 OKC Princess Honor Dance at Heart of Oklahoma Expo Center, 1700 W. Independence, Shawnee, OK. Info contact Shirley Wapskineh 405-632-5227 or swapskineh@sbcglobal.net

MARCH 17 Wild Onion Dinner from 11 am til 3 pm at Haikey Chapel UMC, 8815 E 101st St, Tulsa.

MARCH 23 Miss Indian Oklahoma City Competition & Performance at 6:30 pm, 3801 SE 29th St. Del City, OK. Info contact Shirley Wapskineh 405632-5227 or swapskineh@ sbcglobal.net

MARCH 31 "Play Golf Native America Day," a free program for ramilies to experience a day of fun, from 10 a.m. - 1 p.m. at Cherokee Hills Golf Club located at Hard Rock Hotel & Casino Tulsa. Registration begins at 8:30 a.m. Info email Crystal Echo Hawk: crystal@nb3f.org

APRIL 6 Indian Taco Sale 11:00 AM - 2:00 PM at Norman First American UMC, 1950 East Beaumont Drive, Norman, Okla. Call Ahead for Speedy Service. Free Delivery on Orders of 10 or More (405) 321-5640

APRIL 7 Ponca Gourd Dance 9th Annual Spring Dance White Eagle Cultural Center 5 miles south of Ponca City, OK (580) 268-3313 or (580) 762-0499

APRIL 14 All Gourd Honor Dance for Micheal Tsotaddle at Red Buffalo Hall Carnegie, OK, 2p.m. - ? For more information call Darla Tsotaddle (405) 432-8377 or Mavis Tsotaddle (580) 654-1704.

MAY 4 Indian Taco Sale 11:00 AM - 2:00 PM at Norman First American UMC, 1950 East Beaumont Drive, Norman, Okla. Call Ahead for Speedy Service. Free Delivery on Orders of 10 or More (405) 321-5640

JUNE 1 Indian Taco Sale 11:00 AM - 2:00 PM at Norman First American UMC, 1950 East Beaumont Drive, Norman, Okla. Call Ahead for Speedy Service. Free Delivery on Orders of 10 or More (405) 321-5640

JUNE 8-10 Red Earth Festival, Cox Convention Center, Oklahoma City

JUNE 10-16 Jim Thorpe Native American Games at Remington Park, Oklahoma City. Proceeds benefit the Jim Thorpe Bright Path Youth Programs and Awakening The Spirit Diabetes Prevention and Control program. Contact Annetta Abbott: 405-208-9253 www.jimthorpegames.com

JULY 6 Indian Taco Sale 11:00 AM - 2:00 PM at Norman First American UMC, 1950 East Beaumont Drive, Norman, Okla. Call Ahead for Speedy Service. Free Delivery on Orders of 10 or More (405) 321-5640

JULY 9 - SEPT 28 The Potter & The Painter: Works by Lisa Rutherford and Jim Van Deman at Red Earth Museum & Gallery, Oklahoma City

AUGUST 3 Indian Taco Sale 11:00 AM - 2:00 PM at Norman First American UMC, 1950 East Beaumont Drive, Norman, Okla. Call Ahead for Speedy Service. Free Delivery on Orders of 10 or More (405) 321-5640

SEPTEMBER 7 Indian Taco Sale 11:00 AM - 2:00 PM at Norman First American UMC, 1950 East Beaumont Drive, Norman, Okla. Call Ahead for Speedy Service. Free Delivery on Orders of 10 or More (405) 321-5640

Cherokee Nation offers online scholarship help

TAHLEQUAH, Okla. — The Cherokee Nation now has a web portal to help its citizens search for college scholarships.

Students who sign up can use the portal, driven by Academic Works scholarship management software, to simplify the process of researching and applying for scholarships offered by the Cherokee Nation, Cherokee Nation Foundation or other entities. Gregg Simmons, the Cherokee Nation's college resources manager, said the new service provides transparency and convenience to those who use it.

"So far, the students seem to like it. It's one portal that people can use to not only apply for scholarships here and at the foundation, but also use it as a search tool for other aid opportunities out there," Simmons said. "Basically, what it's going to do is allow the students access to their account at any time. They don't have to work with our 8 to 5 schedule here. They will be able to see that their application is complete, when we have reviewed it, when an offer has been made and that the check is in the mail."

The new online service streamlines the scholarship application process and saves students' time by eliminating redundancies.

"Once they apply, when it comes time for the next year, they don't have to fill out a whole new application," Simmons said. "They just update everything that needs to be updated. It should really speed things up."

The Cherokee Nation College Resource Center makes the new online service available to those students who have limited computer access.

"If someone needs help, if they need access to the technology, we have it here in our office," Simmons said. "Also, we're available to go out to communities and schools. In fact, we've got a couple of schools that have asked us to come out and help."

For more information, call 918-453-5465 or email collegeresoures@cherokee.org. To enroll in the Cherokee Nation scholarship web portal, visit https://cherokeenation.academicworks.

HTTPS://CHEROKEENATION.ACADEMICWORKS.COM/

 $The \ Cherokee \ Nation's \ new \ web \ portal \ streamlines \ the \ scholar ship \ application \ process \ for \ tribal \ citizens.$

Choctaw Nation, Southeastern Oklahoma State University announce launch of Choctaw University

Choctaw Nation News Release

DURANT, Okla. - The Choctaw Nation of Oklahoma Learning & Development Department in partnership with Southeastern Oklahoma State University is proud to announce the launch of its newest endeavor, Choctaw University. The purpose of Choctaw University (Choctaw U) is to grow knowledge and skills of all associates by instilling a deeper understanding of their purpose within the organization. Participants will receive superior professional hangs in the balance.

Shape our future

than state law

Your state is counting on you.

Let's pull together to Shape Our Future.

for ourselves.

for our families.

for future generations.

unacceptable. We can no longer sit idle when our health

There is a plan to create healthier lives for all Oklahomans - the Oklahoma Health Improvement Plan. Endorsed by the legislature, this plan outlines a clear path of action to save lives and improve our health. Join us by supporting:

Restore the rights of local communities to pass smokefree policies that are stronger or eighth grade for all state public schools

Assure health education is taught in sixth, seventh

Prohibit the use of a hand-held electronic device while driving for all drivers under the age of 18

Oklahoma ranks 48th nationally for health. That is development training, build knowledge, and improve their skills to be more efficient and productive leaders. Choctaw U includes two series for development, the Leadership Series and the Continuing Education Series.

According to Susan Stockton, executive director of Human Resources for the Choctaw Nation, "Developing highly skilled, highly qualified workers is the goal of every organization. Choctaw University is about more than professional development... it's about empowering our associates to advance and succeed in the organization while achieving the dream of higher education."

The five levels of training within Choctaw U mirror that of a standard university. The official launch of Choctaw U was Jan. 26, 2012. More than 100 people have made the first year-long commitment to Choctaw U. The participants attended the orientation at Choctaw Casino and Resorts in Durant. During the meeting, participants learned how the program builds on Chief Greg Pyle's longterm vision of growing and sustaining the tribe. Choctaw

U challenges this group of leaders to begin planning towards the next century of the Choctaw people.

The Choctaw Nation of Oklahoma and Southeastern Oklahoma State University have created a partnership with a goal to achieving college credit for the Leadership Series of Choctaw U. Courses included in this agreement include Leading Generational Diversity, Transformational Leadership, Managing People, Effective Coaching and Mentoring, Change Management, and Succession

Planning.

"We are enabling our associates to grow into positions across our many business enterprises while helping them complete their college education," says Tana Sanders, director of Learning and Development.

American Indian, Alaska Native & Native Hawaiian Students

$450,000+ awarded each year! All Undergraduate Majors Are Eligible. Graduate Scholarships Available.

Applications Due April 4th!

Download Application: aiefprograms.org

American Indian Education Foundation 2401 Eglin Street • Rapid City, SD 57703 (605) 342-9968

Find out more at ShapeOurFutureOK.com

Metal Roofing & Siding

Professional Construction and Home Repairs

Free Estimates

Charles Snell 918-507-2902

Native American Contractor

Look for Native American Times on Facebook!
Friends get front page scoops and breaking news.

SPIRITUAL HEALING

ADVICE ON ALL MATTERS OF LIFE

Love, Marriage, Business, Health, Past, Present, Future Tarot Card, Psychic, readings by phone, not for entertainment. Only for those in need of help. At any time

(785) 841-1159

By Tina Guaranteed Results

Bacone's health science programs successful

CHESLEY OXENDINE
Bacone College

MUSKOGEE, Okla. – Today's college graduates enter a wounded economy and tight job market.

Bacone's sonography and radiography students however, frequently gain employment before graduates even get a degree.

Radiography, accredited through the Joint Review Committee on Education in Radiologic Technology (JRCERT), experienced nearly 30 percent pass rate growth in five years.

Bacone Radiology graduates, certified through American Registry of Radiologic Technologists surged 59 percent (2007) to 87 percent (2011).

Acting Director of Radiography Shawn Dixon attributes improved rates to the school's faculty who form the program's "backbone."

"You need people who can instill in the students what they're going out there for," she said, "and give them the tools they need."

Dixon, an X-ray technician since 2002, said Bacone's Radiography program's reputation is success.

"When I started teaching here [in 2007], we were called the 'Harvard school," she said. "Our students still carry a high standard of education and GPAs behind them."

The acting director said she juggled an active family life during college, and understands challenges facing her students.

"I've been there. I've done that," Dixon said. "I tell them to look right and left – those people have problems, too. We have to push through it."

Radiography senior Joshua Good said his professors do "everything they can to help."

"When we have a hard time passing a test, they let us take it again or do study groups," said Good. "They take a lot of time out of their personal schedule to help us."

The Fayetteville, Ark. senior said he originally came to Bacone for football.

"I took some classes, leaning toward being a coach or teacher," he said. "Then I heard about Bacone's nationally known radiography program, and so I decided I had to find a way to get in there."

Good said he enjoys working closely with people, which radiography affords.

"You're talking to the patients, and you're the eyes of the doctor," he said. "You can't get a diagnosis if you can't see it."

Radiography received a major equipment upgrade in 2009, including standard and wall
"buckies," which stabilize patients during X-rays, plus an
AmRad Classic Floor
Wall/Floor Ceiling digital X-ray machine that replaced traditional film device.

Dixon said Bacone's cutting-edge tools mean students now duplicate in class what they find on the job.

"Technology wise we needed to catch up with our clinical sites," she said. "We're there now."

The acting director, a 2002
Bacone radiography graduate, said successful clinical experiences help students get jobs.

"We actually call clinical a

"We actually call clinicals a 'two year job interview," Dixon said. "Some of these students have jobs before they even leave here [Bacone]."

Bacone graduate Stormi Hyslop received an Associate's of Applied Science in Radiography in May 2011.

Currently employed at Creek Nation Wetumka Clinic, Hyslop said

COURTESY / BACONE COLLI

Bacone College offers students cutting-edge tools that duplicate what they'd find professionally in the workforce.

clinicals were her "foot in the door."
"I began work at Creek Nation

Community Hospital (CNCH) in Okemah," she said, "thanks to the Bacone radiography clinical experience."

A CNCH manager remembered Hyslope's character and work ethic, she said, and invited her back for an interview two months after graduation.

Hyslope said Bacone's radiography degree, compared to those from other schools, gave her an edge in getting hired so quickly.

"I wanted to graduate with a degree, not just a piece of paper," she said. "That definitely has advantages."

The X-ray technician said Bacone instructors played a part in her success, as well.

"They're really great at helping you understand things," Hyslope said, "even if they have to stay late afterwards."

Executive Vice President and Dean of Faculty Dr. Robert K. Brown described the radiography program that originated in the 1970s, as a mainstay.

Sonography began in 2007 with its first graduating class in 2008, said

For Sonography senior Rayna Hubbard, the program's biggest strength is acting director Cindy Rich

"Cindy is really encouraging and helpful and she wants us to pass," said Hubbard. "If you are struggling, she knows this, and she'll pull you to the side and spend her free time going over all the material."

Rich, who brings over 20 years of ultrasound experience from Muskogee Regional Medical Center, said attending clinicals shapes a necessary bond with students.

"Ultrasound is a one-on-one thing," Rich said. "It's important that I get out there and build a relationship with my students, so they know they can come to me if there's a problem."

Ashley Miller, a protégée who graduated in 2008 with the inaugural sonography class, said clinical experiences build familiarity with potential employers.

"[Work sites] met me, saw that I could scan, and what kind of character I had," said Miller. "They already knew me before they met these other [applicants.]"

Miller worked at Muskogee Regional Medical Center, Muskogee Community Hospital, and then came full circle to Bacone where she now teaches students how to scan minute organs and tissues in Small Parts (DMS 2053) as an adjunct instructor.

The recent graduate said she knows her students "have lives and have kids."

"That has to be taken into consideration," the adjunct sonography instructor said. "I was sitting where they were a few years ago. That helps me teach them."

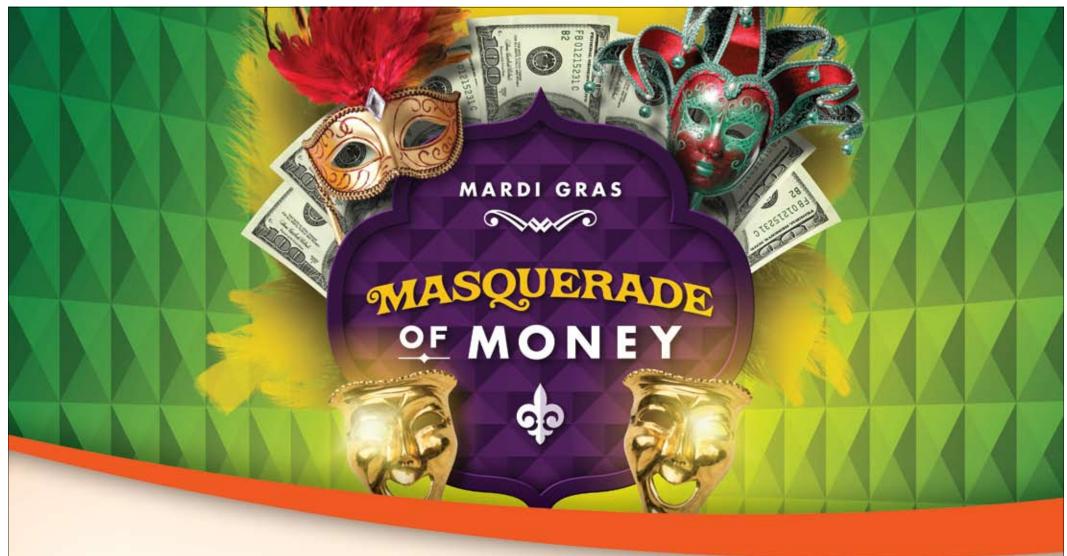

Also helping Bacone students are three Acuson ultrasound machines, said Brown, the school's chief academic officer.

But even state-of-the-art equipment is not as important as faculty, Brown said.

"We have faculty who are committed to this profession and know what it takes to be successful," Brown added. "We have good equipment, but it's the people committed to our students that help us succeed."

This continued success remains customary for Bacone, he said.

"The school has a longstanding tradition of helping to meet the demand for health care workers in this region," Brown said, "and we going to continue to do so."

Win your share of over

$90,000 in Cash!

Saturday, February 25 6 pm – 10 pm

Catch some beads and join us for Masquerade of Money at Osage Casino! On Saturday, February 25 from 6pm–9pm we're holding $500 Cash drawings five times every hour at each location. Then at 10pm, 21 lucky guests will take home $1,000 Cash across all locations! Play with your Club Osage card February 12–23 to enter. Find your fortune this February at Osage Casino during Masquerade of Money!

JOIN CLUB OSAGE TODAY!

Visit osagecasinos.com for details.

Tulsa Bartlesville Sand Springs Ponca City Skiatook Hominy Pawhuska • (918) 699-7777 • osagecasinos.com •

©2012 Osage Casino. Must be 18 to participate. Guests must be actively playing with their Club Osage card to be eligible for promotional drawings. Must be present to win $500 Cash drawings. Need not be present to win $1,000 Cash grand prize. Grand prize must be claimed within 30 days. Management reserves all rights. If you think you have a gambling problem, please call 1-800-522-4700.

Inside this issue:

- Tribe seeks to limit beer sales
- Oldest Kiowa always represented tribe well
- 'Famous Dave' has Oklahoma ties

TODAY'S INDEPENDENT INDIAN NEWS

- A FREE PUBLICATION

WWW.NATIVETIMES.COM

AMERICAN

VOLUME 18 + ISSUE 9

PUBLISHED WEEKLY

MARCH 2, 2012

Colville Tribes win $193M for mismanaged lands

NESPELEM, (AP) - The Confederated Colville Tribes announced an agreement Feb. 24 to accept a $193 million settlement offer from the federal government for mismanaging tribal lands.

The agreement is one of the largest Indian trust mismanagement settlements in U.S. history, Colville Tribal Chairman Michael Finley told The Wenatchee World.

The U.S. Department of Justice is expected to sign the agreement in the next two weeks, Finley said.

The Colvilles filed suit in 2005 alleging the government soldtribaltimber and leased its rangeland for less than market value for years. The case marked one of about 60 tribal trust lawsuits, which have been pending for a decade, involving mismanagement of tribal trust lands.

The cases are separate from a class-action lawsuit, known as the Cobell case, filed against the U.S. Bureau of Indian Affairs that alleges mismanagement of oil, gas, grazing and timberlands.

Last Friday's settlement will have no bearing on the outcome of that pending case, Finley said. Lands involved in the mismanagement claimed in this settlement involve only trust lands that belong to the tribe and not individual members, he said.

A portion of the funds will be set aside and distributed, probably over time, to tribal members, while the rest will be used to restore tribal forests, rangeland and other natural resources, Finley said.

"It's going to put a lot of our people back to work," he said. "Our forests need commercial thinning and tree planting. You're going to see a lot of this money being put to work right away."

The settlement exceeds the $53 million the Colville Tribes won from the government in 1994 for lands taken to build Grand Coulee Dam.

Okla. Supreme Court takes tribal water rights case

The Oklahoma Supreme Court would have meant the lawsuit water rights of the Choctaw has agreed to take jurisdiction of a lawsuit concerning the water rights of two Oklahomabased American Indian tribes in their historic territories in southeastern Oklahoma.

The state's highest court took the action in an order handed down on Feb. 23. Its district court.

A hearing in the case is scheduled before a Supreme Court referee on April 19.

Earlier this month, Attorney General Scott Pruitt asked the Supreme Court to preside over a comprehensive OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) - refusal to take jurisdiction stream adjudication of the would have to originate in a and Chickasaw nations in Oklahoma southeastern streams.

> In a statement, Pruitt says the high court's decision indicates that justices understand that water rights issues are important to all Oklahomans.

University of Colorado junior Garrett Akol tacks up his design project for his professor to critique Feb. 22 during an American

Students head to Pine Ridge to address housing

BRITTANY ANAS The Daily Camera

BOULDER, Colo. (AP) - The Pine Ridge Indian Reservation is one of the poorest pockets of the country, with unemployment above 80 percent.

Many of the homes on the reservation have problems like those in developing nations. They lack electricity and sewage systems, are plagued with mold, and aren't designed to house extended families.

The South Dakota reservation that is home to the Oglala Sioux Tribe is facing a tremendous housing crisis, and a University of Colorado instructor and his architecture students want to help. The students in Rob Pyatt's "Native American Sustainable Housing Initiative" are traveling to South Dakota to start designing housing for the reservation. It's Pyatt's 20th trip to the reservation and the students' first.

"I thought this was a great opportunity to get handson experience to go build

See STUDENTS Continued on Page 5

DALE WETZEL / ASSOCIATED PRESS FILE

In this March 22, 2010, file photo, hockey sweaters displaying the University of North Dakota's Fighting Sioux nickname and logo are displayed in a souvenir shop inside Ralph Engelstad Arena in Grand Forks. N.D. North Dakota's Board of Higher Education voted Monday, Feb. 13, to sue to try to block a state law requiring the university's athletics teams to be called the Fighting Sioux.

Lawmakers hire lawyer for Fighting Sioux dispute

DALE WETZEL

Associated Press

BISMARCK, N.D. (AP) -Legislative leaders voted last Friday to hire an attorney to attempt to intervene in a lawsuit over the University of North Dakota's Fighting Sioux nickname.

The Legislative Committee Management voted 12-5 to hire Bismarck attorney Pat Durick to defend the Legislature's interests in the case. Durick declined comment.

The committee includes the Legislature's Democratic and Republican floor leaders, and handles the Legislature's business when lawmakers are not in session.

Committee chairman and House majority leader Rep. Al Carlson, R-Fargo, argued the dispute risks curtailing Legislature's the over North Dakota's public colleges.

"This is a big deal," Carlson said. "If we sit on the sidelines, I think it is a huge mistake."

The Board of Higher Education is suing Secretary of State Al Jaeger in an attempt to block a June vote on a law that requires the university's teams to be known as the Fighting Sioux. The law also requires the university to

See SIOUX Continued on Page 4

Court denies county's voting rights appeal

■ Tribes claimed the county's at-large voting for county commissioners violated the federal Voting Rights Act by diluting the Indian vote.

BEN NEARY Associated Press

CHEYENNE, Wyo. (AP) - A federal appeals court on Feb. 22 rejected Fremont County's appeal of a voting rights challenge by American Indians that has forced the county to abandon its system of at-large voting for commissioners.

The ruling by a three-judge panel of the 10th Circuit Court of Appeals in Denver upholds a 2010 ruling by U.S. District Judge Alan B. Johnson of Cheyenne. Johnson had ruled in favor of members of the Northern Arapaho and Eastern Shoshone tribes who claimed Fremont County's system of at-large voting for county commissioners violated the federal Voting Rights Act by diluting the Indian vote.

Fremont County didn't contest Johnson's finding that at-large voting violated the law. But the county appealed after Johnson rejected its proposals to remediate the violation by creating a single, Indian majority district centered on the Wind River Indian Reservation while continuing with at-large voting in the rest of the county.

In rejecting the county's plan for "hybrid" voting districts, Johnson wrote in 2010, "The (county's) plans appear to be devised solely for the purpose of segregating citizens into separate voting districts on the basis of race

See APPEAL Continued on Page 4

French oil giant, US reach royalty settlement

TEXARKANA, Texas (AP) - French oil giant Total has agreed to pay $15 million to the U.S. government to settle federal allegations that Total underpaid royalties for natural gas taken from federal and American Indian lands.

In a statement issued last Wednesday, the U.S. Justice Department said an assortment of Total S.A. subsidiaries and affiliates reached the settlement in a case pending in a U.S. District Court in Texarkana.

In a lawsuit, the government accused Total of improperly deducting from royalty payments the cost of boosting gas to pipeline pressure, improperly reporting processed gas as unprocessed gas to reduce royalty payments, and engaging in other royalty under-reporting.

Total didn't return a message seeking comment. It's the world's fifth largest publicly traded integrated international oil and gas company, with operations in more than 130 countries.

Feds raid 4 shops on western NY Indian reservation

TONAWANDA INDIAN RESERVATION, N.Y. (AP) - Synthetic marijuana and other merchandise have been seized from four retailers on a western New York Indian reservation in raids carried out by scores of federal agents.

Officials with the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration tell local media outlets that they conducted Thursday's raids on the Tonawanda Indian Reservation at four smoke shops owned by American Indians. Authorities say the raids were prompted by recent local cases of medical emergencies blamed on the pot-like substance, a chemical-coated herb mixture that can have dangerous side effects.

There were no arrests at the reservation, which straddles the Niagara, Genesee and Erie county borders 25 miles northeast of Buffalo.

Authorities say the agents also seized illegal tobacco products and clothing and accessories with suspected fake brand names.

Tribe seeks order to limit beer sales

■ One in four children born on the reservation suffer from fetal alcohol syndrome.

GRANT SCHULTE Associated Press

LINCOLN, Neb. (AP) -Leaders of a South Dakota American Indian tribe who are suing beer makers, distributors and retailers are now asking a judge to restrict alcohol sales in a tiny Nebraska town that borders their reservation.

The Oglala Sioux Tribe added the request late last week to a federal lawsuit that seeks $500 million in damages for the alcohol-related problems on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation.

The tribe's attorney, Tom White of Omaha, said he will argue that Nebraska officials have failed to enforce their own laws by allowing beer sales that far surpass the amount that can legally be consumed in the area.

Alcohol is officially banned on Pine Ridge, a reservation the size of Connecticut in southwestern South Dakota. Nebraska state law prohibits drinking outside of the stores, and the nearest nonreservation town is more than 20 miles to the south. Yet the four beer retailers in Whiteclay, which has fewer than a dozen residents, sold the equivalent of nearly 5 million cans in 2010.

"The defendants have failed to make reasonable efforts to ensure their products are distributed and sold in obedience to the laws of the state of Nebraska and the Oglala Sioux tribe," White said Feb. 22.

The lawsuit says the tribe has "no adequate remedies to protect its federally granted rights" to protect its sovereignty and enforce its own alcohol ban. He pointed to statements by Attorney General Jon Bruning, the state's top law enforcement officer, who has said shutting down the beer stores will not solve the problem.

In this June 3, 2004, file photo, Pine Ridge police officers Mirian Laybad, left, Sqt. Oscar Hudspeth, center, and Lt. Mitch Wisecarver confiscate cases of beer at a checkpoint just north of Whiteclay, Neb. The Oglala Sioux Tribe announced Thursday, Feb. 6, that it will file a $500 million federal lawsuit against some of the nation's largest beer distributors, alleging that they knowingly contributed to the chronic alcoholism, health problems and other social ills on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation. The lawsuit also targets the four beer stores in Whiteclay, a Nebraska town (pop. 11) on the South Dakota border that sells about 5 million cans of beer per year.

The lawsuit in U.S. District Court of Nebraska targets some of the world's largest beer makers, as well as their distributors and the four stores in Whiteclay.

Tribal leaders and activists blame the Whiteclay businesses for chronic alcohol abuse and bootlegging on the Pine Ridge. They say most of the stores' customers come from the reservation, which spans southwest South Dakota.

The $500 million lawsuit seeks reimbursement for the cost of health care, social services and child rehabilitation caused by chronic alcoholism on the reservation, which encompasses some of the nation's most impoverished counties.

One in four children born on the reservation suffer from fetal alcohol syndrome or fetal alcohol spectrum disorder, and the average life expectancy is estimated between 45 and 52 years - the shortest in the North Hemisphere except for Haiti, according to the lawsuit. The average American life expectancy is 77.5 years.

The lawsuit alleges that the beer makers and stores sold to Pine Ridge residents, knowing they would smuggle the alcohol into the reservation to drink or

Matthew Fletcher, a Michigan State University associate law professor who specializes in American Indian issues, said the suit offers a novel approach to a problem that has plagued the reservation for more than a century. But, Fletcher said, "my sense is, it doesn't have much of a chance."

For years, Nebraska lawmakers have struggled to curb the problem, and are considering legislation that would limit the types of alcohol sold in areas like Whiteclay. The measure would require local authorities to ask the state to designate the area an "alcohol impact zone." The state liquor commission could then limit the hours that alcohol sellers are open, as well as ban the sale of certain products.

The beer store owners, distributors and retailers have all declined to comment.

Delaware Nation developing solar panel biz

ZEKE CAMPFIELD

Lawton Constitution

ANADARKO, Okla. (AP) – A dozen years after carpeting manufacturer Hollytex closed its former warehouse the facility has never looked so massive.

Maybe it is because new owner, the Delaware Nation, spent $1 million last year upgrading and expanding it, or maybe it just appears that way now because it's empty. But a walk through its corridor with Jerry Kennedy, executive director of the tribe's economic development group, shows the warehouse is swollen with potential.

"We're trying to make it where it's kind of an incubator center for start-up businesses that are hopefully focused on green technology or at least a business that can't destroy the planet and can employ people," Kennedy said. "It's kind of the heritage with Mother Earth and all that kind of stuff – to help with the planet as well as to help here with employment in Anadarko."

The tribe shelled out $3 million for the new Green Tech facility in 2009. It's 250,000 square feet of covered concrete floor, and Kennedy envisions it will soon be bustling with activity from several manufacturing and assembling companies that will be producing products to be distributed nationwide.

Last year, with a $250,000 federal grant matched by the tribe, a solar array was installed on top of the Delaware tribal complex in Anadarko.

The solar panels knocked off about a third of the complex's daily energy use, but its impact was more demonstrative than anything.

The goal, Kennedy said, is to start assembling these same panels from within the confines of the Green Tech warehouse.

Already the tribe owns a solar power developer in New Jersey, Unami Solar, he said, and a feasibility study is planned for this summer that will bring several coastal solar panel manufacturers to the Anadarko facility with the hopes that one of them will be sold on the idea of assembling them here. In Oklahoma, Kennedy said, these corporate executives will find a progressive business climate with a solid transportation infrastructure and free trade incentives – not to mention a facility in the middle of the country.

"Oklahoma is one of the states that is really providing manufacturing jobs," Kennedy said. "There are all kinds of different agencies a business can use through the Oklahoma Manufacturing Alliance to get tax benefits and employee benefits."

Other prospective clients include a Utah company the tribe recently bought out which manufactures LED, or light-emitting diode, lighting and a group that markets urinal cakes for waterless urinals.

Kennedy said the Delaware Nation Economic Development Authority is projecting 150 employees at the Anadarko complex within three to five years and another 300-500 in a The tribe adopted renewable energy as its platform for economic development in 2008, two years after Kerry Holton became its president. Holton's goal was to diversify and get away from being grant- or casino-dependent, Kennedy said. By bringing these new technologies to Anadarko the tribe would also be providing career opportunities for its younger generation.

"There aren't a lot of opportunities here in Oklahoma, so they move off to other states where there's a little more opportunity," he said. "We're wanting to create opportunity here, so they won't move off and so some of these people can come back home and have a job or career they're proud of."

In addition to the GreenTech project, the tribe is also working with the City of Anadarko and several local schools and agencies to develop an energy conservation and recycling program.

Kylah McNabb, renewable energy development specialist with Oklahoma Department of Commerce, said the state has provided funding to develop that project through a Community Energy Strategic Planning grant. It's a program adopted in several other Oklahoma cities, including Sand Springs and Wilburton, and should eventually help the tribe, city and other organizations qualify for additional green energy grants.

"It's not a great deal of money, but it's a funding stream that enables the Delaware Nation to take an in-depth look at what they would like to do in partnership with the community of Anadarko when it comes to basically holistic energy planning, to figure out what makes sense and what the community would like to see done," McNabb said. "The point is to actually pull all these things together and make it one cohesive strategy for the community as a whole."

These programs are mostly in their infancy, but local leaders have reason to believe they will make a significant economic impact in the near future.

Carla Hall, executive director of the Anadarko Chamber of Commerce, said sometimes all a community needs to do is get the ball rolling, especially when it comes to forging partnerships.

She said she has full faith that both the GreenTech project as well as the tribal-community energy partnership will mean jobs for Anadarko.

"I'm very confident that the Delaware Nation is going to bring the jobs they are working toward and their goals for that facility – and it is going to be an economic boost that is likely to have a domino effect," Hall said.

"I'm already receiving calls from area supply companies, like packaging companies, who are already interested in talking to them about their lighting company. With that will come more housing – which is one of our big drawbacks: lack of housing – and then retail will follow and possibly other manufacturing and that type of industry."

NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES

Publisher & Editor
LISA SNELL
editor@nativetimes.com

Contributing Writers
Dana Attocknie
Wesley Mahan
Karen Shade

Advertising Sales
KATHLEEN ROBERTSON
LISA SNELL
ROB WALTON
advertising@nativetimes.com

Distribution
SHELBY HICKS
STEVE LACY
WESLEY MAHAN
MICHAEL MARRIS
KATHLEEN ROBERTSON
BRENDA SLAUGHTER

The Native American Times, formerly the Oklahoma Indian Times, is published weekly (except the last week of the year) by Lisa Hicks Snell. Mailing address is PO Box 411 Tahlequah, OK 74465. All the contents within the Native American Times are copyrighted material. Any reproduction, redistribution without the written consent of the NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES is strictly prohibited.

Each week's issue is available for free download online at: www.nativetimes.com

Subscription rates: $65.00 for fifty-two issues, $32.50 for twenty-six issues, or $16.25 for thirteen issues. A single copy is $1.25 (Rates are for postage and handling) Send check or money order to:

NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES Attn: Subscriptions P.O. Box 411 Tahlequah, OK 74465-0411

> Phone: (918) 708-5838 Fax: (888) 689-4873

Postmaster: Send Change of Address Form 579 to: NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES P.O. Box 411, Tahlequah, OK 74465

WWW.NATIVETIMES.COM
- News from the crossroads of Indian Country -

Tanka energy bar becoming mainstream

RESERVE YOUR

SPACE IN THE

CALL LISA

918-708-5838

SIOUX FALLS, S.D. (AP) – A South Dakota company created to provide a healthy snack for American Indians expects its sales to grow by a third this year after seeing its product picked up by national grocery chain Whole Foods Markets.

The development also could lead to more hiring at Native American Natural Foods in Kyle, adding valuable jobs on the Pine Ridge Reservation, which encompasses some of the poorest counties in the United States.

Native American Natural Foods produces Tanka Bars, which are made with bison meat and cranberries. The high-protein, 70-calorie snack bars are based on the traditional Lakota food called wasna.

The company sold 1 million units of Tanka products, which include bars and packages of smaller bites, last year and expects that to increase by a third this year with sales at Whole Foods, co-owner Mark Tilsen said. The products are sold at 3,500 stores nationwide and online, including 67 Whole Foods

True American Indian

www.flyingeagletradingpost.com

stores in the Northeast and South.

Whole Foods began selling the bars late last year, and its stores in other regions are expected to add them before the end of this year, Tilsen said.

"It's wonderful when you see a company – start it from scratch – see it grow from consumer direct and then distribution and then products go out to retailers. And then we see it get to chains," co-owner Karlene Hunter said. "Whole Foods was just sort of icing on the cake and exemplifies all the work the company has been doing and fruits of the labor."

With the increased sales, the company hopes to hire four or five more full-time employees by the end of the year, Tilsen said. Native American Natural Foods started with four employees in 2005 and has grown to 16 full-time and several part-time workers.

Theo Weening, global meat coordinator at Whole Foods, said the company became interested three or four years ago in offering Tanka Bars as part of its growing selection of buffalo products.

Weening said he likes the story behind the bar and the positive effect the company is having on the Pine Ridge community.

"I'd like to expand on it," he said.

Unlike the term organic, which is federally regulated, there's no official definition of natural food. However, Whole Foods has its own standards, and it took about two years for Native American Natural Foods to meet all the requirements, including having its plant certified, Tilsen said.

The payoff comes with access to a much broader market.

"Native American communities only represent 2 percent of the country," Tilsen said. "As we try to become a national natural brand, Whole Foods is the leader."

Michael Watson is the type of customer Native American Natural Foods hopes to attract with sales at Whole Foods.

He's not Native American, and he's never been to an American Indian reservation. Yet the 20-year-old University of Florida junior became hooked on Tanka Bars after his aunt gave him a box for Christmas. Since then, many of his fraternity brothers have become fans too and ordered their own supply online.

"It feels like a much more natural type of food," Watson said. "But what I like most is (that) it's a very American product."

His aunt, Ellen Harvey, 56, of Freehold, N.J., said she bought two boxes of bars to distribute as gifts to her family after learning about them from story about the Pine Ridge Reservation on ABC's "20/20."

"They're producing a quality product based on their heritage and putting people to work for everyone's benefit. I know buffalo is a good lean meat with a lot of nutrition in it," Harvey said. "I wanted to do my bit to help."

Metal Roofing & Siding

Professional Construction and Home Repairs

Free Estimates

Charles Snell 918-507-2902

Native American Contractor

VINITA 918-256-5585

LANGLEY 918-782-0011

MONKEY ISLAND 918-257-8869

www.okstatebank.com

Equal Housing Lender
Native American Owned

We proudly offer an array of services, from general dentistry to sedation, dental implants, and cosmetic dentistry - all designed expressly to meet our patient's changing needs. With four general dentists and four hygienists, we can maintain your oral health for a lifetime all at one location.

We Accept Contract Health & Sooner Care

We serve patients in the Drumright, Cushing, Stillwater, Stroud, Ponca City, and surrounding areas with personalized service and exemplary care. Call for your appointment today.

918-352-3312 or Toll Free 877-RH Melton drumrightdentalcenter.com

SUPERNAW'S OKLAHOMA INDIAN SUPPLY

Wholesale items for Pow Wow Vendors

Bone chokers $20 per dozen

Handmade lamp worked glass bead bracelets $1.00 each Glass bead stretch bracelets 5 for $2.50

12 Necklaces: Chain w/ pendant and display pad $13.50 36 inch gemstone chip strands Reg. 3.95 now $2.00 36 inch turquoise chip strands Reg. 7.95 now $4.00

Always our regular stock of seed beads from 16/0 to 8/0, findings, leather, hackles, fluffs and thousands of other supply items.

Remember we've moved around the corner 109 North Broadway, Skiatook, OK 74070

New Dealers Cash or Credit Card Only.

Open Noon-6pm Mon. thru Fri. • 10am-5m Sat. • Closed Sun.

Local: 396-1713-Countrywide Toll Free 1-888-720-1967

Website: www.supernaw.com • Email: Supernaw@flash.net

Native Americans strive for homemade businesses

MICHAEL NEARY Capital Journal

PIERRE, S.D. (AP) - Nothing has been easy about Charlotte Almanza's work as the owner of Char's Café.

A few months ago a fire forced her Peever-based business out of its building. Fortunately she had insurance, and she's preparing to open in a new space.

But maintaining the business before the fire was a challenge as well. When Almanza wanted to make some improvements, she needed a loan - and her attempts with her local banker were not heartening.

"It wasn't much money I needed," said Almanza, who belongs to the Sisseton Wahpeton Oyate tribe in northeastern South Dakota. "I was asking for $5,000. When you don't have that support of people believing in you, it really discourages you."

But Almanza, who lives just outside the border of the reservation for the Sisseton Wahpeton Oyate, found another source. She took out a loan from a Native community development financial institution (CDFI) called the Four Bands Community Fund, and her business was on track.

The South Dakota Indian Business Alliance has recently produced an expansive report chronicling some problems and solutions - encountered by Native American entrepreneurs on the reservations.

"We noticed the mainstream business development programs, especially the mainstream federal programs - we just kept seeing a trend that there was little or no activity on the nine reservations," said Tanya Fiddler, the SDIBA chair.

Fiddler is also the executive director of Four Bands Community Fund, a nonprofit founded especially to assist

US Small Business Administration:

entrepreneurs of the Cheyenne

The CDFI is one type of resource recommended by the

SDIBA, which came together in 2007. CDFIs can provide much-needed financial training, and they can also issue loans and help

Native American business owners or would-be owners – establish credit. Fiddler said there are about six Native American CDFIs

One issue that looms especially large is establishing the credit to start a business in the first place.

Fiddler said the opportunity to in the state.

River Indian Reservation.

Online Business Resources:

The South Dakota Indian Buisiness Alliance: www.sdibaonline.org

First Nations Development Institute: www.firstnations.org www.sba.gov/content/minority-owned-businesses

Oklahoma Native American Business Development: www.oknabec.com establish credit in extremely rural parts of the state can be slim.

On the reservations, the task is even tougher since the banks often do not report to credit bureaus. The cost and the potential liability involved in reporting credit, Fiddler said, are factors that make reporting difficult for the banks.

The SDIBA's report notes other obstacles Native Americans can face when they try to obtain loans.

One is the trust status of land on the reservations, which prevents it from being used as collateral when taking out loans. Because reservation land is held in trust status by the federal government, the land cannot be repossessed by banks offering loans. That means Native Americans living on reservations lack a source of collateral available to others who might be seeking loans to start

Fiddler said members of the SDIBA noticed, in recent years, a dearth of Native-owned

Native American.

The inability to establish credit, Fiddler said, can affect everyday purchases as well as business development.

"Indian people are poor for them."

Scarcity of jobs is another. And for many Native Americans who live on or near reservations across the state, the best path to a good job is not the road to the nearest large retailer. It's creating a local business - or working for "This is a path out of poverty," Fiddler said.

For Almanza, that path is "Everything is homemade," she businesses on reservations. She said 1 percent of the businesses on the Cheyenne River Sioux Reservation were owned by Native Americans in 2001. It's a reservation, she said, with a population that is 80 percent Since that time, though, Fiddler said 100 Native-owned businesses have emerged. Fiddler noted training and technical assistance, access to capital and increased credit-worthiness as factors in helping the new businesses to develop.

some really good reasons," she said. "Not having access to affordable products is one of one that's recently surfaced.

strewn with home-cooked food. She's hoping to reopen Char's Café in April, and she's especially looking forward to rekindling the café's legendary "pie days."

said, "and that's what makes it good."

SIOUX

Continued from Page 1

The board asserts that the law infringes on its constitutional power to regulate North Dakota's university system.

keep a logo that shows the profile of an American Indian warrior.

The NCAA considers the nickname and logo offensive to American Indians, and as long as they're used, the university faces sanctions. UND cannot postseason tournaments, nor can its teams wear uniforms that feature the nickname or logo during postseason play.

The higher education board has asked the North Dakota Supreme Court to hear the lawsuit directly, without assigning it first to a lower court for review. The board asserts that the law infringes on its constitutional power to regulate North Dakota's university system.

The board also wants the court to rule that Jaeger can't put the law to a public vote. Fighting Sioux nickname supporters have turned in referendum petitions with almost 17,000 signatures to demand a vote.

John Bjornson, a staff attorney for the Legislative Council, which is the Legislature's research arm, said the Supreme Court was likely to allow the Legislature to intervene in the case. It has already allowed the group that submitted the referendum petitions to do so, Bjornson said. The high court, which initially set a March 2 deadline for filings in the case, has extended the deadline to March 6.

Carlson said the board's legal arguments contend that the Legislature controls the finances of the university system's 11 public colleges, but that the board's other regulatory powers over the system are almost unfettered. He questioned whether the board's logic would also apply to legislative proposals that would seek to restrict tuition increases and authorize building projects.

"This is a very far-reaching case," Carlson said. "This is a very serious deal."

new businesses.

Five of the six Democrats on the Republican-controlled Legislative Management Committee voted against hiring an attorney; the exception was House Democrat leader Jerry Kelsh of Fullerton. Rep. Shirley Meyer, D-Dickinson, requested an analysis of the cost of the Fighting Sioux law.

Carlson originally sponsored the law, which lawmakers approved last March. Supporters argued the law might persuade the NCAA to renounce its planned sanctions. But when the NCAA refused to budge, lawmakers relented and voted in November to repeal the legislation.

The repeal galvanized supporters of the Fighting Sioux nickname, and they circulated petitions to force a June vote on whether to reinstate the law. Advocates are also circulating petitions to put a constitutional amendment on the state ballot to permanently brand UND sports teams with the nickname.

Democrats think Carlson should shoulder much of the blame for the nickname imbroglio, which contributed to their opposition of hiring an attorney.

In an interview Feb. 24, Meyer said taxpayers will bear the cost to hire lawyers for Jaeger, the Board of Higher Education and the Legislature itself.

"I'm getting to the place of, what is this costing our taxpayers? That is the bottom line," Meyer said. "It's created this whole can of worms."

Rep. Chuck Damschen, R-Hampden, said he did not want the Legislature to advocate blocking a public vote on the law, a sentiment Carlson said he shared.

"The issue should be voted on first, and if it's passed, if someone wants to challenge the constitutionality of it, then that would be the time to do that – but not to do it to deny the people the vote," Damschen said.

Sen. David Hogue, R-Minot, who is an attorney, said the Supreme Court may conclude the dispute isn't ready for its review.

"Until the voters vote on it," Hogue said, "we don't know whether we have a law to construe or not."

Continued from Page 1

without sufficient justification, contrary to the defendants' assertions."

The 10th Circuit panel, in its decision last Wednesday, sided with Johnson, saying there was no reason to accept a hybrid voting plan when state law in effect at the time didn't recognize that approach. The Wyoming Legislature last year changed state law to allow such hybrid voting plans.

"This is surely not what Congress intended the Voting Rights Act to be - carte blanche for local governments seeking to flout otherwise valid state laws," the appeals court ruling written by Judge Jerome A. Holmes stated.

Holmes wrote that the court ruling wouldn't prevent Fremont County from trying to implement its desired plan through normal processes of state law. And he wrote that the ruling didn't speak to whether such a plan would satisfy federal requirements.

Gary Collins, one of the plaintiffs, is a member of the Northern Arapaho Tribe and liaison between his tribe and state government. He said he was pleased with the appeals court

"It wasn't so much the individuals as plaintiffs, it really was for all of Indian Country not only on the reservation in Wyoming, but other places as well," Collins said. "Through our lives, we've had different forms of discrimination and innuendos toward our race, either verbally or media. So this is a very welcome victory in so many ways. It's more than just a legal issue. It really goes to the heart and tradition of people, Native American people."

Laughlin McDonald, director of the ACLU's Atlanta-based Voting Rights Project, worked with local lawyers in representing Collins and the others. He said Feb. 22 he believes Fremont County wouldn't succeed if it tried to implement a new hybrid voting plan relying on last year's change in state law.

Creating single-member commission districts gives Indians a better chance to have an equal say in county government, McDonald said.

"Our clients felt very strongly that the hybrid plan had a lot of things wrong with it. That it would put the Indians in one district and whites would be the overwhelming majority in the district that elected four members," McDonald said. "It really treated whites differently."

Voting Rights Act lawsuits are complicated and require extensive investigation into a county's history and voting patterns, McDonald said. The plaintiffs' lawyers have a bill pending with Johnson's court seeking over $700,000 in legal fees and expenses work performed before the appeal.

Andy Baldwin, lawyer for the plaintiffs in Lander, also said last Wednesday he was pleased with the decision. "We're gratified that the county does not have unlimited discretion to disregard state or federal law," he said.

Scott Detamore, a lawyer at Mountain States Legal Foundation in Colorado, represents Fremont County. He said he's disappointed with the court's ruling. He said it will be up to Fremont County to determine how it wants to proceed.

Pat Hickerson of Lander, vice chairman of the Fremont County Commission, said Wednesday the county hasn't decided how it will respond.

"I'm disappointed, because I think our proposed plan would have been better for the voters, and would have provided a better commission in the long run," Hickerson said.

Hickerson said he believes Fremont County commissioners have been paying more attention to the regional interests of their districts, rather than considering the county as a whole, since Johnson ordered it to drop at-large voting.

"The regionalization issue can change the way commissioners look at issues," Hickerson

NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES

Name:
Address:
City: State: Zip:
Phone:
☐ $65.00 for 52 issues ☐ $32.50 for 26 issues
☐ $16.25 for 13 issues ☐ $1.25 single conv

Mail this form with a check or money order to: Native American Times • P.O. Box 411 Tahleguah, OK 74465 • 918-708-5838

918-256-5585

LANGLEY 918-782-0011

MONKEY ISLAND 918-257-8869

www.okstatebank.com Equal Housing Lender Native American Owned

"Changing the culture of waste." TM

Native TIMES recycles with Tahlequah Recycling

Incorporated...

shouldn't you?

Reeves Renovations Professional Construction, Remodeling & Repairs Bathrooms • Kitchens • Paint Tile • Trim • Plumbing

Windmills • Winterizing Quality Work • Free Estimates 918-637-6736 johnwilliamreeves@juno.com

Mayes & Cherokee Counties

Electrical • Solar Panels

Follow Us! www.twitter.com/nativetimes

More Jobs. More News. More Features. Every Day.

www.nativetimes.com

STUDENTS

Continued from Page 1

what our group designed," said CU student Nick McClure. "An addedon bonus is that we get to help these people who are really in need."

The CU students will be partnering with students at Oglala Lakota College who are studying construction technology. Together, they'll design and build energyefficient homes that are affordable and meet the cultural needs of those on the reservation.

"For Pine Ridge, the housing crisis is real," Pyatt said. "It's significant, and it definitely needs to be remedied."

The initial homes will be built on the Oglala Lakota College campus and be used to house faculty members. Those involved with the project will be able to track sustainability efforts, such as energy

Doug Noyes, director of the Construction Technologies Program at the college, said in a news release that the overall objective of the project is develop a strong case study to help inform the future housing choices of the tribe and set up guidelines for sustainable construction on the reservation.

CU students in the program are experiencing the integrated curriculum of three courses: an advanced materials workshop that teaches about sustainable building; critical issues in Native North America taught by indigenous studies scholar Doreen Martinez; and an architecture design studio.

Peter Simons, director of CU's Institute for Ethical and Civic Engagement, said Pyatt's course and the partnership between the two schools fits into CU's broader goals to merge academics and service, calling it an "excellent example of quality service learning."

The Native American Sustainable Housing Initiative is collaborating with the Oyate Omnicye Regional Planning Project and the Thunder Valley Community Development Corp., a Lakota nonprofit organization working to create sustainable development on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation.

COMMENTARY

Writing to inspire, educate a new generation of Native Americans

NOTES FROM INDIAN COUNTRY

TIM GIAGO (Nanwica Kciji) © 2012 Unity South Dakota

I received an email from a guy named Lee Carson who wrote, "I hope you die."

Kind of a harsh thing to say about anybody, but when it is directed at you it gets very personal. After writing for more than 30 years the mail I have received over the years has been mostly favorable, but there are always those individuals with contrary or even perverse opinions of my weekly columns. I always say that it comes with the territory. Anytime you are bold enough or foolish enough, depending upon one's views, to place personal opinions on an open forum, you will be judged by its content.

Mr. Carson can rest assured that yes; I will die, as will he, because that is the circle of life and death. The word all of us should post on our refrigerators is "inevitable" because that is the sentence we are all doomed to serve.

An opinion piece is just that; a personal opinion of the writer. I have written articles all the way from Aztec to Zuni over the years. Whenever I made a definite screwup I have been taken to task by my readers and deservedly so because if I express an opinion and it is not correct, I am guilty of spreading false information, but quite fortunately, that has not happened very often. I have always tried my best to

There is always that faint hope in the back of my mind that the information I display in my opinion pieces might help to educate and inform. As President John F. Kennedy said in 1960, "American Indians remain probably the least understood and the most misunderstood Americans of us

It was this comment that led me to write about the misconceptions and outright falsehoods that remain, even to this day, about Native Americans. Addressing issues like the use of Indians as mascots, correcting misinformation about Indian spirituality and false medicine men and women, have all become fodder for my weekly columns. And I discovered over the years that too many Americans could care less about the lives and the future of Native Americans.

One time I wrote about America's best kept secret: The more than 30 Native American colleges located on Indian reservations across America. One reader responded with, "Is he kidding?" He went on to add that maybe all races in America should have their own colleges.

Several years ago when affirmative action first hit the news I wrote that it worked very well for the white race for more than 200 years while denying minorities access to unions, law schools, and many jobs throughout America that were reserved for whites only. When African Americans sat down at a thoroughly research the topic I write lunch counter and were refused service were there any laws to prevent this overt act of racism? Laws had to be implemented in order to level the playing field for minorities.

> In South Dakota where the total population of Native Americans is about 12 percent, there is not now, nor has there ever been, a Native American appointed to the position of state or federal judge. Thirty five percent of the prison population is Native American. The ignorance of the white judges in this state about Native Americans has contributed greatly to this disproportionate status in our prisons. Why has not any South Dakota governor or U. S. Senator or Congressman made an effort to bring judgeships to Native Americans?

> These are just a few of the things I have written about over the years with high hopes of helping to initiate change.

Many years ago I wrote about the movie industry and the changes that were happening to African Americans because of a movie director named Spike Lee. I asked the question, "Where is the Native American Spike Lee? A young Indian man named Chris Eyre read the article and said to himself, "I am going to be the Native American Spike Lee." He went on to direct films like Skins, Smoke Signals and a movie based on the Tony Hillerman novel, Skin Walkers, and although he is now teaching directing, his career as a director of Native American films is just beginning and perhaps a student in his classroom will rise to the top as a movie director.

Tim Giago

But to get back to the beginning, I do take Lee Carson's words seriously and I have made preparations for my death. Because there is no longer the possibility to be buried in the traditional Lakota way, on a scaffold high in a tree, I have chosen to be

If Tunkasila (Grandfather God) is willing, I hope to continue writing this weekly column for many more years before that day arrives and I hope that it will continue to inform, educate and even inspire a new generation of Native Americans.

Tim Giago, an Oglala Lakota, is President of Unity South Dakota. He was a Nieman Fellow at Harvard with the Class of 1990. His weekly column won the H. L. Mencken Award in 1985. He was the founder of The Lakota Times, Indian Country Today, Lakota Journal and Native Sun News. He can be reached at UnitySoDak1@knology.net

The viewpoints expressed in columns and letters are the opinions of the writers and not necessarily the opinion or viewpoint of the Native American Times publisher or staff. Send letters to editor@nativetimes.com. Please keep letters to 350 words or less. Sign your name, tribal affiliation and city of residence for verification purposes.

From the Cradle to the Career: Improving education for American Indians and Alaska Natives

CHARLIE GALBRAITH

On December 2, 2011, at the third White House Tribal Nations Conference, President Obama announced his Executive Order on Improving American Indian and Alaska Native Educational Opportunities Strengthening Tribal Colleges and Universities. Last week, I had the privilege of joining the Department of Education and the Department of Interior at a roundtable on the Squaxin Island Reservation in Shelton, Washington which concluded a series of regional Tribal Leader Education Roundtables that will help guide the implementation of the Executive Order.

The Executive Order focuses on lowering the dropout rate of Native students, furthering tribal self-determination and ensuring that students have an opportunity to learn their Native languages and histories while receiving complete and competitive educations that prepare them for college, careers, and productive and satisfying lives. To further these objectives for all American Indian and Alaska Native students, the Executive Orders promotes:

Early learning, which includes Native language immersion programs,

Increased access to support services for college, career and civic involvement,

Improved access to quality culturally-aware teachers through effective recruitment and retention, particularly through Tribal Colleges and Universities,

Creating a positive school climate to reduce dropout rates and ensure Native students are prepared for college and careers at the time of graduation,

Providing opportunities for students who have dropped out to re-enter and obtain degrees, certificates or industry recognized credentials, and Strengthening Colleges and Universities to prepare Native students for productive careers upon graduation.

At last week's listening representatives session, from the Department of Education, Department of the Interior and the White House heard from tribal leaders, educators and the public on a wide range of the issues affecting American Indian and Alaska Native students. Among the primary topics of discussion were teacher recruitment and retention, Native language training, prevention of bullying, improved mentorship, private partnerships, the importance of having access to broadband service for distance learning and the benefits of vocational training for Native students, among many other points. While this round of tribal leader education roundtables has been completed, there is still an opportunity to submit comments by writing to info@ indianeducation.org. Theinput of tribal leaders, educators, parents, students and others throughout Indian Country is essential to the development and implementation administration priorities.

While in Washington State for the roundtable, I also had the pleasure of meeting a wonderful group of students representing over 60 different tribes at Chief Leschi Elementary School in Puyallup, Washington. Thank you to the students and faculty at Chief Leschi for welcoming me onto your beautiful campus!

Charlie Galbraith is an Associate Director in the White House Office of Intergovernmental Affairs.

NOTICE FOR OSAGE COUNTY

(WEATHER PERMITTING)

THE OSAGE COUNTY ASSESSOR WILL BE AT THE FOLLOWING LOCATIONS:

TULSA - GILCREASE HILLS HOMEOWNERS ASSOC. - 1919 W. SEMINOLE - MARCH 6, 10:00 A.M. - 3:00 P.M.

McCORD - SENIOR CITIZENS CENTER-115 MARY RD JANUARYY 20, 10:00 A.M. - 2:00 P.M. AND MARCH 7, 10:00 A.M. - 3:00 P.M.

HULAH - SENIOR CITIZENS CENTER -1924 CR 3575- JANUARY 23, 11:00 A.M. - 1:00 P.M.

PRUE - SENIOR CITIZENS CENTER -209 WAH GRA SEE- JANUARY 24, 10:00 A.M. - 2:00 P.M BARTLESVILLE - LABADIE HEIGHTS BAPTIST CHURCH - SW OF CITY, JANUARY 25, 10:00 A.M. - 2:00 P.M

> SPERRY - CITY HALL - 115 N. CINCINNATI - JANUARY 26, 10:00 A.M. - 2:00 P.M BURBANK - CITY HALL -105 FIRST ST - JANUARY 27, 10:00 A.M. - 12:00 NOON

> > FOR THE PURPOSE OF

TAKING NEW APPLICATIONS FOR HOMESTEAD EXEMPTION, DOUBLE HOMESTEAD EXEMPTION, SENIOR FREEZE, VETERANS EXEMPTION, REPORTING CHANGES MADE TO YOUR PROPERTY AND/OR BUILDINGS, TURNING IN MANUFACTURED HOMES, RENDERING BUSINESS PERSONALS, REPORTING FARM EQUIPMENT, TRACTORS, BOAT DOCKS, ETC., AND APPLYING FOR AGRICULTURE FUEL EXEMPTION.

DEADLINE FOR FILING IS MARCH 15, 2012

ADDITIONAL HOMESTEAD EXEMPTION: AN ADDITIONAL EXEMPTION WILL BE GRANTED FOR ALL HOUSEHOLDS WITH A GROSS INCOME (COLLECTIVE INCOME OF ANY AND ALL SOURCES OF ALL PERSONS LIVING IN THE HOMESTEAD) NOT TO EXCEED $20,000.00 FOR THE PRECEEDING CALENDAR YEAR. THERE ARE NO AGE REQUIREMENTS. HOWEVER, FOR A PERMANENT EXEMPTION, YOU MUST FILE AT AGE 65, AND YOU MUST BE 65 AS OF MARCH 15TH. IF 66 YEARS OR OLDER AND QUALIFIED IN 2011, NO ANNUAL APPLICATION IS REQUIRED. FOR MORE DETAILS CALL 918-287-3448.

VETERANS EXEMPTION: 100% DISABLED OR SURVIVING SPOUSE MAY NOW APPLY FOR A PROPERTY TAX EXEMPTION THAT WILL ELIMINATE THEIR TAX BURDEN ON HOMESTEAD PROPERTY. APPLICANT MUST PROVIDE A CURRENT U.S.D.V.A. BENEFITS AWARD LETTER WITH QUALIFICATIONS SPECIFIC TO THIS EXEMPTION THAT CERTIFIES THE 100% SERVICE RELATED DISABILITY.

PROPERTY VALUATION FREEZE (AKA: SENIOR FREEZE): THE OWNER MUST BE 65 YEARS OLD OR OLDER AS OF JANUARY 1ST, 2012; AND GROSS HOUSEHOLD INCOME LEVEL CANNOT EXCEED $59,600.00 FOR THE 2011 YEAR. TO QUALIFY THE TAXPAYER MUST PROVIDE COPIES OF 2011 PAPERS TO VERIFY TOTAL HOUSEHOLD INCOME OF ALL OCCUPANTS LIVING IN THE HOMESTEAD PROPERTY. TOTAL HOUSEHOLD INCOME INCLUDES ALL TAXABLE AND NON-TAXABLE INCOME SOURCES. THE STATE OF OKLAHOMA WILL VERIFY ALL APPLICANTS.

IT IS THE RESPONSIBILITY OF THE TAXPAYER TO NOTIFY THIS OFFICE IF INCOME EXCEEDS THE QUALIFIED AMOUNTS.

HOUSE BILL#1724: IF PERSONAL PROPERTY TAXES ARE DELINQUENT, YOUR HOMESTEAD EXEMPTION WILL BE CANCELLED.

> GAIL HEDGCOTH, OSAGE COUNTY ASSESSOR 600 GRANDVIEW, RM 101, OSAGE COUNTY COURTHOUSE PAWHUSKA, OK. 74056 HOURS: 8:30 A.M. - 5:00 P.M. 918-287-3448

NATIVE AMERICAN HIRING PREFERENCE? ADVERTISE YOUR JOBS WITH NATIVE TIMES!

What to do when you have the 'Pink Slip' blues

Career coach and author Ford R. Myers shares 6 tips on how to deal with the dreaded layoff HAVERFORD, Penn. - The fourth quarter of the year is the most common time for employees to get laid off. One mistake many people make is that they leave themselves vulnerable by not being prepared for year-end changes in their work situation.

If you (or anyone you know) were unfortunate enough to "get the pink slip," Ford R. Myers, career coach, speaker and author of "Get The Job You Want, Even When No One's Hiring," (John Wiley & Sons, http:// www.getthejobbook.com) suggests the following six steps to help you re-gain control of your career and prepare for a successful transition:

- 1. Perform an honest assessment of the situation and of yourself. Although most layoffs have nothing to do with individual performance, you should still determine if you could have done anything differently to hold onto your job. This may help you avoid the same fate next time.
- 2. Take a short mental vacation. Take off a few days to a week to take stock of your career situation, clear your mind and consider your options. Only then should you begin planning your next career moves.
- 3. Research the market. Spend time researching the employment trends in your industry and geographic area. This will help you to identify the best companies to work for in your field - which companies are growing and which are contracting.
- 4. Update your "Career Tool Kit." Finding a new job is easier when you have the right tools! Now is the time to develop some new "Accomplishment Stories" about which you feel proud. Polish-up that "15-second commercial" (a short verbal presentation about who you are professionally); and bring your resume and all your other jobseeking documents up-to-date.
- 5. Reach out and network. Did you know that your network - personal and professional contacts - is your most valuable career asset? Why not leverage this resource by scheduling professional networking activities and appointments? Make contact with new people, and let everyone know that you are always interested in hearing about new opportunities.

6. Practice your interviewing and negotiating skills. It's a fact: better interviews get better offers. Take the time to prepare questions in advance to ask the interviewer; even role play with a friend to get comfortable answering tough interview questions. In addition, devote time to performing diligent salary research. Make it a point to know what you're really worth so when you reach the salary negotiation stage, you'll be well-prepared and ready to win!

"It's always best to 'stay ahead of the game' - making sure all your career documents and job search skills are current - just in case that pink slip finds its way onto your desk at the end of NEXT year," adds Myers.

For more information and other useful tips for achieving career success, visit http://www. getthejobbook.com.

Reprinted by permission of Ford R. Myers, a nationally-known Career Coach and author of "Get The Job You Want, Even When No One's Hiring."

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT / HELP WANTED

Sac & Fox Nation Casino is accepting Applications for

General Manager

Oualifications: Bachelors Degree in Business / Marketing Strong Leadership Skills Casino Management Experience

Applicants must pass background and drug screen. Native American preference is recognized.

Submit resume by fax @ 405-395-0790 or visit our website at sandfcasino.com to apply online

Registered Dietitian

The Ponca Tribe of Oklahoma is accepting applications for a part time or full time registered dietitian. Competitive wages, great atmosphere. The position is located at the White Eagle Health Center, Ponca City, Oklahoma. May send resume to White Eagle Health Center, 200 White Eagle Dr., Ponca City, OK 74601 Atten: Diabetes Program, or email to rayna. mckinnis@ihs.gov

RN Director of Nursing with Long Term Care MGMT at Laguna Rainbow west of Albuquerque, NM. PRN RN and CNA opportunities too! Email resumes to jobs@pinonmgt.com. EOE/AA

Look for Native American Times on Facebook and Twitter!

The Iowa Tribe of Oklahoma, located South of Stillwater, is accepting applications for the following positions in the Perkins, OK area:

> Police Officer Chief Accountant Realty Manager Realty Specialist Court Administrator

ICW Caseworker Specialist

View job descriptions under Government/Human Resources/Job Postings at www.iowanation.org

Great Benefits! Health, Dental, Vision, Group Life, Flex, 401(k) with 6% match, sick, vacation, holidays, STD, LTD, Voluntary Life, Accident & Cancer plans.

Apply online at http://www.iowanation.org/hireme

Equal Employment Opportunity Employer Native American preference

EVENTS

*Email your powwow or other event info to: Lisa@ nativetimes.com. Name, date, time, place and contact information is free.

EVERY WEDNESDAY Kiowa class beginning in February at 6:30 pm, Oliphant Hall, Room 141, Tulsa University. Info call Sarah, (918) 445-5213

EVERY THURSDAY The Otoe-Missouria Substance Abuse and Behavioral Health Programs sponsor an open group for families touched by addiction from noon to 1 p.m. at the Otoe-Missouria Health Building. This is a confidential group. Call 580-723-4466 x252 or x262 for more information.

SECOND TUESDAY Cherokee Artists Association meeting at 202 E. 5th Street Tahlequah, Okla. Info: (918) 458-0008 or www. cherokeeartistsassociation.

THIRD TUESDAY of even numbered months - The Central Oklahoma Cherokee Services of Tulsa Activity Alliance meets at Mayflower UCC Church, Oklahoma City at 6 p.m. Phone: (405) 408-0763. The next meeting is Feb. 16.

FOURTH THURSDAY Each month the American

Indian Chamber of Commerce of Oklahoma - Eastern Chapter hosts a monthly luncheon at Bacone College, Muskogee, Okla. 11:30 a.m. at Benjamin Wacoche Hall. Please RSVP one week ahead of time. Phone: (918) 230-3759

EVERY 2ND SATURDAY Indian Taco Sales - from 11-2:30pm at OK Choctaw Tribal Alliance, 5320 S. Youngs Blvd, Oklahoma City www.okchoctaws.org

MON/WED AND THURS The Marble City Nutrition Center serves hot meals at the Marble City Community Center at 11:30 a.m. Meals are free to anyone over 50, but a small donation is suggested to help with the expense of the program. Marble City Nutrition Center, 711 N. Main, Marble City, Okla. Phone: (918) 775-2158

YOUTH COUNCIL The Native Nations Youth Council (NNYC) bimonthly meetings from 6:30pm - 8:30pm @ the Youth Center (311 S. Madison - on 3rd just west of Peoria). Call to confirm location. Info Call: Chad Gilley (918) 382-2204 or nnyc@ihcrc.org

THROUGH MARCH 12 Free tobacco cessation course from 6 p.m. to 7 p.m. Whitney Nuttle (918) 762-3873 or Suzy Knife Chief (918) 762-2153.

MARCH-MAY Free beginner-level Cherokee language classes in communities throughout the tribe's jurisdiction starting in March. Once a week for ten weeks. For locations or to register, call Bill Andoe at 918-453-5151.

MARCH 2 Indian Taco Sale 11:00 AM - 2:00 PM at Norman First American UMC, 1950 East Beaumont Drive, Norman, Okla. Call Ahead for Speedy Service. Free Delivery on Orders of 10 or more (405) 321-5640

MARCH 3 Otoe-Missouria Title VI Seniors Program Benefit Dance at the Otoe-Missouria Cultural Building, 8151 HWY 177, Red Rock, Okla. Gourd Dancing starts at 2pm. Special Contests! For more info call 580-723-4466 x289

MARCH 3 Peoria Tribal Election for Treasurer and First Councilman. Polls open 9am-Noon, Peoria Tribal Administration Building Conference Room, 118 South Eight Tribes Trail in Miami, Okla.

MARCH 3

Fundraiser for Miss Yuchi expenses Bingo & Stompdance at Glenpool Indian community building. Food sale at 11, bingo starts at 1pm. Dancing at 7pm.

MARCH 3 Wild Onion Dinner, All you can eat, Adults $10, Children $7 (8 & under), 11:00 am - 3:00 pm at Seminole Hitchitee United Methodist Church, Seminole, OK, 5 miles East on HWY 99 on 99A. Info contact Annie Harjo 405-831-5242 or e-mail harjoamou@cox.net

MARCH 3-4 Yard sale and $5 food menu fundraiser for S.P.I.R.I.T. from 7:30 am to 5:00 pm each day. 2715 NW 11th, Oklahoma City, OK. Call Brenda a405-471-7610 or Kathryn at 405-830-0626 for more info.

MARCH 3-31 Tulsa Library's Festival of Words, a series of systemwide events to honor the achievements and celebrate the history of American Indians. For events and times, call the AskUs Hotline, 918-549-7323, or visit the library's website, www.tulsalibrary.org.

MARCH 10 Red Earth Run, Regatta Park, Oklahoma City

MARCH 17 Skate Jam Competition 10 am - dark at the "Skate Park Off Broadway," 105 Reynolds in Poteau Okla. www.nativeskateparks.com

MARCH 17 2011 OKC Princess Honor Dance at Heart of Oklahoma Expo Center, 1700 W. Independence, Shawnee, OK. Info contact Shirley Wapskineh 405-632-5227 or swapskineh@sbcglobal.net

MARCH 17 Wild Onion Dinner from 11 am til 3 pm at Haikey Chapel UMC, 8815 E 101st St, Tulsa.

MARCH 23 Miss Indian Oklahoma City Competition & Performance at 6:30 pm, 3801 SE 29th St. Del City, OK. Info contact Shirley Wapskineh 405-632-5227 or swapskineh@ sbcglobal.net

MARCH 31 "Play Golf Native America Day," a free program for families to experience a day of fun, from 10 a.m. - 1 p.m. at Cherokee Hills Golf Club located at Hard Rock Hotel & Casino Tulsa. Registration begins at 8:30 a.m. Info email Crystal Echo Hawk: crystal@nb3f.org

APRIL 6 Indian Taco Sale 11:00 AM - 2:00 PM at Norman First American UMC, 1950 East Beaumont Drive, Norman, Okla. Call Ahead for Speedy Service. Free Delivery on Orders of 10 or More (405) 321-5640

APRIL 7 Ponca Gourd Dance 9th Annual Spring Dance White Eagle Cultural Center 5 miles south of Ponca City, OK (580) 268-3313 or (580) 762-0499

APRIL 14 All Gourd Honor Dance for Micheal Tsotaddle at Red Buffalo Hall Carnegie, OK, 2p.m. - ? For more information call Darla Tsotaddle (405) 432-8377 or Mavis Tsotaddle (580) 654-1704.

Indian Taco Sale 11:00 AM - 2:00 PM at Norman First American UMC, 1950 East Beaumont Drive, Norman, Okla. Call Ahead for Speedy Service. Free Delivery on Orders of 10 or More (405) 321-5640

Indian Taco Sale 11:00 AM - 2:00 PM at Norman First American UMC, 1950 East Beaumont Drive, Norman, Okla. Call Ahead for Speedy Service. Free Delivery on Orders of 10 or More (405) 321-5640

OSU-CHS seeks participants for Native Explorers paleontology, anatomy summer program

TULSA, Okla. - The Oklahoma State University Center for Health Sciences is accepting applicants for Native Explorers, a program designed to recruit, train and educate American Indian college students in anatomy, vertebrate paleontology and osteopathic medicine.

"This unique opportunity allows OSU-CHS to integrate anatomy, paleontology and medicine with lab and field activities," said Dr. Kent Smith, OSU-CHS associate professor of anatomy and program leader. "Native Explorers serves as a stepping stone to recruit more American Indian students into the science fields and provides insight into related career opportunities."

The program, a partnership between OSU-CHS, Chickasaw Nation and Whitten-Burrage law firm, runs from June 19 to July 1. Participants will gain hands on experience during a scientific expedition to the Oklahoma panhandle, southwest Colorado and south-central Utah. Students will learn about Ice-age vertebrate fossils, as well as modern plants and animals.

Participants will join research scientists from OSU-CHS and the Sam Noble Oklahoma Museum of Natural History at archeological sites to locate dinosaur track ways and fossil localities, study cliff dwellings, collect Ice-age vertebrate fossils and learn about modern plants and animals. Native traditions and culture are included in the expedition study.

USDA Forest Service biologists, geologists and archeologists demonstrate the preservation management of natural resources.

Participants will also visit OSU-CHS facilities in Tulsa to explore anatomy, learn how to identify fossil remains and examine tools used by vertebrate paleontologist. Physicians and medical students will work with the participants to teach them about healthful lifestyles and medicine.

The program will only accept 10 participants age 18 or older. All expenses are paid for those selected. Students may be eligible to earn three hours of college

The deadline for applying is May 1. Students must complete an application and submit a letter of reference from an instructor. Forms are available at www.chickasaweducationservices.com/ index_246.htm.

For more information, visit www. healthsciences.okstate.edu/college/ native_explorers/index.cfm, call (918) 561-8246 or email kent.smith@okstate.

Native Explorer participants on Ferron Mountain in south-central Utah.

Oldest Kiowa citizen represented tribe well

READER SUBMISSION

The oldest member of the Kiowa Tribe of Oklahoma passed away on Sunday morning, February 19th, 2012.

Julia Tsonetokoy Lonewolf left the world, not from illness, but from an exhaustion brought on by living a good long life.

Her services were held on February 22nd at Rainy Mountain Church and she was laid to rest in the Rainy Mountain Cemetary.

Her love ones composed a memorial picture of Julia, with her image from a young girl to her last years.

Julia was present, and spoke, at many Kiowa functions including the Grand Opening of the Kiowa Casino in Verden in which she cut the ribbon to officially open the doors.

Kiowa Tribal Chairman, Ronald "Dawes" Twohatchet,

Julia Tsonetokoy Lonewolf

sent sympathies, prayers and thoughts from the Kiowa Business Committee and the Kiowa Tribe of Oklahoma to her loved ones.

"We lost one of our last links to our cultural past", said Twohatchet.

"She represented the Tribe well in her peace, compassion, kindness and her strong belief in God."

The Chairman added, "She was a treasure and will be missed."

Julia Tsonetokoy was born on January 26th, 1916 at her present home place in the Rainy Mountain Area, the area is also known as the Sugar Creek community. She lived in that community all her life. Her father was Isaac Tsonetokoy, who was the original (Blond Tsonetokoy Hair White Man) and he was a successful farmer and rancher, he had many heads of cattle, horses and other farm poultry and animals. He spoke Kiowa, English, German and a little Spanish.

English and German were especially essential in his business transactions. He was married to Toshante (Tho-shan-mah) (Little Face Woman), who was from the Given family and direct descendant from Satank or Setangya (Sitting Bear), leader of the Koit-senko. Because he was a successful farmer and rancher and extremely hard worker, he was able to provide for his family with a very good living. Julia said she never wanted for anything.

He and Toshante had twelve children, but only four lived to adulthood, Mattie, Allen, Frances and...Julia.

Mattie had three children, Melva, Wanda and Alvin Keith Tinetiah. Mattie died in her early twenties and Julia took in the three orphaned children, ages 5, 3 and 1, and raised them as her own. They referred to her as Mom. Julia also raised her nieces and nephews (Frances and Allen's children) as well as her oldest granddaughter Rhonda.

Julia lived within the confines of the Sugar Creek community all her life. She married Bell Lonewolf who also helped her raise her children, two grand-children and some of her nieces and nephews.

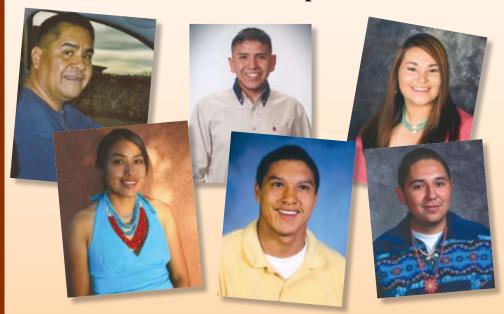

Julia was a Homemaker and Grandmother to many, even though she never bore children of her own.

She was a devout Christian, known as a "prayer warrior" by many. When someone wanted their prayer request answered, they would ask her to pray. She truly was favored by God and lived by her favorite verse, Psalm 121:1 and 2. "I will lift mine eyes unto the hills, from whence cometh my help. My help cometh from the Lord, which made heaven and earth."

College Scholarships

American Indian, Alaska Native & Native Hawaiian Students

$450,000+ awarded each year! All Undergraduate Majors Are Eligible. Graduate Scholarships Available.

Applications Due April 4th!

Download Application: aiefprograms.org

American Indian Education Foundation 2401 Eglin Street • Rapid City, SD 57703 (605) 342-9968

for ourselves. for our families. for future generations.

Oklahoma ranks 48th nationally for health. That is unacceptable. We can no longer sit idle when our health hangs in the balance.

There is a plan to create healthier lives for all Oklahomans - the Oklahoma Health Improvement Plan. Endorsed by the legislature, this plan outlines a clear path of action to save lives and improve our health. Join us by supporting:

Restore the rights of local communities to pass smokefree policies that are stronger than state law

Assure health education is taught in sixth, seventh or eighth grade for all state public schools

Prohibit the use of a hand-held electronic device while driving for all drivers under the age of 18

Let's pull together to Shape Our Future. Your state is counting on you.

Famous Dave's: Ojibwe has Okla. ties

JESSE ABERNATHY Native Sun News

MINNEAPOLIS The eponymous founder America's most widely recognized and prolific chain of barbecue joints has always had more than just pork ribs on his mind. Since at least 1971, David Anderson has been working hard establishing businesses, selling other companies, serving the public, furthering his education, writing books, delivering keynote addresses and paying attention to Native American youth, among other things.

Whew!

Along the way, 58-yearold Anderson, a member of the Lac Courte Oreilles Lake Superior Band of Ojibwe, realized his lifelong passion in the form of Famous Dave's Legendary Pit Bar-B-Que. The restaurant chain famously specializes in barbecue pork ribs, chicken and beef brisket.

Additionally, he helped found several other companies that are now publicly traded on Wall Street, creating over 20,000 jobs and generating billions of revenue dollars in the process.

Anderson is considered a visionary and leading expert in brand development and peak product performance within the corporate world.

In 1994, the tireless, optimistic and vibrant entrepreneur humbly opened his very first restaurant in its original incarnation of Famous Dave's Bar-B-Que Shack in the small town of Hayward, Wis., on the edge of the Lac Courte Oreilles Reservation, next to Round Lake. The specialty restaurant was a tributary throwback to the barbecue joints popularized in the South during the 1940s, featuring smoked spareribs slathered in Anderson's own secret barbecue sauces. Famous Dave's was an instant success - serving up 8,000 orders a week during its inaugural run in the sleepy hamlet of 1,800 residents - and, as the saying goes, the rest is (lip-smacking, finger-licking) history.

At almost 190 restaurants in 37 states and growing in less than 18 years, both the franchise and "Famous Dave" himself have indeed attained legendary status. Anderson is now synonymous with barbecue and has become the country's reigning "rib king."

Prior to founding Famous Dave's, Anderson said he spent 25 years perfecting his trade secret recipes.

Since inception, Famous Dave's establishments combined have won over 500 restaurant and food service industry awards, from Best BBQ Sauce in America to Best BBQ Joint to, most recently, a coveted Silver Plate. Silver Plate Awards are presented annually by the International Foodservice Manufacturers Association to food service operators who "epitomize the best of class."

chain's flagship restaurant, Famous Dave's Bar-B-Que and Blues, is located in Minneapolis' Calhoun Square.

Anderson credits his parents and their perseverance in the face of dire adversity as the inspiration for his awardwinning foray into the world of barbecue pits and downhome hospitality.

"My dad's a full-blood Choctaw Indian - I think there's a little Chickasaw in there - from Idabel, Oklahoma, and my mom is from the Lac Courte Oreilles (of Wisconsin)," Anderson said. "Both of my parents were stuck in Indian boarding schools; my dad remembers being whipped and beaten till his skin bled and broke, and he remembers having to eat soap if he spoke his language," he said.

"They met at Haskell Institute for Indians, back when that's what it was called, in Lawrence, Kansas. That's where they fell in love."

The former industrial, or trade, school has since been retooled and renamed Haskell Indian Nations University.

Following marriage, Anderson's parents eventually settled in his hometown of Chicago, where they continued to instill a love of all things barbecue in him.

"My dad, being a good old Southern boy, really missed (sauce) was the only thing you could find in grocery stores. Down South, you had different hot sauces that my dad liked. He liked different corn syrups, sorghum syrup, and sourdough - some of the things that weren't common up here in the North."

Anderson's father relished a particular brand of pepper that was only available throughout the South at the

"I was influenced at an early age how important certain ingredients are," he said.

Famous Dave's cooking skills were developed

Anderson and his wife with a $1.5 million gift, The LifeSkills Center for Leadership provides scholarships to at-risk Native youth for attendance at top rated leadership workshops. According to the LifeSkills website, the center facilitates youth participants' transition from "passive members of their schools and communities" to "bold leaders that have direction and focus."

Anderson clarified his less-involved current role in the operations of Famous Dave's Legendary Pit Bar-B-Que restaurants and the subsidiaries' parent company,

"It's just like any other (federal) department, whether it's the Department of Education, it's the Department of Defense (or) it's the Department of Agriculture. When people come in, just like President (Barack) Obama came in and said everything was going to change, and almost hardly ----anything has changed. It was the same for me when I got in. It's because the solicitors that are in the department, in reality, they're almost the policymakers."

According to Anderson, the solicitors are the powerful attorneys who work within the bureaucracy of Washington,

"You ask if this can be done, and (the solicitors) say 'It's not how we do things. It's against policy," Anderson said.

No matter how much I wanted to shake things up and create a Bureau of Indian Affairs for Indian people, I was always faced with policies and procedures and also government unions, he said.

"I think there are some very capable people in the Bureau of Indian Affairs. Many of them are the ones that are belly-to-belly with our Indian people out in the region; the regional offices or the local offices are usually the ones that do the most work. There's a lot of trimming down that could be done within government. Somehow, if the money could go directly to Indian people, that would be better."

However, attempting to make a difference within the federal bureaucracy is a battle that can't be won, indicated Anderson.

"I would never do it again," he said firmly.

Anderson's primary objective during his tenure as head of the BIA was to improve the current system of Native American education.

I'm a believer, he said, and I had this vision for turning our BIA schools into leadership academies.

"It seemed like every time we wanted to get something done, there was this unseen force of politics" working against us.

By his own concession, Anderson is not a great politician.

"I'm an entrepreneur, and I'm a very good entrepreneur," he said. "I've helped create some very famous businesses. And Famous Dave's will do almost half a billion dollars - $500 million in sales" for the fourth, and final, business quarter of 2011.

Famous Dave's of America will publicly announce those earnings following the close of the stock market on Feb. 15.

"There are Famous Dave's restaurants from coast to coast. From Washington, D.C., to California, from the state of Washington down to Texas, we have Famous Dave's all over the country."

In further reflecting on the time he spent working for the U.S. government, Anderson said, "I'm a great entrepreneur who happens to be a Native American, but you almost have to have a political foundation to last in the (BIA). It was just best for me to go back to where I'm used to being able to get things done." Anderson passionately structured the future of this country's indigenous peoples against the backdrop of the antiquated, futile system of governmental bipartisanship and its enmeshment of Native American policy in the form of the BIA.

"First of all, I don't think it's (just) the future of Indian people, it's also the future reaffirm what I believe that most people in America believe: that our government is deadlocked, or gridlocked."

The Republicans won't vote for the Democrats, and the Democrats won't vote for the Republicans, said Anderson, and I believe today that the real strength of America is what happens in local communities.

"The same thing holds true for Indian country. I believe today that while the Bureau of Indian Affairs has been somewhat of a voice for Indian people in the past, the real voice of Indian country and the real strength of Indian country is what happens within our own Indian communities. If there's any future for Native America, it certainly is not going to come from the Bureau of Indian Affairs - it's going to come from our own people having the drive and the determination to become economically self-sufficient and living as a determined people."

Anderson said he also believes that the continued survival of indigenous peoples in America is not only contingent on past traditions, but is further dependent on establishing new traditions.

"I believe that the real reason why our elders and our forefathers were respected, it wasn't because they knew how to harvest wild rice or they knew how to take down a deer and turn that hide into moccasins or they were able to harvest and dry the meats, I believe that what they were doing was surviving successfully in their environment. And I think that's key," he said.

"As Indian people, our legacy has always been about being able to survive successfully in any environment, under any condition. I think about our elders or forefathers they might be horrified that we are trying to teach our young people how to make moccasins if we can't first sit our child down in front of a computer and teach that child how to look up the family's investment portfolio."

Anderson said peoples have to be diligent about being able to survive successfully in today's economic, political and social environments.

"It's like the computer is our new buffalo. We have to be able to navigate the digital highway with the same effectiveness that our forefathers used to be able to read the tracks of different animals, whether it be the buffalo or the deer, they were able to look at the ground and they were able to figure out where to go next to be able to harvest, to be able to survive."

And Anderson is a living testament to possessing the ability to survive, as well as thrive, as a Native American.

He said that he initially did not expect his Famous Dave's venture to be as phenomenal as it has been and that he has made the impossible possible in his life.

"My story really just proves that anything is possible. As Indian people, we can start and run businesses and have them expand nationally - if you're willing to work hard and if you devote yourself to making other people happy."

Anderson is scheduled to make an appearance in Rapid City for a public speaking engagement on entrepreneurship at University Center, Cheyenne Blvd., on Feb. 21 at 11 a.m. MST. The event is sponsored by South Dakota State University, one of the center's participating universities.

- Copyright permission by Native Sun News www.nsweekly.com

Business and financial wizard David "Famous Dave" Anderson, the exuberant founder of the Legendary Pit Bar-B-Que franchise that bears his name, takes time out of his hectic schedule to pose with franchise mascot Wilbur the Pig. In the years prior to and since establishing Famous Dave's in 1994, Anderson has also continued to build a solid, respectable reputation as a politician, motivational speaker and philanthropist.

COURTESY/ FAMOUS DAVE'S

One of Famous Dave's recently-opened Minnesota locations can be found "smokin' up the 'que" in Coon Rapids.

his Southern food, that's how important it was for him. My mom recalls him almost dragging her down South almost every other weekend. Seriously, my dad would just drive. And one of the people who raised him was called Miss Mamie. She's the one who taught my mom how to cook Southern." Anderson's father continued his regular pilgrimages across the Mason-Dixon Line with his family in tow until his mother eventually became skilled at preparing Southern cuisine.

"That's how important Southern food was in my family," he reemphasized.

Anderson's father also honed his appetite for dishes from the region while working as an electrician in the Windy City.

"He worked with a lot of black construction workers, and he noticed during lunchtime, every once in a while, they would disappear. When they came back, they had some of the best-tasting barbecue. Being from the South himself, he started tagging along with these black guys. Before too long, he knew every black-owned barbecue joint in the city of Chicago."

"When we went out, we went to Eddie's Ribs in Logan Square," said Anderson. "I grew up with barbecue."

Anderson further recalled how important it was for his father to always have the right ingredients for all of his favorite recipes. His father would make additional trips to Oklahoma in search of what were once only regional specialties.

"He would bring back different corn flour, hot sauce - back then, Tabasco primarily under the tutelage of his mother.

During his youth, he spent the majority of his summers on the Lac Courte Oreille Reservation, his mother's homeland.

"I learned how to cook from my mom, working in her Indian fry bread stand. We used to make a wild rice soup, and today, that chicken wild rice soup" is a menu item at Famous Dave's restaurants, said Anderson.

"I think you could say my cooking got its roots for being Indian."

In speaking about his maternal, familial tribe, Anderson emphasized the commonalities shared with other indigenous nations.

"The Lac Courte Oreille Tribe has some shining moments and – just like many tribes - is dealing with some other issues with desperate economic times, as well as the rising influx of gangs and drugs," he said. "Economically, I think we have a high unemployment rate. Even thought the tribe has a casino, it's on a downward slope."

Throughout the course of his varied and extraordinary career, Anderson admirably managed to attend to his philanthropic side.

"What my wife and I have decided to do, we have the LifeSkills career leadership work. We have a career skills training program that we make available to Indian college students. We've also done work up in Canada. We've helped a number of tribes, with my son up there. We've given a lot back to our at-risk Native youth through our career and leadership training program."

Established in 2002 by Famous Dave's of America "I am the founder of Famous Dave's, and I am a shareholder of Famous Dave's. But today, Famous Dave's is a publicly traded company on Wall Street under the Nasdaq Stock Exchange, so I don't own Famous Dave's. The public owns Famous Dave's. There's a corporate staff, there's a corporate board of directors, and I'm sort of retired today, although I do a lot of work. I help open new restaurants. I help develop new recipes. I'm not active day to day in the running of Famous Dave's."

Headquarters for Famous Dave's of America is located in neighboring Minnetonka.

In addition to his success as a restaurateur, Anderson had a long and equally successful, parallel career as a politician, most notably with the U.S. Department of the Interior.

In September of 2003, he was appointed assistant secretary of the Interior Department's Bureau of Indian Affairs by President George W. Bush.

"It was a two-year commitment because, for a year, I had to deal with the U.S. Senate," he said. "The position required a confirmation (by the Senate), and it took almost a year to comply with that."

"Even though I spent a year in office, it almost took two years out of my life."

He abruptly resigned from the post in February 2005.

The experience was very disappointing, said Anderson, although I was honored and humbled to have been considered.

"I think it's an honor for any Indian person to be considered for that position," he said.

"I think it was disappointment for me in the fact that there had already been another person before me. I kind of got thrust into this as not going in being in full command because a lot of this other person's staff was already in place. And I think one of the aha moments was to find out that you're not really in charge."

Prior to Anderson's appointment, Neal McCaleb of the Chickasaw Nation of Oklahoma headed the BIA for a two-year stint. He was also named to the position by Bush.

of America," he said. "I really believe today that my experience in Washington, D.C., has done nothing but

Inside this issue:

- VP arrested on alcohol charges
- Student earns broadcasting scholarship
- March arts class schedule announced

TODAY'S INDEPENDENT INDIAN NEWS

- A FREE PUBLICATION -

WWW.NATIVETIMES.COM

NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES

VOLUME 18 + ISSUE 10

PUBLISHED WEEKLY

MARCH 9, 2012

Tribal standoff turns violent; 2 injured

AP PHOTO GARY KAZANJIAN / FRESNO BEE

Opposing counselman Harold Max Hammond Sr., middle, is among several that are led out of the tribal offices peacefully Tuesday, Feb. 28, 2012 in Coarsegold, Calif. A two-day standoff between factions of a California Indian tribe split on leadership and the expulsion of tribal members ended after the sheriff threatened to arrest anyone who did not leave the government compound where one person was wounded in a stabbing and another suffered a head injury.

Deputies patrol around site of Calif. tribal fight

COARSEGOLD, Calif. (AP) – A two-day standoff between factions of a California tribe divided on leadership and the expulsion of members has ended after a sheriff stepped in, threatening to arrest anyone who stayed at a government center where a scuffle left at least two people injured.

The rival Chukchansi Indian factions on Tuesday voluntarily left the center in Coarsegold, about 200 miles southeast of San Francisco, and agreed to stay away for 48 hours to give the U.S. Bureau of Indian Affairs time to intervene in the conflict, Madera County Sheriff John Anderson said. Three people were taken into custody, he said.

"We're pretty much at a nonviolent standoff," Anderson said. "They are not in contact with each other. We're at an impasse."

Sheriff's deputies stepped in to break up the clash after a fight involving as many as 40 people outside the government center Tuesday in which one person was stabbed and suffered non-life threatening injuries and another suffered a head injury, Anderson said. The skirmish followed Monday's takeover of a tribal office by about 40 supporters of a group whose leaders claimed they were denied their rightful place on the tribe's governing council in the wake of a disputed December election

Members of that group cut locks and broke into an office early Monday, the Fresno Bee reported. Supporters of

See FIGHT Continued on Page 4

Green Bay diocese apologizes to girl

■ The seventhgrader was punished for using Native language at school.

CARRIE ANTLFINGER
Associated Press

MILWAUKEE (AP) – While the Catholic Diocese of Green Bay has apologized to the Menominee Tribe and the family of a seventh-grader who was punished for using her native language at school, the girl's mother said Tuesday that she still wants her daughter's teacher fired.

Tanaes Washinawatok said Julie Gurta, who teaches at Sacred Heart Catholic School in Shawano, did not accept blame for her actions in a letter that was supposed to be an apology.

Washinawatok said her 12-year-old daughter, Miranda, interpreted the words "Hello" and "I love you" and then added how to say "thank you" when talking to two girls in class Jan. 19. She said Gurta overheard and "slammed her hands down on the desk and stated, 'You are not to speak like that. How do I know you're not saying something bad? How would you like if I spoke in Polish and you didn't understand?""

The girl was benched from a basketball game later that day for having "an attitude problem," Washinawatok said she was told.

Washinawatok said she met with diocese and school officials, including the teacher, over the past month and they agreed to send apology letters. Washinawatok explained the issue is sensitive because tribal members used to be beaten for speaking their language in the schools, which is part of the reason they are losing their language.

In the mid-1880s, the federal government established boarding schools that prohibited Native American students from acknowledging their culture, including language. Students were punished for using their native languages until the 1960s, and many elders still alive are afraid to teach the languages to children.

Washinawatok received letters from Gurta, assistant basketball coach Billie Jo DuQuaine, principal Dan Minter and the diocese's director of education, Joseph Bound.

In Gurta's Feb. 22 letter, she wrote her "firm reactions" were not intended to single out the girl or the language. She said Miranda spoke to her in a disrespectful manner several times that day and had behaved inappropriately on other days as well.

"Unfortunately, the actions of your daughter were not brought to your attention as quickly as they should have been, and for this I apologize," Gurta wrote.

Washinawatok described the teacher as insensitive and having an "arrogant, narrowminded way of teaching." She said she planned to send a certified letter Tuesday to the diocese asking that Gurta be fired.

"I don't want this to happen to another family or another student," Washinawatok said.

Bound acknowledged there was a need for cultural diversity training for staff, students and families. Deacon Ray DuBois, spokesman for

See GIRL Continued on Page 4

Wash. State Senate passes bill for tribal retrocession process

YAKIMA, Wash. (AP) – The Washington state Senate has passed a bill that opens the door for dismantling state jurisdiction over American Indian tribes.

The bill creates a retrocession procedure by which a tribe can ask the state to return its jurisdiction over criminal and civil matters to the federal government and the tribes themselves.

The Senate approved the amended bill, HB 2233, on a 42-6 vote.

Washington state assumed jurisdiction in 1963 over such matters as juvenile delinquency, truancy, mental illness and adoption proceedings.

Some have expressed concerns that restoring full sovereignty to tribes over their members might subject outsiders to unfair treatment in tribal courts. But senators rejected an amendment that would have allowed non-Indians who appear in tribal courts to appeal those decisions to state courts.

Navajo Nation sues Urban Outfitters over product names

FELICIA FONSECA
Associated Press

FLAGSTAFF, Arizona (AP) – The Navajo Nation has sued Urban Outfitters Inc. months after the tribe sent a cease and desist letter to the clothing retailer demanding it pull the "Navajo" name from its products.

The lawsuit filed late last Tuesday in U.S. District Court in New Mexico alleges trademark violations and violations of the federal Indian Arts and Crafts Act, which makes it illegal to sell arts or crafts in a way to falsely suggest they're made by American Indians when they are not.

The tribe has about 10 registered trademarks on the Navajo name that cover clothing, footwear, online retail sales, household products and textiles. Tribal justice officials said they're intent on protecting what they believe are among the tribe's most valuable assets.

"The fame or reputation of the Navajo name and marks is such that, when defendant uses the 'Navajo' and 'Navaho' marks with its goods and services, a connection with the Navajo Nation is falsely presumed," the lawsuit states.

Urban Outfitters set off a firestorm of criticism last year with its line of Navajobranded clothing and accessories – particularly underwear and a liquor flask, which the tribe said was "derogatory and scandalous," considering the sale and consumption of alcohol is banned on the reservation that spans parts of northeast Arizona, southeast Utah and northwest New Mexico. The company removed the product names from its website after acknowledging receipt of the cease and desist letter.

But the Navajo Nation wrote in its

See NAVAJO Continued on Page 3 Crafts Act.

MATT YORK / AP FIL

In this Oct. 14, 2011 photo, purchased items from Urban Outfitters' Navajo line are shown in Tempe, Ariz. The Navajo Nation is suing Urban Outfitters months after the tribe sent a cease and desist letter to the clothing retailer demanding it pull the "Navajo" name from its products. The lawsuit filed late Feb. 28 in federal court in New Mexico alleges trademark infringements and violations of the federal Indian Arts and Crafts Act.

Tribe suing beer companies: VP arrested on alcohol charges

His blood-alcohol content was listed at .306, nearly quadruple the legal limit for driving a car.

KRISTI EATON Associated Press

SIOUX FALLS, S.D. (AP) – The chief of police of an American Indian tribe that is suing some of the world's largest beer makers for contributing to rampant alcoholism confirmed March 2 that the tribe's vice president was arrested in an alcohol-related incident.

Oglala Sioux Vice President Thomas Poor Bear was arrested Feb. 19 on the Pine Ridge Reservation on a charge of obstructing government function while receiving treatment at a hospital, according to a portion of a police report The Associated Press obtained from a reservation resident who had access due to his ties with the tribal government.

The arresting officer noted in the report that Poor Bear had "the odor of intoxicants on his breath" and bloodshot eyes. His blood-alcohol content was listed at .306, nearly quadruple the legal limit for driving a car.

Poor Bear told AP he had not been drinking and that his arrest and subsequent jailing was related to driving without a license.

Oglala Sioux Police Chief Richard Greenwald confirmed March 2 that Poor Bear's arrest was related to alcohol.

"I think he was arrested for liquor violation and impeding an officer, but of course, like anything else, he's innocent until proven guilty in a court of law," Greenwald said. He said the liquor violation either means Poor Bear was in possession of alcohol or had been consuming alcohol. Both are banned on the reservation.

Greenwald would not go into specifics and said the arresting officer could not comment. He refused to provide the full report because the tribe's laws do not allow for the release of police reports until cases have gone through court.

Thomas Poor Bear, Oglala Sioux Vice President

The of the report obtained by AP shows Poor Bear was arrested on a charge of obstructing a government function and notes that alcohol was a factor in the arrest. Poor Bear said he was arraigned three days later on the obstruction charge.

A secretary to the tribe's president, John Yellow Bird Steele, said he was not available to comment.

The Oglala Sioux Tribe has sued several beer makers, saying they are knowingly contributing to the devastating alcohol-related problems on the Pine Ridge Reservation. The lawsuit, filed last month in the U.S. District Court of Nebraska, seeks $500 million in damages for the cost of health care, social services and child rehabilitation caused by chronic alcoholism on the reservation, located in some of the poorest counties in the

The lawsuit also targets four beer stores in Whiteclay, Neb., a town near the reservation's border. Whiteclay has only about a dozen residents but sold nearly 5 million cans of beer in 2010, according to the federal lawsuit.

Poor Bear has been outspoken in his criticism of the Whiteclay beer stores for providing alcohol to tribal members.

Attorney Tom White, legal counsel for the Oglala Sioux Tribe in the federal lawsuit, was traveling and could not immediately be reached for comment

Mark Vasina, president of Nebraskans for Peace, which assisted Poor Bear in bringing the lawsuit against the beer companies, said he had no comment.

UND legal fight has broader impact

BISMARCK, N.D. (AP) - institutions under its control." North Dakota's Board of Higher Education doesn't want to subvert for the Legislative Council, the the Legislature's authority by Legislature's research arm, said the attempting to disqualify a law that board's Supreme Court filings argue requires the University of North that the Legislature's power over the Dakota's teams to be called the higher education system does not Fighting Sioux, two officials said Friday.

Separately, a supporter of the 11 public colleges.  $university \lqsnick name and American$ Indian head logo said the board's stand has given momentum to a possible ballot initiative that would replace the board with an elected higher education commissioner.

on Friday. "We need to have system. accountability, and we don't have

Johnson is a member of a citizens' Higher Education contends the law is unconstitutional, and it has asked the North Dakota Supreme Court in the case.

Rep. Al Carlson, R-Fargo, the prerogatives. House majority leader, said if the Supreme Court endorses the board's for is that the Supreme Court legal arguments it will cripple the declare (the Fighting Sioux law) Legislature's power to regulate and the referendum measure North Dakota's university system.

The Board of Higher Education, which is part of the North Dakota Constitution, was established by a voter initiative in 1938 in response to then-Gov. William Langer's decision to sack seven professors

"the control and administration"

John Bjornson, an attorney extend much further than deciding how much money to spend on its

If the Supreme Court sides with the board, lawmakers may not be able to dictate where college buildings are built, whether professors should be required to be fluent in English, or whether "With the current board, there is smoking should be allowed on no accountability," Sean Johnson, of campuses, Bjornson said, naming Bismarck, told a legislative higher three examples of state laws that education oversight committee affect the board and university

The lawsuit "raises the bigger question, where does your authority begin and end?" Bjornson told committee that campaigned for the committee's lawmakers. "Does a June referendum vote on the it just begin with appropriating Fighting Sioux law. The Board of money, and end there, or is there some other point anywhere in between?"

Grant Shaft, the president of the to block it from coming to a public Board of Higher Education, and Pat Seaworth, the state university The high court has allowed system's top attorney, said Friday nickname supporters and the the board's challenge of the Fighting Legislature to intervene separately Sioux law was not intended as a broad assault on legislative

> "What the board is asking unconstitutional. Period," Seaworth said. "No more, no less."

Johnson said he thinks the board should be replaced by an elected which is now North Dakota State have power to hire and fire college that it has "full authority over the the question on the November Senate.

ballot, Johnson told the committee lawmakers.

Some legislators said they were uncomfortable with the idea of electing one person who would be responsible for North Dakota higher education. It would be better to allow the governor to appoint a higher education commissioner, said Rep. RaeAnn Kelsch, R-Mandan, the chairwoman of the North Dakota House's Education

"I do think that it makes it very political," Kelsch said of having an elected commissioner. "What you really want is a leader that you seek out ... . That's why I see an appointed position being better, because they're serving at the will of the governor, and it's much easier for the governor to fire than it is to get a recall."

North Dakota's current Board of Higher Education has eight voting members. It has power to hire and fire college presidents and to set policy for the state's university system.

The Legislature's Higher Education Committee, which is developing proposals for the 2013 Legislature, is studying a separate constitutional amendment that would abolish the board and give the governor authority to appoint a higher education commissioner.

The amendment would replace the Board of Higher Education with an 11-member advisory council. Its members would be appointed by the governor and vetted by a committee of five legislative leaders.

The amendment is similar to higher education commissioner, a proposal Carlson introduced who would be in charge of drafting in the 2011 Legislature. His the university system's budget amendment sought to replace the at the state agricultural college, recommendations and would Board of Higher Education and the state superintendent of public presidents. He or she would be instruction, who is elected, with a The constitution says the higher elected for six years and could not Department of Education, whose education board was established for serve more than two terms, he said. leader would have been appointed Supporters of the idea are drafting by the governor. The amendment of the state's public colleges, and a voter initiative and hope to get was defeated in the North Dakota

WE HAVE YOU COVERED

Arvest Bank provides the financial solutions you need.

Personal & Business Checking Accounts

All Arvest checking accounts come with the FREE services you need to do your day-to-day banking - Arvest Online Banking, Mobile Banking**, Arvest CheckCard, and 24-Hour Account Information Line.

Mortgage Loans:

Rural Development

FHA, VA or Bond

Section 184 Indian Home Loan

- Lower Monthly Payments
- No Monthly Mortgage Insurance - Lower Down Payment
- Low Fixed Rate

Mention this ad for a $75 Closing Cost Discount.***

*$100.00 minimum required to open a checking account. **Your wireless carrier may assess a fee for data services. Please consult your wireless plan or provider for details. ***Some restrictions may apply. See associate for details. (918) 631-1000

arvest.com

Member FDIC TENOR

get lean tulsa

for ourselves. for our families. for future generations.

Oklahoma ranks 48th nationally for health. That is unacceptable. We can no longer sit idle when our health hangs in the balance.

There is a plan to create healthier lives for all Oklahomans - the Oklahoma Health Improvement Plan. Endorsed by the legislature, this plan outlines a clear path of action to save lives and improve our health. Join us by supporting:

Restore the rights of local communities to pass smokefree policies that are stronger than state law

Assure health education is taught in sixth, seventh or eighth grade for all state public schools

Prohibit the use of a hand-held electronic device while driving for all drivers under the age of 18

Let's pull together to Shape Our Future. Your state is counting on you.

Email: gadmin@ganica.net for more info.

ww.ganica.net

State finds problems with tribe's foster care

BISMARCK, N.D. (AP) - North Dakota human services officials have given the Spirit Lake tribe until the end of March to correct problems in foster care administration.

The tribe has agreed to correct deficiencies in how it handles the cases of 36 foster children, The Forum newspaper reported Wednesday. Officials said case plans for the children did not exist, were incomplete or were not up to date. A state review also found other problems, including inadequate health and education records for the children.

The tribe was given a 30-day deadline for corrective actions but Tribal Chairman Roger Yankton successfully argued for a 45-day window, saying in a letter to the state that the tribe's two foster care case managers each work with 39 children.

"The extremely high caseloads provide limited time for these workers to address compliance issues," Yankton said. "Secondly, the sheer number of deficiencies for each of these cases reviewed requires many man hours for corrections to be completed."

A state review team inspected the tribe's foster care case files in January after it became aware of deficiencies flagged in a yearly review of the tribe's social services programs by the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

Funding for the foster care program is split, with some children's needs paid by the BIA and others paid by money passed through the state to provide financial support for the foster homes. Last year, payments to support the 36 children totaled $633,000.

During the 45-day corrective period, the tribe will have to pay for food, clothing, transportation and other needs of the 36 children, said Tara Muhlhauser, children and family services director with the North Dakota Department of Human Services.

"We made it very clear that is the tribe's responsibility," she said.

Charges dismissed against ex-Okla. tribal worker

MUSKOGEE, Okla. (AP) - A former Muscogee Creek Nation official accused of bilking the government out of more than $2.5 million in cigarette taxes pleaded guilty last week to federal charges of conspiracy and perjury.

U.S. Magistrate Judge Kimberly West accepted the plea and ordered a presentencing report for Michael P. Wisner. A formal sentencing date hasn't been scheduled.

Federal prosecutors accused Wisner, of Mandeville, La., of conspiring with a tobacco wholesaler to sell cigarettes in Creek Nation smoke shops at an illegally low tax rate. Wisner was serving as the CEO of the Creek Nation's Department of Trade and Commerce Authority at the time.

Wisner was accused of brokering deals in which cigarettes would be purchased from a tobacco wholesaler in a state that wasn't part of the Master Settlement Agreement between tobacco companies and 46 states, including Oklahoma, Assistant U.S. Attorney Ryan Roberts said. The 1998 settlement agreement required certain cigarette manufacturers to pay a $5 per carton fee.

"Generally a carton of cigarettes, which is what many tribes make money on, costs about $8 a carton, but you pay around $20 in taxes. If you can avoid that $5 MSA tax you make your money up pretty quick," Roberts said.

The indictment also alleged that two others not indicted in the case created fraudulent documentation that showed the cigarettes sold to the Creek Nation would qualify for the lowest Oklahoma tax rate of $.58 per carton, when the tax rate should have been $7.75 per carton.

Wisner also was accused of knowingly making false representations while under oath before a federal grand jury in Muskogee.

Wisner's attorney, listed in court records as James Huber, didn't immediately return a call Monday seeking comment.

Fort Peck tribes agree to $75M trust settlement

MATT VOLZ Associated Press

HELENA, Mont. (AP) The Fort Peck tribes have agreed to a $75 million settlement with the U.S. government over the government's mismanagement of their trust funds and trust resources.

The agreement approved by the Tribal Executive Board Monday is separate from the $3.4 billion Cobell settlement over similar claims by individual Native Americans. It comes days after the Confederated Colville Tribes accepted a similar $193 million settlement.

This agreement must still be approved by a federal judge before the tribes' lawsuit against the government is dismissed.

The tribes, located the Fort Peck Indian Reservation in northeastern Montana, sued in 2002 in attempt to receive an accounting of the Interior Department's management of the tribes' trust funds and to learn how much had been lost.

Fort Peck Chairman Floyd Azure said in a statement that the agreement was finalized in a Feb. 16 meeting with federal negotiators. The settlement resolves all past tribal claims against the U.S. government over mismanagement of trust funds from land, natural resources and a tribal credit program.

"The case we are resolving today addresses a series of wrongs committed by the federal government in the management of the Tribes' trust assets," Azure said.

He called the agreement a "treaty" between the tribes and the United States that will serve the tribes' best interests for years to come.

Α separate tribal statement says the executive board "is in the process of developing plans for the prudent use of these funds to meet the current and future needs of the Fort Peck people.

This case deals only with tribal trust funds and not individual trust funds, which is addressed in the class-action settlement named after Elouise Cobell, the deceased Blackfeet advocate who sued the government in the mid-1990s over billions of royalties lost from the accounts of individual Indians.

NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES

Publisher & Editor LISA SNELL editor@nativetimes.com

Contributing Writers Dana Attocknie WESLEY MAHAN KAREN SHADE

Advertising Sales KATHLEEN ROBERTSON LISA SNELL ROB WALTON

advertising@nativetimes.com

Distribution SHELBY HICKS STEVE LACY WESLEY MAHAN MICHAEL MARRIS KATHLEEN ROBERTSON Brenda Slaughter

The Native American Times, formerly the Oklahoma Indian Times, is published weekly (except the last week of the year) by Lisa Hicks Snell. Mailing address is PO Box 411 Tahlequah, OK 74465. All the contents within the Native American Times are copyrighted material. Any reproduction, redistribution without the written consent of the NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES is strictly

> Each week's issue is available for free download online at: www.nativetimes.com

Subscription rates: $65.00 for fifty-two issues, $32.50 for twenty-six issues, or $16.25 for thirteen issues. A single copy is $1.25 (Rates are for postage and handling) Send check or money order to:

NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES Attn: Subscriptions P.O. Box 411 Tahlequah, OK 74465-0411

Phone: (918) 708-5838 Fax: (888) 689-4873

Postmaster: Send Change of Address Form 579 to: NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES P.O. Box 411, Tahlequah, OK 74465

WWW.NATIVETIMES.COM - News from the crossroads of Indian Country

NAVAJO

lawsuit that products with the Navajo name still are sold through other company brands, like Free People, in catalogs and retail stores.

The clothing boutique's website features several pieces of jewelry labeled vintage Navajo with turquoise stones and silver. A description for a handmade cuff says it originally was sold at a trading post, and has etched arrow detailing with a "sterling" stamp on the back.

There was no sign of the word "Navajo" on any products at an Urban Outfitters in downtown Tempe late last week.

Philadelphia-based company did not respond to messages seeking comment Wednesday.

Company spokesman Ed Looram said in an email last October that Urban Outfitters had no plans to alter its products.

"Like many other fashion brands, we interpret trends and will continue to do so for years to come," he said. "The American-inspired trend and specifically the term 'Navajo' have been cycling thru fashion, fine art and design for the last few years."

He later declined further comment, saying the matter was in the hands of legal

Susan Scafidi, who directs the Fashion Law Institute at Fordham University's law school in New York, said Urban Outfitters could point out the name changes in certain items in response to the tribe's original objections. The "Navajo Hipster Panty" and the "Navajo Print Fabric Wrapped Flask," for example, later appeared on the company's website as "printed" instead of "Navajo."

Other defenses include claiming no likelihood of consumer confusion between an authorized Navajo clothing item and the panty, using alternate spellings of "Navajo" and arguing that the contested product isn't a handicraft, she

But she and New Yorkbased fashion lawyer Joseph F. Murphy Jr., agree the trademark infringement is clear. Both pointed to a history in which the Navajo Nation lost real property and now is fighting to protect intellectual

"That's what disgusts me about this situation," Murphy said. "I, like many people, thought it would have been resolved. But apparently Urban Outfitters declined to write the big apology and may have to write the big check."

Navajo The Nation's objections to traditionally styled beaded earrings or a hacienda bag that don't carry the tribe's name are much less likely to succeed, Scafidi said. But she said it shows a pattern that could influence a jury, which the tribe has requested in its lawsuit.

"Imagine all of those products piled on a table in the courtroom, looking like Santa Fe meets New York's notorious Canal Street or Beijing's Silk Market," she wrote in an email.

Tuesday's action isn't the first time the Navajo Nation has asserted its trademarks, though it had never taken action in federal court, said tribal Department of Justice attorney Brian Lewis. The tribe successfully forced the cancellation of a "Navaho" trademark last year that was used by a French company doing business in the United States. The tribe argued the name was phonetically identical and infringed on its trademark.

The tribe licenses its name to other businesses in exchange for a share of their profits, and it has identified about two dozen companies it believes are violating the Navajo trademark. Lewis said letters and phone calls typically convince others to stop infringing on the tribe's rights.

He said the widespread use of the word "Navajo" on products does not make it an acceptable practice, nor does it go unnoticed. But he said the tribe's resources are limited and the Navajo Nation must prioritize the actions it takes.

"In this case, the level and degree of egregious behavior and harm to the Navajo Nation factored heavily into the Navajo Nation's decision to act," he wrote in an email to The Associated Press.

The lawsuit seeks monetary compensation and an order permanently enjoining Urban Outfitters from using the name "Navajo" or variations of it on its products.

Native American hiring preference?

Advertise to Native Americans! FREE ONLINE with PRINT BUY E-mail your ad for a quote to lisa@nativetimes.com

Metal Roofing & Siding

Professional Construction and Home Repairs

Free Estimates

Charles Snell 918-507-2902

Native American Contractor

VINITA 918-256-5585

LANGLEY 918-782-0011

MONKEY ISLAND 918-257-8869

www.okstatebank.com Equal Housing Lender Native American Owned

NATIVE TIMES recycles with Tahlequah Recycling Incorporated... shouldn't you?

Reeves Renovations Professional Construction, Remodeling & Repairs

Bathrooms • Kitchens • Paint Tile • Trim • Plumbing Electrical • Solar Panels Windmills • Winterizing Quality Work • Free Estimates

918-637-6736 johnwilliamreeves@juno.com Mayes & Cherokee Counties

Follow Us! www.twitter.com/nativetimes

12 Necklaces: Chain w/ pendant and display pad $13.50 36 inch gemstone chip strands Reg. 3.95 now $2.00 36 inch turquoise chip strands Reg. 7.95 now $4.00

Always our regular stock of seed beads from 16/0 to 8/0, findings, leather, hackles, fluffs and thousands of other supply items.

SUPERNAW'S OKLAHOMA

INDIAN SUPPLY

Wholesale items for Pow Wow Vendors

Bone chokers $20 per dozen

Handmade lamp worked glass bead bracelets $1.00 each

Glass bead stretch bracelets 5 for $2.50

Remember we've moved around the corner 109 North Broadway, Skiatook, OK 74070

New Dealers Cash or Credit Card Only.

Open Noon-6pm Mon. thru Fri. • 10am-5m Sat. • Closed Sun. Local: 396-1713-Countrywide Toll Free 1-888-720-1967 Website: www.supernaw.com • Email: Supernaw@flash.net

www.nativetimes.com

More Jobs. More News. More Features. Every Day.

Conn. tribe ends payments to citizens

MICHAEL MELIA Associated Press

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) – Tribal payments are coming to an end for Mashantucket Pequot Tribe members who once received a monthly share of casino revenue, a person familiar with tribal actions said March 2.

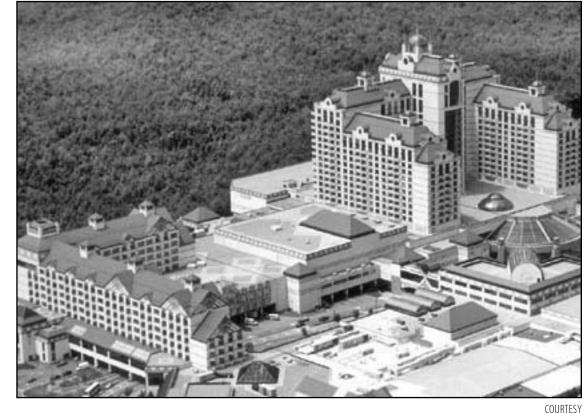

The tribe, which runs the Foxwoods Resort Casino, haltedaper-capita distribution of gambling revenue in 2010 amid financial struggles, said the person who on spoke on condition of anonymity because of the sensitivity over the details of the assistance. The person said transitional payments then started at the reduced amount of $1,500 per month to help members adjust, but they gradually were decreased to $500 with the last payment coming Friday.

A spokesman for the Mashantuckets, Bill Satti, said the tribe does not comment on "personal matters of this nature."

The tribe still provides for members in areas such as education, but the shriveling of the revenue sharing marks the end of one of the premier benefits for the tribe that opened one of the world's largest casinos.

The end of the payments was first reported by The Day of New London.

Foxwoods opened in 1992 and expanded in 2008 with the $700 million MGM Grand, a 30-story property that includes a casino, hotel and a 4,000-seat performing arts theater. But the casino and its neighbor, the Mohegan Sun, have been struggling with weak consumer demand since the economic downturn and growing competition in the Northeast. Foxwoods is in talks to resolve hundreds of millions of dollars in debt.

The Foxwoods Resort Casino opened in 1992 and is one of the world's largest casinos.

For several years now, tribal officials have been preparing members for the cutbacks.

In 2009, the then-chairman of the Mashantuckets, Michael J. Thomas, warned in a letter to tribal members that financial difficulties threatened their living standards.

"These are dire financial times for our tribe," Thomas wrote in the letter. "The situation is serious and threatens our tribe."

The Transitional Income Supplemental Payments, which began in January 2011, were paid out to adult tribal members the first Friday of each month, according to the person familiar with tribal actions, who said the payments were far higher than $1,500 a month before the economy soured.

For months, the person said, tribal members have been urged to pursue financial counseling offered through the tribal council chairman's office in correspondence that also included names and numbers of state social service agencies and food pantries. The person said the tribe also created its own assistance program called "Beans and Jeans," a place where families in need can obtain donated food and clothing.

A spokesman for the Connecticut Department of Social Services, David Dearborn, said the office serving southeast Connecticut has not seen any inordinate increase in applications.

GIR

Continued from Page

the diocese, said it was working with a relative of the Washinawatoks to develop a program to use in the school in April or May and possibly other schools after that.

"We ask for your forgiveness for our actions that have inflicted heartache, pain and anger to all those who have felt these emotions over the past several weeks," Bound wrote. "It is our hope that with this greater awareness, we can begin to repair any harm that has been caused and to be able to build new and improved relationships."

Washinawatok said the principal told her the coach asked for the girl to be benched, but the coach denied it.

Minter apologized in his letter for any hurt he caused, and DuQuaine apologized for "a breakdown of communication" that led to the girl being benched.

Washinawatok said she didn't think DuQuaine's letter was a "proper apology" either, but she was leaving it up to the diocese to pursue any further action.

Messages left at the school for the principal, teacher and assistant coach were not immediately returned. DuBois said the local parish makes hiring decisions, and the diocese has only an advisory role. A message left for parish Pastor Len Evers wasn't immediately returned Tuesday.

Washinawatok said her daughter is dealing with the situation the best she can, at times shutting down to questions. But she said her daughter is mature and respectable and was bothered by the fact the teacher didn't ask what she said.

"That was the thing that bothered her the most: the fact that Julie Gurta assumed she was saying something bad," she said.

FIGHT

Continued from Paae

the sitting council responded Monday night by shutting off water and power to the building and hitting it with pepper spray, the newspaper said. A smoldering log was also thrown into the building and then tossed back out.

The tribe owns the Chukchansi Gold Resort and Casino in the Sierra foothills near Yosemite National Park and has expelled dozens of members since around November, cutting them off from stipends and other benefits.

Critics allege the move is aimed at increasing the casino profits of those still in the tribe. Tribal officials dispute that, saying they are enforcing their enrollment criteria and are now in a position to verify who is eligible to claim Chukchansi

The disenrollment debate has played into the division between the two groups claiming control of the tribal council. Supporters of the faction that occupied the tribal office said the four members who won election in December had agreed to reverse the expulsions, but that the existing council refused to recognize them.

The sitting council, meanwhile, said it had no choice but to hold offletting the new members take office after one of the four elected in December was disqualified for using an invalid tribal badge in the casino, the Bee said. The tribe's constitution says the old council has to remain in place until its replacement can be sworn in. An election for the seat won by the disqualified member is scheduled to be held in two weeks.

Morris Reid, whom the Bee identified as the leader of the replacement council involved in the occupation, issued a statement Tuesday calling on the BIA, the Department of Justice and Attorney General Eric Holder "to send federal Bureau of Indian Affairs law enforcement officers ...and to exercise the law enforcement authority granted to the United States over Tribal lands."

But Reid objected to the sheriff moving in to end the standoff.

"This action by local non-Indian law enforcement is in excess of their authority under Federal law and is a flagrant violation of Tribal sovereignty and an affront to Tribal governments and Indian people across this country," he said. "To curtail this dangerous precedent, we are asking the Federal government to assume law enforcement authority over the Picayune Rancheria immediately."

The Picayune Rancheria is the tribe's land.

Nedra Darling, a BIA spokeswoman, told The Associated Press that bureau representatives in California had "reached out to the parties and we are supporting the tribe's efforts to reach a peaceful resolution."

Anderson, who on Monday had characterized the standoff as a family squabble he was powerless to resolve unless any crimes were committed, said he hopes federal officials will get involved.

"I honestly don't know which party is right. They had an election and they both have paperwork saying that the other is in violation," Anderson said. "Even if I could make a determination, they wouldn't buy it. I can only enforce criminal law on Indian land."

Other casino-owning tribes in the state that have kicked out members include the Pala Band of Mission Indians in northern San Diego County. That tribe owns the Pala Resort and Casino and expelled more than 150 people earlier this month.

Miss. Choctaws ink $78M debt deal with Trustmark Bank

PHILADELPHIA, Miss. five year (AP) – The Mississippi Band of Choctaw Indians has signed a debt refinancing agreement for the Pearl River Resort in Neshoba County and the Bok Homa Casino in Jones County. five tribe

The new loan is for $78 million at a 6 percent variable rate for five years. The agreement was signed last week by Chief Phyliss J. Anderson and officials with Trustmark National Bank in Jackson Anderson says the deal gives the tribe financial stability.

Last summer, Moody's Investors Service downgraded $200 million in securities borrowed by the Choctaw Resort Development Enterprise. In late 2011, the tribal enterprise was removed from the credit watch list after it received a six-month extension on loans owed.

Pearl River Resort encompasses the Silver Star

Hotel and Casino, the Golden Moon Entertainment Arena and Hotel, BokHomaCasino, Dancing Rabbit Golf Course and Geyser Falls Water Theme Park.

Its latest promote is "Pearl River Resort, it's like Vegas with sweet tea."

The Choctaw
R e s o r t
D e v e l o p m e n t
E n t e r p r i s e's previous termloan had a maturity
date of May 4,
2012, for the Pearl
River Resort and a maturity date of

May 31, 2012, for the Bok Homa Casino.

"I am very happy we were able to get this deal done early," Anderson said. "I appreciate the hard work of our CRDE board members, Choctaw Tribal Council, our finance, legal and accounting teams as well as our partners Trustmark National Bank. We are very satisfied with the terms of this deal. I didn't know if we would be able to get this done in the first 100 days of office but I pushed hard for the benefit of our tribal people."

"This was not a standard transaction," said Trustmark National Bank first vice president Craig Sosebee. "We've gone through the recession. People were thinking that maybe gaming was kind of recession-proof. That's not really turned out to be the case. So, the market has changed from where the financing use to be, but we still had a number of banks willing to participate and we put a good group together."

The Golden Moon Entertainment Arena and Hotel

OK AG seeks more info on Kialegee leaders

The state wants to identify seven "John Doe" defendants who are tribal officers or members of the tribe's business committee.

BROKENARROW, Okla. (AP)

- The state is asking a federal judge to speed up the release of information in its lawsuit over a planned casino in Broken Arrow, saying it's been unable to serve summons against Kialegee tribal leaders because the state can't find them.

Each side normally has 30 days to exchange information in the discovery process, but state attorneys are asking a judge to shorten that to five days. "The reason we've asked for that shortened time is because the tribe has been uncooperative in identifying the tribal officers and we need the documents for the preliminary injunction hearing," said Attorney General's Office spokeswoman Diane Clay.

Clay told the Tulsa World that the state wants to identify seven "John Doe" defendants who are tribal officers or members of the tribe's business committee.

Attorney William Scott, who represents the state, said in an affidavit that he had made a "diligent search" of public records to determine the correct parties to be sued but had not been successful.

Scott said he tried the National Indian Law Library and also found that there is no official website for the tribal town identifying its other officers and business committee members.

According to court records, two attorneys for the tribe have refused to accept service for the legal summons and provide the names of the John Doe defendants.

"We neither will – nor should be expected to – assist you in finalizing incomplete allegations and serving this litigation against our clients," attorney Dennis Whittlesey said in an email included in the court records.

The state sued last month to stop construction of the casino, arguing that the Kialegees are violating a state compact on Indian gambling by building the casino without first securing federal approval of a lease for the property. The tribe argues that the federal approval is not necessary in this case and is seeking dismissal of the state's lawsuit.

Look for Native American Times on Twitter and Facebook. Get front page scoops and story previews!

COMMENTARY

Ownership of water a line drawn in the sand

S.E. RUCKMAN

I recall the story I heard about a humble Comanche man who wore overalls and lived simply. His family was part of the great allotment experiment in Oklahoma around the early 1900s where 80-acre plots were given to individuals. And like a mini lottery tucked into this larger land scheme, his acreage had a natural spring on it. The water breathing up from his piece of the Earth was sweet, clean and pure.

So everyone can be in the loop, Indian landowners often lease their minerals, grazing or water to make use of land that would otherwise be owned but not necessarily exercised. A deal is then worked out so that the leaser is compensated fairly by the lessee. In this case, family members told me their patriarch gave his consent after being promised an annual if negligible amount.

Forty years stretched by. The man's descendants were now being notified by the Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA) that the water lease was up for renewal. In the span of those four decades, several community developments had sprung up and water need increased. More users of the same water source would seemingly mean a more lucrative lease for the family, they reasoned.

Yet that may not the case. Local officials saw the ownership of this water as a larger scale issue that bypassed Indian landowner interests. The lease is still being worked out, I was told. Fair, after all, is in the eyes of the beholder and codified on the lease papers. Meanwhile, the subject of water supremacy started to sprinkle on me.

went by that I learned that two of the Five Civilized Tribes had filed a case in federal court to prevent the State of Oklahoma from selling water storage rights to a municipal party. The two tribes contend that a treaty negotiated over

Not more than a few months

a hundred years ago gave them say-so over the water in question. That's the beauty of treaties; they can reconstitute and reverberate with life when necessary.

After reading the case filing, I learned that plaintiff tribes were demanding their treaty territory be preserved. Their right to be free of state jurisdiction was established by the Treaty of Washington which gave the two tribes ownership of water in the Sardis Reservoir (in south central Oklahoma). Like most federal Indian cases, the non-Native sides desire unilateral authority while the tribal interests hinge on sovereign fulfillment.

The sleeping water issue has risen like a Gila monster prodded from under a rock in Oklahoma. Akin to sounding a bugle horn, an editorial from a mainstream paper reminded readers in a paternalistic tone that while the two tribes were well able to defend their interests, the state's long term welfare was at stake. Great consequence hovered.

It is abundantly clear to me that lines are being drawn in our red, iron oxide sand. State governments like to rally the support of non-native inhabitants to emphasize their greater good. In the same breath, we all know might doesn't necessarily make

It is stunning how many entities can impinge on water disputes. This case alone names 13 defendants (a veritable Who's Who in Oklahoma). From water resource boards, rural water districts and advocacy groups, non-native water claims spring up like numbered balls in a bingo game. Weighing it out carefully is prudent; a badly decided water issue can trickle down and erode even the most single-minded purpose.

I spoke with a fellow from the Oklahoma Water Resources Research Institute recently and the point we agreed upon was that water eventually becomes an emotional rather than a rational topic. This is a clue to me that this (water) is one of the things that really matter. All other issues in Indian Country kind of meld into it. We are, after all, only mammals breathing in air on the Planet.

Now it's the part in the revived Western movie where the Indians stand off their encroachers. Tensions are running high. Water issues are notorious for becoming entangled in the brambles S.E. RUCKMAN of the legal system. This is no cause for alarm. The two Oklahoma tribes have the resources to maintain their water position. But if they fall, water interests for every tribe in the state teeters. Legal precedent can be a slippery slope indeed.

I watched an animated piece recently about a small town's fight over water. Without it, they perished. The hero lizard (in this case) keeps coming back to the line: "He who controls the water controls everything." I do not necessarily rely on cartoon oracles, but in this case, it resonates.

S.E. Ruckman is a citizen of the Wichita and Affiliated Tribes in Anadarko, Okla. She graduated from the University of Oklahoma's School of Journalism and has written for the Tulsa World and the Native American Times. She is a freelance writer who is based in Oklahoma.

Looking in the mirror with no reflection

NOTES FROM INDIAN COUNTRY

TIM GIAGO (Nanwica Kciji) © 2012 Unity South Dakota

I was struck by an article by David Rooks in the Rapid City Journal on March 2.

David Rooks is a nice guy. He was also a former employee of mine when I owned the Lakota Times. Our main office in Pine Ridge Village was in the old Western Auto store that was once owned by his father, Gene.

The problems I have always had with Rooks are that he wore his Catholicism on his sleeve and his entire world seemed to be built around his Catholic beliefs.

In the article he wrote he was lamenting the loss of culture and traditions on the Pine Ridge Reservation. He wrote, "Lakota culture is poisoned and dying from its contact with the West." He felt that "Traditional Lakota society is being buffeted and pummeled through daily exposure to western materialism and spiritual decay; particularly through its children."

Now mind you Rooks was out on the reservation as parish coordinator for a church known as Our Lady of the Sioux. In this capacity he walked in the footsteps of many Catholic catechists who traveled these reservation roads before him trying to damage or destroy the traditional spiritual beliefs of the Lakota.

A few weeks ago one of the true Lakota journalists I admire, Ivan F. Starr, a man who spent nearly all of his life in the Oglala Community on the Pine Ridge Reservation, wrote a very soulful account of the near destruction of the traditional tiospaye (pronounced tee-ospy-yay, which is a traditional clan or family). The tiospaye was once the heart of family life amongst the Lakota. It instilled all of the virtues such as honesty, courage and generosity in its members. The laws that governed the body were unwritten, but they set the guidelines for continuity and behavior within the community.

The near destruction of the tiospaye came at the hands of the ministers from the different churches who believed that in order for the Lakota to survive, they had to set aside their traditional spirituality and beliefs and embrace Christianity. In tearing away the traditions and culture and converting the people, especially the children, to a new belief, nearly all of the customs and beliefs that had supported the Lakota people for generations were washed

So here we have a preacher, Mr. Rooks, lamenting the loss of the culture and traditions of the Sioux people, when all the while he is inadvertently pontificating on the very tools of his religion that brought about much of that

Rooks concludes his self-effacing column with, "Now that I think of it, the whole effort of retaining a vibrant and authentic Lakota identity for the generations to come is a conservative project. Not for its own sake, but because Lakota culture is beautiful and worth preserving."

When the Church and the federal government made the decision to "Kill the Indian; save the man," they set about by removing the children from their traditional families and tiospayes and placing them in institutions where they would have little or no contact with their traditional teachers, their parents and grandparents. By severing this most important link to their language, history and culture, the Church and the government effectively joined forces in an effort to remake the Lakota in their own image.

Rooks wonders why the loss of culture is happening. He writes, "The question is, given the cunning and power of the forces attacking

While Rooks returned to the reservation considering how, "Those eight months back on the Rez altered my thinking about many things

The traditional tiospayes existed for a thousand years and set the cultural standards that held a people together and made for a culture with very clear systems of spirituality, customs, and behavior. Because the Catholic Church and other church groups, did not understand the tiospaye, hence the Lakota people, they considered these clans to be a danger to their efforts to reform and change a

Many of the problems that now exist on Pine Ridge and other reservations can be traced directly to the Church and the federal government. Steeped in Catholicism, David Rooks set about emulating the preachers before him who came to the reservation wearing blinders; they could not see the forest for the

Perhaps MTV, YouTube and Facebook will be the final nails in the coffin of traditional and cultural values of the Lakota youth, but the problems started long before they were introduced into the Lakota society. They started when Church and state set about to systematically plan for the future of the Lakota people without their input, and folks like David Rooks, although he is looking in a mirror with no reflection, were in the forefront of the cultural destruction.

Tim Giago

Tim Giago, an Oglala Lakota, is President of Unity South Dakota. He was a Nieman Fellow at Harvard with the Class of 1990. His weekly column won the H. L. Mencken Award in 1985. He was the founder of The Lakota Times, Indian Country Today, Lakota Journal and Native Sun News. He can be reached at UnitySoDak1@

Governor Fallin fails Native Americans

OKLAHOMA DEMOCRATIC PARTY

The Chairman of the Oklahoma Democratic Party, Wallace Collins, released a statement asking Governor Fallin to accept responsibility in her failure of not appointing a Native American liaison, which was decreed by law that she signed in May of 2011.

The deadline for the the appointment was December 1, 2011, and in a news article her spokesman was quoted saying the Governor was, "ignoring the Thursday deadline and is leaving the position vacant because of questions that arose after the bill was signed into law."

The law says that the liaison is responsible for state-tribal relations and would be the designee of the Governor to negotiate compacts between tribes and the state.

The liaison's other responsibilities include monitoring state-tribe compacts, coordinating relations between tribes and the state historical society, and advising tribes about state programs that affect their business.

"Even though there may be questions concerning the bill, she is still neglecting every Native American in Oklahoma by not appointing a liaison," said Chairman Collins.

In her State of the State address she explicitly asked for $5 million to be appropriated to the Attorney General's office to help battle the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes over water rights. Collins continued, "She is showing a pattern of behavior of disregarding our Native American tribal members and treating them as obstacles, rather than citizens of our state."

Oklahoma has one of the largest Native American populations in the U.S. and has 39 federally recognized tribes. "It is perfectly reasonable to include a representative of the tribes at the Governor's table," Collins said. "I call on her to be swift and proactive in appointing a Native American liaison."

NA
\TI VE
A
M ER
U
CA
N
TI
M
ES

Name:
Address:
City:	State: Zip:
Phone:
□ $65.00 for 52 issue:	s 🔲 $32.50 for 26 issues

Mail this form with a check or money order to: Native American Times • P.O. Box 411 Tahlequah, OK 74465 • 918-708-5838

■ $1.25 single copy

■ $16.25 for 13 issues

Cherokee Nation youth employment program taking apps

TAHLEOUAH, — This summer Cherokee Nation will once again offer a great opportunity for young Native Americans to gain valuable job experience. Applications will be taken for the tribe's annual Summer Youth Employment Program from March 12 through April 27 at Career Services field offices throughout the Cherokee Nation's jurisdiction. SYEP participants will have the opportunity for a paid work experience lasting approximately six weeks and will start work on June 4.

"The youth employment program allows our tribal youth to experience the world of work. In addition, they get to see how the Cherokee Nation tribal government works and get a feel for the type of career they want to pursue in life," said Diane Kelley, executive director of Cherokee Nation Career Services. "We have many role models throughout the Cherokee Nation who started out on the Summer Youth Employment Program, and one such person who comes to mind is Todd Hembree, our new attorney general."

A special employment fair to prepare potential SYEP participants for the application process will be held in three area communities. Information be offered to help applicants complete their SYEP forms. A number of entities will be on hand to provide resources and including information, representatives of Cherokee Nation's Talking Leaves Job Corps, Summer Youth Intern Program, Tribal Youth Council, College Resource Center, Health Services programs and several youth community and cultural enrichment programs. The SYEP fair will be held at the following locations:

- Tahlequah Community Building, 908 S. College Ave., on Tuesday, March 6, from 12 p.m. to 7 p.m.
- Jay Community Center, 429 S. Ninth St., on Wednesday, March 7, from 1 p.m. to 6 p.m.
- Claremore Cherokee Nation Career Services field office, 23205 S. Highway 66, on Thursday, March 8, from 1 p.m. to 6 p.m.

To be eligible for the Summer Youth Employment Program, applicants must reside within the boundaries of the Cherokee Nation, be 14 to 21 years old and be a citizen of federally recognized tribe. Male applicants ages 18 and older must be registered with Selective Service. Applicants ages 17 and younger must be accompanied by a parent or legal guardian during the application process. For more information or to find the nearest Cherokee Nation Career Services field office, email careerservices@ cherokee.org or call 918-453-

Chief Gregory E. Pyle, Assistant Chief Gary Batton and Tribal Councilmen James Frazier and Anthony Dillard congratulate Trevin Cole on his award-winning essay.

Choctaw student wins 2011 Native Writers essay contest

BRET MOSS

Choctaw Nation of Oklahoma

DURANT, Okla. - Trevin Cole of Coalgate has earned the 2011 Young Native American Writers Scholarship from the Holland and Knight Law Firm in Washington, D.C.

The "Young Native Writers Essay Contest" is a writing contest for Native American high school students and is designed to encourage young Native Americans to think about the critical issues impacting their tribal communities today. First-place winners received an all-expense paid trip to Washington D.C. to visit the National Museum of the American Indian and other prominent sites. The winners were accompanied by the teachers that inspired their entries into the contest. Winner also received special awards for display at their home or school. In addition, winners were given scholarships of $2,500 to be paid directly to the college or university of his or her choice.

Trevin wrote the 1,200-word essay and was notified the day after graduation he had won the national scholarship and would later go to Washington D.C. He, along with the teacher who inspired him to write the essay, Laura Clark, made the trip to Washington in July of 2011. He had dinner at the Kennedy Center every evening except one evening, when he went to Maryland and had dinner with the Holland and Knight Law Firm's CEO.

He spoke at the Smithsonian Institute in Washington, D.C., in front of many Congressmen and women as well as many political figures. He was awarded his scholarship and was the only person representing the Choctaw Nation.

Trevin is working on his bachelor's degree at East Central University where he received the Presidential Plus Scholarship and will later attend Harvard Law.

Trevin's parents Travis and Katherine Cole, grandparents are Johnny D. and Debbie Ward and Shirley Cole, and great-grandparents are the late Nell Prince and J.C. Ward, Doc and Pat Ingram.

Jessica Gann is interviewed by an area TV station.

Holland & Knight announce 2012 essay contest

The Holland & Knight Charitable challenges can be addressed. Hundreds Contest, which we organize each year in partnership with the Smithsonian Institution's National Museum of the American Indian. This essay contest for Native American high school students is designed to encourage young Native Americans to think about the most important issues affecting their tribal communities, as well as ways in which Foundation is proud to welcome entries of Native American high school for the Young Native Writers Essay students participate each year. While all participants receive a Certificate of Honor for submitting their essays and adding their voices to this important dialogue in Indian Country, the five first-place winners are awarded an all-expensespaid "Scholar Week" trip to Washington, D.C., accompanied by a teacher or mentor nominated by each winner, to visit the National Museum of the American Indian and other prominent Washington, D.C. sites. Each winner also receives a $2,500 college scholarship. Please help us spread the word about this year's contest by forwarding this email to groups and individuals who might be interested in submitting an essay. The deadline for submission is April 30, 2012. We look forward to reading this year's essays! For more details please visit: http://www. nativewriters.hklaw.com/

Student receives broadcasters' scholarship

ALAN BURTON

DURANT, Okla. Oklahoma Southeastern State University senior Jessica Ann Gann is the recipient of a scholarship from the Oklahoma Association of Broadcasters (OAB).

Gann, a communication (broadcasting emphasis) from Hugo, was one of six awardees statewide. The Oklahoma Association of Broadcasters Education Foundation offers annual scholarships to students majoring in broadcasting at Oklahoma colleges and universities.

Gann will receive the Mark Rawlings Scholarship at the OAB and Oklahoma Broadcasting Education Association Student Competition Awards ceremony at the Oklahoma History Center in Oklahoma City on March 8.

"I have been in radio for seven years," Gann said. "My plans are to still be involved with college radio stations across the state, radio seminars, become general manager of a radio station and still be a strong radio personality and voice talent producer.

"Even further than that, I would still want to be a radio producer in Nashville, Tenn."

March 8 will be a huge day for Gann. Along with the awards program, it is also Student Career Day and that will provide a great opportunity for those interested in broadcasting.

As an added bonus that makes the event more exciting, March 8 is also Gann's

A Family's Farewell To Darlena Louise Camp Overland

A beautiful, most vivid rainbow arched over Ponca City last week as prophecy of our beloved relative's eminent and final journey. The spectrum of gorgeous color could not have better depicted the persona of a remarkable woman.

After 76 years of giving joy, comfort and boundless love to her large family and countless friends, our precious one is making her final journey home. Darlena was born in 1935 at the Pawnee Indian Hospital to Woodrow Howard Camp and Jewell Faye McDonald Camp, a descendant of the McDonald and Yellowberry family. After attending numerous grade and middle schools, in 1950 Darlena enrolled at Haskell Institute in Lawrence, Kansas graduating in 1954. She was best known as "Jinx" at and was a popular cheerleader for all of her 4 year stay at Haskell. Never daunted, immediately after leaving Haskell, Darlena's love of music and dancing led her to enter the world of professional ballroom dancing, a vocation in which she excelled. First as a teacher trainee then qualifying to be an instructor in Seattle Wn., Darlena rapidly advanced through the Bronze and Silver standards eventually become an International Gold Medal dancer and teacher. Importantly, beloved by her pupils, she not only excelled at teaching, Darlena was known to her peers for her exquisite footwork and flamboyant style resulting in numerous television appearances. This was to remain her profession for many years eventually training teachers at Arthur Murray Dance Studios in Kansas City, Mo. San Francisco and Los Angeles.

Coming back to her Ponca Nation nearly 40 years ago, Darlena resided in the families ancestral home at White Eagle with her loving and much loved husband Tennyson "John" Overland. In her late "50's" Darlena surprised family by entering Bacone College where, once again, she excelled by being chosen Oklahoma Student Of The Year and was voted to wear the crown as Bacone's annual Powwow Princess. The rest of her days were occupied with being a doting grandmother and honoring her family and the Ponca traditions. Darlena was well known in the community as a person of unfailing generosity to anyone in need and, even with her limited resources, never turned anyone away. A good illustration was her delicious meatpies that she made and sold to supplent a meager income. When her competitors raised their prices, Darlena steadfastly refused to charge more, saying that her more destitute customers counted on her.

She was preceded in death by her parents and sons, Robert and Kelly.

She is survived by her husband Tennyson "John" Overland, one sister, Casey Camp-Horinek; four brothers, Craig, Cordell, Carter and Dwain; and her children, Craig Louis Silver and Amelia and Alex Fox.

She also leaves a large extended family with numerous nieces and nephews.

The fitting farewell for Darlena was held at the Ponca tribal cultural center on Monday, Feb. 28,2012. A huge gathering of family and friends from the both coasts as well as North and South Dakota plus many from all around Oklahoma came to honor Darlena at the traditional noon feast, services and interment.

We all love her deeply.

Eldest brother, Dwain Camp

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT / HELP WANTED

U.S. Department of the Interior Office of the Assistant Secretary-Indian Affairs

Job Vacancy

Deputy Assistant Secretary Management

Job Announcement Number: ASIA-SES-2012-PQ609381 Salary: $119, 554 - $165, 300 per annum Open Period: February 15, 2012 - March 30, 2012 Series & Grade: ES-340

Are you interested in working for a federal agency that is responsible for protecting and improving the trust assets of American Indian and Alaska Native tribes and individuals?

The U.S. Department of the Interior is searching for candidates to develop and oversee the implementation of policies that govern and facilitate the provision of services to American Indian and Alaska Native tribes and individuals by a federal agency. These administrative functions include financial management, strategic planning, workforce planning, human resources, information technology management and safety management.

This is a full-time permanant position with the Office of the Assistant Secretary-Indian Affairs located in Washignton, D.C.

For more information and application procedures, please visit www.usajobs.gov or contact Indian Affairs Human Resources Office at (202) 208-2825.

The U.S. Department of the Interior is an Equal Opportunity Employer Preference will be given to American Indians and Alaska Natives

CHEROKEE NATION®

Cherokee Nation whose headquarters are located in beautiful Tahlequah, Oklahoma is a national leader in Indian tribal governments and economic development in Oklahoma, We are a dynamic, progressive organization, which owns several business enterprises and administers a variety of services for the Cherokee people in Northeastern Oklahoma. Cherokee Nation offers an exceptional employee benefits plan with Comprehensive Health, Life, 401 (k), Holiday Pay, Sick Leave and Annual Leave.

CURRENT OPPORTUNITIES

POSITIONS CLOSE ON 3/7/2012 #5998 Medical Technologist/T/PT, Hastings Hospital

#5768 Medical Technologist/R/PT, Hastings Hospital #6105 Medical Technologist II/R/FT, Hastings Hospital #5745 Medical Technologist/R/FT, Hastings Hospital #5426 Inpatient RN/PRN/T/PT, Hastings Hospital #5125 Surgical Technician/T/PT, Hastings Hospital #6278 Child Welfare Assistant.

CWS I or CWS II/R/FT, Sallisaw #6217 Cook I/R/PT, Human Services, Nowata POSITION CLOSES 3/6/2012

#6219 Surgical Technician (Certified)/R/FT, Hastings Hospital

Interested applicants please apply at www.cherokee.org

Cherokee Nation Human Resources Department PO Box 948 Tahlequah, OK 74465 (918) 453-5292 or 453-5050

Employment will be contingent upon drug test results. Indian preference is considered.

Director of Human Services

The State of Oklahoma is seeking a Director for the Oklahoma Department of Human Services (OKDHS) who has a commitment to public service. OKDHS is responsible for Human Services Centers and other locations throughout Oklahoma's 77 counties, nine divisions in the central office and five institutions. OKDHS has more than 7,000 employees and an annual budget exceeding $2 billion in state and federal funding.

The Director is expected to plan, organize, direct and coordinate operations of all divisions and offices in accordance with the established mission, vision and values of the agency, and assures that all programs are administered according to federal and state rules and regulations. Program areas include Child Support Enforcement, Developmental Disabilities Services, Child Welfare, Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program, Temporary Aid to Needy Families, Aging Services, and related administration and service delivery systems.

The agency prefers candidates who hold a Master's degree and 10 or more years of experience in human services, including five years in managing and supervising an executive level human services staff. Salary will be commensurate with education and experience. The salary range is $155,000.00 - $185,000.00.

You may view the full job announcement at www.okdhs.org. To apply applicants must download an application at www.okdhs.org/library/forms/hrmd/. Email all documents to jobs@okdhs.org. Deadline for submitting applications is March 26, 2012 at 5:00 p.m.

> Announcement Number 12-S038U Oklahoma Department of Human Services P.O. Box 25352, Oklahoma City, OK 73125 www.okdhs.org • www.ok.gov

VP Academic Affairs

Rio Salado College, located in Tempe, Arizona, is known as the "college within everyone's reach" and represents a new model of higher education. The college transforms the learning experience through choice, access and flexibility, customized high quality learning design and personalized service and organizational responsiveness. We are searching for a VP of Academic Affairs to join our dynamic organization.

Serves as the Chief Academic Officer of a large, public, non-traditional community college.

Interested candidates should visit the website for full job description and required application, http://www. maricopa.edu/employees/divisions/ hr/jobs/current. Please reference job ID 12284. Deadline to apply is March 23, 2012. Applicants will not be able to access the on-line application system between 10:10 pm and 10:30 pm every

A Maricopa Community College (EEO/AA)

Registered Dietitian

The Ponca Tribe of Oklahoma is accepting applications for a part time or full time registered dietitian. Competitive wages, great atmosphere. The position is located at the White Eagle Health Center, Ponca City, Oklahoma. May send resume to White Eagle Health Center, 200 White Eagle Dr., Ponca City, OK 74601 Atten: Diabetes Program, or email to rayna. mckinnis@ihs.gov

The Pawnee Nation of Oklahoma is accepting ONLINE applications for the full-time, regular status position of Administrative Affairs Division Director. Please visit our website at http://www. pawneenation.org to apply.

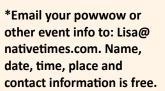

RN Director of Nursing with Long Term Care MGMT at Laguna Rainbow west of Albuquerque, NM. PRN RN and CNA opportunities too! Email resumes to jobs@pinonmgt.com. EOE/AA

Look for Native American Times on Facebook and Twitter!

MORE NEWS EVERY DAY | WWW.NATIVETIMES.COM

EVENTS

EVERY WEDNESDAY Kiowa class beginning in February at 6:30 pm, Oliphant Hall, Room 141, Tulsa University. Info call Sarah, (918) 445-5213

EVERY THURSDAY The Otoe-Missouria Substance Abuse and Behavioral Health Programs sponsor an open group for families touched by addiction from noon to 1 p.m. at the Otoe-Missouria Health Building. This is a confidential group. Call 580-723-4466 x252 or x262 for more information.

SECOND TUESDAY Cherokee Artists Association meeting at 202 E. 5th Street Tahlequah, Okla. Info: (918) 458-0008 or www. cherokeeartistsassociation. org

FOURTH THURSDAY Each month the American Indian Chamber of Commerce of Oklahoma - Eastern Chapter hosts a monthly luncheon at Bacone 3rd just west of Peoria). Call College, Muskogee, Okla. 11:30 a.m. at Benjamin Wacoche Hall. Please RSVP one week ahead of time. Phone: (918) 230-3759

EVERY 2ND SATURDAY Indian Taco Sales - from 11-2:30pm at OK Choctaw Tribal Alliance, 5320 S. Youngs Blvd, Oklahoma City www.okchoctaws.org

MON/WED AND THURS The Marble City Nutrition Center serves hot meals at the Marble City Community Center at 11:30 a.m. Meals are free to anyone over 50, but a small donation is suggested to help with the expense of the program. Marble City Nutrition Center, 711 N. Main, Marble City, Okla. Phone: (918) 775-

YOUTH COUNCIL The Native Nations Youth Council (NNYC) bimonthly meetings from 6:30pm - 8:30pm @ the Youth Services of Tulsa Activity Center (311 S. Madison - on to confirm location. Info Call: Chad Gilley (918) 382-2204 or nnyc@ihcrc.org

THROUGH MARCH 12 Free tobacco cessation course from 6 p.m. to 7 p.m. Whitney Nuttle (918) 762-3873 or Suzy Knife Chief (918) 762-2153.

MARCH-MAY Free beginner-level Cherokee language classes in communities throughout the tribe's jurisdiction starting in March. Once a week for ten weeks. For locations or to register, call Bill Andoe at 918-453-5151.

THROUGH MARCH 31 Tulsa Library's Festival of Words, a series of systemwide events to honor the achievements and celebrate the history of American Indians. For events and times, call the AskUs Hotline, 918-549-7323, or visit the library's website, www.tulsalibrary.org.

MARCH 10 Gospel Singing & Dinner at United Community Baptist Church, Pensacola, Okla. Potluck at 6, singing at 7pm. Info call pastor Mike Earp: 918-791-8203.

MARCH 17 Skate Jam Competition 10 am - dark at the "Skate Park Off Broadway," 105 Reynolds in Poteau Okla. www.nativeskateparks.com

MARCH 17 2011 OKC Princess Honor Dance at Heart of Oklahoma Expo Center, 1700 W. Independence, Shawnee, OK. Info contact Shirley Wapskineh 405-632-5227 or swapskineh@sbcglobal.net

MARCH 17 Wild Onion Dinner from 11 am til 3 pm at Haikey Chapel UMC, 8815 E 101st St, Tulsa.

MARCH 23 Miss Indian Oklahoma City

at 6:30 pm, 3801 SE 29th St. Del City, OK. Info contact Shirley Wapskineh 405-632-5227 or swapskineh@ sbcglobal.net

Competition & Performance

MARCH 31 "Play Golf Native America Day," a free program for families to experience a day of fun, from 10 a.m. - 1 p.m. at Cherokee Hills Golf Club located at Hard Rock Hotel & Casino Tulsa. Registration begins at 8:30 a.m. Info email Crystal Echo Hawk: crystal@nb3f.org

APRIL 6 Indian Taco Sale 11:00 AM - 2:00 PM at Norman First American UMC, 1950 East Beaumont Drive, Norman, Okla. Call Ahead for Speedy Service. Free Delivery on Orders of 10 or More (405) 321-5640

APRIL 7 Ponca Gourd Dance 9th Annual Spring Dance White Eagle Cultural Center 5 miles south of Ponca City, OK (580) 268-3313

APRIL 14 All Gourd Honor Dance for Micheal Tsotaddle at Red Buffalo Hall, Carnegie, OK, 2p.m. -? For more information call Darla Tsotaddle (405) 432-8377 or Mavis Tsotaddle (580) 654-1704.

MAY 4

Indian Taco Sale 11:00 AM - 2:00 PM at Norman First American UMC, 1950 East Beaumont Drive, Norman, Okla. Call Ahead for Speedy Service. Free Delivery on Orders of 10 or More (405) 321-5640

JUNE 1

Indian Taco Sale 11:00 AM - 2:00 PM at Norman First American UMC, 1950 East Beaumont Drive, Norman, Okla. Call Ahead for Speedy Service. Free Delivery on Orders of 10 or More (405) 321-5640

JUNE 8-10 Red Earth Festival, Cox Convention Center, Oklahoma City

Cherokee Arts Center announces

March class schedule

TAHLEQUAH, Okla. — The Cherokee Arts Center in Tahlequah has five upcoming art classes available in March for adults and youth interested in creating unique pieces of art that are relevant to Cherokee culture.

On Friday, March 16, Cherokee jewelry-maker Teri Rhoades will be teaching a precious metal clay class from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Precious metal clay is a puttylike mixture made of silver powder, water and a binder. Participants will learn how to mold, texture and layer PMC to make pendants, earrings and small sculptures. Once the pieces are fired, the water and binder are driven off to reveal a pure silver piece of art. Registration is $90 and a deposit of $50 is required to reserve a seat in the class. Students will also pay $45 for tools, which they will get to keep.

Cherokee

National

Treasure Jane Osti will be teaching three sculpture classes, including a youth pottery class, a sculpture class and a shield, platters and tiles class.

The youth pottery class will be held Tuesday, March 20 from 5:30 p.m. to 7:30 p.m. The class is $25 and participants must register by Friday, March 16.

The sculpture class is for adults who are interested in learning how to make traditional clay pottery. The two-session class takes place on Saturday, March 3, and Saturday, March 10, from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. Registration is $50 and participants must reserve a seat by Wednesday,

In shields, platters and tiles, Osti will teach participants how to craft unique Cherokee objects using a mixture of techniques. The two-part class is on Saturday, March 24 and Saturday, March 31 from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. The class is $50 and participants must register by Friday, March 16.

On Wednesday, March 21, Cherokee artist and lecturer America Meredith will give a two-hour presentation called "Cherokee Art History 101." During the talk, Meredith will cover a broad survey of Cherokee visual art from the 15th century to the 20th century. There is no cost to attend the lecture.

All classes are open to the public and held at the Cherokee Arts Center in Tahlequah, 212 S. Water St. For more information or to register for a class contact Valerie Diffee at 918-453-5728 or valerie-scraper@ cherokee.org.

Cherokee National Treasure Jane Osti sculpts a traditional Cherokee pot

Southern Plains hires new curator

ANADARKO, Okla.-The Department of the Interior recently hired Bambi Marie Allen to be the new curator for the federal Southern Plains Indian Museum, based in Anadarko, Oklahoma. Allen is of Comanche and Kiowa descent.

Allen's background begins with her lifelong involvement in Comanche and Kiowa culture, being a part of the Ware and Pewo families of the Kiowa and Comanche tribes, respectively. Her professional background includes working as an artist and coordinating cultural classes and presentations throughout the state of Oklahoma. Allen has also served as the cultural specialist for the Comanche National Museum of Lawton, Okla.

The Southern Plains Indian Museum is one of three of the Department of Interior's Indian Arts and Crafts Board Museums. The Southern Plains Museum was founded in 1948 and has been a center for emerging Southern Plains American Indian artists. The tribes in which the Southern Plains Indian Museum focuses include the Kiowa, Comanche, Apache, Fort Sill Apache, Wichita, Delaware, Caddo, Cheyenne and Arapaho tribes. The other two regional museums of the Indian Arts and Crafts Board include the Sioux Indian Museum in Rapid City, S.D. and the Museum of the Plains Indian in Browning, Mont.

Allen's plans for the museum include increasing involvement with local communities, boosting the volume of visitors, and opening the doors to more diverse art shows.

"Education and cultural preservation is the only way to keep our heritage alive," says Allen. "By continuing community involvement, interest in the arts or teaching American Indian language, we can assure that our children's children will know what we are, instead of what we were."

The Southern Plains Indian Museum is located at 715 E. Central, Anadarko. Its hours of operation are 9 a.m.-5 p.m. Tues.-Sat. For artists interested in being a part of the Southern Plains Indian Museum, call (405) 247-6221.

Comanche Museum wins regional ADDY

LAWTON, Okla. - The Wichita Falls chapter of the American Advertising Federation (AAF) has honored the Comanche National Museum and Cultural Center (CNMCC) with a regional ADDY Award. CNMCC took home a bronze award in the Broadcast/ Electronic Category for its television commercial The Bison: American Icon.

The annual awards showcase Texoma's best advertising in print, broadcast, television and interactive media. The ADDY Awards is the advertising industry's largest and most representative competition, attracting over 60,000 entries every year in local ADDY competitions. The mission of the ADDY competition is to recognize and reward creative excellence in the art of advertising.

"This award is a huge honor for our museum," said Phyllis Wahahrockah-Tasi, CNMCC Executive Director. "It shows that we are among the best when it comes to the overall marketing of our museum. Unfortunately, we can't just open the doors and expect visitors to come. We have to tell them who we are and show them what we are about. Television advertising provides us with a wonderful opportunity to do just that. It's our chance to entice the public into finding out more about us. The fact that our hard work is not going unnoticed is humbling. An award such as this is a nice validation and confirms that our approach to marketing works. Our museum is the heartbeat of our Comanche Nation. We want our Comanche people to be proud of the museum and even prouder when they hear us tell the local communities about it," Wahahrockah-Tasi said. CNMCC's marketing spearheaded by Executive Director Phyllis Wahahrockah-Tasi and Education and Public Programs Manager Candy Morgan in collaboration with DesignWorks Group Inc. in Wichita Falls.

ALL AGES WELCOME. BRING YOUR OWN CHAIRS. NO OUTSIDE COOLERS, FOOD OR DRINKS ALLOWED.

SATURDAY, APRIL 28

PAWHUSKA SATURDAY, MAY 12

BARTLESVILLE FRIDAY, MAY 4

SAND SPRINGS SATURDAY, MAY 19

osagecasinos.com

(918) 699-7777 | Find us on Facebook!

- Court hearing Fighting Sioux case
- Hebrew and the Indigenous language revival
- Sequoyah High announces top students

TODAY'S INDEPENDENT INDIAN NEWS

- A FREE PUBLICATION

WWW.NATIVETIMES.COM

VOLUME 18 + ISSUE 11

PUBLISHED WEEKLY

MARCH 16, 2012

Chiefs bring back Intertribal-Council

TAHLEQUAH, Okla.— After going inactive for several years, the Inter-Tribal Council of the Five Civilized Tribes is making a comeback.

During the recent winter session of the National Congress of American Indians, Cherokee Nation Principal Chief Bill John Baker met with leaders of the Muscogee (Creek), Chickasaw, Choctaw and Seminole nations to discuss resurrecting the dormant organization.

"We are a major force in Oklahoma," Baker said. "It makes sense that we work together whenever possible to advance the needs of our people and communities."

Established in 1949, the Inter-Tribal Council of the Five Civilized Tribes was established

George Tiger

promote positive relationships among five of Oklahoma's largest tribes while acknowledging the need for a united front from tribal leaders on a variety of issues, including sovereignty, health care, water rights, housing and elder care.

Among the revitalized council's short-term goals are bringing assistant

Secretary of Interior Larry Echo Hawk to Oklahoma to meet with officials from the more than 20 tribes headquartered in eastern Oklahoma.

As a first step to launching the revived organization, the five leaders selected Muscogee (Creek) principal chief George Tiger as president Baker as vice president.

"With all of the hotbutton issues going on in Indian Country today, I am honored that my fellow chiefs have asked Chief Tiger and I to take the lead on re-instituting the inter-tribal council," Baker said. "Chief Tiger has demonstrated his commitment to make this organization work and I share that enthusiasm."

RICK BOWMER / ASSOCIATED PRESS PHOTO

Brenda Frank, State Board of Education board member and a Nez Perce tribal member, makes remarks at the State Board of Education meeting Thursday, March 8, 2012, in Salem, Ore. The State Board of Education heard testimony Thursday on Native American mascots and nicknames in Oregon's public high schools. The board could eventually vote to ban those names. Board officials say 15 public high schools in Oregon have

Oregon considers banning Native American mascots

JONATHAN J. COOPER Associated Press

SALEM, Ore. (AP) - Angry at a halftime show depicting a bare-chested Native American boy with a target painted on his skin, Che Butler set out to force the Molalla Indians and 14 other Oregon high schools to stop using mascots and nicknames that depict American Indians.

Oregon's Board of Education on March 8 took up Butler's plea for the second time, rejoining a longstanding national debate about racial tolerance and school traditions five years after issuing a nonbinding recommendation that schools stop using Native

American regalia. "We live off honor and respect. We're taught to respect all human beings and things on Earth, and live in harmony with them," said Butler, 22, a member of the Siletz tribe of western Oregon. "That's all I ask of this board and this state, show us the respect, us Native people."

The board's proposal support of Butler and his family, who were also traumatized by the halftime show about six years ago. It also has raised just as much passion from others - some of them Native American - who say logos and mascots honor Native Americans' heritage.

For every person like Butler, there's also someone like Jeff Williams, a fellow member of the Siletz tribe and a proud supporter of the Philomath Warriors.

"You want to get rid of the Native American mascots, you're saying Natives are a shameful part of American history," Williams told the education board.

Board members said that they will consider adopting a rule outlawing depictions of American Indians in school athletics. The exact rules have yet to be written, but officials say they'll be released this month followed by public comment. The board could not formally enact a rule earlier than May.

Theconcepthastheenthusiastic support of board Chair Brenda Frank, herself a member of the Nez Pierce tribe.

"This is just another block that we need to remove," Frank said.

Since the 1970s, more than 600 high school and college teams have dropped such nicknames, including 20 in Oregon, but no professional sports franchise has done so, according to a report by the Oregon Department of Education.

See MASCOTS Continued on Page 4

Tribes encourage support for Violence Against Women Act

SUZANNE GAMBOA Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) -American Indian leaders say they want support from two more Republican senators for the Violence Against Women Act and they are making a big push to muster support for the bill, which includes measures to specifically help American Indian and Alaska Native victims.

As of last Tuesday, the legislation has 58 supporters in the Senate, including its sponsor Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt. Although that means a majority of senators support the act, it lacks the 60 votes needed to end a filibuster should one be launched if the bill reaches the Senate floor.

Tribal leaders' search for additional supporters comes as heightened debate over insurance coverage for contraceptives has led Democrats try to make women's rights an electionyear issue. It was unknown whether that debate would provide momentum for the legislation considered by many to be a landmark law in protecting women.

Dossett, attorney for the National Congress of American Indians. "Once we get the 60 votes it will be clear to the (Senate) majority leader (Harry Reid, D-Nev.) that he has the votes to move it to the

At a legislative summit of the National Congress of American Indians March 6, tribal leaders were given a list of senators, all Republicans, who represent states with reservations and tribal communities. The tribal leaders were

See ACT Continued on Page 3

Bonuses lead to removal of elected Navajo leaders

FELICIA FONSECA Associated Press

FLAGSTAFF, Ariz. (AP) - A day after voters in one of the Navajo Nation's communities approved a local sales tax, its elected officials rewarded themselves with thousands of dollars in bonus money. The payments came on the heels of a Christmas bonus and preceded bonuses for other projects.

In all, the handful of officials that served on Tuba City's Council of Naat'aani, or council of leaders, received more than $80,000 in bonuses from late 2009 to 2011. As a result, ethics cases were brought against them by the larger tribal government, stripping four of the five of their jobs and requiring that all five pay back the money.

Charlene Nez, secretary-treasurer for the Council of Naat'aanii, said the officials knew it was wrong to take chapter funds in the form of bonuses.

Tribal ethics investigators and justice officials said elected officials are not supposed to be compensated stipends meetings and legitimate travel. Investigators alleged that the officials engaged in favoritism and put themselves above the needs of the community, where the annual per capita income of $15,000 is less than the bonuses paid to individual leaders.

However, a lawyer for one of the deposed officeholders said the tribal law that gave reservation communities increased authority over local finances is vague and doesn't prohibit the payments.

"I don't agree at all with startingwiththepresumption that bonus equals bad." said David Jordan, representing

See NAVAJO Continued on Page X

Store owner: Economy driving beer sales down

Alcohol sales have plummeted in a tiny Nebraska town faulted for selling beer to members of an American Indian tribe plagued by alcoholism.

GRANT SCHULTE Associated Press

LINCOLN, Neb. (AP) -

While the town's critics hailed the drop in sales and credited increased law enforcement and more alcohol-related treatment programs at the neighboring Pine Ridge Indian Reservation, a store owner in Whiteclay said business has fallen off because the tribal government, which provides most of the jobs in the area, has been struggling financially. New data obtained by The Associated Press from the Nebraska Liquor Control Commission show the number of cases of beer and malt liquor sold in the dusty, 11-person town fell 13 percent in 2011. Sales had been climbing for years, from about 117,500 cases of beer in 2007 to 206,600 in

"There's just no money," said Victor Clark, who owns a small grocery story in Whiteclay that doesn't sell alcohol. "The tribe has no money. We're seeing programs now that don't have money. All sorts of things, and it's all trickling down to the individuals."

Tribal Council member Donn Fire Thunder said the tribal government has made cuts recently to its housing program and police department because of budget shortfalls, which he

See BEER Continued on Page 4

- Court hearing Fighting Sioux case
- Hebrew and the Indigenous language revival
- Sequoyah High announces top students

TODAY'S INDEPENDENT INDIAN NEWS

- A FREE PUBLICATION

WWW.NATIVETIMES.COM

VOLUME 18 + ISSUE 11

PUBLISHED WEEKLY

MARCH 16, 2012

Chiefs bring back Intertribal-Council

TAHLEQUAH, Okla.— After going inactive for several years, the Inter-Tribal Council of the Five Civilized Tribes is making a comeback.

During the recent winter session of the National Congress of American Indians, Cherokee Nation Principal Chief Bill John Baker met with leaders of the Muscogee (Creek), Chickasaw, Choctaw and Seminole nations to discuss resurrecting the dormant organization.

"We are a major force in Oklahoma," Baker said. "It makes sense that we work together whenever possible to advance the needs of our people and communities."

Established in 1949, the Inter-Tribal Council of the Five Civilized Tribes was established

George Tiger

promote positive relationships among five of Oklahoma's largest tribes while acknowledging the need for a united front from tribal leaders on a variety of issues, including sovereignty, health care, water rights, housing and elder care.

Among the revitalized council's short-term goals are bringing assistant

Secretary of Interior Larry Echo Hawk to Oklahoma to meet with officials from the more than 20 tribes headquartered in eastern Oklahoma.

As a first step to launching the revived organization, the five leaders selected Muscogee (Creek) principal chief George Tiger as president Baker as vice president.

"With all of the hotbutton issues going on in Indian Country today, I am honored that my fellow chiefs have asked Chief Tiger and I to take the lead on re-instituting the inter-tribal council," Baker said. "Chief Tiger has demonstrated his commitment to make this organization work and I share that enthusiasm."

RICK BOWMER / ASSOCIATED PRESS PHOTO

Brenda Frank, State Board of Education board member and a Nez Perce tribal member, makes remarks at the State Board of Education meeting Thursday, March 8, 2012, in Salem, Ore. The State Board of Education heard testimony Thursday on Native American mascots and nicknames in Oregon's public high schools. The board could eventually vote to ban those names. Board officials say 15 public high schools in Oregon have

Oregon considers banning Native American mascots

JONATHAN J. COOPER Associated Press

SALEM, Ore. (AP) - Angry at a halftime show depicting a bare-chested Native American boy with a target painted on his skin, Che Butler set out to force the Molalla Indians and 14 other Oregon high schools to stop using mascots and nicknames that depict American Indians.

Oregon's Board of Education on March 8 took up Butler's plea for the second time, rejoining a longstanding national debate about racial tolerance and school traditions five years after issuing a nonbinding recommendation that schools stop using Native

American regalia. "We live off honor and respect. We're taught to respect all human beings and things on Earth, and live in harmony with them," said Butler, 22, a member of the Siletz tribe of western Oregon. "That's all I ask of this board and this state, show us the respect, us Native people."

The board's proposal support of Butler and his family, who were also traumatized by the halftime show about six years ago. It also has raised just as much passion from others - some of them Native American - who say logos and mascots honor Native Americans' heritage.

For every person like Butler, there's also someone like Jeff Williams, a fellow member of the Siletz tribe and a proud supporter of the Philomath Warriors.

"You want to get rid of the Native American mascots, you're saying Natives are a shameful part of American history," Williams told the education board.

Board members said that they will consider adopting a rule outlawing depictions of American Indians in school athletics. The exact rules have yet to be written, but officials say they'll be released this month followed by public comment. The board could not formally enact a rule earlier than May.

Theconcepthastheenthusiastic support of board Chair Brenda Frank, herself a member of the Nez Pierce tribe.

"This is just another block that we need to remove," Frank said.

Since the 1970s, more than 600 high school and college teams have dropped such nicknames, including 20 in Oregon, but no professional sports franchise has done so, according to a report by the Oregon Department of Education.

See MASCOTS Continued on Page 4

Tribes encourage support for Violence Against Women Act

SUZANNE GAMBOA Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) -American Indian leaders say they want support from two more Republican senators for the Violence Against Women Act and they are making a big push to muster support for the bill, which includes measures to specifically help American Indian and Alaska Native victims.

As of last Tuesday, the legislation has 58 supporters in the Senate, including its sponsor Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt. Although that means a majority of senators support the act, it lacks the 60 votes needed to end a filibuster should one be launched if the bill reaches the Senate floor.

Tribal leaders' search for additional supporters comes as heightened debate over insurance coverage for contraceptives has led Democrats try to make women's rights an electionyear issue. It was unknown whether that debate would provide momentum for the legislation considered by many to be a landmark law in protecting women.

Dossett, attorney for the National Congress of American Indians. "Once we get the 60 votes it will be clear to the (Senate) majority leader (Harry Reid, D-Nev.) that he has the votes to move it to the

At a legislative summit of the National Congress of American Indians March 6, tribal leaders were given a list of senators, all Republicans, who represent states with reservations and tribal communities. The tribal leaders were

See ACT Continued on Page 3

Bonuses lead to removal of elected Navajo leaders

FELICIA FONSECA Associated Press

FLAGSTAFF, Ariz. (AP) - A day after voters in one of the Navajo Nation's communities approved a local sales tax, its elected officials rewarded themselves with thousands of dollars in bonus money. The payments came on the heels of a Christmas bonus and preceded bonuses for other projects.

In all, the handful of officials that served on Tuba City's Council of Naat'aani, or council of leaders, received more than $80,000 in bonuses from late 2009 to 2011. As a result, ethics cases were brought against them by the larger tribal government, stripping four of the five of their jobs and requiring that all five pay back the money.

Charlene Nez, secretary-treasurer for the Council of Naat'aanii, said the officials knew it was wrong to take chapter funds in the form of bonuses.

Tribal ethics investigators and justice officials said elected officials are not supposed to be compensated stipends meetings and legitimate travel. Investigators alleged that the officials engaged in favoritism and put themselves above the needs of the community, where the annual per capita income of $15,000 is less than the bonuses paid to individual leaders.

However, a lawyer for one of the deposed officeholders said the tribal law that gave reservation communities increased authority over local finances is vague and doesn't prohibit the payments.

"I don't agree at all with startingwiththepresumption that bonus equals bad." said David Jordan, representing

See NAVAJO Continued on Page X

Store owner: Economy driving beer sales down

Alcohol sales have plummeted in a tiny Nebraska town faulted for selling beer to members of an American Indian tribe plagued by alcoholism.

GRANT SCHULTE Associated Press

LINCOLN, Neb. (AP) -

While the town's critics hailed the drop in sales and credited increased law enforcement and more alcohol-related treatment programs at the neighboring Pine Ridge Indian Reservation, a store owner in Whiteclay said business has fallen off because the tribal government, which provides most of the jobs in the area, has been struggling financially. New data obtained by The Associated Press from the Nebraska Liquor Control Commission show the number of cases of beer and malt liquor sold in the dusty, 11-person town fell 13 percent in 2011. Sales had been climbing for years, from about 117,500 cases of beer in 2007 to 206,600 in

"There's just no money," said Victor Clark, who owns a small grocery story in Whiteclay that doesn't sell alcohol. "The tribe has no money. We're seeing programs now that don't have money. All sorts of things, and it's all trickling down to the individuals."

Tribal Council member Donn Fire Thunder said the tribal government has made cuts recently to its housing program and police department because of budget shortfalls, which he

See BEER Continued on Page 4

Judge: Inmates can pursue sweat lodge lawsuit

HELENA, Mont. (AP) – Five Native American inmates who filed a lawsuit over strip searches required before and after they participated in religious sweat lodge ceremonies at a private prison in Montana can pursue part of their case, but cannot seek monetary damages, a federal judge has ruled.

"Plaintiffs have alleged sufficient facts to pursue their claims regarding the strip searches, the alleged prohibition of essential sacred items, and one alleged retaliatory act," U.S. District Judge Charles Lovell wrote.

However, Lovell ruled that the plaintiffs failed to show how the prison substantially burdened their religious exercise, so they can't seek monetary damages from the Department of Corrections or Corrections Corporation of America, which operates Crossroads Correctional Center in Shelby.

Lovell referred the case to U.S. Magistrate Keith Strong for a settlement conference, the Independent Record reported Sunday.

"More cooperation between the parties will go a long way toward achieving successful continuation of this ceremony in the prisons," Lovell wrote.

The lawsuit was filed after the Montana Human Rights Commission rejected a discrimination complaint filed by John Knows His Gun, Darryl Lewis Frost, Jason Chiefstick, William Gopher and Allen Potter. Knows His Gun and Chiefstick are now on probation, according to a Department of Corrections website.

The Department of Corrections and Crossroads Correctional Center filed motions asking Lovell to dismiss the case. He heard arguments on Feb. 23 and issued his ruling on Feb. 29.

The plaintiffs were incarcerated at the private prison in Shelby in 2008 and 2009. The men claim that in 2008, before and after sweat lodge ceremonies, the participants were subjected to "en masse" strip searches. On some occasions, the strip searches were done in a gymnasium with video cameras that at least one female guard monitored.

Prison officials said they suspected the ceremonies were being used to move contraband, although none was ever found.

Attorney Ron Waterman has said the contraband suspicions were nothing more than a pretext to discriminate against the inmates.

"Plaintiffs claim the experience was 'extremely degrading and dehumanizing' and caused the number of inmates attending sweat lodge ceremonies to decline," Lovell wrote. "Thus, plaintiffs have adequately alleged that the strip searches forced them to choose between abandoning their religious exercise or being subjected to an 'extremely degrading and dehumanizing' experience."

Lovell said the plaintiffs may also go forward with their claim that they were prohibited from using smudge tobacco, antlers, herbs and other sacred materials, but he noted the prison isn't required to provide the materials.

a pilot program that reduced crime on four reservations by a combined 35 percent; and, sweeping trust reform. Public Sector Leadership Award

- American University -

Washington Internships for Native Students (WINS)

Students (WINS) program offers Native students an invaluable opportunity to develop professionally while living, studying, and interning

in Washington, DC. WINS plays a critical role in building a pipeline of young Native leaders who are prepared to lead Indian Country in the new era of nation-to-nation relations. Since 1994, over 900 students representing over 80 tribes have participated in WINS, and WINS alumni now hold key positions in and myriad national Native government federal organizations, for Washington

Native

Program The

Internships

NATIVE American Times

Publisher & Editor
LISA SNELL
editor@nativetimes.com

Contributing Writers
Dana Attocknie
Wesley Mahan
Karen Shade

Advertising Sales
KATHLEEN ROBERTSON
LISA SNELL
ROB WALTON
advertising@nativetimes.com

Distribution
SHELBY HICKS
STEVE LACY
WESLEY MAHAN
MICHAEL MARRIS
KATHLEEN ROBERTSON
BRENDA SLAUGHTER

The Native American Times, formerly the Oklahoma Indian Times, is published weekly (except the last week of the year) by Lisa Hicks Snell. Mailing address is PO Box 411 Tahlequah, OK 74465. All the contents within the Native American Times are copyrighted material. Any reproduction, redistribution without the written consent of the NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES is strictly prohibited.

Each week's issue is available for free download online at: www.nativetimes.com

Subscription rates: $65.00 for fifty-two issues, $32.50 for twenty-six issues, or $16.25 for thirteen issues. A single copy is $1.25 (Rates are for postage and handling) Send check or money order to:

NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES Attn: Subscriptions P.O. Box 411 Tahlequah, OK 74465-0411

> Phone: (918) 708-5838 Fax: (888) 689-4873

Postmaster: Send Change of Address Form 579 to: NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES P.O. Box 411, Tahlequah, OK 74465

WWW.NATIVETIMES.COM
- News from the crossroads of Indian Country

NCAI announces 2012 Indian Country Leadership Awards

Congressman Don Young; Larry Echo Hawk, Assistant Secretary Indian Affairs; American University WINS Program and Dr. Eddie Brown named.

WASHINGTON - The National Congress American Indians (NCAI) has announced the recipients of the organization's prestigious Indian Country Leadership Awards. Congressman Don Young (R - AK) Chair of the House Subcommittee on Indian and Alaska Native Affairs, Larry Echo Hawk - Assistant Secretary for Indian Affairs, the American University's Washington Internships for Native Students (WINS) program, and the accomplished Dr. Eddie F. Brown, Professor, Arizona State University will honored at the organization's Indian Country Leadership Award Banquet held during 2012 NCAI Executive Council Winter Session.

The organization's Indian Country Leadership Awards celebrate the outstanding contributions of individuals and organizations to Indian Country in four categories: Congressional Leadership Award, Native American Leadership Award, Governmental Leadership Award, and Public Sector Leadership Award.

NCAI, the nation's oldest, largest, and most representative American Indian and Alaska Native organization, will present the awards during a Tuesday evening award reception held in conjunction with its Executive Council Winter Session in Washington, D.C.

Congressional Leadership Award – Congressman Don Young Representative Young has been a champion for Indian Country for 20 terms in the United States House of Representatives. Representative Young knows tribes are fully capable of self $determination \, and \, he \, supports \,$ sovereignty in his legislative efforts on tribal priorities from energy to healthcare. In the 112th Congress, Representative Young became the Chairman of the Subcommittee on Indian and Alaska Native Affairs and his leadership has been critical to enabling tribes to fully pursue economic development.

Native American Leadership Award – Dr. Eddie F. Brown, Professor, Arizona State University Dr. Brown's career has spanned the highest levels of tribal, state, and federal administration and universities. He has developed key bipartisan policy, conducted research, and informed social work practice to benefit Native governments. His endeavors ensure tribal sovereignty and strengthen the sustainability of tribal nations. He has served as the Co-Chair of the NCAI Policy Research Center's Advisory Board since it was founded in 2003 and he continues to be a powerful advocate for Indian Country.

families, communities, and

Governmental Leadership Award - Larry Echo Hawk -Assistant Secretary for Indian Affairs As the longest serving Assistant Secretary for Indian Affairs in over a decade, Larry Echo Hawk's commitment restructuring federal relations with Native nations has resulted in considerable improvements in the nationto-nation relationship. Highlights of Mr. Echo Hawk's accomplishments include the historic $3.4 billion Cobell Settlement; $1 billion in water settlements; passage of the Tribal Law & Order Act and implementation of > Perrelli, associate U.S. Attorney General. Perrelli leaves the Department of Justice Friday. He is credited with working to improve public safety on tribal reservations.

Perrelli said he's not leaving the department because he is tired of the work, but because his wife just had twins and they now have four boys under 6. He said he would continue to fight to end sexual assault and violence.

Native American hiring preference?

Advertise to Native Americans!
FREE ONLINE with PRINT BUY
E-mail your ad for a quote to
lisa@nativetimes.com

ACT

Continued from Page

told to press those senators to support the bill during meetings this week.

One of the provisions in the act would allow tribes to prosecute offenders who are not American Indian or Alaska Native when their victims are and the violence happens on a reservation.

The House has not taken action on any similar or companion legislation.

The act, first approved in 1994, expired last September. Although the act has been reauthorized several times, this year's update ran into some Republican opposition in committee. A few senators criticized provisions regarding visas for immigrant victims of violence, language specifying services for gay and transgender victims.

The measures also would give tribes authority to prosecute non-Indians who commit violence against American Indian women, which raises concern among some opponents about giving tribal courts increased power over defendants who are not tribal members. In 1978, the Supreme Court ruled that tribes do not have authority over people who are not American Indian, even when the crime happens on a reservation and involves a member of a tribe.

"They ruined that bill as far as I'm concerned," Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, said. "They added things I can't support."

American Indian and Alaska Native women are 2.5 times more likely than other U.S. women to be battered or raped, according to the National Congress of American Indians. Many are domestic violence victims whose abusers and assailants are not Native American.

Dossett said that has prevented tribal officials from prosecuting abusers to help prevent repeat violence. Often the crimes are not serious enough for the federal government to step in. Violence often must escalate before a perpetrator is prosecuted.

Sen. Lisa Murkowski, R-Alaska, said she's aware of the concerns raised by her fellow GOP colleagues about tribal jurisdiction over non-Indians. "I'm hopeful this does not derail this legislation. This is too important for us," she tribal leaders' list interviewed outside Senate chambers last week did not immediately know where they stood on the legislation.

Other senators on the

Other issues raised at the summit included ongoing negotiations over the transportation bill, now on the floor in the Senate.

Jefferson Keel, president of the National Congress of American Indians, urged summit attendees to remain united in a goal to get increased spending on transportation, important for construction of roads on reservations and in tribal communities.

"In an environment of tight federal budgets some people expect us to become divided rather than maintain unity," Keel said.

Tribal officials also got a chance to bid farewell to Tom

Metal Roofing & Siding

Professional Construction and Home Repairs

Free Estimates

Charles Snell 918-507-2902

Native American Contractor

We proudly offer an array of services, from general dentistry to sedation, dental implants, and cosmetic dentistry - all designed expressly to meet our patient's changing needs. With four general dentists and four hygienists, we can maintain your oral health for a lifetime all at one location.

We Accept Contract Health & Sooner Care

We serve patients in the Drumright, Cushing, Stillwater, Stroud, Ponca City, and surrounding areas with personalized service and exemplary care. Call for your appointment today.

918-352-3312 or Toll Free 877-RH Melton drumrightdentalcenter.com

SUPERNAW'S OKLAHOMA INDIAN SUPPLY

Wholesale items for Pow Wow Vendors
Bone chokers $20 per dozen

Handmade lamp worked glass bead bracelets $1.00 each Glass bead stretch bracelets 5 for $2.50

12 Necklaces: Chain w/ pendant and display pad $13.50 36 inch gemstone chip strands Reg. 3.95 now $2.00 36 inch turquoise chip strands Reg. 7.95 now $4.00

Always our regular stock of seed beads from 16/0 to 8/0, findings, leather, hackles, fluffs and thousands of other supply items.

Remember we've moved around the corner 109 North Broadway, Skiatook, OK 74070

New Dealers Cash or Credit Card Only.

Open Noon-6pm Mon. thru Fri. • 10am-5m Sat. • Closed Sun.

Local: 396-1713-Countrywide Toll Free 1-888-720-1967

Website: www.supernaw.com • Email: Supernaw@flash.net

5 indicted for selling alcohol on dry reservation

The indictments are from incidents that took place in December in Wanblee, Porcupine and the village of Pine Ridge.

KRISTI EATON Associated Press

SIOUX FALLS, S.D. (AP) reservation home to a tribe and a $100,000 fine. suing some of the nation's Spotted Elk Sr., Florine are knowingly contributing to and Julia Marie Lamont were the Pine Ridge reservation. indicted Feb. 22 on counts of possessing and dispensing in the U.S. District Court of liquor, said Brendan Johnson, U.S. Attorney for the District in damages for the cost of of South Dakota, in a news health care, social services and release. All five pleaded not child rehabilitation caused by guilty before U.S. Magistrate chronic alcoholism on the Judge Veronica L. Duffy two reservation, located in some result of a joint operation department listed Poor Bear's - A federal grand jury has days later. Separate trials of the poorest counties in the between the Oglala Sioux blood-alcohol content as .306, indicted five people for have been scheduled for May possessing and selling liquor 1. Each faces a maximum on a dry American Indian penalty of one year in prison beer stores in Whiteclay, Neb., Office of Justice Services, largest beer makers, the U.S. sued several beer makers, about a dozen residents but reservation. Attorney's Office announced including Anheuser-Busch sold nearly 5 million cans of

Worldwide Marnie Water, Darrell MillerCoors LLC, saying they

The lawsuit, filed last month indictments are related.

and beer in 2010, according to the five individuals were either federal lawsuit.

Mark Salter, spokesman rang unanswered. Chipps, Merle Leighton Sr., alcohol-related problems on for the U.S. Attorney's Office, > Court records show the that took place in December obstructing the village of Pine Ridge.

Tribe's police department and The lawsuit also targets four the Bureau of Indian Affairs, a town near the reservation's Salter said. The operation was drinking and said he The Oglala Sioux Tribe has border. Whiteclay has only targeted "bootlegging" on the anticipates the charge being Phone listings for the hearing next week.

unavailable, not working or

Alcoholism is a rampant said he was unsure if the five problem on the reservation. Oglala Sioux Vice President Tom Poor Bear was arrested Nebraska, seeks $500 million indictments are from incidents Feb. 19 on a charge of government in Wanblee, Porcupine and function in an alcohol-related incident. The police report The indictments were the from the Oglala Sioux police nearly quadruple the legal limit for driving a car.

> Poor Bear denied he dropped at a preliminary

Court hearing Fighting Sioux case

DALE WETZEL Associated Press

BISMARCK, N.D. (AP) - Blocking a vote on the University of North Dakota's Fighting Sioux sports nickname would be an affront to the spiritual beliefs of two Sioux tribes, a state Supreme Court filing by supporters of the nickname asserts.

On March 7, the high court scheduled arguments in the Board of Higher Education's lawsuit over the nickname for March 15. The suit asks the Supreme Court to stop a June vote on a law that directs the university to continue using "Fighting Sioux" and a logo with the profile of an American Indian warrior.

The legal fight includes the board, Secretary of State Al Jaeger, the North Dakota

LegislatureandtheCommittee Understanding Respect, which represents the nickname's supporters.

Nickname advocates have filed petitions to put the law to a public vote in June. The Board of Higher Education is asking the Supreme Court to block the vote and declare that the law illegally weakens the board's power to manage North Dakota's system of 11 public colleges.

The NCAA considers the nickname offensive, and the university has been attempting to retire it. When UND's women's hockey team makes its first appearance in the NCAA playoffs against Minnesota, the squad will wear jerseys without the nickname or the logo.

Reed Soderstrom, attorney for the nickname's supporters, argued in a court filing that the Supreme Court should not rule until a vote is held. If the law is affirmed, the Board of Higher Education may resume its arguments about whether it is unconstitutional, he said in his brief.

The lawsuit "is speculative and not ripe for this court to assert its jurisdiction," Soderstrom wrote. (Board of Higher Education) has taken a 'what-if' scenario and brought it before the court."

Soderstrom's filing says the university's right to use the Fighting Sioux nickname was given by North Dakota's Standing Rock and Spirit Lake tribes in a 1969 religious ceremony, during which then-university president George Starcher was given an Indian headdress.

The filing includes a sworn statement by Christopher Buddy Alberts, 73, who is identified as a Spirit Lake Sioux tribal elder. The statement says the naming "deep ceremony had spiritual implications and consequences" and "cannot be taken away, as a matter of our Sioux religion and tradition."

Soderstrom argues that to drop the nickname would violate the tribes' right to religious freedom, as spelled out in the North Dakota Constitution.

"To dismiss the sacred ceremony of 1969 is to dismiss the Sioux people, and to dismiss the tradition and ceremonies of the Sioux people," Soderstrom wrote.

The secretary of state's court filing, written by Fargo attorneys Sarah Andrews Herman and Matthew Kipp, says Jaeger's authority over the referendum petition is limited to determining whether it was put together properly and whether it has enough valid signatures to qualify for the ballot.

council Vice President Robert authority for the community. letter, she said she suspects met with resistance. Yazzie on appeal.

communities have earned oversight from the central government.

Another perk for certified chapters is that they can designate a sales tax above the tribe's standard 4 percent. Tuba City voters approved a 6 percent sales tax on Jan. 12, 2010, an extra two percent that has brought in millions to the community that borders the Hopi reservation and sits along a highway well-traveled by tourists in northern Arizona. The next day, Max Goldtooth, Yazzie, Helen Herbert, Charlene Nez and Jimmy Holgate got checks for $3,000 each.

A week later, they all received four they would receive for frozen and that her office be attempts to get the chapter to reporting

The Tuba City Chapter was coming and might not have finances stretched beyond the Auditor General now is one of the first to become become public knowledge if bonuses paid to officials to the conducting a special review of certified under the tribe's not for Nez. Even though she administrative staff. Local Governance Act, which accepted the money, she said gives local communities the she was building a case against authority to issue business and herself and the others because home site leases, contract with of the guilt she felt. When outside attorneys and develop she refused to sign checks as local ordinances. Since it secretary-treasurer, one of two was passed in 1998, about required co-signors, she said one-third of the reservation's the administrative staff went above her head to Yazzie and the designation that loosens Goldtooth, who was president, for their signatures.

> She further alleged that nepotism and favoritism were rampant at the chapter house, which functions similarly to a city hall, as well as an atmosphere of intimidation.

"I felt bad for people," Nez said. "How come we get the are named, and Jordan said he using its extra tax monies to bonuses?"

community She said members seeking assistance at the chapter house often left "in tears, because they'd get yelled unclear. Brian Lewis, an a clear picture, or statistics on at and ridiculed."

Regina Allison, whose office provides technical community brought in at least Division of Community support to the chapter, wrote to the tribe's Department of

The bonus payments kept the mismanagement of

Allison based her request said per diem and meal rates were overstated, and Littlefoot received an $811 travel advance for a training trip that she did not attend.

Littlefoot and another administrative staff member, Noreen Parish, were fired the day Nez went before the tribe's Office of Hearings and Appeals and agreed to repay the $20,000 in bonuses she received. But Nez will keep her Joshua Lavar Butler said the position until replacements plans to challenge Littlefoot's firing as her attorney.

Meanwhile, the financial picture for Tuba City remains services but "we do not have attorney for the tribe's Department of Justice, said the $2.5 million in the last fiscal Development, which oversees year, which included taxes and the chapters, have proposed Justice in December asking lease payments. Allison wrote amendments to the Local

The tribe's Office of the management.

In another strange twist, partly on a review of Tuba City Tuba City managed to exempt executive manager Priscilla itself from an obligation to Littlefoot's travel file. Allison report what it received in sales taxes to the Navajo Nation Tax Commission through a resolution approved by the Tribal Council, said the commission's executive director. An online system for chapters to post their budgets, expenditures and revenue online also is voluntary, and Tuba City officials were posting limited data.

Tribal Council Delegate community should have been supplementthefiredepartment and law enforcement, and providing other municipal how those dollars were used."

Officials with the tribe's a \$1,000 check, the first of that the chapter's accounts be in court documents that her Governance Act to strengthen requirements, securing business site leasing allowed to take over. In the turn over yearly records were division of duties for chapter officials and financial > $\hbox{``There's a lot of inconsistency}$ in the law...we'd like to close those loopholes," said division director Arbin Mitchell.

> Attorney Jordan said current law does not specify whether a chapter that created its own government should operate like other chapters, nor does it state that the bonus payments were wrong. Jordan said Yazzie and Goldtooth never denied authorizing the bonuses.

> Yazzie and Goldtooth were found in violation of ethics laws, Herbert and Nez admitted to the allegations, and a deferred judgment was granted against Holgate because he failed to show up for a hearing.

For now, Mitchell and Nez are signing checks to make sure the chapter's bills get paid. A third person is stationed at the chapter house and issues firewood hauling permits.

Investigations into the chapter's finances blamed on cuts in federal funding. Tribal officials have estimated that unemployment hovers around 80 percent, with tribal and federal government agencies providing most of the "Money is really tight this year," he said. "We're no different than the government body of South Dakota or Omaha. Everybody gets money from the government to run their town for roads, energy to help the poor, food stamps. We get only a small share of it, and we have to make it last."

Even with the drop in business, Whiteclay's four beer stores sold the combined equivalent of 4.3 million, 12-ounce cans.

The town and its beer stores sit just a few hundred feet south and across the state border from the reservation in South Dakota.

Leaders of the Oglala Sioux Tribe have tried for decades to reduce alcohol abuse on the reservation. But the problem has persisted, even though the reservation has almost continually banned alcohol since the late 1800s.

One in four children born on the reservation now suffer from fetal alcohol syndrome or fetal alcohol spectrum disorder, and the average life expectancy is estimated between 45 and 52 years - the shortest in the Northern Hemisphere except for Haiti, according to a lawsuit the tribe filed last month against beer distributors and businesses in Whiteclay. The average American life expectancy is 77.5

The tribe's lawsuit seeks $500 million from the four beer stores, their distributors and the internationalbrewingcompanies that serve them. A state senator who lives near the town also introduced a bill this year to allow the state government to restrict stores' sales and hours in places like Whiteclay.

The town "is costing us an arm and a leg for health care, law enforcement, court costs and family tragedies," Oglala Sioux Tribal President John Yellow Bird Steele said. "It's costing us everything."

Steele said he was surprised by the drop in sales, but he has pushed to expand alcohol treatment centers aimed at adolescents on the reservation since he took office in December

Others also created the tribe's efforts and heightened law enforcement.

"It demonstrates the efforts by tribal members and leaders to address the problem," said Mark Vasina, president of the group Nebraskans for Peace, which has worked to reduce alcohol sales in the town. "There have been a number of elders and groups on the reservation that have been taking it very seriously."

U.S. Attorney Brendan Johnson of South Dakota announced Thursday that a federal grand jury had indicted five people for possessing and selling alcohol on the reservation.

Whiteclay generated nearly $358,755 in federal and state excise taxes in 2011, down from $413,932 in 2010.

MASCOTS

The Oregon Legislature voted in 2001 to eliminate the word "squaw" from geographic names because it is a derogatory term for Native

Many communities have resisted changes. For them, the Indians, the Braves, the Warriors or the Chieftains are a source of pride and a decades-old tradition familiar to thousands of alumni.

Some schools have worked with nearby tribes to change without their practices changing their nickname. Roseburg High School changed a logo depicting a Native American to a simple feather - an approach that supporters suggest could work across the state.

"There is a way to do this without the heavy handedness" of a state mandate, said Larry Parsons, the superintendent in Roseburg. "I think Roseburg has done it the way it needs to be done. I'm proud of the way they've done it."

Butler, a varsity basketball player for the Taft Tigers of Lincoln City, was in the locker room and didn't see the halftime show that prompted him to first push the state board to ban American Indian mascots. But the show was distressing to his mother and his brother, he said.

Halftime cheers never intentionally offensive, but the Molalla Indians no longer have a mascot dressed like a Native American, said superintendent Wayne Kostur. And as uniforms wear out, the school has tried to replace them with new ones that say "Molalla" instead of "Indians."

In 2006, the board issued a recommendation that schools eliminate mascots and nicknames with Native American themes, educate all students about Native stereotyping and use culturally accurate curriculum. The board stopped short of imposing any requirements.

State officials say 15 high schools have Native-related mascots and nicknames, along with an unknown number of elementary and middle schools. The Wisconsin Legislature outlawed such names in 2010, and the NCAA limits the use of imagery and names considered hostile and

A debate still rages over University of North Dakota's "Fighting Sioux" nickname and a logo with the profile of an American Indian warrior.

American Indian mascots are a form of oppression that helps contribute to isolation among Natives and its social consequences, said Tom Ball, a University of Oregon assistant vice president who works in the school's equity office. Those include high rates of suicide, incarceration and school dropout, he added.

"Those logos say, 'You're less than and we're superior," said Tom Ball, a member of the Klamath tribe. He added: "They're taking control of our image, saying, 'This is what an Indian looks like, you should be proud."

- Oregon has 15 high schools with Native American-themed
- mascots: • Amity High School: Warriors

• Banks High School: Braves

• Lebanon High School: Warriors • Mohawk High School: Indians

• Molalla High School: Indians • North Douglas High School:

• Oakridge High School: Warriors • Philomath High School:

• Reedsport High School: Braves

• Rogue River High School: Chieftains • Roseburg High School: Indians

• Scappoose High School: Indians • Siletz Valley School: Warriors

• The Dalles-Wahtonka High School: Eagle Indians

• Warrenton High School: Warriors

Source: Oregon Department of Education

COMMENTARY

lacksquare

Women's Education – Women's Empowerment

GOV. BILL ANOATUBBY

National Women's History Month has as its theme this year, "Women's Education – Women's Empowerment," which presumably indicates that women are empowered through education. While that is undoubtedly true, it is also true that women have long played a powerful role to educate and empower others.

While many successful men and women are quick to give their mother credit for providing much of the education and empowerment that led to their success, that only scratches the surface.

Women have consistently taught us lessons which empower. While women in any society often lead with lessons of courage, fairness, respect and perseverance, that leadership role is heightened in the matrilineal society of the Chickasaw people.

For example, in 1837 Betsy Love had the courage to defend her property rights in a Mississippi courtroom. Because she was able to teach the judge about Chickasaw law and traditions she not only won her case, she also laid the foundation for the property rights married women enjoy to this day.

In that same year, Chickasaws were removed from their homelands and made an arduous journey to Indian Territory. Facing adversity, Chickasaw people continued to hold fast to their culture and tradition.

Chickasaw people continued to place a high value on the role of women in society. Schools for women were established in a time and place where the education of women was not always a high priority.

One of these schools, Bloomfield Academy, was known as "the Bryn Mawr of the West," and later helped serve as a model for the education system in Oklahoma. Female teachers there were charged with educating and empowering their students to become leaders. Distinguished graduates of the school were known as "Bloomfield

One of those "Bloomfield Blossoms," Alice Hearrell, married William H. Murray, who later became governor of Oklahoma. Mrs. Murray was also involved with the education department of the Chickasaw Nation, and an article in the Chronicles of Oklahoma stated that she "had a noble share in shaping the destiny of Oklahoma."

Blossoms."

She was so widely respected that upon her death in 1938

she became the first woman to lie in state at the Oklahoma Capitol.

Another Chickasaw woman, Te Ata Fisher spent decades educating people across the United States and around the world with her stories of the beauty and wisdom of American Indian culture. In 1958, Te Ata was inducted into the Oklahoma Hall of Fame. In 1987 she was named the first Oklahoma treasure.

There is little doubt that countless young people were inspired and empowered because of the impact she had as a storyteller and role model.

Her niece, Helen Te Ata Gale Cole, served more than nine years in the Oklahoma Senate and six years in the Oklahoma House of Representatives. Mrs. Cole, who also served as Mayor of Moore, is the mother of U.S. Representative

Tom Cole.

Rep. Cole is quick to acknowledge the many lessons he learned from the example set by his mother.

For many years, Chickasaw leaders have greeted people to the "unconquered and unconquerable Chickasaw Nation... a nation known for its intrepid warriors and its dynamic women." Chickasaw women have historically been an integral part of our warrior society, serving as guards and coming to the aid of warriors in battle. While there is not space to name all the dynamic Chickasaw women play a role in educating and empowering others, it is only fitting that we take time this month to acknowledge the very real difference women make as they teach and empower us to reach for even greater heights.

BILL ANOATUBBY

Bill Anoatubby is Governor of the Chickasaw Nation. He was first elected to the position in 1987. He was reelected for his seventh term in office in 2011. Anoatubby manages more than 11,000 employees, more than 50 government programs and numerous tribal businesses.

The missing equation in the XL Pipeline dispute

NOTES FROM INDIAN COUNTRY

TIM GIAGO (Nanwica Kciji) © 2012 Unity South Dakota

What is it that the South Dakota Congressional Delegation cannot understand about the Trans Canada XL Pipeline? The fact is that they and the national media are completely blind and deaf to the concerns of the citizens of the Indian reservations within the boundaries

Of course, that is nothing new. But Senator John Thune (R-SD) and Kristi Noem (R-SD) have voted and pushed for the XL Pipeline expounding upon the energy and jobs it will bring to South Dakota. Of course, the jobs are temporary, but the damage to the environment is permanent.

In 2009, three years ago, a Native American owned newspaper called Native Sun News, through its Health and Environment Editor, Talli Nauman, started to publish articles on the pipeline usually about one per month. This was before the XL Pipeline was even a blip on the screens of the local, national or international media.

Nauman dug into the secrets of the corporation pushing the pipeline and for the first time exposed their soft underbelly. She knew, after looking at maps provided by the Trans Canada that the pipeline would cut through the heart of the treaty lands of the tribes of the Great Sioux Nation. Lands, incidentally, that were stolen and never paid for and are still claimed by the Sioux tribes.

 $Historically\ Indian\ reservations\ downstream$ from mining operations in South Dakota have been carelessly placed in the path of higher than normal counts of radiation. The uranium extracted from the sacred Black Hills of the Lakota has caused untold damage to the residents of the Pine Ridge Reservation. Leo Vocu, Mike Giago, G. Wayne Tapio, Gerald Clifford and many more residents of Pine Ridge, died of throat cancer. The drinking water entering the reservation from the Black Hills has much higher counts of radiation than can be found anywhere else in South Dakota.

Activists like Charmaine White Face and Debra White Plume have spoken out about this ongoing disaster for many years and, for the most part, have been totally ignored. The United States government spent billions extracting uranium from the Black Hills without once considering the after effects on the Lakota people. Good old Uncle Sam did the same thing in Arizona and New Mexico causing many deaths among the Navajo people, deaths that are still happening.

What Thune, Noem and the rest of the Republicans do not understand is that the pipeline will not be allowed to cross the treaty lands of the Great Sioux Nation. White Face, White Plume, Alex White Plume and Tom Poor Bear, the vice president of the Oglala Sioux Tribe, will not let it happen.

They intend to stop the pipeline even if it means giving up their lives and if this happens their blood will be on the hands of Thune, Noem and the rest of the Republican Party.

Thune and Noem should stop to realize that they have constituents that are Native American and not everything that is good for the rest of South Dakota is good for their Indian voters.

Uranium contamination has been polluting the drinking water of the Pine Ridge Reservation ever since the glory days of the uranium mining scourge. No one, and I mean no one, has taken the time to prove this irrefutable fact and residents of the reservation now have one of the highest cancer rates in America.

The Lakota know that when the pipelines break, and they always do, the impact and the ensuing contamination upon their drinking water will only add to an already horrific situation. To the Lakota, Maka Ina (Mother Earth) is very fragile and a pipeline that would cut through the flesh of their Mother is unthinkable.

The people of the Great Sioux Nation have drawn the line. If Sen. Thune and Rep. Noem cannot comprehend this they are badly out of touch with the minority population of this state. The Republican Party that is pushing this project without listening to the fears of the Sioux people is forcing a showdown that will definitely lead to the worst form of confrontation.

When the Lakota people lay down their bodies and their lives to stop this incursion upon their treaty lands the cries of injustice will go out across the world. America will be castigated.

What price a few temporary jobs and the dreams of cheap gas should America pay for trampling upon the rights of a people?

For the first time in their lives, Sen. Thune and Rep. Noem should make an effort to get the input from the people of the Great Sioux Nation. If they do not believe they are about to cross a line from which there is no return, they need to find it out face to face with the people that will never allow this to happen.

Tim Giago

In protecting their own, the Lakota people have no fear of death and they will put up whatever obstacle that is possible, including their own lives, to stop this attack upon their sovereignty.

So wake up national and international media because so far the only newspaper in America covering this unfolding tragedy from the Indian point of view is the Native Sun News, a small weekly newspaper based in Rapid City, SD.

Tim Giago, an Oglala Lakota, is President of Unity South Dakota. He was a Nieman Fellow at Harvard with the Class of 1990. His weekly column won the H. L. Mencken Award in 1985. He was the founder of The Lakota Times, Indian Country Today, Lakota Journal and Native Sun News. He can be reached at UnitySoDak1@knology.net

The viewpoints expressed in columns and letters are the opinions of the writers and not necessarily the opinion or viewpoint of the Native American Times publisher or staff.

Send letters to editor@nativetimes.com. Please keep letters to 350 words or less. Sign your name, tribal affiliation and city of residence for verification purposes.

918-256-5585 LANGLEY

918-782-0011 MONKEY ISLAND

918-257-8869 www.okstatebank.com

Equal Housing Lender

Native American Owned

NATIVE
TIMES
recycles with Tahlequah
Recycling
Incorporated...

Reeves Renovations Professional Construction, Remodeling & Repairs

Bathrooms • Kitchens • Paint
Tile • Trim • Plumbing
Electrical • Solar Panels
Windmills • Winterizing
Quality Work • Free Estimates

918-637-6736 johnwilliamreeves@juno.com – Mayes & Cherokee Counties –

Follow Us! www.twitter.com/nativetimes

NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES

Address:
City:	State:	_ Zip:
DI.

$65.00	for 52	2 issues	$32.50	for 26	issues

□ $16.25 for 13 issues □ $1.25 single copy

Mail this form with a check or money order to: Native American Times • P.O. Box 411 Tahlequah, OK 74465 • 918-708-5838

More Jobs. More News. More Features. Every Day.

shouldn't you?

www.nativetimes.com

Hebrew language revival spawns hope for other indigenous groups

DANIELLA CHESLOW

Associated Press

JERUSALEM (AP) - Norway's Sami people, an indigenous community with roots as reindeer herders in the northern reaches of Scandinavia and Russia, are looking south to Israel for help preserving their fading native language.

A Sami delegation spent five days in Israel recently, hoping the Jewish state's experience reviving the oncedormant ancient Hebrew language can provide a blueprint for them.

Over the past century, Israel has transformed Hebrew, once reserved almost exclusively for prayer and religious study, into a vibrant, modern language. Through its "ulpan" language immersion program, it has taught a common tongue to immigrants from all over the world, helping the young state absorb generations of newcomers.

"We are trying different methods for 20, 30 years and we haven't succeeded in increasing the number of fluent Sami speakers," said Odd Willenfeldt, principal of Sami School for Mid-Norway and a member of the delegation. "So we are looking for methods that are good and have shown results to make people bilingual."

The Sami, the Nordic countries' only officially indigenous people, live in northern Sweden, Finland and Russia. There are no official population statistics for the Sami, but best estimates range between 80,000 and 100,000; around 30,000 speak Sami languages, Willenfeldt said.

Sami were formerly known outside their community as Lapps - a term that means "patch" and has been abandoned because the Sami regard it as derogatory.

Nils Ante Eira and Lars Joar Halonen stood in the corner of a Hebrew class late last month at Ulpan Morasha in Jerusalem as a class of two dozen adults mumbled through introductions in Hebrew. The men watched carefully, with an eye toward picking up ideas for how to teach adults Sami at home Halonen was wearing a blue fleece over brown leather pants, shoes and a belt, all made by his mother from reindeer hide. He heads the Sami Language Centre in Lavangen, a mostly Sami community in northern Norway.

Eira, a member of the Lavangen town council, wore a green tunic edged in an elaborate woven ribbon that is the hallmark of his Sami

Both men speak Sami at home to their children, but say they are the exception following years of government suppression of the indigenous culture.

SEBASTIAN SCHEINER / ASSOCIATED PRESS PHOTO

In this photo taken Tuesday, Feb. 21, 2012, Nils Ante Eira, left, and Lars Joar Halonen, Sami of Norway, visit the Yad Vashem Holocaust memorial in Jerusalem, as part of their stay in Israel, viewed by many as a model for reviving ancient tongues. A delegation of Norway's indigenous Sami people visited Israel, to seek help in preserving and expanding their fading native language.

"It was prohibited to use Sami at school," Halonen said. "It was prohibited for Sami to have land, and it was prohibited for Sami to use

Today, most Sami are fully integrated into the societies where they live and have adopted Christianity instead of the traditional shamanism. Although reindeer herding remains prevalent, many Sami also work in fishing, education and other industries because of shrinking habitat and earlier official efforts to suppress the indigenous

In recent years the Norwegian government has made an about-face and now funds the revival of the Sami language. With government support, Eira and Halonen launched a Sami language kindergarten in 2009.

At the time, they consulted with educators in Wales, where efforts to teach children the Welsh language are under way. But when it came to teaching the language to adults, the Welsh recommended Israel.

The revival of Hebrew dates to 1881, when Belarus-born Eliezer Ben-Yehuda moved to Israel and vowed to speak only Hebrew with his family, said Gabriel Birnbaum, a senior researcher at the Academy of Hebrew Language.

Ben-Yehuda, who also wrote Hebrew dictionaries and invented Hebrew terms for the modern world, eventually persuaded his friends and schools to switch to the new language.

"By 1914 Hebrew as a spoken language in the land of Israel was a fact," Birnbaum said. The language received an extra push in 1925, when universities in Jerusalem and Haifa opened and held classes in Hebrew.

The academy is an official body founded in 1953, five years after Israel gained independence, to coin new terms and preserve correct Hebrew usage in Israel.

Today, Israel offers free intensive Hebrew classes to new immigrants of all ages. The ulpan, Hebrew for studio, allows newcomers to gain a rudimentary grasp of the language in their first few months in the country while they adjust and search for

The Norwegians visited Hebrew University's Rothberg International School to observe Hebrew courses taught to foreign students. Then they spoke to professionals in the Education Ministry and observed an

They are not the first foreigners to look to Israel for language instruction tips. Visitors from the Maori tribes of New Zealand, from Wales and from the Basque region of Spain have come before.

Welsh expert Jasmine Donahaye, a researcher at Swansea University in Wales, said that Welsh educators visited Israel in 1973 to learn how to preserve their language at a time when Welsh-speaking areas were shrinking. They set up adult education courses across Wales with Israeli guidance. They even called their courses wlpan, a Welsh spelling of the Israeli title.

In a 2004 census, about 22 percent of the residents of Wales spoke Welsh, which Donahaye said was a vast improvement.

"It's been a huge success," Donahaye said. "It was a radical innovation."

In recent years the Welsh have moved away from Israel as a model because of rising criticism of Israel's policy toward the Palestinians, Donahaye said. Today it would be difficult to envision the same cooperation.

Halonen and Eira acknowledge there are differences between teaching Hebrew and Sami.

In Israel, new immigrants need the language for their daily existence; in Norway most people do not need to speak Sami. In Israel, ulpan lessons last for five months, at a time when new immigrants are settling in and searching for jobs. In Norway, the Sami already have jobs and established lives, which could make it harder to motivate them to learn another language.

Still, Halonen and Eira said they hope to open a two-month course for adults modeled on the Israeli ulpan next year, and they believe they will find eager students.

"Many of the people we're talking about, the language of their hearts is Sami. ... They call themselves Sami, they are Sami, they are proud to be Sami and they keep the language of their hearts," Halonen said. "They probably know some phrases in Sami and some Christian songs in Sami. They have a belonging to the

New iPhone app teaches Lakota language, culture

RUTH MOON Rapid City Journal

RAPID CITY, S.D. (AP) - A new iPhone application combines centuries-old Native American culture and cutting-edge smartphone technology to teach youngsters the Lakota language.

The Lakota Toddler app, now available for free in the iTunes store, is the second app by software developers Isreal Shortman and Rusty Calder. The two developers worked with Arlo Iron Cloud, the morning radio announcer for KILI Radio in Porcupine, to create an app that teaches Lakota vocabulary through text, pictures and sounds.

Shortman, a member of the Navajo tribe, created his first app for the Navajo language when he realized 11-year-old daughter did not know basic Navajo history. He thought teaching her the language would help her remember the culture as well. Shortman now plans to develop two more Native language apps and expand to other Native American languages people request.

"We're trying to make learning the language fun," he Shortman began working on the Lakota app when his friend Iron Cloud approached him. Iron Cloud said he had wanted to create a language app for about three years, but kept hitting brick walls with language programs.

"People are always saying we live in a Third World country and we don't have a lot here, but somehow a lot of us manage to have iPhones," he said. "This is one area that has never been tapped into as far as language revitalization goes."

Iron Cloud used his audio mixing and recording ability to record a local woman, Dollie Red Elk, speaking Lakota words for the app.

Right now, the app contains vocabulary cards for 33 food, body and number words. The cards show a photo of the object or number, the Lakota word spelling and the English word spelling. When a user presses the object, a voice speaks the Lakota word. There is also a matching game where users match written Lakota words to objects.

Shortman plans to add more games and vocabulary and expand the app to other platforms such as Android, Xbox and Wii soon. He estimates he and Calder donated about $30,000 worth of time to produce each app.

Native American languages dying with elderly speakers, according to a report the Census Bureau published in December. Nearly a quarter of people ages 65 and older speak Native American languages and only one in 10 people younger than 18 speak them. There are 372,000 Native American language speakers in the U.S., according to the report.

Apps and other products that use new technology are one way to reach younger Lakota speakers and keep the language alive, Iron Cloud

"It's a tool we can use to restore Lakota language and culture," he said. "I don't honestly think that it's in a position that it needs to be saved. It just needs to be restored in the home, school setting, everywhere else."

Stickball · Drawing · Fancy dancing · Beadwork Shooting hoops

Think of the possibilities! Step up and mentor a Native American child. Commit to changing a child's future. Commit to creating an impact in your tribal community.

How it Works

Step One: Fill out an application at www.bbbsok.org Step Two: Submit application. Receive phone call from BBBS to set up an interview.

Step Three: Attend an in-person interview. Bring copy of Drivers License, Proof of Insurance, Three References and complete a criminal background check.

Step Four: Once approved — matched with a child with similar interests!

Step Five: Pat on the back...you're making a difference!!!

All matches are supported by professional staff at local BBBS agencies. BBBS Match Support Specialists regularly consult with volunteers, children, and parents.

Want more information?

Contact Kristy Smithson, BBBSOK Manager of Native American Partnerships, by phone (405) 606-6309 or email kristy.smithson@bbbsok.org | www.bbbsok.org

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT / HELP WANTED

U.S. Department of the Interior Office of the Assistant Secretary-Indian Affairs

Job Vacancy

Deputy Assistant Secretary Management

Job Announcement Number: ASIA-SES-2012-PQ609381 Salary: $119, 554 - $165, 300 per annum Open Period: February 15, 2012 - March 30, 2012 Series & Grade: ES-340

Are you interested in working for a federal agency that is responsible for protecting and improving the trust assets of American Indian and Alaska Native tribes and individuals?

The U.S. Department of the Interior is searching for candidates to develop and oversee the implementation of policies that govern and facilitate the provision of services to American Indian and Alaska Native tribes and individuals by a federal agency. These administrative functions include financial management, strategic planning, workforce planning, human resources, information technology management and safety management.

This is a full-time permanant position with the Office of the Assistant Secretary-Indian Affairs located in Washignton, D.C.

For more information and application procedures, please visit www.usajobs.gov or contact Indian Affairs Human Resources Office at (202) 208-2825.

The U.S. Department of the Interior is an Equal Opportunity Employer Preference will be given to American Indians and Alaska Natives

HEROKEE NATION®

Cherokee Nation whose headquarters are located in beautiful Tahlequah, Oklahoma is a national leader in Indian tribal governments and economic development in Oklahoma, We are a dynamic, progressive organization, which owns several business enterprises and administers a variety of services for the Cherokee people in Northeastern Oklahoma. Cherokee Nation offers an exceptional employee benefits plan with Comprehensive Health, Life, 401 (k), Holiday Pay, Sick Leave and Annual Leave.

CURRENT OPPORTUNITIES

POSITION CLOSES ON 3/13/2012 #4500 Inpatient RN/PRN/OR/T/PT, WW Hastings Hospital

POSITIONS CLOSE 3/14/2012 5998 Medical Technologist/T/PT, WW Hastings Hospital

#5466 LPN/PRN/T/PT/OR, WW Hastings Hospital #5465 LPN/PRN/OR, WW Hastings Hospital

Interested applicants please apply at www.cherokee.org

Cherokee Nation Human Resources Department PO Box 948 Tahlequah, OK 74465

(918) 453-5292 or 453-5050 Employment will be contingent upon drug test results. Indian preference is considered.

Director of Human Services

The State of Oklahoma is seeking a Director for the Oklahoma Department of Human Services (OKDHS) who has a commitment to public service. OKDHS is responsible for Human Services Centers and other locations throughout Oklahoma's 77 counties, nine divisions in the central office and five institutions. OKDHS has more than 7,000 employees and an annual budget exceeding $2 billion in state and federal funding.

The Director is expected to plan, organize, direct and coordinate operations of all divisions and offices in accordance with the established mission, vision and values of the agency, and assures that all programs are administered according to federal and state rules and regulations. Program areas include Child Support Enforcement, Developmental Disabilities Services, Child Welfare, Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program, Temporary Aid to Needy Families, Aging Services, and related administration and service delivery systems.

The agency prefers candidates who hold a Master's degree and 10 or more years of experience in human services, including five years in managing and supervising an executive level human services staff. Salary will be commensurate with education and experience. The salary range is $155,000.00 - $185,000.00.

You may view the full job announcement at www.okdhs.org. To apply applicants must download an application at www.okdhs.org/library/forms/hrmd/. Email all documents to jobs@okdhs.org. Deadline for submitting applications is March 26, 2012 at 5:00 p.m.

> Announcement Number 12-S038U Oklahoma Department of Human Services P.O. Box 25352, Oklahoma City, OK 73125 www.okdhs.org • www.ok.gov

NATIVE AMERICAN HIRING PREFERENCE?

Advertise to Native Americans!

E-mail your ad for a quote to: lisa@nativetimes.com

Sac & Fox Nation Casino is accepting Applications for

General Manager

Qualifications: Bachelors Degree in Business / Marketing Strong Leadership Skills Casino Management Experience

Applicants must pass background and drug screen. Native American preference is recognized.

Submit resume by fax @ 405-395-0790 or visit our website at sandfcasino.com to apply online

ASSISTANT U.S. ATTORNEY

The U.S. Attorney's Office for the Western District of Oklahoma is seeking to fill a temporary (less than one year) or term position (more than one year) which may expire April 30, 2013, subject to availability of funds. This position may be extended and/ or made permanent without further advertising. Depending on the nature of the appointment, benefits may or may not be available. Salary is based on the number of years of professional attorney experience. Applicants must possess a J.D. degree, be an active member of the bar in good standing (any jurisdiction), and have at least one (1) year of litigation experience post-J.D. Resumes should be submitted to Lisa Engelke, HR Specialist, at usaokw. jobapplication@usdoj.gov. Resumes must be received by March 16, 2012, and should reference announcement number12-0KW-01-A.

OK PUBLIC EMPLOYEES RETIREMENT SYSTEM

INTERNAL AUDITOR

Creates, maintains, and updates all internal audit programs. Tests, analyzes and reports all findings to management. MA or BA in accounting or related field. CPA or CIA required. Five years professional accounting, auditing or compliance auditing experience preferred. Salary commensurate with experience and education. Deadline for applications: 3/23/2012. For more information and application procedures, go to http:// www.opers.ok.gov/jobs. EOE

EVENTS

*Email your powwow or other event info to: Lisa@ nativetimes.com. Name, date, time, place and contact information is free.

EVERY WEDNESDAY Kiowa class beginning in February at 6:30 pm, Oliphant Hall, Room 141, Tulsa University. Info call Sarah, (918) 445-5213

EVERY THURSDAY The Otoe-Missouria Substance Abuse and Behavioral Health Programs sponsor an open group for families touched by addiction from noon to 1 p.m. at the Otoe-Missouria Health Building. This is a confidential group. Call 580-723-4466 x252 or x262 for more information.

SECOND TUESDAY Cherokee Artists Association meeting at 202 E. 5th Street Tahlequah, Okla. Info: (918) 458-0008 or www. cherokeeartistsassociation. org

FOURTH THURSDAY Each month the American Indian Chamber of Commerce of Oklahoma - Eastern Chapter hosts a monthly luncheon at Bacone College, Muskogee, Okla. 11:30 a.m. at Benjamin Wacoche Hall. Please RSVP one week ahead of time. Phone: (918) 230-3759

EVERY 2ND SATURDAY Indian Taco Sales - from 11-2:30pm at OK Choctaw Tribal Alliance, 5320 S. Youngs Blvd, Oklahoma City www.okchoctaws.org

MON/WED AND THURS The Marble City Nutrition Center serves hot meals at the Marble City Community Center at 11:30 a.m. Meals are free to anyone over 50, but a small donation is suggested to help with the expense of the program. Marble City Nutrition Center, 711 N. Main, Marble City, Okla. Phone: (918) 775-

YOUTH COUNCIL The Native Nations Youth

Council (NNYC) bimonthly meetings from 6:30pm - 8:30pm @ the Youth Services of Tulsa Activity Center (311 S. Madison - on 3rd just west of Peoria). Call to confirm location. Info Call: Chad Gilley (918) 382-2204 or nnyc@ihcrc.org

THROUGH MARCH 31 Tulsa Library's Festival of Words. For events and times, call the AskUs Hotline, 918-549-7323, or visit the library's website, www.tulsalibrary.org.

THROUGH MAY Free beginner-level Cherokee language classes in communities throughout the tribe's jurisdiction. Once a week for ten weeks. For locations or to register, call Bill Andoe at 918-453-5151.

MARCH 17 Skate Jam Competition 10 am - dark at the "Skate Park Off Broadway," 105 Reynolds in Poteau, Okla. www.nativeskateparks.com MARCH 17

"Siconi Maehelan" - Spring Gathering hosted by the Council of Lenape Elders. Delaware Community Center in Bartlesville, Okla. Open to all tribal citizens regardless of age. Meal at 6pm followed by Lenape social dancing and stomp dancing. You may bring a covered dish to share.

MARCH 17 Wild Onion Dinner at Fife Indian United Methodist Church, 1100 Eufaula St., Muskogee, Okla., 11am-3pm. $8 a plate for onions, hominy, salt pork, ham, grape dumplings & drink. Info call 918-857-3116.

MARCH 17 2011 OKC Princess Honor Dance at Heart of Oklahoma Expo Center, 1700 W. Independence, Shawnee, OK. Info contact Shirley Wapskineh 405-632-5227 or swapskineh@sbcglobal.net

MARCH 17 Wild Onion Dinner from 11 am til 3 pm at Haikey Chapel UMC, 8815 E 101st St, Tulsa.

MARCH 20 Confidential HIV testing at the Claude Cox Omniplex, Muscogee Creek Nation, Okmulgee, from 9:00am to 2:00pm.

MARCH 23 Miss Indian Oklahoma City Competition & Performance at 6:30 pm, 3801 SE 29th St. Del City, OK. Info contact Shirley Wapskineh 405-632-5227 or swapskineh@ sbcglobal.net

MARCH 24 Honor Dance for Shayla Miller, 2011 Sac & Fox Veterans Honor Guard Princess, 5 miles South of Stroud, OK at Sac & Fox Community Building. Gourd Dance starts @ 2pm, 5:30 supper, intertribal/war dancing to follow

MARCH 31 Wild Onion Dinner at Pickett crystal@nb3f.org Chapel United Methodist Church, 17610 S. Hickory Sapulpa, Ok, 5 miles south of Sapulpa on Hickory, 11am to 3pm. $8 adults, $4.00 12 and under. Proceeds to benefit our Oklahoma Indian Missionary Conference annual apportionments. Info: 918-321-3109

MARCH 31 Birthday Celebration for Florabelle Franklin Yeahpau Wolf - 91 years Young. St. Patricks Catholic church - Parish Hall, Anadarko OK., 10 a.m - 5 p.m. Please bring a covered dish. Meat will be provided.

MARCH 31

"Play Golf Native America Day," a free program for families to experience a day of fun, from 10 a.m. - 1 p.m. at Cherokee Hills Golf Club located at Hard Rock Hotel & Casino Tulsa. Registration begins at 8:30 a.m. Info email Crystal Echo Hawk:

National Native HIV/ AIDS Awareness Day

JOHN F. CO-CKE' MCN Health

OKMULGEE, Okla. - March 20 marks the 7th observance of National Native American HIV/AIDS Awareness Day. This day is set aside to acknowledge that HIV continues to threaten the health and well-being of our Native communities and to encourage all of us to support and advocate for HIV education and services.

American Indians and Alaska Natives rank third in the rate of new HIV infections, as compared to all other races and ethnicities. We know that HIV/AIDS exists in urban and rural populations, yet many Native people with HIV are not aware of their status. American Indians and Alaska Natives face greater health disparities and risk factors for HIV, such as higher rates of substance abuse and sexually transmitted infections. These statistics illuminate the need to raise awareness about HIV and demonstrate the need for ongoing initiatives that help make HIV testing, education, and health care a routine part of our health services.

We all need to work together to stop this disease. I encourage you to educate yourself and your community about how HIV is spread, prevented, and treated.

Muscogee Creek Nation has joined the fight of this disease by having an education booth along with confidential HIV testing on March the 20th at the Claude Cox Omaniplex from 9:00am to 2:00pm. Come by our booth for more information.

Remember one way to protect our future our people is to take the test. We have the ability to make a difference.

UKB holds March meeting

M. THOMAS JORDAN United Keetoowah Band

TAHLEQUAH, Okla. - The United Keetoowah Band of Cherokee Indians in Oklahoma's tribal council met March 3 for its monthly meeting.

During the presentations to council portion of the meeting, Dianne Barker-Harrold, special adviser to the chief, asked the council to allow Tribal Family Services to apply for Title IV funding.

The tribe already has a contract with TFS to provide child support enforcement, but the new funding would allow the tribe more direct involvement in the process by hiring four case workers through the tribe. Unlike now, where TFS case workers handle cases for multiple tribes, the new case workers would handle only UKB cases.

Barker-Harrold said this way the case workers could be sent out into the communities as needed, attend district meetings and be present at the satellite offices to fully serve the needs of the tribal members in this regard.

However, the new case workers would still be reinforced by TFS's legal department and experience.

In addition to four new jobs, the grant would also bring in approximately $100,000 in funding for indirect costs to the tribe. The funding would help pay for additional accounting costs due to managing child support payments and other fiduciary responsibilities.

The council approved the measure unanimously.

In other business, Ken Bellmard, attorney general, presented two measures to the council for approval.

The first was a resolution to establish an advisory board to the tribe's corporate authority. The board is comprised of Assistant Chief Charles Locust, Bryan Shade, executive director of tribal operations, and Tim Goodvoice, executive director of tribal planning. The board has the delegated authority by council to oversee the day-to-day activities of the corporate operations of the tribe with monthly reports to the council of its activities.

Bellmard's second proposal was a Class III gaming compact between the tribe and the state.

Bellmard said with all of the gaming developments coming together for the tribe, it is necessary to have this piece of legislation approved by the council so everything can fall in place.

Once the compact is signed by all parties, the tribe has the ability to further expand its gaming opportunities and create more jobs and revenue for

In New Business, Georgia Dick, grants writer, asked the council for permission to apply for a grant with the National Park Service Historic Preservation Tribal Project Grants for $40,000. The grant would purchase equipment for the John Hair Museum and Culture Center and fund training on the purchased equipment for the museum staff.

Because of Easter weekend, next month's council meeting is April 14.

Peoria Tribe election results

M. ANNETTE BLACK Peoria Tribe

MIAMI, Okla. - Citizens of the Peoria Tribe of Indians of Oklahoma on March 3 cast their votes to fill two positions on the Peoria Tribal Business Committee.

Results for the position of Treasurer were: Aaron Wayne Blalock, 87 votes and LeAnne Reeves, 84 votes, with Blalock declared elected.

A run-off election was called by the PTEC because none of the candidates for the position of First Councilman received a majority vote on the first ballot.

First ballot results were: Billy Hank Downum, 51 votes; Robert Knighten, 50 votes; Ilnd Carolyn (Garren) Ritchey, 70 votes. In accordance with the Tribe's Election Ordinance the run-off election was between Billy Hank Downum and Carolyn (Garren) Ritchey. With second ballot voting results of Downum receiving 42 votes and Ritchey receiving 60 votes, Ritchey was declared elected.

The term of office for both positions is four years.

2012 National Conference

Native American Fish & Wildlife Society April 30 - May 3, 2012 Cherokee, North Carolina www.nafws.org to register

"Weaving Together the Strands of Creation"

SHS announces valedictorian, salutatorian

TAHLEQUAH, Okla.— Sequoyah Schools is proud to announce the valedictorian and the salutatorian for the graduating class of 2012. The valedictorian is Shawn Belcher and the salutatorian is Brendan Francis.

Belcher, 17, of Tahlequah, is the son of George and Johnna Belcher. He is Cherokee, Choctaw and Creek and is a member of the National Honor Society. He is active in robotics, journalism, computer club, is a cheerleader and has been named a finalist in the Gates Millennium Scholarship competition. Belcher plans Arkansas in the fall and major in computer engineering.

Francis, 17, of Tahlequah is the son of Dion and Shannon Francis. He is Caddo and participates in cross-country, track, academic team, 4-H, drama and speech. He is a member of the National Honor Society and plans to attend Oklahoma Baptist University and has not decided on a major.

The following seniors are currently ranked in the top ten percent of their graduating class, Harley Adair, Kody Fisher, Brittany Hensley, Ashley Roach, Joleen Scott, to attend the University of Dylan Tucker, Dillon Wade syllabary.

and Carmen Wiley.

Sequoyah Schools' graduation will be held on Friday, May 18 at 6:30 p.m. at The Place Where They Play with a reception immediately following. A baccalaureate ceremony will be held on Wednesday, May 16 at 6:30 p.m. at the same location.

Sequoyah Schools, a boarding school for Native American students, originated in 1871 as an orphan asylum to care for children who were orphaned by the Civil War. Now known as Sequoyah Schools, it is named for Sequoyah, the scholar who developed the Cherokee

Shawn Belcher

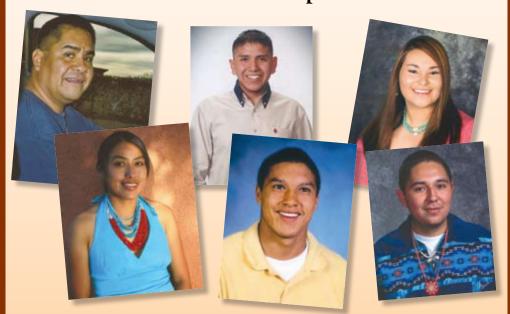

11th Annual

College Scholarships

American Indian, Alaska Native & Native Hawaiian Students

$450,000+ awarded each year! All Undergraduate Majors Are Eligible. Graduate Scholarships Available.

Applications Due April 4th!

Download Application: aiefprograms.org

American Indian Education Foundation 2401 Eglin Street • Rapid City, SD 57703 (605) 342-9968

"TO BRIDGE A GAP" CONFERENCE

April 2 - 5, 2012

Choctaw Casino Resort

The Choctaw Nation of Oklahoma will be hosting the 11th Annual "To Bridge A Gap" Conference, in collaboration with the USDA Forest Service. This conference is designed to strengthen Government-to-Government relationships between federal and state agencies, and federally-recognized Tribes with interests in our forests. Topics for this year include:

Regional Executive Session with Forest Leaders and Tribal Leaders

Introductory GPS/GIS Preconference Hands-On Workshop

NEPA and Section 106: Procedures and Issues

Traditional Cultural Properties and Sacred Sites

NAGPRA: Native American Graves Protection and Repatriation Act

Tribal and Federal Collaborative Partnerships

FCC Meeting with Tribes

Tribal Relations Report

National Historic Preservation Program: Updates and Application Process

Guest Speaker: Dorothy Lippert, Smithsonian, Natural History Museum, Repatriation Office

Several federal and state agencies will be present including USDA Forest Service from various regions, Army Corp. of Engineers, State Historic Preservation Offices, National Park Service, and National Resources Conservation Service.

The "To Bridge A Gap" Conference is a wonderful opportunity to discuss tribal relations and cultural preservation issues, and participate with others who are dedicated to improving this relationship.

For more information please contact Dr. Ian Thompson, Choctaw Nation Historic Preservation Department at (580) 924-8280 Ext. 2216, ithompson@choctawnation.com, or Johnnie Jacobs at (580) 924-8280 Ext. 2559, jjacobs@choctawnation.com.

Conference registration and hotel information can be found on the Choctaw Nation Cultural Services website at www.choctawnationculture.com/TBAG2012.

Inside this issue:

- Tribe touts singer's Indian roots
- Choctaw Chief nominated 'Most Admired' CEO
- Pen pals communicate only in Cherokee

TODAY'S INDEPENDENT INDIAN NEWS

- A FREE PUBLICATION

WWW.NATIVETIMES.COM

VOLUME 18 + ISSUE 12

PUBLISHED WEEKLY

MARCH 23, 2012

Tribe: Bald eagle permit a victory for tradition

BEN NEARY Associated Press

CHEYENNE, Wyo. (AP) - A federal government decision to allow a Wyoming tribe to kill two bald eagles for a religious ceremony is a victory for American Indian sovereignty as well as for long-suppressed religious freedoms, the tribe says.

The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service granted a permit March 9 to the Northern Arapaho Tribe allowing it either to kill or capture and release two bald eagles this year.

While no one questions the religious sincerity of Northern Arapaho tribal members, spokesmen for some conservation and animal rights groups question why the tribe can't meet its religious needs without killing wild eagles. They say the tribe could raise captive birds, or accept eagle

See PERMIT Continued on Page 4

Bald eagles were removed from the federal list of threatened species in 2007. The birds remain protected under the federal Bald and Golden Eagle Protection Act.

Sacred white buffaloes slaughtered for profit, sport at Texas lodge

JESSE ABERNATHY Native Sun News

HUNT, Texas - A hunting lodge in this small, unincorporated – and fittingly named - community came under fire recently by Native Americans from across the country for its offering of staged white buffalo kills.

Situated in the heart of the Lone Star State, the familyowned Texas Hunt Lodge provides big-game packages to hunting enthusiasts from coast to coast. Rare white buffalo, or bison, packages run upwards of $14,000, according to information once contained on the lodge's website.

Texas Hunt Lodge, which has been in existence since 2008 and touts access to over 100,000 acres of ranch land, is headed by Aaron Bulkley.

A non-Native hunter poses with his not-so-hard-to-kill "trophy" – a revered white buffalo, near Texas Hunt Lodge. In the aftermath of a vociferous attack by Native Americans from near and far, the lodge abruptly discontinued its pricey white buffalo hunts.

"There are no seasonal restrictions on hunting the White Buffalo, or White Bison, in Texas, which makes it a suitable trophy year round," proclaims apparently nowexcised advertising from the

See SPORT Continued on Page 3

Oklahoma water rights suit moved to federal court

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) - The U.S. Justice Department says a lawsuit over the water rights of three major stream systems in southeastern Oklahoma should be heard in federal court.

The Oklahoman reports the department filed a notice March 12 to remove the case from the Oklahoma Supreme Court.

Attorney General Scott Pruitt sued on behalf of the Oklahoma Water Resources Board, asking the court to decide whether the state or the Chickasaw and Choctaw tribes had the right to use the stream and surface water.

Leaders of the tribe say they're pleased with the move, while the attorney general's office says it's still reviewing the decision.

The Justice Department says that hearing the case in federal court will conserve judicial resources because the tribes have already filed a separate federal lawsuit over the matter.

Recall of Comanche tribe business officials sought

LAWTON, Okla. (AP) - Some citizens of the Comanche Nation are circulating petitions to recall six of the seven members of the Comanche Nation Business Committee.

The effort comes after the tribe's funeral home, water park and several other businesses were closed and about 40 tribal employees were laid off.

Petition drive leader Eleanor McDaniel told The Lawton Constitution that the committee members are abusing their power and creating financial hardships with the closings and layoffs.

The tribe's Economic Development Commission posted a statement on the tribe's website saying that the businesses lost nearly $5.4 million from 2006 to 2010 and that 2011 and 2012 are being audited and are under review.

The statement said the funeral home is expected to reopen in April if the Oklahoma Funeral Board approves unspecified changes in operations.

AP PHOTO PAT SHANNAHAN / ARIZONA REPUBLIC

Michael Perry and Cecelia Miller stand with a fry bread at Fry Bread House in Phoenix on March 13, 2012. Their restaurant just won a James Beard Award. They first started serving fry bread in 1992.

AZ fry bread eatery wins culinary award

HOWARD SEFTEL

The Arizona Republic

PHOENIX (AP) - Cecelia Miller of the Tohono O'odham Nation opened her first Fry Bread House in 1992, using the same frybread recipes and techniques she learned as a child.

She tops the handstretched, deep-fried dough with such savory toppings as red chile stew and chorizo and cheese, and her dessert fry bread with a killer combination of butter and chocolate.

Her food has always won praise from her customers. Now her restaurant has been ranked by culinary experts as among the best in the country. Fry Bread House was one of five restaurants nationwide to receive designation March 13 from the prestigious James Beard Foundation, which hands out the restaurant industry's version of the Academy Awards each year. It is the first Native American restaurant to receive the designation since the awards were started in 1998.

"America's Classics"

Miller's son, Fry Bread House manager Michael Perry, said he was "floored" by the honor.

"It's a testament to my mother and her hard work," he said. wanted something for the community."

The James Foundation gives the "America's Classics" designation to restaurants recognized for "timeless appeal," which are "beloved for quality food that reflects the character of the community." Winners must have been in the business for at least 10 years and preferably be informal and moderately priced.

The Fry Bread House in central Phoenix is a tiny, loud, non-descript spot on North Seventh Avenue near Indian School Road. Come during the lunch-hour rush and you'll find yourself at the end of a line snaking back from the "Order Here" counter out the front door. The family operates a second location in Mesa, near Dobson and Baseline roads, with the same menu and recipes.

"America's Classics" winners are chosen by the James Beard Foundation's 17-member Restaurant and Chef Award Committee, which consists of food journalists and industry

See AWARD Continued on Page 2

Women push for improved access to Plan B

Any woman 17 and older can get emergency contraception from behind the counter at retail pharmacies, but IHS has no retail pharmacies and treats emergency contraception the same as getting aspirin or cough syrup.

FELICIA FONSECA Associated Press

FLAGSTAFF, Ariz. (AP) - Micha Bitsinnie and her husband weren't ready to have another baby just eight months after the birth of their

So when she forgot to take her birth control pills for a couple of days, she sought emergency contraception

With no extra money, she went to the federal Indian Health Services hospital in Albuquerque, N.M., where she's eligible for free health care as a Navajo woman. It was there she discovered that the medication is available by prescription only and she would need to speak with a health care provider first.

"I was kind of caught off guard," Bitsinnie said.

Any woman 17 and older can get emergencycontraceptionfrombehind the counter at retail pharmacies, but IHS has no retail pharmacies and treats emergency contraception the same as getting aspirin or cough syrup. Women who are enrolled in any federally recognized tribe must visit a clinic, emergency room or urgent care facility and have a consultation before they're prescribed the medication that is dispensed on site.

Bitsinnie and other Native women say it's a burden they shouldn't have to bare and have been pushing for emergency contraception, particularly Plan B, to be available over the counter through IHS facilities. But an IHS official say while getting emergency contraception at the federal facilities may be different than elsewhere, it's not inaccessible and there are clear benefits to the agency's methods.

"The benefit of obtaining emergency contraception from an IHS facility would be that it's available at no cost, that it's available much more readily in the local community without adding barriers of distance and travel cost, and that it's part of a larger health care system where information about long-term contraceptive options would also be available," said Dr. Jean Howe, the IHS' chief clinical Bitsinnie, a community health worker, was one of about 60 women who participated in a round table discussion last year about accessibility to Plan B through IHS. The women's experiences were documented in a report released last week by the South Dakota-based Native American Women's Health Education Resource Center. The discussion also touched on tradition and culture, voting rights and the prevalence of domestic abuse and rape of Native women.

consultant for OBGYN.

One-third of all American Indian and Alaska Native women will be raped in their lifetime and nearly three of five have been assaulted by their partner, the U.S. Department of Justice has said. The IHS released a policy a year ago that sets uniform standards of care for sexual assault victims at its facilities.

Under the policy, the facilities must have staff specifically trained to care for victims of sexual assault and must provide forensic examinations on site or by referral. It also includes requirements for emergency contraceptive options like Plan B and states that sexual assault victims are to be given priority in emergency situations.

But Charon Asetoyer, director of the center, said IHS has not set deadlines for service units to implement that policy or a customized one that incorporates minimum requirements.

Furthermore, she said women shouldn't have to see a doctor or compete with other patients at urgent care or the emergency room to get emergency contraception, particularly when the effectiveness of the pill lessens over time. Retail pharmacies are often a long drive from reservation communities, and even then, many Native women don't have transportation or money to pay for it, she said.

Plan B One-Step® is a backup plan that helps prevent pregnancy after birth control failure. It must be taken within 72 hours (three days) to prevent a pregnancy. It is not the abortion pill the IHS budget is administered by and it isn't a substitute for routine birth control.

"You lose that window of opportunity, that 72-hour window," Asetoyer said. "It's a very, very unpleasant situation. It's very difficult and just puts another layer of control and power over us that is not necessary. We're being treated differently."

Bitsinnie said she called the IHS hospital for an appointment to get emergency contraception more than once and was adamant that she needed to be fit in quickly. She said she was made to feel ashamed during her 30-minute consultation and imagined how other Native women might feel if they were questioned on why they needed the medication.

"Imagine not being married, having a few kids or 18 years old and coming in and somebody saying, 'Why aren't you using this, why aren't you using that?" Bitsinnie said. "I felt shameful ... This is not a shameful thing. I'm married. I'm just being cautious."

Howe pointed to ways in which IHS service units have made it easier for patients to get emergency contraception, through automated drug monitoring machines and expanding the list of people who can dispense it. In Shiprock, N.M., where she works, she said the medication would be available through an OBGYN, emergency room, urgent care and through a health provider's > prescription. The IHS bases its stock of medication on the national core formulary, a list that includes dedicated emergency contraceptives like Plan B or an equivalent. Wait times depend on the patient volume, but she said access to health care has only increased over the more than 14 years she has worked for IHS on the Navajo

However, more than half of tribes through self-determination contracts or self-governance compacts, and Howe said policies there can differ from those at IHS-

"Our goal is to make it available as quickly as possible," Howe said. "That's why we adopt these strategies to streamline it. A nurse realizing a patient may not need to wait for a bed to open up could take that initiative to have that dispensed and let that patient go on her way quite promptly."

Not all IHS facilities operate around the clock. But the only other option than IHS is to drive, depending on location, perhaps even farther to a retail pharmacy and pay for Plan B themselves.

Howe said IHS would like to know about any problems in accessing health care that could be addressed through patient advocates or agency

For more information on what Plan B is, visit online http://www. planbonestep.com/plan-b-faq.aspx professionals.

Continued from Page 1

The committee cited Fry Bread House's "blissfully delicious specialty," which it calls "downy bronze cushions the size of dinner plates."

It also cited the "all-Native staff" and the "democratic" clientele: "friends of the house to hipsters to businessmen and the ever-present lucky

Indian fry bread is a Native American staple made from white flour, baking powder, salt and Crisco, created out of necessity by Native Americans after they were relegated to reservations and provided with commodities from the federal government.

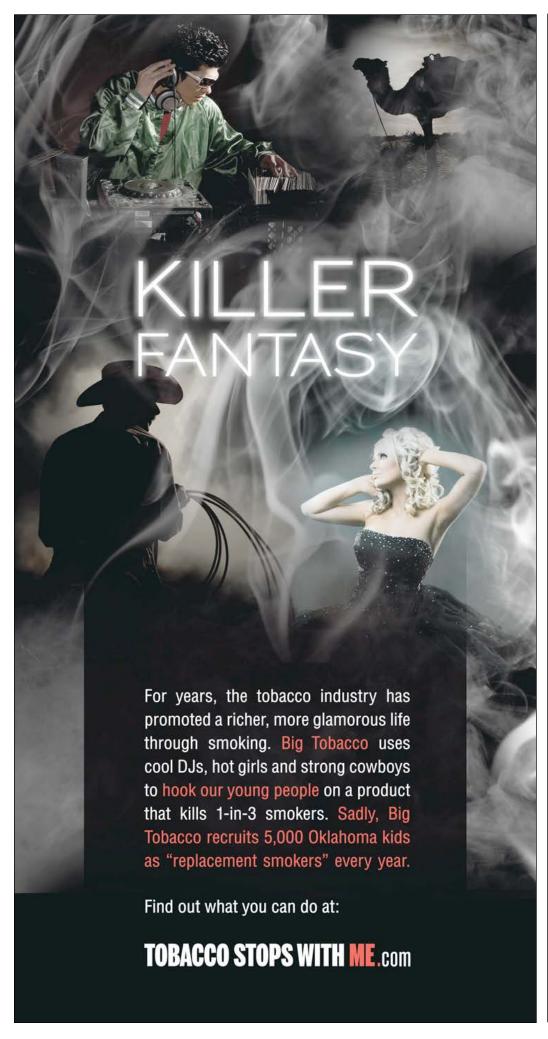

The bread fed large families like the Millers. In fact, the original Fry Bread House was opened to help pay for the education of the Miller family's seven children.

"As you might guess, the Fry Bread House is not where you'd come in search of green, leafy nutrition," The Republic wrote in a 2001 review when the restaurant moved to its current location. "It is, however, where you'd come to make happy grunting noises while you eat."

Fry Bread House is the second Valley restaurant to receive the "Classics" honor. El Chorro in Paradise Valley got the nod in 2005.

Other 2012 winners include Nora's Fish Creek Inn, Wilson, Wyo.; St. Elmo Steak House, Indianapolis; Jones Bar-B-Q Diner, Marianna, Ark.; and Glen, Manchester, Shady

The awards dinner will take place in New York City at Avery Fisher Hall at Lincoln Center on May 7.

for ourselves. for our families. for future generations.

Oklahoma ranks 48th nationally for health. That is unacceptable. We can no longer sit idle when our health hangs in the balance.

There is a plan to create healthier lives for all Oklahomans - the Oklahoma Health Improvement Plan. Endorsed by the legislature, this plan outlines a clear path of action to save lives and improve our health. Join us by supporting:

Restore the rights of local communities to pass smokefree policies that are stronger than state law

Assure health education is taught in sixth, seventh or eighth grade for all state public schools

Prohibit the use of a hand-held electronic device while driving for all drivers under the age of 18

Let's pull together to Shape Our Future. Your state is counting on you.

Tribe touts singer's Indian roots

In jazz history books, the Coeur d'Alene woman has gone down largely as a white jazz stylist.

JOHN MILLER Associated Press

BOISE, Idaho (AP) -Mildred Rinker Bailey was known to fans as "Mrs. Swing," whose slight, throaty voice won her acclaim as one of the great white jazz singers of the 1930s and 1940s

But the Coeur d'Alene Indian Tribe is now hoping to set the record straight once and for all: Bailey, who died impoverished in Poughkeepsie, New York, in 1951, was an American Indian who spent her childhood on the reservation near DeSmet,

Last week the tribe introduced a resolution honoring Bailey in the Idaho Legislature, in part to convince the Jazz at Lincoln Center Hall of Fame in New York City to add her to its inductees - on grounds she helped blaze a trail for better-known singers like Ella Fitzgerald and Billie Holiday.

"Mildred was a pioneer," said Coeur d'Alene Tribal Chairman Chief J. Allan. "She paved the way for many other female singers to follow."

Though Bailey's Coeur d'Alene ties may not have been common knowledge among her fans, it clearly wasn't a

Mildred Rinker on a farm near Spokane," reads her Associated Press obituary, dated Dec. 13, 1951.

Still, in jazz history books, Bailey has gone down largely as a white female jazz stylist.

The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz hails her as "the first white singer to absorb and master the jazz-flavored phrasing...of her black contemporaries."

Howard Koslow, illustrator who created Bailey's likeness on a 29-cent U.S. Postal Service stamp based on an image by iconic jazz photographer William Gottlieb, said he had only that brief New Grove entry as a reference.

But his depiction of Bailey's dark complexion and black hair, for the stamp issued in a series honoring jazz and blues musicians, appears to capture her complex heritage.

"She has that look about her," Koslow recalled Tuesday in an interview from his Toms River, New Jersey, home.

Bailey was born Feb. 16, 1900, in the Washington farming town of Tekoa, near the Idaho border.

Her mother was a Coeur d'Alene tribal member, her father of Swiss-Irish stock.

At 13, she moved from the reservation to Spokane, where a neighbor destined to become world famous as "Bing" Crosby joined Bailey and her brother, Al Rinker, at the family's piano. Al Rinker and Crosby formed the group "The Rhythm Boys."

By the mid-1920s, all three were singing in California; in 1929, Crosby recommended to famous orchestra leader

Mildred Bailey

Paul Whiteman he add Bailey as a regular.

"I was lucky in knowing the great jazz and blues singer Mildred Bailey so early in life," Crosby wrote in his 1953 autobiography. "I learned a lot from her."

So has Julia Keefe, a 22-yearold jazz singer from Spokane.

Keefe, a member of Idaho's Nez Perce Indian Tribe, discovered Bailey as a student at Spokane's Gonzaga Prep, while researching Crosby's own time at the Catholic high school.

"It took off like a flash flood," remembers Keefe, now a performance major at the University of Miami with Bailey's photograph hanging on her Florida apartment

In 2009, Keefe performed a musical tribute featuring Bailey's songs, including "Old Rockin' Chair" and "He's Not Worth Your Tears," at the Smithsonian Institution's National Museum the American Indian in Washington, D.C.

A year later, Keefe was touring the Jazz at Lincoln Center Hall of Fame, pondering the greats on its 18-foot video wall when she asked herself, "Where's Mildred?"

Thus began her quiet effort to elevate Bailey's profile in the modern jazz world, a push the Idaho Legislature hopes to

"It's sad to think she died penniless, or nearly penniless, after all the things that she accomplished," said Rep. Bob Nonini, a sponsor of resolution. "But it's never too late to recognize somebody."

Lincoln Center officials didn't immediately respond to an AP request for comment.

An important question remains: How important were Bailey's Indian roots to her

An undated quotation, attributed to her by the U.S. Postal Service in 1994, hints at an answer.

"I don't know whether this (Indian) music compares with jazz or the classics, but I do know that it offers a young singer a remarkable training and background," Bailey reportedly said.

Bailey's niece, Julia Rinker-Miller, a Los Angeles-based singer whose credits include the "Three's Company" theme, was seven in 1951 when her aunt died in a Hudson Valley hospital, from complications of diabetes and obesity; Frank Sinatra reportedly helped pay her medical bills.

"Even though she was large, she was delicate, very exotic, sensual," Rinker-Miller recalled during an interview Tuesday.

From her father, Rinker-Miller heard stories of how they were called "breeds" after moving from the Coeur d'Alene reservation to Spokane.

Consequently, downplayed his own American Indian background, she said.

She figures Bailey was forced to do likewise during her career - possibly why she became known as a white

"Mildred's returning to her roots," Rinker-Miller said, of the tribe's effort to reclaim Bailey. "She's going home."

NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES

Publisher & Editor LISA SNELL editor@nativetimes.com

Contributing Writers Dana Attocknie WESLEY MAHAN KAREN SHADE

Advertising Sales KATHLEEN ROBERTSON LISA SNELL ROB WALTON advertising@nativetimes.com

Distribution SHELBY HICKS STEVE LACY WESLEY MAHAN MICHAEL MARRIS KATHLEEN ROBERTSON Brenda Slaughter

The Native American Times, formerly the Oklahoma Indian Times, is published weekly (except the last week of the year) by Lisa Hicks Snell. Mailing address is PO Box 411 Tahlequah, OK 74465. All the contents within the Native American Times are copyrighted material. Any reproduction, redistribution without the written consent of the NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES is strictly

> Each week's issue is available for free download online at: www.nativetimes.com

Subscription rates: $65.00 for fifty-two issues, $32.50 for twenty-six issues, or $16.25 for thirteen issues. A single copy is $1.25 (Rates are for postage and handling) Send check or money order to:

NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES Attn: Subscriptions P.O. Box 411 Tahlequah, OK 74465-0411

Phone: (918) 708-5838 Fax: (888) 689-4873

Postmaster: Send Change of Address Form 579 to: NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES P.O. Box 411, Tahlequah, OK 74465

WWW.NATIVETIMES.COM - News from the crossroads of Indian Country

"Part Indian, she was born

SPORT

Continued from Page 1

Phone calls to the Texas Hunt Lodge by Native Sun News went unanswered.

hunting lodge's website.

centuries, For white buffalo has been a potent symbol of cultural preservation for the Lakota, Dakota and Nakota peoples of the Great Plains. Hunting and harvesting the hard-to-find icon is considered sacrilegious by many of these "Buffalo People."

"The company started the white buffalo hunts about two years ago, and there was a big outcry about it then," said James Swan, founder and president of the Rapid Citybased United Urban Warrior Society.

lodge acquiesced The to pressure from Native Americans at the time and ceased its white buffalo hunts, according to Swan.

"But now it's started back up again," he said. "It's a slap in the face for our people."

Swan is a member of the Cheyenne River Sioux Tribe.

"(Texas Hunt Lodge's) argument now is that they're technically not white buffalo, but inbred beefalo," Swan said. "But the thing is, if you go to the pictures of what they claim are beefalo on their website - beefalo look more like a Brahma bull than beef or buffalo - but the pictures, those are buffalo."

However, there appear to no longer be any remaining images of or references to the white buffalo hunting package on the company's site.

Swan compares the biggame enterprise's white buffalo safaris to burning the Bible or Quran, both venerated books among Christianity and Islam, respectively.

"If I did that, it's not going to work – there would be a public outcry about it," he said.

And on top of that, the hunts are canned, said Swan, meaning the buffalo are entrapped in a confined area so the hunter is guaranteed the hunt, or white buffalo

United Urban Warrior Society wants to expose the lodge for being disrespectful to Native beliefs and a fraud,

And the organization has done just that, according to Immediately Swan's posting of information about Texas Hunt Lodge's white buffalo package on UUWS's Facebook page, a stampede of criticism from Natives throughout America made more than just dirt fly.

"The people were just in tears, I mean there was outrage; I even had one guy who said he'd go take care of (Texas Hunt Lodge) and then send me the trigger finger," Swan said. "People take their religion and their culture seriously."

For the big-game lodge to blatantly advertise and provide white buffalo hunts as sport is just an invitation for trouble from Native Americans, he said.

After Swan's viral March

4 posting on the social networking site, he said the company removed all photos and information pertaining to white buffalo hunts on its website but continued to offer the sport.

"People just bombarded (Texas Hunt Lodge) with following phone calls after their number was posted, and now they won't answer their phone."

The ultimate goal of Swan's organization is "to come up with some kind of federal legislation to put a protective resolution on the white buffalo because of cultural sensitivity for what it is and what it represents," he said.

According to Swan, there are only around 20 genuine white buffaloes alive in the world today.

Akin to the second coming of Jesus Christ for Christians, the singular white buffalo calf birth long prophesied to signify the imminent return of Ptesan Winyan, or White Buffalo Calf Woman, to the Lakota, Dakota and Nakota peoples to restore order is an event that will happen among Natives, not non-Natives, Swan indicated.

"It's not going to happen to Joe Blow in Pennsylvania," he Subsequent to his initial interview, Swan informed NSN that Texas Hunt Lodge halted its contrived white buffalo hunts in the wake of thousands of emails and phone calls opposing the practice.

- Jesse Abernathy is the editor of Native Sun News in Rapid City, South Dakota. You may contact Jesse at editor@ nsweekly.com. Copyright permission by Native Sun News, www.nsweekly.com

Native American hiring preference?

Advertise to Native Americans! FREE ONLINE with PRINT BUY E-mail your ad for a quote to lisa@nativetimes.com

Metal Roofing & Siding

Professional Construction and Home Repairs

Free Estimates

Charles Snell 918-507-2902

Native American Contractor

DRUMRIGHT DENTAL CENTER Advanced Dental Technology

We proudly offer an array of services, from general dentistry to sedation, dental implants, and cosmetic dentistry - all designed expressly to meet our patient's changing needs. With four general dentists and four hygienists, we can maintain your oral health for a lifetime all at one location.

We Accept Contract Health & Sooner Care

We serve patients in the Drumright, Cushing, Stillwater, Stroud, Ponca City, and surrounding areas with personalized service and exemplary care. Call for your appointment today.

918-352-3312 or Toll Free 877-RH Melton drumrightdentalcenter.com

SUPERNAW'S OKLAHOMA INDIAN SUPPLY

Wholesale items for Pow Wow Vendors

Bone chokers $20 per dozen

Handmade lamp worked glass bead bracelets $1.00 each Glass bead stretch bracelets 5 for $2.50

12 Necklaces: Chain w/ pendant and display pad $13.50 36 inch gemstone chip strands Reg. 3.95 now $2.00 36 inch turquoise chip strands Reg. 7.95 now $4.00

Always our regular stock of seed beads from 16/0 to 8/0, findings, leather, hackles, fluffs and thousands of other supply items.

Remember we've moved around the corner 109 North Broadway, Skiatook, OK 74070

New Dealers Cash or Credit Card Only.

Open Noon-6pm Mon. thru Fri. • 10am-5m Sat. • Closed Sun. Local: 396-1713-Countrywide Toll Free 1-888-720-1967 Website: www.supernaw.com • Email: Supernaw@flash.net

comment period for Cobell draft

This extension of 15-days will allow for more time due to numerous requests from Indian Country.

WASHINGTON - The Department of the Interior has announced that there is a 15-day extension to the public comment period on the Cobell Land Consolidation Draft Plan. The public comment period will now end on April 3, 2012.

The Cobell Land Consolidation Program will not be implemented until all court approvals are final; however, Interior has prepared the draft plan to continue the tribal consultation on the development of the program.

In accordance with the $3.4 billion Cobell Settlement, a $1.9billionlandconsolidation fund is to be used to purchase fractionated interests in trust or restricted fee lands from willing sellers to benefit tribal communities and aid in land consolidation.

The initial publication in the Federal Register, on February 23, 2012, opened a 45-day comment period on the draft Cobell Land Consolidation Plan. The plan seeks to remedy the proliferation of thousands of new trust accounts caused by the increasing subdivision or "fractionation" of trust restricted fee land interests through succeeding The generations. consolidation plan proposes a voluntary buy-back and consolidation of fractionated trust and restricted fee land interests that would occur over a 10-year period after the Cobell Settlement becomes final. This extension of 15days will allow for more time due to numerous requests from Indian Country.

DOI extends | Students help restore old Indian school

MONTEGUT, La. (AP) -Armed with paint scrapers and saws, some University of Southern Mississippi students spent part of their spring break helping revitalize a historic Montegut building that once was a school for Indian children.

Built in the early 1940s, when public schools barred Indians, the old Montegut Indian School has survived a fire and dozens of hurricanes.

Fourteen USM students scraped flaking paint off the front of the old white schoolhouse on March 13, then painted it and built new steps the next day. Seeing people working on the school excited residents, said Chris Chaisson, a community advocate with the United Houma Nation.

The Courier reported United Houma Nation tribal leaders want to restore the cypress building as a cultural center and a place to house volunteers and disaster-relief efforts.

The building symbolizes education, and restoring it "lets people know that it's still a vital part of tribal life," Chief Thomas Dardar said.

Dardar said it was later used as a tribal and community center for the United Houma Nation. The tribe held holiday celebrations and meetings there and used the building, which is inside Montegut's levee system, as a distribution center after disasters.

The building has held relatively up well over the years. Chaisson said the roof needs to be replaced, and the kitchen caught fire in 2009, complicating restoration.

Tammy Greer, a citizen of the tribe and director of Southern Mississippi's Center for American Indian Studies, saw the school during the tribe's annual Indian Santa Christmas celebration.

"It seemed like the building could use some tender, loving care," she said.

Many of the students who volunteered are also American Indians - citizens of the Mississippi Band of Choctaw Indians and the university's Golden Eagles Intertribal Society student group.

"After we heard about what's going on with the Houma tribe, we thought it would be a good idea to come down," said senior Danielle Isaac, 21, president of the Golden Eagles. "It's hard work, but we're having fun and meeting new people."

The students also went to Isle de Jean Charles, which is rapidly losing its foothold to coastal erosion. It once was a thriving tribal community. Now only a dozen families reside on the sliver of land surrounded on all sides by water.

ALYSHA JORDAN

Montegut Indian School

Greer is also asking Louisiana botanists to help identify native plants for a nature path. They also hope to create a community garden where tribal elders and young people can get together and learn from one another, Dardar said.

"We've got to hold on to the traditions, because a lot of that culture is being lost," said Tyler Meador, a University of Southern Mississippi student majoring in history and social

Another student group from Wisconsin will visit Montegut next month; Greer plans to bring yet another group in the Dardar said the tribe does not yet have an estimate of how much it will cost to restore the building, but they hope to do much of it using volunteer labor.

"As a young Native American in this community, it makes me happy to see other young people getting involved," Chaisson said.

Anyone interested in helping restore the center, either by volunteering labor or donating money, should call the United Houma Nation tribal office at 223-3093 or Chaisson at 232-5053.

ND Supreme Court considers Fighting Sioux case

DALE WETZEL Associated Press

Dakota's Supreme Court grilled the state Board of Higher Education's lawyer profile of an American Indian warrior. March 15 about the board's tardiness in challenging a law that requires the long as the nickname and logo are kept, University of North Dakota's sports teams to carry the Fighting Sioux nickname.

pro-nickname law in March 2011. Yet it wasn't until last month, after the law was repealed and then revived in a contends the law interferes with its referendum campaign, that the higher own powers, granted under the North education board sued to block the law, Dakota Constitution, to manage the Justice Daniel Crothers said.

ago ... Why now? Why in the face of a referendum off the ballot. referral?" Crothers asked Douglas Bahr, an assistant attorney general who is Kapsner and Mary Muehlen Maring representing the board, during Supreme Court oral arguments Thursday.

Secretary of State Al Jaeger scheduled a June 12 referendum on the law after nickname backers turned in more than 16,000 petition signatures demanding a action because state legislators wanted in their own arguments.

The law says UND's sports teams BISMARCK, N.D. (AP) - North must be known as the Fighting Sioux and keep a separate logo that depicts the NCAA officials have told UND that as the Grand Forks school may not host NCAA post-season tournaments. Its teams, cheerleaders and band members State lawmakers first approved the may not wear them on uniforms during post-season play.

> The Board of Higher Education state's 11 public colleges. The board

> Crothers and Justices Carol Ronning questioned whether waiting for the June vote would harm UND. The election will let voters decide whether the law should be kept or repealed.

Bahr said the board delayed legal referendum campaign, about assertions you've got to do something."

to see whether the law would cause the NCAA to rethink its opposition to UND's nickname and logo. It did not. The NCAA considers both offensive to American Indians.

The pro-nickname referendum campaign has required the board "to backtrack, and have its authority infringed and all the issues re-raised,"

The problems the law causes "may go away in three months," Bahr added. "But the board should not have to suffer this injury for three months."

Bahr and lawyers for Jaeger, the Legislature and the pro-nickname "That harm has been there since wants the Supreme Court to declare making their arguments Thursday the statute was passed almost a year the law unconstitutional and take the during an hour-long Supreme Court session. Chief Justice Gerald VandeWalle said the court will make its ruling later.

> The justices also peppered Patrick Durick, a Bismarck attorney representing the Legislature, and Reed Soderstrom, a evidence," Durick said. "You've got to Minot lawyer who was chairman of the either have (a sworn statement), or Durick argued that the nickname and logo, and protecting their monetary value, are part of the university's work, which he said the state constitution allows the Legislature to regulate.

VandeWalle said Durick's contention was so broad that it "would consume the constitutional authority of the board, if the Legislature wanted to do it."

Justice Dale Sandstrom asked whether the Legislature could use Durick's argument to set class schedules, decide which professors may teach certain courses, and specify the colors and designs of the teams' uniforms.

"I don't know a bright-line test. I'm referendum committee took turns here to tell you that (the Legislature) can decide what the nickname of the athletic program is," Durick replied.

He said the Board of Higher Education had presented nothing but "bare allegations" that the university had been harmed by keeping the nickname.

"I think there needs to be some

PERMIT

Continued from Page 1

Spokesmen for some conservation and animal rights groups question why the tribe can't meet its religious needs without killing wild eagles.

feathers or carcasses already available from a federal repository that collects birds killed by power lines or other

The Northern Arapaho the Wind River Reservation central Wyoming with the Eastern Shoshone Tribe. The Northern Arapaho decline to say specifically what they will do with the eagles the federal permit allows them to kill.

"It has been since the beginning of time with us, and we respectfully utilize the eagle in our ceremonies," said Harvey Spoonhunter, a tribal elder and former chairman of the Northern Arapaho Business Council. "We get to utilize the eagle, which we consider a messenger to the

Bald eagles were removed from the federal list of threatened species in 2007. The birds remain protected under the federal Bald and Golden Eagle Protection Act. Several Indian tribes have been allowed permits to kill golden eagles for religious purposes.

Suzan Shown Harjo, president of the Morning Star Institute, a Washington, D.C.-based American Indian rights group, notes that only a few tribes still practice ceremonies that require them to kill eagles.

From the 1880s to the 1930s, the federal government enforced so-called "Civilization Regulations" that criminalized traditional ceremonies, including the Northern Arapaho's Sun Dance. Many Indian religious ceremonies were stamped out, Harjo said.

"They've done the correct thing, the proper thing. It's a good step in the direction of the United States trying to make amends for things that they did all too well to suppress Native American religious freedom for so long," Harjo said.

Andy Baldwin, lawyer for the Northern Arapaho Tribe, said the tribe went to court last fall to get the bald eagle permit following the federal prosecution of Winslow Friday, a young tribal member who shot a bald eagle on the Wind River Indian Reservation in 2005 for the Sun Dance. Friday ultimately pleaded guilty and was ordered to pay a fine in tribal court.

"One of the goals of the current suit is to prevent any young men like Winslow Friday from being prosecuted in the future for practicing their traditional religious ceremonies," Baldwin said this week.

The Fish and Wildlife Service says it issued the permit in response to the tribe's application, not the lawsuit it filed against the Federal lawyers filed a status report in the lawsuit this week saying that the Eastern Shoshone Tribe had opposed the killing of eagles on the reservation the two tribes share. The Northern Arapaho permit specifies the two bald eagles must be killed or captured off the reservation.

Edward Wemytewa, a member of the Zuni Tribe in western New Mexico, said he's happy for the Northern Arapaho.

"The common theme for a lot of indigenous peoples is that the bird, it brings not only strength and courage, it's just one of those creatures that still brings awe to many, many people," he said of eagles.

The Zuni Tribe has a federal permit allowing it to keep live eagles, most of which come from raptor rehabilitation projects while some are caught in the wild. Wemytewa declined to say whether any Zuni practices require killing eagles.

think because of ceremonies, our language has survived, our communities have survived, and I think that is one of the keys for endurance of Native American culture," Wemytewa said. "So if again, other tribes harvest of The Humane Society of the United States.

Saying his understands the importance of many animals in Native American culture, Pacelle said, "in this case, we had hoped they would use feathers and carcasses that they could

LUCY FOWLER WILLIAMS / COURTESY

Suzan Shown Harjo, president of the Morning Star Institute, says granting the permit to kill bald eagles is " a good step in the direction of the United States trying to make amends for things that they did all too well to suppress Native American religious freedom for so long."

birds for sacrifice in the name of ceremony and tradition, and longevity and health, I guess it makes sense."

Reaction to the Northern Arapaho bald eagle permit was muted among some non-Indian groups.

"We hold bald eagles in great esteem as well, and as a humane organization, we don't want to see them killed," said Wayne Pacelle, president obtain from trustworthy sources and not resort to direct killing."

Brian Rutledge, president for the Rocky Mountain Region of the National Audubon Society, said his group encourages tribes to raise captive birds, rather than killing wild ones.

"But we understand that there are religious decisions that are made here that may not be understandable to all, but are well within the rights of the people acting on them," Rutledge said.

Matt Hogan, assistant regional director for the Fish and Wildlife Service in Denver, said no other applications to kill bald eagles are pending. And Harjo emphasized the Northern Arapaho permit isn't likely to unleash a flood of applications from other tribes.

"This isn't a wholesale run on the bald eagle that would drive them back into an endangered or threatened position," Harjo said. She emphasized that only a few tribes have intact ceremonies involving eagles and said that only a few individuals within those tribes have a religious need to kill wild birds.

On the Wind River Indian Reservation, the Northern Arapaho are preparing for spring. Nelson White, a tribal elder, said his people are listening for this year's first clap of thunder.

"That thunder represents the eagle hollering," White said. "And when that happens, that's when everything is waking up. The grass is coming back up, the birds are coming back, the plants and animals that were in hibernation are coming out. It's a new beginning."

"So in essence, with this decision, with this you might say victory, we say 'ho'hou,' -'thank you," White said.

COMMENTARY

Around the Campfire: How to write a book

DR. DEAN CHAVERS

One of our scholarship students asked me a few weeks ago how to write a book. I have written 27 books without giving much thought about how to do it. But let me share some things with you budding writers.

First of all, you need to have a passion about the topic of the book. If you do, the book will write itself, because you will have learned about all there is to learn about the subject. One book ("Reading for College") took me ten years to write, and it was only 220 pages long. But it covered everything from ancient Greek and Roman classics to modern-day medicine. It took awhile.

The longest book I wrote, 736 pages, ("Modern American Indian Leaders") only took ten months to write. But let me qualify the ten months. I have a full time job running a scholarship program. That takes me 50 to 70 hours a week. So all my writing is done nights and weekends. Obviously I poured on the coal to write 70 pages a month in my spare time. But I loved the subject. I had also been learning about tribal sovereignty from Roger Jourdain, Wendell Chino, Newton Lamar, and Joe De La Cruz for a quarter of a century.

Second, you need to study the subject for a few years. Not five years, but more like 10 to 15. A few geniuses can master a topic in three years, but fewer than one percent can do that. Most of us 99 percenters take longer. My forthcoming book on termination was in germination for 35 years. My first book on grant writing was in germination for 15 years. I wrote my first proposal on a Saturday morning in Beverly LeBeau's kitchen in Redding, CA in 1970; it was jail. I did not know until Robert Mendoza told me that people gave away money. He said there was a man on San Francisco named Dave Fuller who ran a foundation that had given money to radical causes such as Cesar Chavez and the United Farm Workers. I took a shot at the proposal, and a week later we got the money! Holy cow, Batman, free money!

I knew so little about the subject that I immediately started studying grant writing. I read dozens of books on the subject. I took a course from Ann Miller at Stanford the next

My current book on Indian dropouts has been in germination for 25 years. My first book on Exemplary Programs in Indian Education (EPIEs) took 20 years to be ready. My last book "Racism in Indian Country" took over 20 years to put together. There were no other books on the subject, so it took a lot of both observation and digging to come up with the facts about the rape of Indian woman, sterilization, racism in lending practices, and racism in the schools.

Third, read a lot. I read about two books a week, and have for about 60 years. If you are not reading, and this means you, mommies and daddies, if you don't set the example, don't expect your kids to be readers. If I had more time I would read three or four books a week.

All people who want to become writers first have to learn how to be readers. Before you start writing, you should have read everything on the subject.

Fourth, do some practical work related to the subject. This could be training, writing reports, writing proposals, and doing program

Fifth, serve on boards, commissions, and to get bail money to get Pit River people out of panels. In the past 40 years I have been on the Minority Panel of The College Board, the minority panel for the American Association for Higher Education, the board of the National Indian Education Association, active member of the California Indian Education Association, consultant to the National Institute of Education, and a member of the National Society of Fund Raising Executives. I learned lots of things on all of them. I have also been a field reader for half a dozen federal programs, including OIE, Aging, Bilingual, and WEEA.

Now that you have done all these things, and are ready to write, you can start to do the following things-the actual stuff of writing and publishing.

- First, define your audience. It will not be everyone in the U. S., believe me. You will have to sell this to the publisher. If you don't know who your audience is, and how many there are, God help you. The publishing industry in the U. S. comes out with 60,000 new books a year, when they should probably only come out with 10,000. Nine out of every ten books lose money, so the publisher literally has to live on the profits from that tenth book. Your book will sell between 300 and 500, unless it is a sensational best seller. A lot of best sellers are trash-Peyton Place, Jacqueline Suzanne, and
- Second, prepare an outline. The minimum to put in an outline is chapter headings. The maximum will be 15 or so pages going into detail with every part of every chapter.,
- Third, find a publisher. This mostly means to find an agent first, which is the really hard part. Finding a publisher on your own is probably too hard, and you won't succeed. I was 66 years old, and had already written 25 books, before I got my first "legitimate" publisher.

- · Fourth, prepare your book proposal and submit it. Most publishers have easily accessible procedures for preparing a proposal. And don't think that your proposal will fit every publisher. Every time you submit it to a publisher, you will have to re-write it.
- Fifth, write the book. You should be able to produce between five and ten pages a day. And you will have to rewrite it between five and seven times. Seven was the magic number for both Hemingway and Suzanne. You will not get it right the first time, believe me.
- · Sixth, develop your bibliography. All academic books will require a biblio, and many pop books will as well. Every time I find something relevant to the book, I immediately put it into the biblio. My biblio on the dropout book is already 14 pages, and I am only 80% done with the writing.
- Seventh, compile your index. Every significant thing you mention in the book will go in the index—characters, studies, research, places, events, lawsuits, and so on. Nobody will do this for you.

In the past two years I have also become an editor for Mellen Press. They just published the first book I worked on, Troy Johnson's "The Cherokee Settlements of East Texas." And they want me to find more Indian books. Good luck, all you writers.

Dean Chavers, Ph.D., is the Director of Catching the Dream, a national scholarship and school improvement program for American Indians, located in Albuquerque. His address is CTD4DeanChavers@aol.com. His latest book is "Racism in Indian Country," published by Peter Lang.

Newspapers: Looking at our past to find our future

NOTES FROM INDIAN COUNTRY

TIM GIAGO (Nanwica Kciji) © 2012 Unity South Dakota

When radio appeared on the national scene in the early 1900s speculation began about its impact on the newspaper industry.

In the end radio never tried to compete against and has evolved to where the current format to call it "MacPaper." focuses on talk shows like Rush Limbaugh and followed the path of newspapers more closely by reporting the news from an independent perspective. Because NPR does not necessarily follow a political pattern, it is often accused of being a liberal media.

The major newspapers did not try to compete with nor emulate radio but instead stuck to the format that made them successful. And then along came television and many pundits predicted that newspapers would diminish in importance or die out altogether. A young co-ed named Susan Hurrah from San Jose, California once quipped, "I'm going home and catch my half-hour newspaper on my TV set." With its evening news that was national and local, television did attempt to compete against growth in televisions heyday. A newspaper like USA Today made its debut in the 1980s and soon became one of the largest newspapers in America. Nearly every newspaper changed its layout and design to emulate television. USA Today went to a more television type format with a lot of great photos and colorful graphs and charts. It also started to include many very newspapers but instead took its own route short news articles so much so that some began

But once again newspapers not only held by becoming more relevant, newspaper

A South Dakotan named Allen Neuharth had Laura Ingraham. National Public Radio has a vision of a national newspaper and against all odds USA Today is still holding its own. A man named Rupert Murdoch purchased the Wall Street Journal and has pushed it to the lead in circulation of all major newspapers. Considered a maverick and a conservative, Murdoch's chain of newspapers landed in troubled waters recently with the revelations of phone tapping and other illegal methods of getting private information for his tabloids. But Murdoch will withstand these problems and continue to be one of the biggest newspaper publishers in the world. How he does it should serve as an example for all other newspaper magnates.

But along came the Internet and newspaper publishers did a complete back flip. Instead of continuing as they had for 200 years as news vehicles that competed with radio and television their ground, but actually experienced extreme publishers decided to follow the path of the not making money on the Internet. Then why Internet and join it.

There were no cries of "extra, extra" on the streets of New York, but instead there were messages in the newspapers pushing people to America dropped off of the Internet and went join them on their websites. And for far too long back to concentrating their news coverage on the the websites were free pushing away subscribers communities they served so successfully for so of the daily newspapers. Circulation numbers many years? Would the Tucson Citizen, Rocky dwindled rapidly and advertising revenues, Mountain News or the Seattle Post-Intelligencer the life blood of newspapers, also went into the still be publishing if they had remained true to tank. This double-hit brought about the death their beginnings? knell of far too many daily newspapers. Instead of looking at the Internet as a challenge to their Perhaps some of us Lakota people are just plain existence as they did when radio and television old-fashioned, but the growth and success of threatened, newspapers instead joined the very a small weekly newspaper that is owned and villain about to bring them down.

newspaper Native Sun News hit the newsstands in South Dakota. The staff and management of the newspaper decided not to go on the Internet in a big way, but instead just show our front page, our editorial and our editorial cartoon. This was kind of a teaser because when people went to our website they saw a front page with good articles that usually jumped to another page. In order to see "the rest of the story" they had to subscribe. Did it work? In less than three years Native Sun South Dakota, a state with many, many weekly do they keep giving away the news that people were more than willing to pay for?

It is a long proven fact that newspapers are knology.net

What would happen if every newspaper in

It is a question that offers food for thought. operated by the Lakota people, a newspaper that Three years ago on April 1, 2009 my weekly continues to grow, is any indicator of surviving without going on the Internet, perhaps it is a method that should be studied by the big boys.

> The fact of the matter is that although I am now retired, I continue to love the newspaper business and I believe it should look to its past in order to find its future.

Tim Giago, an Oglala Lakota, is President of Unity South Dakota. He was a Nieman Fellow at Harvard with the Class of 1990. His weekly column won the H. L. Mencken Award in 1985. News became the largest weekly newspaper in He was the founder of The Lakota Times, Indian Country Today, Lakota Journal and Native Sun News. He can be reached at UnitySoDak1@

The viewpoints expressed in columns and letters are the opinions of the writers and not necessarily the opinion or viewpoint of the Native American Times publisher or staff. Send letters to editor@nativetimes.com. Please keep letters to 350 words or less. Sign your name, tribal affiliation and city of residence for verification purposes.

918-257-8869 www.okstatebank.com Equal Housing Lender

Native American Owned

MONKEY ISLAND

Native TIMES recycles with Tahlequah Recycling Incorporated... shouldn't you? Reeves Renovations Professional Construction, Remodeling & Repairs

Bathrooms • Kitchens • Paint Tile • Trim • Plumbing Electrical • Solar Panels Windmills • Winterizing Quality Work • Free Estimates

918-637-6736 johnwilliamreeves@juno.com Mayes & Cherokee Counties

Follow Us! www.twitter.com/nativetimes NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES

Address:
City:	State:	_ Zip:
Phone:

■ $65.00 for 52 issues ■ $32.50 for 26 issues ■ $16.25 for 13 issues ■ $1.25 single copy

Mail this form with a check or money order to: Native American Times • P.O. Box 411 Tahlequah, OK 74465 • 918-708-5838

More Jobs. More News. More Features. Every Day.

www.nativetimes.com

International leaders in Indigenous housing to speak at WIH Conference

Well-known TV host and housing expert Mike Holmes will give the opening keynote address.

VANCOUVER, Canada An outstanding lineup of international leaders in Indigenous housing will speak at the 2012 World Indigenous Housing Conference, being held June 11-15, 2012, in Vancouver, British Columbia, Canada. This is the first international event to bring politicians, best practices, build a global First Nations communities. network, and showcase Indigenous cultures.

conference themes—Sharing design, led by the AFN. Our Stories, Governance include:

Well-known TV host and and in Canada and the Holmes sufficiency and prosperity. Group—to renovate housing

Holmes stars in Holmes on Homes*, the #1 show on HGTV Canada, which is syndicated in the United States and other countries. Holmes will also lead a workshop at the conference—Rebuilding Devastated Communities on strategies for Indigenous communities to build the social, financial and technical capacity to respond to natural disasters.

National Chief Shawn A-inchut Atleo of the Assembly of First Nations will open the conference and join Mike Indigenous housing leaders, Holmes to share information policymakers, on the AFN-Holmes Group researchers and corporate Pilot Project, designed to leaders from around the build housing, skills and world together to learn from employment capacity in Ultimately, this project will lead to the creation of a First Keynote speakers and Nation Centre of Excellence on presenters will cover five green, sustainable community

The 2012 WIHC focuses Capacity Building, on Indigenous housing Government Partnerships, providers from the United Housing as a Determinant States, Canada, New Zealand of Health, and Disaster and Australia, because these Preparedness. WIHC speakers developed countries share common housing experiences established have housing expert Mike Holmes infrastructure. Consequently, will give the opening keynote the knowledge exchange at address at the conference on Sharing Our Stories; Sharing Building Homes and Building Our Successes is expected to Skills—a partnership between help enable Indigenous people the Assembly of First Nations around the world achieve self-

For more information Atikameksheng contact Andrew Leach, AHMA Anishnawbek First Nation CEO, at 604-921-2462 or in Ontario, and build a andrew.leach@ahma-bc.org. sustainable community based To register for the 2012 WIHC, on green practices. Mike visit www.indigenous2012.

Quapaw leader, business CEO create new gaming conference

SEAN HARRISON Public Relations Manager Downstream Casino Resort

QUAPAW, Okla. - Not all Indian gaming and development conferences are alike, but they are pretty similar. And none are like DNA (Development in Native America), which features a powerhouse line-up speakers in an unusual format, and debuts this April at Downstream Casino Resort, located in the northeast tip of Oklahoma. The idea for DNA sprouted from an almost rebellious attitude toward the "conference business," said cocreator Chairman John Berrey of the Quapaw Tribe.

"We kept seeing the same stuff at every conference and we just became kind of disenchanted with the approach they all used," Berrey explained, "We decided there was a need for something different."

So DNA offers a new and unique approach to spreading the whys and wherefores of successful gaming and development in Indian Country. The root of it there shouldn't be a secret to success. That is, Berrey said, if a tribe has achieved success and can identify the things that created that success then they should share it with other

And that's where John

Thompson, CEO of Elm Tree Partners, came in as a cocreator of DNA. Thompson is a finance consultant who specializes in Indian gaming and has helped develop numerous successes in the industry, including with Chairman Berrey and Downstream Casino Resort. Where Chairman Berrey and the Quapaw Tribe might have been more humble than to talk-up their successful resort, Thompson doesn't hold back.

"They are undoubtedly one of the great success stories in Indian Country right now," Thompson said. "So the DNA conference is basically about using Downstream as a very strong case study and sharing all those details about how the Quapaws did it."

The speaker line-up is a virtual who's who of today's most successful insiders and decision-makers in Indian Gaming. It includes Steve Stokdyk, partner, Latham & Watkins; James Freeland, managing director Summit Partners; Kevin Wadzinski, partner with DrinkerBiddle; Mathew Robinson, co-founder and principal of Klas-Robinson Q.E.D.; Mark Dvorchak, principal, Pro Forma Advisors LLC; Darryl La Count, deputy director of Bureau of Indian Affairs, Rocky Mountain Region; Steve Ward, partner, Conner & Winters; Brian Davis, design principal with JCJ Architecture; John Maxwell, managing director, Jefferies; Christine Swanick, partner, SheppardMullin; Steven Drewes, general manager, Downstream Casino Resort; Vice Chairman James Crawford of the Forest County Potawatomi Tribe; and John Baily, CEO, Tigua Inc.

Chairman Berrey and John Thompson will co-emcee the two days of sessions.

There are other important differences between DNA and the standard fare of gaming conferences. All DNA attendees will stay on the same path in the same room over the two days of seminars and sharing there will be no break-out sessions. Sessions will follow a sequential order that covers entire development process from start to finish. Each 50-minute session will be followed by an open forum so that anyone can ask questions or add comments to make sure everything is clearly understood. And DNA will be a vendor-free event.

"We really want to get away from the sales pitches and the secondary agendas," Berrey

Thompson added: "Our goal is to present unfiltered information and experience in a very straightforward way. It's a bit like the old adage, if you do what these people have

Quapaw Chairman John Berrey

John Thompson, CEO, Elm Tree Partners

done then you can have what they've got."

To that end, all presenters were very thoughtfully chosen for their specific areas of knowledge and experience, and for how they fit into that step-by-step philosophy of sharing.

The first DNA conference will be April 10-12, 2012. For more information call Heidi Buss at 651-335-4915.

Gregory E. Pyle, Chief of the Choctaw Nation of Oklahoma

Choctaw Chief nominated for Most Admired CEO

TRAVIS MORROW

OKLAHOMA Gregory E. Pyle, Chief of the Choctaw Nation of Oklahoma, was nominated for The Journal Record's third annual Most Admired CEO award. He was the only Native American tribal leader so honored. The award honors Oklahoma CEOs who consistently demonstrate strong leadership, integrity, vision, financial performance commitment community.

"The leaders we honored,"

Record, "give me great confidence in Oklahoma's future as we work to grow our state and make it better in every way."

Chief Pyle was first elected Chief of the Choctaw Nation in 1997. Since that time the tribe's membership has grown to over 200,000. The Choctaw Nation operates seven casinos, a manufacturing business, management services company, a printing company, document archiving company, 13 travel plazas said Mary Mélon, president and 12 smoke shops. These don't cut corners — we just and publisher of The Journal businesses generate hundreds get it done." of millions of dollars annually, which support tribal health care, education, housing, senior care and other social services.

One of the hallmarks of Chief Pyle's term in office has been his commitment to home-grown health care. The Choctaw Nation has built seven health clinics within its tribal area.

"When you build your own, you can build much cheaper and much faster than anybody else," Pyle said. "We

He describes his executive leadership style as a willingness to be innovative and to take chances.

"We're not afraid to fail because every failure brings us closer to success," Pyle said. "I've coined the phrase, 'Our executives need gray hair."

This year's nominees for Most Admired CEO were honored at an awards dinner at the National Cowboy & Western Heritage Museum in Oklahoma City.

Stickball · Drawing

Free concert aims to raise Native HIV/AIDS awareness

American Indians and Alaska Natives had the third highest rate per 100,000 persons of new HIV infections in 2007.

ARDMORE, Okla. - MAMA Knows, Inc., has committed to taking action to raise HIV awareness in their community. On Saturday, March 24th, at 7:00 p.m. MAMA Knows will host a free community concert in honor of National Women, Girls and Native American HIV/ AIDS Awareness Days at the Charles B. Goddard Center in Ardmore, Oklahoma. Musical entertainment will be provided by TAJJ, a jazz ensemble featuring Ardmore native Jemar Poteat.

March 20, 2012 marks the sixth annual National Native HIV/AIDS Awareness Day. The purpose of this day is to: 1) encourage Native people to get educated and to learn more about HIV/AIDS and its impact in their community; 2) work together to encourage testing options and HIV counseling; and 3) help decrease the stigma associated with HIV/AIDS. It is a time to reflect on those who have passed as well as those who are currently infected and affected by HIV/AIDS a "Celebration of Life" for all Native people.

HIV continues to increase among Native people as it has over the past decade. According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC), American Indians and Alaska Natives (AI/AN) had the third highest rate per 100,000 persons of new HIV infections in 2007, notwithstanding having the smallest population. Despite this, over half of AI/ANs and almost 60% of NHOPI have never been tested for HIV. This represents an enormous disparity that can only be addressed by HIV prevention efforts tailored to fit the needs of the community.

The distinguished sounds of TAJJ will be unmistakably shown through their diverse style of music selection including R&B, jazz, blues, and neo soul. TAJJ has performed at events and venues throughout Oklahoma including Riverwind Casino and Tulsa's Hard Rock Hotel and Casino. In addition to performing in Oklahoma TAJJ has performed at the infamous Buttons in Addison, Texas, Brooklyn's Sankofa, Houston's Red Cat, Chicago's Blue Room and L.A.'s Libertine.

The Charles B. Goddard Center is located at 401 First Ave SW in Ardmore, Oklahoma. Doors will open at 6:30 p.m. The performance will start at 7:00 with the first 300 gaining admission as this concert is free and open to the public with open seating. For more information about the event contact Kayla at MAMA Knows at (580)277-0367 or via email, kayla@mamaknowsinc.org. Knows and its programming are brought to you in part by the following: Oklahoma AIDS Care Fund, Jerome Westheimer Family Foundation, Inc. and a partnering agency of United Way of South Central Oklahoma, Inc.

· Fancy dancing · Beadwork Big Brothers Big Sisters Traditional language of Oklahoma Shooting hoops

Think of the possibilities! Step up and mentor a Native American child. Commit to changing a child's future. Commit to creating an impact in your tribal community.

How it Works

Step One: Fill out an application at www.bbbsok.org Step Two: Submit application. Receive phone call from BBBS to set up an interview.

Step Three: Attend an in-person interview. Bring copy of Drivers License, Proof of Insurance, Three References and complete a criminal background check.

Step Four: Once approved — matched with a child with similar interests!

Step Five: Pat on the back...you're making a difference!!!

All matches are supported by professional staff at local BBBS agencies. BBBS Match Support Specialists regularly consult with volunteers, children, and parents.

Want more information?

Contact Kristy Smithson, BBBSOK Manager of Native American Partnerships, by phone (405) 606-6309 or email kristy.smithson@bbbsok.org | www.bbbsok.org

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT / HELP WANTED

U.S. Department of the Interior Office of the Assistant Secretary-Indian Affairs

Job Vacancy

Deputy Assistant Secretary Management

Job Announcement Number: ASIA-SES-2012-PQ609381 Salary: $119, 554 - $165, 300 per annum Open Period: February 15, 2012 - March 30, 2012 Series & Grade: ES-340

Are you interested in working for a federal agency that is responsible for protecting and improving the trust assets of American Indian and Alaska Native tribes and individuals?

The U.S. Department of the Interior is searching for candidates to develop and oversee the implementation of policies that govern and facilitate the provision of services to American Indian and Alaska Native tribes and individuals by a federal agency. These administrative functions include financial management, strategic planning, workforce planning, human resources, information technology management and safety management.

This is a full-time permanant position with the Office of the Assistant Secretary-Indian Affairs located in Washignton, D.C.

For more information and application procedures, please visit www.usajobs.gov or contact Indian Affairs Human Resources Office at (202) 208-2825.

The U.S. Department of the Interior is an Equal Opportunity Employer Preference will be given to American Indians and Alaska Natives

Sac & Fox Nation Casino is accepting Applications for

General Manager

Oualifications: Bachelors Degree in Business / Marketing Strong Leadership Skills Casino Management Experience

Applicants must pass background and drug screen. Native American preference is recognized.

Submit resume by fax @ 405-395-0790 or visit our website at sandfcasino.com to apply online

ASSISTANT U.S. ATTORNEY

The U.S. Attorney's Office for the Western District of Oklahoma is seeking to fill a temporary (less than one year) or term position (more than one year) which may expire April 30, 2013, subject to availability of funds. This position may be extended and/ or made permanent without further advertising. Depending on the nature of the appointment, benefits may or may not be available. Salary is based on the number of years of professional attorney experience. Applicants must possess a J.D. degree, be an active member of the bar in good standing (any jurisdiction), and have at least one (1) year of litigation experience post-J.D. Resumes should be submitted to Lisa Engelke, HR Specialist, at usaokw. jobapplication@usdoj.gov. Resumes must be received by March 16, 2012, and should reference announcement number12-0KW-01-A.

OK PUBLIC EMPLOYEES RETIREMENT SYSTEM INTERNAL AUDITOR

Creates, maintains, and updates

all internal audit programs. Tests, analyzes and reports all findings to management. MA or BA in accounting or related field. CPA or CIA required. Five years professional accounting, auditing or compliance auditing experience preferred. Salary commensurate with experience and education. Deadline for applications: 3/23/2012. For more information and application procedures, go to http:// www.opers.ok.gov/jobs. EOE

CHEROKEE NATION®

Cherokee Nation whose headquarters are located in beautiful Tahlequah Oklahoma is a national leader in Indian tribal governments and economic development in Oklahoma, We are a dynamic, progressive organization, which owns several business enterprises and administers a variety of services for the Cherokee people in Northeastern Oklahoma. Cherokee Nation offers an exceptional employee benefits plan with Comprehensive Health, Life, 401(k), Holiday Pay, Sick Leave and Annual Leave.

CURRENT OPPORTUNITIES

#6217 RPT Cook I (Food Distribution) Nowata - Close 03/22/2012

HASTINGS HOSPITAL, TAHLEQUAH #5768 RPT Medical Technologist Close 3/27/2012 #5745 RFT Medical Technologist Close 3/27/2012 #6105 RFT Medical Technologist II Close 3/27/2012

#6286 RFT Inpatient RN (12 Hour Rotations) Close 3/20/2012 Interested applicants please apply at www.cherokee.org

Cherokee Nation Human Resources Department PO Box 948 Tahlequah, OK 74465 (918) 453-5292 or 453-5050

Employment will be contingent upon drug test results. Indian preference is considered.

Pawnee Tribal Development Corporation Vacancy Announcement

HUMAN RESOURCES DIRECTOR Closing Date: March 21, 2012

The Human Resources Director answers directly to the Chief Executive Officer and is responsible for management of human resources activities, such as administration, employment, compensation, benefits, employee relations, safety, employee development, and training. This individual is expected to exercise a high degree of confidentiality and responsibility. In the performance of job duties, this individual must exercise sound judgment, initiative, and self-direction. Performs other duties and projects as assigned. Bachelor's degree or equivalent, or four to six years Human Resources related experience and/or training, or equivalent combination of education and experience.

ADMINISTRATIVE ASSISTANT Closing Date: March 21, 2012

The Administrative Assistant reports directly to the Chief Executive Officer and is responsible for providing administrative support to the CEO. This individual is expected to exercise a high degree of confidentiality and responsibility in the conduct of administrative duties. In the performance of job duties, this individual must exercise sound judgment, initiative, and self-direction. Performs other duties and projects as assigned. Must have 3-years general office experience or equivalent business or clerical coursework.

COMPLETE JOB DESCRIPTIONS AVAILABLE UPON REQUEST.

TO APPLY, SEND A RESUME TO: P.O. Box 280 Pawnee, OK 74058 Phone: (918)762-4832 Fax: (918)762-2219 Email: hr@pawneetribaldevelopment.com

Pawnee Tribal Development Corporation operates a drug-free workplace. The selected applicant must submit to and pass applicable drug test. Additionally, must be able to pass background check in order to obtain gaming license.

EVENTS

*Email your powwow or other event info to: Lisa@ nativetimes.com. Name, date, time, place and contact 11:30 a.m. at Benjamin information is free.

EVERY WEDNESDAY Kiowa class beginning in February at 6:30 pm, Oliphant Hall, Room 141, Tulsa University. Info call Sarah, (918) 445-5213

EVERY THURSDAY

The Otoe-Missouria Substance Abuse and Behavioral Health Programs sponsor an open group for families touched by addiction from noon to 1 p.m. at the Otoe-Missouria Health Building. This is a confidential group. Call 580-723-4466 x252 or x262 for more information.

SECOND TUESDAY Cherokee Artists Association meeting at 202 E. 5th Street Tahlequah, Okla. Info: (918) 458-0008 or www. cherokeeartistsassociation.org

FOURTH THURSDAY Each month the American Indian Chamber of Commerce of Oklahoma

- Eastern Chapter hosts a monthly luncheon at Bacone College, Muskogee, Okla. Wacoche Hall. Please RSVP one week ahead of time. Phone: (918) 230-3759

EVERY 2ND SATURDAY Indian Taco Sales - from 11-2:30pm at OK Choctaw Tribal Alliance, 5320 S. Youngs Blvd, Oklahoma City www. okchoctaws.org

MON/WED AND THURS The Marble City Nutrition Center serves hot meals at the Marble City Community Center at 11:30 a.m. Meals are free to anyone over 50, but a small donation is suggested to help with the expense of the program. Marble City Nutrition Center, 711 N. Main, Marble City, Okla. Phone: (918) 775-2158

YOUTH COUNCIL The Native Nations Youth Council (NNYC) bimonthly meetings from 6:30pm -8:30pm @ the Youth Services of Tulsa Activity Center (311 S. Madison - on 3rd just west of Peoria). Call to confirm location. Info Call: Chad

Gilley (918) 382-2204 or

nnyc@ihcrc.org

THROUGH MARCH 31 Tulsa Library's Festival of Words. For events and times, call the AskUs Hotline, 918-549-7323, or visit the library's website, www. tulsalibrary.org.

THROUGH MAY Free beginner-level Cherokee language classes in communities throughout the tribe's jurisdiction. Once a week for ten weeks. For locations or to register, call Bill Andoe at 918-453-5151.

MARCH 20 Confidential HIV testing at the Claude Cox Omniplex, Muscogee Creek Nation, Okmulgee, from 9:00am to 2:00pm.

MARCH 23 Miss Indian Oklahoma City Competition & Performance at 6:30 pm, 3801 SE 29th St. Del City, OK. Info contact Shirley Wapskineh 405-632-5227 or swapskineh@ sbcglobal.net

MARCH 24 Honor Dance for Shayla Miller, 2011 Sac & Fox Veterans Honor Guard Princess, 5 miles South of Stroud, OK at Sac & Fox Community Building. Gourd Dance starts @ 2pm, 5:30 supper, intertribal/war

dancing to follow

MARCH 31 CCC Rally in The Valley Youth Powwow at Coffeyville Community College. A youth competition and intertribal powwow. Doors open at Noon. Call Taylor Davis at 620-251-7700 ext. 2092.

MARCH 31 Wild Onion Dinner at Pickett Chapel United Methodist Church, 17610 S. Hickory Sapulpa, Ok, 5 miles south of Sapulpa on Hickory, 11am to 3pm. $8 adults, $4.00 12 and under. Proceeds to benefit our Oklahoma Indian Missionary Conference annual apportionments. Info: 918-321-3109

MARCH 31 Birthday Celebration for Florabelle Franklin Yeahpau Wolf - 91 years Young.

St. Patricks Catholic church - Parish Hall, Anadarko OK., 10 a.m - 5 p.m. Please bring a covered dish. Meat will be provided.

MARCH 31 "Play Golf Native America Day," a free program for families to experience a day of fun, from 10 a.m. - 1 p.m. at Cherokee Hills Golf Club located at Hard Rock Hotel & Casino Tulsa. Registration begins at 8:30 a.m. Info email Crystal Echo Hawk: crystal@nb3f.org

APRIL 3-5 OSHA 10-hour class. $10 fee - free for all TERO and 477 participants. Info and registration call Pawnee Nation Education Division 918-762-3227.

APRIL 6 Indian Taco Sale 11:00 AM - 2:00 PM at Norman First American UMC, 1950 East Beaumont Drive, Norman, Okla. Call Ahead for Speedy Service. Free Delivery on Orders of 10 or More (405) 321-5640

APRIL 7 Tulsa Creek Indian Community Wild Onion Dinner from 11-3 at 8611 S Union Ave, Tulsa OK 74132 Ph: (918) 298-2464

APRIL 7 Ponca Gourd Dance 9th Annual Spring Dance White Eagle Cultural Center 5 miles south of Ponca City, OK (580) 268-3313

APRIL 14 All Gourd Honor Dance for Micheal Tsotaddle at Red Buffalo Hall, Carnegie, OK, 2p.m. - ? For more information call Darla Tsotaddle (405) 432-8377 or Mavis Tsotaddle (580) 654-1704.

APRIL 28 "O-SKOO" Co-Ed Basketball Tournament (All Indun) PRE-"O-SKOO" ~ 30 YRS TO 39 YRS & "O-SKOO" ~ 40 YRS TO ??? YRS. $50.00 Entry fee. 8 Man Roster: 4 Ole Men & 4 Ole Women. For more info, call Tonkawa Tribe Education Programs: 580-628-2561 LISA ext 125 or LEAH ext 131. Fund Raiser for end of summer WIA Youth trip!

COURTESY / CHEROKEE NATION COMMUNICATIONS

Cherokee Nation second-grade immersion students Braelyn Patterson and Wesley Shade examine the rocks and cards they received from their pen pals at the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians' Immersion School in Cherokee, N.C. The two schools recently started the pen pal program to encourage and promote stronger cultural interactions in Cherokee.

Immersion students share with pen pals in Cherokee

TAHLEQUAH, Okla. — The Cherokee Nation recently started a new pen pal program with the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians in North Carolina to encourage and promote stronger cultural interactions in the Cherokee language.

Immersion students in kindergarten, first grade and second grade from both tribes have been exchanging activities, cards and cultural items, all written in Cherokee. Recently, Cherokee Nation's second-grade immersion students received a package from their pen pals containing materials they collected in the forest. Each student bagged up items including sticks, moss, lichens and rocks and labeled the bags with their Cherokee name.

"The kids are excited and they feel like they're getting to know the other kids a little bit," said Denise Chaudoin, Cherokee Nation Immersion School second-grade teacher. "It's a really good program for the kids in both areas to get to know each other and realize we're all Cherokees, whether we're from the east or west."

The Cherokee Nation Immersion School, Tsalagi Tsunadeloquasdi, began in 2001 as a language preservation program, which aims to educate children in a cultural environment while revitalizing and promoting the use of the Cherokee language. Students in preschool through sixth grade are immersed into an environment where Cherokee is the only language spoken.

According to Sequoyah Schools Curriculum Director Samantha Benn-Duke, the objectives of the pen pal program are to facilitate stronger communication with schools in Cherokee, introduce students to other dialects of the Cherokee language, provide opportunities to interact with other students that speak Cherokee and to create mutual topics of discussion to facilitate communication with the Eastern Band.

"The Atse Kituwah Academy in Cherokee, N.C. has students beginning at six months of age through second grade," Benn-Duke said. "We have communicated with them sporadically in the past, mostly via iChat, but we hope the new pen pal program will elicit stronger and more frequent communication between classes."

For more information about Cherokee Nation Immersion School visit www. cherokee.org or call 918-207-4900.

Evening of poetry on tap at Northeastern

TAHLEQUAH, Okla. – Northeastern State University and the Center for Tribal Studies is presenting an eventing of poetry by Lance Henson, Southern Cheyenne, Tuesday, March 27 at 7 p.m. as part of the university's 2012 Arts of Indigenous Cultures series.

The event is free and will be held in the Webb Auditorium.

Henson's poetry, which incorporates Cheyenne philosophy and traditions as well as social and political commentary on the modern world, is known for its powerful imagery, brevity and universal appeal.

Born in Washington, D.C., Henson was raised on a farm near Calumet, Okla. and grew up living in the Southern Cheyenne culture. He has published 28 volumes of poetry and has been translated into 25 languages.

Sheldon Bernard Chase

The Dictionary of Literary Biography says of Henson, "One of the few contemporary Native American poets who writes bilingual poetry, Lance Henson has received international recognition for his knowledge of Cheyenne language and culture and his skill as a poet in English.. Having traveled and read widely, Henson acknowledges influences from European, Latin American, and Oriental literature; but he remains Cheyenne in his basic outlook, returning to Oklahoma each June for the Sun Dance."

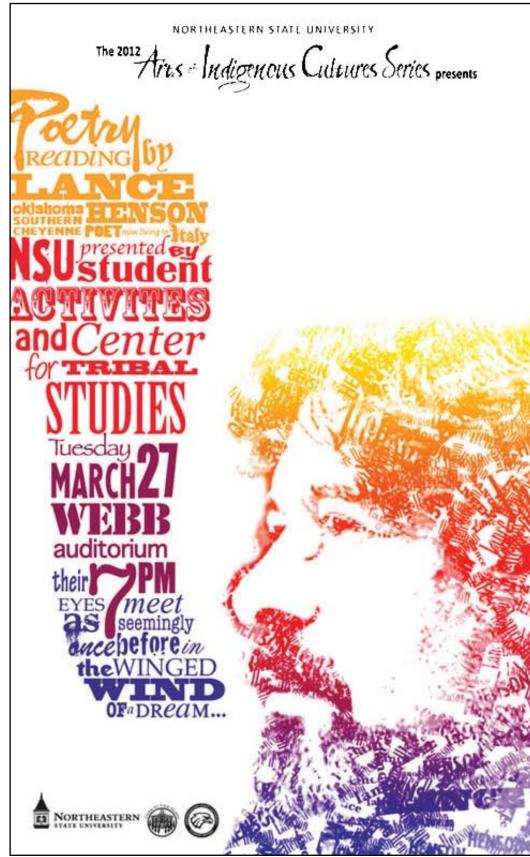

Henson conducted poetry workshops through the Artist in Residence program of the State Arts Council of Oklahoma for 10 years, then began to travel. In 1993, he represented the United States Information Service as a Featured Lecturer in Singapore, Thailand, New Guinea and New Zealand. He also has represented the Southern Cheyenne Nation with the European Free Alliance in Leeuwarden, Netherlands and at the United Nations Indigenous Peoples Conference in Geneva in His readings include the One World Poetry Festival in Amsterdam, the International Poetry Festival in France and the Geraldine Dodge Poetry Festival in New Jersey. He was selected for a residency at the Smithsonian Institution through the Distinguished Native American Scholars program and was also a resident at the Millay Colony for the Arts in 1995 and poet-in-residence at the University of New Mexico in Albuquerque.

Henson is a member of the Native American Church, the American Indian Movement and the Cheyenne Dog Soldier Society.

He currently resides in Italy.

MORE JOBS, MORE NEWS, MORE EVENTS , VISIT ONLINE AT WWW.NATIVETIMES.COM PLUS LOOK FOR NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES ON TWITTER & FACEBOOK!

- Artists depict Wounded Knee Massacre
- Tonto: The new and improved version?
- Senate votes to honor 'Mrs. Swing'

TODAY'S INDEPENDENT INDIAN NEWS

- A FREE PUBLICATION

WWW.NATIVETIMES.COM

AMERICAN

VOLUME 18 + ISSUE 13

PUBLISHED WEEKLY

MARCH 30, 2012

Eagle makes trip from Metro tracks to repository

■ At least two acts of Congress make it a potential crime to possess even a single unauthorized feather.

STEVE HENDRIX and DANA HEDGPETH The Washington Post

COMMERCE CITY, Colo. (AP) - In a nondescript building on a decommissioned Army base in Colorado last week, a man with a face mask opened a cardboard box, removed a black plastic bag, snapped the seal and pulled out a bald eagle.

A black mist of eagle down filled the air, some of it settling on the man's Tyvek lab coat.

"His tail is really nice," declared Dennis Wiist, a U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service specialist. He held the bird in two gloved hands, briskly considering the huge dark wings folded across its trunk, the talons locked in a final clinch, the beak slightly ajar.

"And a really good head," Wiist said as he laid the bird on the stainless steel table and began probing with practiced fingers. "That's good; we are desperate for good heads."

It was that unmistakable white head - spotted by a Metro Blue Line commuter during rush hour - that launched this bird on its strange journey from a train track in Alexandria to the U.S. Eagle Repository on the outskirts of Denver, the only legal supplier of bald eagle parts used in Native American religious ceremonies.

There are few animals in the United States more shielded by law than bald eagles, a revered national symbol but a species that was nearly wiped out four decades ago. At least two acts of Congress make it a potential crime to possess even a single unauthorized feather.

See EAGLE Continued on Page 6

FILE PHOTO / JOE AMON / THE DENVER POST / WWW.DENVERPOST.COM

Wildlife repository specialist Dennis Wiist checks an eagle at the National Eagle Repository in Commerce City, Colo. The Repository receives eagle bodies from wherever they fall and helps process them so Native American religious practitioners have the requisite eagle feathers, talons, etc. for their ceremonies.

Turning the century mark: Comanche woman celebrates 100 years

PHOTO COURTESY COMANCHE NATION NEWS

Josephine Myers-Wapp, Comanche, celebrates her 100th birthday Feb. 10 in Lawton, Okla. with family and friends.

DANA ATTOCKNIE Native American Times

LAWTON, Okla. - Bouquets of flowers color the path from the entry way into the living room where Josephine Myers-Wapp, Comanche, sits in her recliner watching TV and visiting with her son Ed Wapp on a warm Sunday afternoon. The visit is a time to reminisce as well as a history lesson.

"There were signs that said no Indians or dogs allowed," Ed Wapp said from the edge of a recliner

"Yeah. Indians and dogs," Josephine said, then laughed and teased her son, "They compared you with a dog?"

"I guess so," Ed, 68, laughed, still in disbelief of how people were treated long ago.

Josephine and her son reflected upon the evolution of people and places, including Josephine's own achievements in her life and her career. She turned 100 years old on Feb. 10, and has experienced drastic changes in the world as well as events like the Great Depression, the Oklahoma Dust Bowl of 1930, the assassinations of John F. Kennedy and Martin Luther King, Jr., and the first trip to the moon.

The flower arrangements sprinkled throughout her home are from family and friends who helped celebrate her birthday on Feb. 10 at the Comanche Nation Elderly Center in Lawton, Okla.

What Josephine does remember from the past 100 years brings laughter, reflection and appreciation.

See 100 YEARS Continued on Page 8

Tribes dealing with illegal trade of eagles

■ In a recent case on the Crow Reservation, six tribal citizens were charged with and pleaded guilty to various violations related to illegally trafficking in eagles and eagle parts.

LORNA THACKERAY The Billings Gazette

BILLINGS, Mont. (AP) - In the free-roaming days on the Western Plains, only certain tribal members were given the right to trap eagles.

They dug pits in the flight path of eagles and lay down inside, covering the opening with a lattice of sticks and leaves. Fresh meat baited the trap. It always faced west because eagles came down on the west wind, according to Hidatsa legend. The Hidatsa, who now live in North Dakota, are close kin to the Crow and were as one with them hundreds of years ago.

While the eagle focused on the meat, a skilled eagle hunter lying in the loosely covered pit would grab the bird's feet and tie them together. The wings were tied as well. The hunter would carry the eagle back to camp. If only one or two eagles were caught, the Hidatsa plucked the tail feathers and released their captives. If there were more, some might be killed.

It was not a disrespectful, wanton act. Eagles, spirit messengers and spirit helpers to those who had been visited by the bird during vision quests, were held in high regard by Plains Indians.

That's not the way eagles have been treated by poachers preying on the population in Montana and other states. In a recent case on the Crow Reservation now making its way through the courts, six tribal citizens were charged with and pleaded guilty to various violations related to illegally trafficking in eagles and eagle parts.

At least 10 whole bald and golden eagles were listed in the indictments along with feathers, wings, tails and bones of many more.

Court documents said Ernie L. Stewart, 33, of Wyola, told a U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service informant

See TRADE Continued on Page 6

Agency uses traditional healing to tackle abuse

RYAN BOETEL Farmington Daily Times

Anonymous meetings.

FARMINGTON, N.M. (AP) - At Totah Behavioral Health Authority, alcoholics take weekly sweat lodges and Navajo language instruction instead of mandatory one-onone counseling and Alcoholics

Staff reports show the traditional techniques, often combined with standard substance abuse counseling, are working. The agency is reporting that more than 50 percent of its clients are finding employment after substance abuse treatment, according to six years' worth of the program's annual evaluation reports.

show consistent increases of relatives leaving and being housed, having less involvement in the legal system and their employment is increasing," said Kristine Carlson, the program and clinical administrator at Totah was established in 2001. Staff treat San Juan County's homeless population for substance abuse and mental health issues. About 70 percent of the program's clients are court ordered to start therapy there.

The agency is unique because it takes standard substance abuse counseling American employees blend it with traditional Navajo cultural.

About 90 percent of the patients Totah staff refer to them as relatives are American

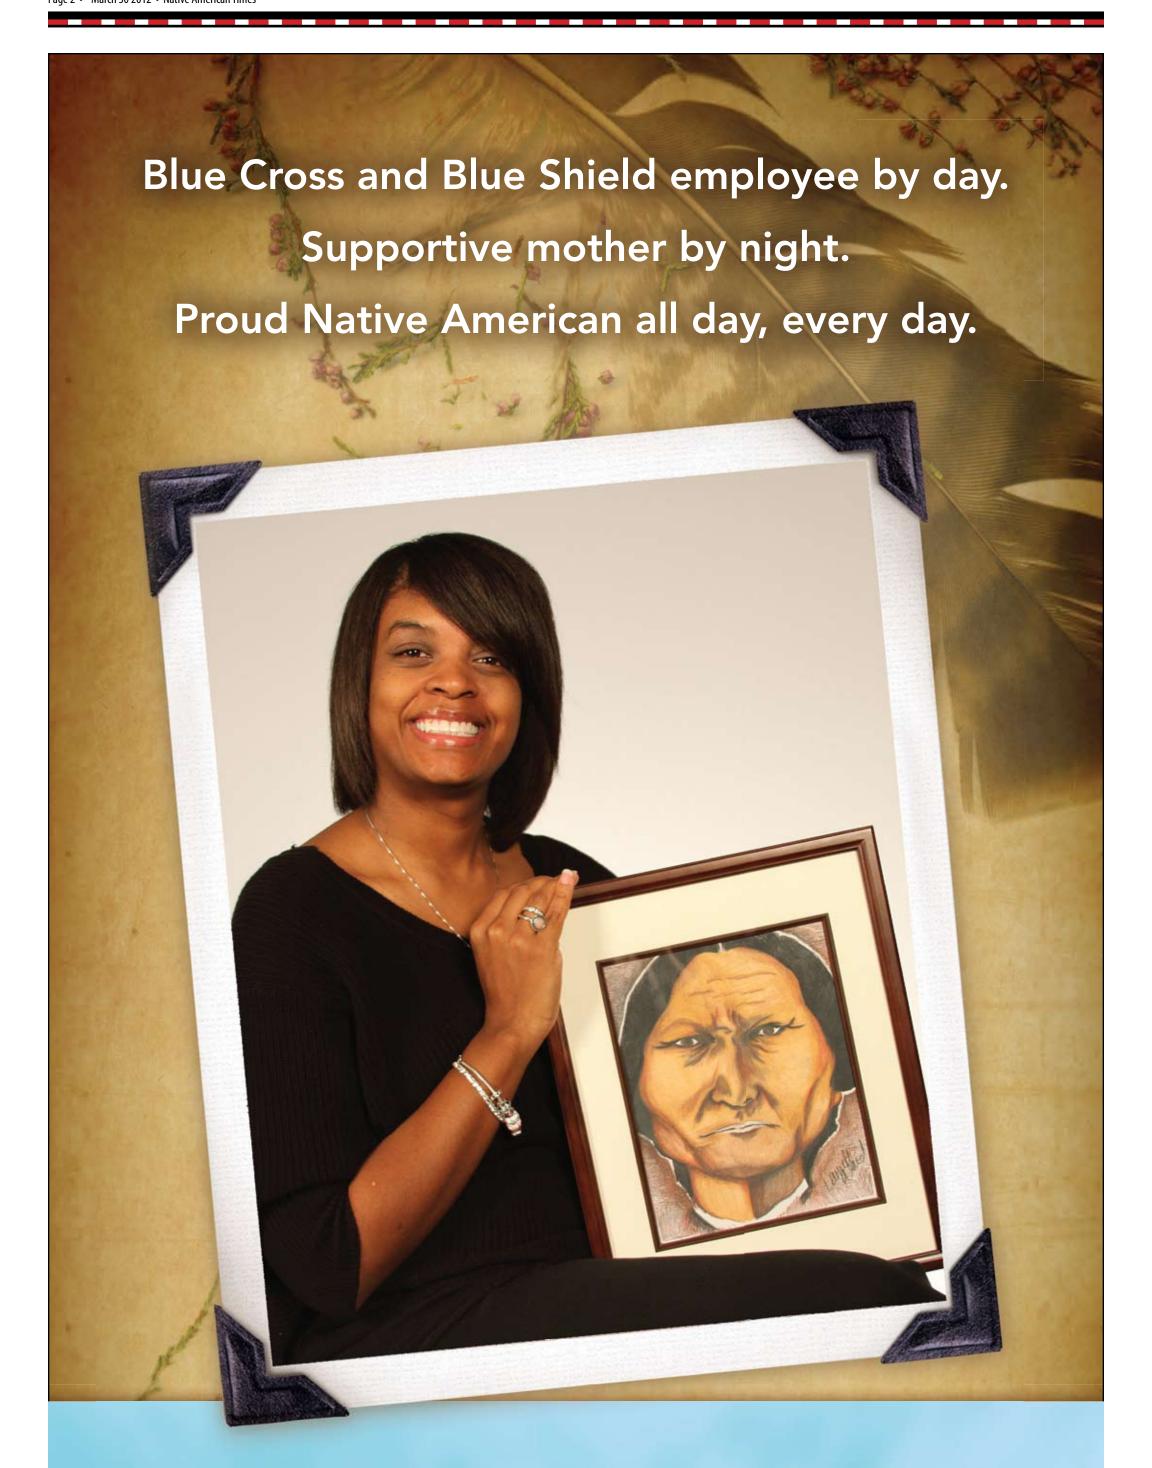

"On the Western-medicine side, our staff is well trained on evidence-based practices for substance and mental health issues," said Mike Renaud, the regional director of Presbyterian Medical Service, which operates the agency. "And then we rely on our Native staff to bring their expertise to us."

See HEALING Continued on Page 5

AP PHOTO / AUGUSTA LIDDIC / THE DAILY TIMES

Alice Holiday, a traditional service coordinator at Totah Behavioral Health Authority in Farmington N.M. holds sage used for therapy and burned in the traditional sweat lodge Totah on Friday, March 2, 2012.

Congratulations to Danielle Ward, winner of Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Oklahoma's Native American art contest, for her portrait of Sitting Bull. Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Oklahoma is proud to honor the Native American culture and Oklahoma's rich heritage through our diverse workforce and commitment to our communities. Together, we are Oklahoma.

BlueCross BlueShield of Oklahoma

bcbsok.com

Native leaders tackle fetal alcohol issue

RACHEL D'ORO Associated Press

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) -Morgan Fawcett calls himself an alcoholic who is about to celebrate two decades of sobriety - on his 20th

Even though he is a non-drinker, the Anchorage-born Tlingit blames alcohol for a host of ailments, including constant headaches, learning disabilities and constricted muscles.

He was born with fetal alcohol syndrome after his mother drank as much as 100 days during her pregnancy, he told Alaska Natives, American Indians and others who gathered Thursday in Anchorage for a two-day conference on fetal alcohol spectrum disorders.

"Everybody is affected by alcohol," Fawcett said. "Nobody is immune.

And we all have to deal with the effects every day."

State officials say Alaska Natives have greatly brought down the prevalence of the most severe form of FASD among Native newborns - fetal alcohol syndrome. The rate of fetal alcohol syndrome, however, remains significantly higher among Alaska Natives than non-Native newborns in Nationally, the incidence of FASD is more than two times greater among indigenous newborns than in non-Native births, according to information available for a problem that is underreported in Native and non-Native populations alike, said Candace Shelton, a senior Native American specialist with the federal Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration. SAMHSA is the sponsor of the conference.

Fawcett, a Native flutist and advocate for public awareness of FASD, was among people directly affected by fetal alcohol syndrome who spoke at the conference. He said his goal in life is to share his story, not because it's unique but because it's common and he has the gift of public speaking.

"I can come from a place that offers you the truth as I know it," he said.

Another speaker was Mary Andrews of Bethel, who said she struggles with the anguish of being a mother to a 14-year-old boy with FASD. "It was very hard to talk about at first," Andrews said, fighting back tears. "I was guilty for what I did to my boy."

Andrews said a stepson who had FASD died a few years ago, at age 20. He helped her see how little she knew about what the condition feels like, she

He helped her deal with the challenges of her younger son being different from his other siblings, who lose patience with him, calling him stupid. "It hits me hard when I hear him labeled like that," she said.

Other participants in the conference include behavioral health specialists, policymakers and tribal leaders from around the state and lower 48.

Patricia Getty, one of the SAMHSA officials in attendance, said that alcohol-exposed pregnancies are not a stigma unique to Native communities alcohol is consumed globally.

Getty told the crowd she is Irish and noted the recent St. Patrick's Day holiday, which for many is nothing more than a celebration of drinking and intoxication.

"It is a universal, human population problem," Getty said. "It's not just Native populations."

NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES

Publisher & Editor LISA SNELL editor@nativetimes.com

Contributing Writers Dana Attocknie WESLEY MAHAN KAREN SHADE

Advertising Sales KATHLEEN ROBERTSON LISA SNELL ROB WALTON advertising@nativetimes.com

Distribution SHELBY HICKS STEVE LACY WESLEY MAHAN MICHAEL MARRIS KATHLEEN ROBERTSON Brenda Slaughter

The Native American Times, formerly the Oklahoma Indian Times, is published weekly (except the last week of the year) by Lisa Hicks Snell. Mailing address is PO Box 411 Tahleguah, OK 74465. All the contents within the Native American Times are copyrighted material. Any reproduction, redistribution without the written consent of the NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES is strictly

> Each week's issue is available for free download online at: www.nativetimes.com

Subscription rates: $65.00 for fifty-two issues, $32.50 for twenty-six issues, or $16.25 for thirteen issues. A single copy is $1.25 (Rates are for postage and handling) Send check or money order to:

> NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES Attn: Subscriptions P.O. Box 411 Tahlequah, OK 74465-0411

Phone: (918) 708-5838 Fax: (888) 689-4873

Postmaster: Send Change of Address Form 579 to: NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES P.O. Box 411, Tahlequah, OK 74465

WWW.NATIVETIMES.COM - News from the crossroads of Indian Country

bill into law

OLYMPIA, Wash. (AP) Gov. Chris Gregoire has signed into law a bill that opens the door for dismantlingstatejurisdiction American Indian tribes.

Signed into law March tribes themselves.

Washington state in 1963

Taking effect in June, the law requires both the governor and the federal Department of Interior to agree to the state ceding its authority. That is done in consultation with state and

The state will retain the ability to civilly commit those it deems to be sexually

Native American

lisa@nativetimes.com

Governor signs tribal retrocession

19, the measure creates a procedure for a tribe to ask the state to cede its jurisdiction over criminal and civil matters to the federal government and the assumed jurisdiction over matters including juvenile delinquency, truancy, mental illness, adoption proceedings and motor vehicle traffic on tribal lands.

local elected leaders.

violent predators.

hiring preference? Advertise to Native Americans!

FREE ONLINE with PRINT BUY E-mail your ad for a quote to

Artists depict Wounded Knee massacre, 1973 occupation

KRISTI EATON Associated Press

SIOUX FALLS, S.D. (AP) – Jerry Fogg was just a teenager when he was handed a gun and told to help guard the South Dakota town of Wounded Knee during one of the most public displays of protest by the American Indian Movement nearly four decades ago.

For three days, Fogg joined about 200 Oglala Sioux members and their followers as they occupied and seized the town for 71 days.

"It felt like you were guarding a president," the Yankton Sioux tribal member who now resides in Sioux Falls recalled. "I was told if I was to fire, I was to fire over everyone's head."

Fogg is one of nearly 25 artists – both Native and non-Native - from around the country displaying their artwork at Augustana College's Center for Western Studies in Sioux Falls as part of a first-ofits-kind art exhibit and show.

"Interpretations of Wounded Knee 1973 and 1890" is meant to help foster understanding and build stronger relationships between Natives and non-Natives as the 40th anniversary of the Wounded Knee takeover approaches, said Timothy Hoheisel, director of Outreach and Promotion at The Center for Western Studies.

In 1890, the U.S. Army killed Miniconjou Lakota chief Spotted Elk, also known as Big Foot, and 300 of his followers, including women and children, on the banks of the Wounded Knee Creek

"I didn't do anything to Jerry Fogg. My ancestors basically killed his ancestors," said Hoheisel, referring to the 1890 massacre. "By us coming together with this exhibit, there's a chance for reconciliation."

The exhibit is a prelude to the annual Dakota Conference, which brings together professional and amateur historians and researchers to present papers on a particular topic relevant to Northern Plains history. The theme for this year's conference is "Wounded Knee 1973: Forty Years Later." The event, scheduled for April 27-28, is bringing together all sides from the occupation – former American Indian Movement members, federal agents and prosecutors, and journalists and bystanders who witnessed the uprising.

"This one has a bit of an edge to it, as we anticipated it would," said Harry Thompson, executive director for The Center for Western Studies.

This is the first time in the conference's 44-year history that there has been an art show to go along with the conference. Hoheisel said it fit well with this year's theme.

The exhibit, which runs through May 26, includes two-dimensional and threedimensional pieces in various art forms.

In one oil-on-canvas painting - titled "Still Hanging on the Res" by artist Bruce Preheim of Vermillion, S.D. - Christ, a feather atop his head, is shown crucified.

"We crucify Christ every day by not dealing with Native American disparity and rights," Preheim wrote in his artist description of the piece.

Red paint covers half the canvas in "Last Stand II (Massacre at Wounded Knee)" by Sioux Falls artist Kevin Bierbaum, who is not Native American. Hoheisel said the red paint depicts the blood from the massacre.

In "Archive," one of Fogg's pieces about the 1890 killings, the history lies in the

A map of Wounded Knee Creek drawn by a soldier moments before the killings acts as the bottom layer of the work. On top of that, there's another sheet with the names of those who died or were wounded. An actual broken hoop is placed in the center, representing the end of the Native's freedom to choose. Inside the hoop Fogg shows Chief Spotted Elk frozen in the winter cold.

'Still Hanging Around the Res' by Bruce Preheim

Metal pins represent the 7th Cavalry, while a small pair of moccasins with a hair plume is in honor of the children killed. Thirty-eight 1890 Indian head pennies line the bottom of the piece, with an 1890 silver dollar in the middle that is meant to "give attention to a dreadful time that should never be forgotten or repeated," Fogg wrote in his artist note.

Fogg spent three months working on the piece and hopes it will help remind today's young people to remember and honor the past.

"You should remember. There's a story behind every work," he said.

If you go...

THE CENTER FOR WESTERN STUDIES AT AUGUSTANA COLLEGE: 2001 S. Summit Ave., Sioux Falls; http://www.augie. edu/cws or 605-274-4007. "Interpretations of Wounded Knee 1973 and 1890" through May 26. Open Monday-Friday, 8 a.m.-5 p.m., Saturday, 10 a.m.-2 p.m. Closed Sundays and major holidays. Free.

Metal Roofing & Siding

Professional Construction and Home Repairs

Free Estimates

Charles Snell 918-507-2902

Native American Contractor

PEARY L. ROBERTSON

ATTORNEY AT LAW (405) 382-7300

> INDIAN LAW PROBATE ADOPTIONS

RESTRICTED LAND ISSUES

SOCIAL SECURITY DISABILITY

J.D, Oklahoma City University; MBA, Cameron University; B.B.A. (Economics), University of Oklahoma

1700 N. MILT PHILLIPS AVENUE, SEMINOLE, OKLAHOMA

VISIT US AT WWW.FACEBOOK.COM/PEARYROBERTSON

SUPERNAW'S OKLAHOMA INDIAN SUPPLY

Wholesale items for Pow Wow Vendors

Bone chokers $20 per dozen

Handmade lamp worked glass bead bracelets $1.00 each Glass bead stretch bracelets 5 for $2.50

12 Necklaces: Chain w/ pendant and display pad $13.50 36 inch gemstone chip strands Reg. 3.95 now $2.00 36 inch turquoise chip strands Reg. 7.95 now $4.00

Always our regular stock of seed beads from 16/0 to 8/0, findings, leather, hackles, fluffs and thousands of other supply items.

Remember we've moved around the corner 109 North Broadway, Skiatook, OK 74070

New Dealers Cash or Credit Card Only.

Open Noon-6pm Mon. thru Fri. • 10am-5m Sat. • Closed Sun. Local: 396-1713-Countrywide Toll Free 1-888-720-1967

Website: www.supernaw.com • Email: Supernaw@flash.net

COMMENTARY

Stunned by Tonto: A new and improved version?

S.E. RUCKMAN

It was less than perfect. The publicity still of a new Tonto character by Johnny Depp was destined to polarize views on the depiction of American Indians. I read that some folks loved it and some hated it. I think I may fall into the stunned category.

Having been a longtime Depp fan, I have tried to see virtually all of his movies because what he does is done so well. I even loved his depiction of the novelist, Hunter S. Thompson, as a kind of LSD Lone Ranger in "Fear and Loathing in Las Vegas."

But I am getting a dose of fear and loathing at this moment as I consider the open season it continues to be on Indian stereotypes. We are a country in which only a very small majority of people admit to having prejudice of some type. Most of us like to think of ourselves as very in tune and hip to the idea of race as a reality in America: We are all one big happy melting pot.

I read recently an essay in which a writer offered that we should be grateful that it was Depp who portrayed the icon Tonto. Furthermore, it was intimated that we had bigger fish to fry in Indian Country (I assume this meant social ills) than to whine about how Tonto was portrayed.

Years ago, one of the actors who portrayed Tonto (Mohawk actor, Jay Silverheels) was named "Indian of the Year," at a local Indian fair. As befitting an Indian pioneer in media culture, he was fawned over by all. I remember him smiling from one side at my mom's Kodak Instamatic because by then he was recovering from a stroke.

It's safe to say that Silverheels' era in Hollywood has long evolved. Even in this semi-enlightened state, we view a round robin of Indian characters regularly played by a handful of actors. The portrayal of American Indians in popular culture is the stuff of doctoral theses.

But chiding the Indian populace that life is bad enough and that we should embrace a modern Tonto interpretation is just short of incredulous. This is a hot topic and one way to keep it relevant is to keep talking about it.

It might serve to remember that the propagation of stereotypes is not only limited to Native peoples. It crosses every racial barrier in full effect. It has been suggested that profiling was a factor in the recent shooting of an African American teenager in Florida by a neighborhood watch leader. This is not to say that the new Tonto portrayal will lead to bloodshed but it does point to the sustained powerful effects of stereotypes in our society.

To insinuate that a tepid portrayal of Indians for public viewing rings blameless is lame. Stereotypes can reduce people to an emblematic decal rather than represent acceptance. Besides, I would venture that most of Indian Country's social ills like suicide, domestic violence; alcoholism and unemployment have a root somewhere in the negative perception by the dominant culture. Surface appraisals are rarely harmless.

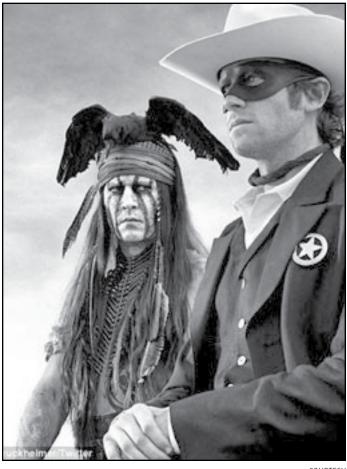

Fixing those problems is a high priority and I know people whose whole lives are dedicated to this very cause. But as I have learned, problem solving is only momentary if no room for growth exists to those in the inferior position. Ignoring negative stereotypes of native people stunts the potential for growth because the perception remains in others' hands. Going along for the sake of getting along is appeasement by a different name. History has proven that approach never works.

Problems exist in Indian Country, no doubt. Life on the reservations or predominantly Indian towns continues to be difficult thanks in part to the enduring nature of negative stereotypes. I could list a few reservation border towns to illustrate this point but I don't want to be guilty of negative connotations myself.

Yet as the new and improved version of Tonto makes clear, Indian culture remains free enterprise to anyone who can sew a stuffed crow to a head band and wear grease paint.

S.E. Ruckman is a citizen of the Wichita and Affiliated Tribes in Anadarko, Okla. She graduated from the University of Oklahoma's School of Journalism and has written for the Tulsa World and the Native American Times. She is a freelance writer who is based in Oklahoma.

Movie producer Jerry Bruckenheimer released this photo from the upcoming Lone Ranger movie starring Armie Hammer in the title role and Johnny Depp as Tonto.

Turtle Mountain Times: 'Jiggers' said he wanted a newspaper

TIM GIAGO (Nanwica Kciji) Notes from Indian Country © 2012 Unity South Dakota

The man on the phone said simply, "We want you to help our tribe start a weekly newspaper."

The man on the line was Richard J. "Jiggers" LaFramboise, then chairman of the Turtle Mountain Band of Chippewa and the year was 1992.

I flew up to the Turtle Mountain Reservation in North Dakota not too long after that call and met with Jiggers and his staff. We discussed the ways and means of starting a newspaper, set a price and got down to the business of starting a newspaper in Belcourt, the main community on the reservation.

Turtle Mountain is in the Northeastern part of North Dakota right on the Canadian border. In fact you can cross into Canada from Turtle Mountain.

Back in the old days when the French Canadians and the improve communications on Metis played an important role on many of the Northern Indian reservations, one of their favorite things was a fiddle and a dance known as the jig. In his youth Richard LaFramboise was quite handy at doing the jig, and hence the nickname "Jiggers."

Well, Jiggers had his mind set on economic development. He secured a contract with the federal government using a closed military plant to construct trailers. The contract brought 200 new jobs to Turtle Mountain where the unemployment rate hovered at 50 percent. With money left over from the block grant, he built the Heritage Center. He also built the community bowling alley and added new businesses to the tribal mall. Jiggers brought the tribe's gross income from $23 million in 1992 to $200 million in 1994.

tribe's schools, The community college and the reservations roads and highways all saw considerable improvements during Jiggers' terms in office.

But in 1992 he wanted to the reservation. He already had a radio station, KEYA-FM, but now Jiggers wanted a newspaper because he was a firm believer in the power of the press.

I told him that he had to choose a strong editor because knowing tribal politics as both of us did, the time would come when politicians would find a reason to interfere with the freedom of the press. Jiggers chose Robin Poitra Powell as his editor and then he picked Shirley Belgarde and Logan Davis as staff members.

The training took several weeks. Powell, Belgarde and Davis flew down to Rapid City and started working daily at Indian Country Today, the paper I owned back then. Powell dug into the editorial side of the paper working diligently with our writers, proof readers and editors. Davis worked with my then sales manager Lynette Two Bulls and the advertising sales staff, and Belgarde worked every day with Christy Tibbetts and the bookkeeping and office crew. We figured we would then have an editor to put out the newspaper every week, a sales manager to bring advertising dollars to the paper, and an office manager to handle all of the accounts payable and receivable. That would give the paper a strong nucleus.

Our next step was to find a location at Turtle Mountain and to purchase the equipment necessary for a start-up. I talked Rick Musser, a professor of journalism at the University of Kansas, to join our efforts. Musser and I, plus several of our staff members, drove up to Turtle Mountain to complete this next step. The Tribe offered one of the newly constructed homes to house the new venture and we got on the phone to order desks, file cabinets, chairs and, of course, computers. Musser worked with the team that had just returned from Rapid City in organizing the office and staff and to prepare for the first issue of the paper that would be named The Turtle Mountain Times.

After all of the phones and other electronic equipment was in place, the Turtle Mountain Times hit the streets in June of 1993. Next year the newspaper will be celebrating its 20th anniversary and of all of the employees who trained in those beginning days, Shirley Belgarde is still working at the paper. Others have moved on, but the newspaper is still hitting the streets every Wednesday.

Belgarde said, "We still have to survive every new administration change and each time this happens we are often threatened with having our funding reduced or cut altogether, but that's tribal politics and we are about to face another administration change."

I know how that goes because after "Jiggers" left office the new administration decided that the debt he incurred in starting the Turtle Mountain Times was no longer relevant, and my company was left holding the bag. It was a lesson learned and life goes on as does the newspaper that we got off of the ground.

I am still very proud of the Turtle Mountain Times because it survived for nearly 20 years in the face of economic downturns and the ever-changing administrations. had a dream and that dream became a reality. To Shirley Belgarde and those early newspaper pioneers, I say congratulations, good luck, and keep the presses rolling.

Tim Giago, an Oglala Lakota, is President of Unity South Dakota. He was a Nieman Fellow at Harvard with the Class of 1990. His weekly column won the H. L. Mencken Award in 1985. He was the founder of The Lakota Times, Indian Country Today, Lakota Journal and Native Sun News. He can be reached at UnitySoDak1@knology.net

The viewpoints expressed in columns and letters are the opinions of the writers and not necessarily the opinion or viewpoint of the Native American Times publisher or staff. Send letters to editor@nativetimes.com. Please keep letters to 350 words or less. Sign your name, tribal affiliation and city of residence for verification purposes.

NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES

Name:
Address:
City: State: Zip:
Phone:
☐ $65.00 for 52 issues ☐ $32.50 for 26 issues
□ $16.25 for 13 issues □ $1.25 single copy

Mail this form with a check or money order to: Native American Times • P.O. Box 411 Tahlequah, OK 74465 • 918-708-5838

VINITA 918-256-5585

LANGLEY 918-782-0011

MONKEY ISLAND 918-257-8869

www.okstatebank.com Equal Housing Lender Native American Owned

'Changing the culture of waste."

NATIVE

TIMES recycles with Tahlequah Recycling Incorporated... shouldn't you? Reeves Renovations Professional Construction, Remodeling & Repairs

Bathrooms • Kitchens • Paint Tile • Trim • Plumbing Electrical • Solar Panels Windmills • Winterizing Quality Work • Free Estimates

918-637-6736 johnwilliamreeves@juno.com Mayes & Cherokee Counties

Follow Us! www.twitter.com/nativetimes

More Jobs. More News. More Features. Every Day.

www.nativetimes.com

Senate votes to honor 'Mrs. Swing'

BOISE, Idaho (AP) - At least March 23, famed Idaho jazz star Mildred Rinker Bailey would have no reason to sing the blues.

The Senate unanimously followed the House in backing a resolution honoring Bailey for her contributions to American music.

It's part of the Coeur d'Alene Indian Tribe's bid to win recognition for one of its members in the Jazz at Lincoln Center Hall of Fame in New York. Bailey grew up on the Center's list of greats.

Mildred Bailey

reservation near Desmet before hitting it big in California.

Before she died in 1951, she was credited with helping launch Bing Crosby's career.

In 1994, Bailey was featured on a 29-cent U.S. Postal Service stamp.

But the tribe figures the woman known as "Mrs. Swing" and "The Rockin' Chair Lady" should also be enshrined in the Lincoln

Indians join fight vs. Nevada bear hunt

MARTIN GRIFFITH Associated Press

RENO, Nev. (AP) - A group of Native Americans is joining the fight against Nevada's black bear hunt and criticizing what they call a wildlife official's racist remark about it.

The group complained about a comment made at a Washoe County wildlife advisory board meeting last week by its chairman, Rex Flowers.

Flowers told the group of about eight Paiute, Washoe and Shoshone tribal members he didn't want to "hear of bows and arrows" because his panel was committed to the bear hunt, said Raquel Arthur, spokeswoman for the northern Nevada chapter of the American Indian Movement. Arthur also was personally insulted by being addressed as "sir" at the meeting, she said.

"We were offended. It was racist, pure and simple," Arthur said.

Flowers declined comment.

Opponents of the state's bear hunt called Gov. Brian Sandoval's office to complain about the remarks.

"The comments are not reflective of the governor's position," Sandoval spokeswoman Mary-Sarah Kinner said March 23. "If remarks like this were made, he believes they are offensive and have no place in public or private discourse, and Mr. Flowers owes an apology."

Randal Massaro, spokesman for Union Members for the Preservation of Wildlife, said Flowers phoned later and apologized for the remarks.

"He stated in no way did he ever mean to insult, degrade or disrespect Native Americans ... and (he) would be more than happy to make a public apology to them and anyone else that took the (bow and arrow) comment the wrong way," Massaro said.

Someone else made a comment that bears would be shot with AK-47 assault rifles, said Massaro, who helped coordinate Native American opposition to the bear hunt.

Last Friday's hearing held by state wildlife commissioners in Reno was on a proposal to close portions of the Lake Tahoe basin to bear hunters.

"We believe bears are sacred," Arthur said, adding her group thinks the state's black bear population is insufficient to sustain a hunt.

Fourteen bears were killed during Nevada's inaugural bear hunt that ended Dec. 31.

HEALING

Continued from Page 1

Behind Totah's administrative building is a large yard with a fenced-in sweat lodge and a traditional hogan used for ceremonies.

Counselors approach recovery in creative ways. Men who arrive at the center from jail often go through sweat lodge ceremonies to purify their bodies. Patients are encouraged to speak in Navajo and search for their 30 percent have permanent other health agencies need families and clans.

"A lot of them have abandonment issues," said Anna Holiday, the traditional services coordinator for Totah. "I tell them to reconnect with themselves and do research on their families."

David Johnson, one of the first clients to go through the Totah program, failed to recover from his alcohol addiction at court-ordered rehabilitation at places like the DWI treatment center in San Juan County.

He said the trust and respect incorporated into the Totah recovery program helped him to stop drinking.

"Some people can handle being told what to do and how to live their lives. I didn't like that," Johnson said. "These guys trusted me."

Though no longer receiving treatment for his alcohol addiction, Johnson still spends time at Totah, including attending weekly breakfasts at the facility.

After years living on Farmington streets, Johnson now has a home, a driver's license and a van. He works as a groundskeeper at Bethany Christian Church.

In addition to 50 percent of the clients finding employment after discharge, homes and 75 percent report continuing to abstain from alcohol, according to patient surveys from the last six years.

"We're not a cookie-cutter program," Carlson said. "It makes us successful ... and it can make it harder to get funding."

Totah has about an $800,000 budget and treats between 300 and 400 people per year, Carlson said.

At Totah's request, county commissioners recently voted to add the agency to the list of providers that can access San Juan County's Indigent Health Care Fund. The fund consists primarily of gross receipts taxes and can be used by people without health insurance seeking medical treatment.

In 2011, San Juan County reduced the amount of funding it provided to Totah from $80,000 annually to $40,000. The agency has also seen a dip in funding from the state. By accessing the county's indigent fund, it can continue its services, Carlson said.

Questions remain about how Totah will gather the needed information to access county indigent funds. Liza Gomez, the indigent program director, said patients from to fill out forms that include social security numbers and addresses.

She was also unaware of how much money Totah will take from the indigent fund each year. It will likely draw between $40,000 and $80,000 annually, she said.

"It will be tricky," Renaud said. "It's fantastic the county was willing to (add Totah to the Indigent Health Care Fund). But it's going to be tough on our part to get the documentation people need to qualify. That population is not walking around with a lot of tax forms."

Information from: The Daily Times, http://www.daily-times.

We proudly offer an array of services, from general dentistry to sedation, dental implants, and cosmetic dentistry - all designed expressly to meet our patient's changing needs. With four general dentists and four hygienists, we can maintain your oral health for a lifetime all at one location.

We Accept Contract Health & Sooner Care

We serve patients in the Drumright, Cushing, Stillwater, Stroud, Ponca City, and surrounding areas with personalized service and exemplary care. Call for your appointment today.

918-352-3312 or Toll Free 877-RH Melton drumrightdentalcenter.com

CONFERENCE REGISTRATION FORM

Thursday, April 19:

DR. TERRY CLINE

Commissioner of Health

KEVIN COLLINS

Prevention

Oklahoma State Department of Health

Centers for Disease Control and

Conference Location:

Reed Conference Center, 5800 Will Rogers Rd., Midwest City, Oklahoma

REGISTRATION IS FREE

PLEASE COMPLETE ONE REGISTRATION FORM PER PARTICIPANT

Please check the dates that you plan to attend:	April 17	April 18	April 19
Name:
(Please print legibly)
Organization/Tribe
Address:
City, State, Zip Code:
Telephone:	Fax:
E-mail:
Please let us know if you have any spe	cial needs:
``
4
To Register, please ma	il, fax or e-mail c	ompleted form	to:

Linda Robertson Office of Tribal Liaison 1000 N.E. 10th St. Oklahoma City OK 73117 Phone: 405/271-9444 EXT 56420 Fax: 405/271-1225 Email: lindaj@health.ok.gov

To Book Lodging: Sheraton at Reed Center (405/455-1800 Or copy the following link into a web browser http://www.starwoodmeeting.com/StarGroupsWeb/res?id=1201190271&key=6994D

TRADE

Continued from Page 1

Many of the eagle fans and feathers used now in traditional ceremonies have been handed down for generations, since long before eagles were protected by any law.

that he baited eagles with deer ribs and would sneak up on the feasting birds and shoot them. The document said he also disclosed to the informant that he sold eagles with a partner in Arizona and could get $2,500 to $3,500 per bird.

FWS and the U.S. Attorney's Office in Billings declined to provide even general information on how big a problem eagle trafficking is in Montana and the region.

The Crow Tribe's Fish and Game Code has protections for eagles that mirror federal statutes, said Burton Pretty On Top, Crow cultural director. The traditional Crow spiritual leader knows firsthand how long it can take to get the eagle parts needed but said he recognizes that the eagle population needs to be protected and honored.

"You follow the law; you respect the eagle," he said. "You don't sell eagles for profit. I don't know what their (the Crow eagle defendants') purpose is. I don't condone their action."

Pretty On Top said that on one of his 12 vision quests, he went to the Crazy Mountains and fasted for four days and nights.

"One time an eagle came to me and spoke to me and I was adopted by him," he said. "I was up in the air flying with eagles."

He uses eagles for peyote ceremonies at the Native American Church and for naming ceremonies. He has been asked 33 times to preside at naming ceremonies, where Crow names are given to young people.

"I ask God for a special blessing for those people who I give names for," he said. "I firmly believe that the eagle is my sacred helper."

He has waited years for eagles from FWS National Repository in Denver. He has received two and is waiting for a third.

"Anyone can do as I have done. Eventually, when your time is right, you will get an eagle," he said.

Conrad Fisher, historic preservation officer for the Northern Cheyenne Tribe, said people do get frustrated when they can't have ready access to eagle feathers that have been an important part of spiritual life going back thousands of years. It's not just the Cheyenne, he said. More consultation with FWS is essential to help protect Native Americans' spiritual needs, he said.

"The tribes are realizing they need to play a role in how feathers should be distributed," he said. "We've got to have something in place – otherwise there's a lot of trafficking going on."

Jerome Whitehip, who works with the Crow Cultural Department, said, "Some members of the tribe made a mistake killing eagles and selling feathers, which is not right. At the Cultural Department we try to educate people not to do that."

Many of the eagle fans and feathers used now in traditional ceremonies have been handed down for generations, since long before eagles were protected by any law. Whitehip's own war bonnet has served four generations of his family.

He resents any implication that eagle poaching is uniquely an Indian Country problem. Farmers and ranchers who poisoned and shot eagles to protect their livestock brought eagles to the brink of extinction, not tribal members taking a few for religious purposes, he

"We respect tribal law and federal law," Whitehip said.

In times long past, hunters seldom killed eagles, he said.

"They'd take the feathers they needed and let them go," he said. "Before Europeans came, we didn't have any endangered species."

Information from: Billings Gazette, http://www. billingsgazette.com

EAGLE

The repository makes twice-monthly shipments of eagle parts that the recipients use for powwows, naming ceremonies and funerals from Alaska to Florida.

Which leaves, effectively, one source for the bald and golden eagle parts that American Indians consider a sacred link between the human and spiritual realms: this room.

"This is definitely very, very important to Native people," said Bernadette Atencio, supervisor of the repository, who stood between the lab bench and two walk-in freezers where racks of eagle bodies hung, waiting to be shipped. There are more than 6,000 licensed members of federally enrolled tribes on the waiting list; some have lingered almost five years.

"I had no idea it was so involved," said Robin Johnson, 60, the birdloving commuter who first sighted the female eagle in Northern Virginia. "I'm glad to think of her being used like that, rather than just dying out by the tracks. It's very spiritual."

The final chapter of the Alexandria eagle's life began one evening last month on Johnson's regular Blue Line run from her job at a downtown law firm to her home in Fairfax Station. Somewhere between the Van Dorn Street and Braddock Road stations, a dark blur caught her eye. A glimpse of white-feathered head confirmed it: a bald eagle, not eight feet from the train window, flapping against a fence.

"I thought it might have been eating something," she said. "I was so excited. I told everybody at work, 'Oh my gosh, I saw a bald eagle.'?"

She was less excited the next day when the bird was still in the same spot. Healthy eagles don't hang out by train tracks. She got in touch with the Raptor Conservancy of Virginia, a rescue group, and then she and her husband got in the car. Driving along back streets near the tracks, they finally found the eagle next to a high chain-link fence. Its left wing clearly was damaged.

A couple of days later, on Feb. 25, Metro officials had organized a rescue run. A six-car train left King Street Station that afternoon, empty except for the train operator, three transit police officers, an Alexandria animal control officer and three volunteers from the conservancy. They found the injured eagle in some brambles about 300 yards past the Van Dorn

Finding hurt and dead eagles in the Washington region has become increasingly common as the species's population has continued to rebound nationwide. Bald eagles were removed from the federal endangered species list in 2007. Some Native American tribes are pushing for the right to kill eagles for religious ceremonies, rather than wait years for the repository to deliver them. This month, the Fish and Wildlife Service granted its first-ever permit for the Northern Arapaho tribe in Wyoming to kill two bald eagles for religious purposes - a decision that has been questioned by some conservation and animal rights groups but reflects the dramatic comeback of the eagles.

"They're doing fantastic," said Matt Whitbeck, a wildlife biologist at the Blackwater National Wildlife Refuge near Cambridge, on Maryland's Eastern Shore. In a census in January, 168 bald eagles were counted in the refuge. That's up from fewer than 25 birds in the 1980s.

But more living eagles mean more dead eagles, including birds hit by cars and planes and electrocuted on high-voltage lines. "We're going to see more and more of this sort of thing as the birds try to coexist with humans in places where they didn't used to be," Whitbeck said.

Kent Knowles, the Virginia conservancy's president, has already shipped five dead eagles to the Denver facility this year. Initially, he was hopeful that the Alexandria bird could be rehabilitated. But after the rescuers threw a net over it, took it back to the train and rushed it to the veterinarian, hope faded.

"As soon as I saw the X-ray, I knew what was going to happen," Knowles said. Whatever had collided with the eagle - he suspects a train - had ripped its left wing off just below the joint, making a stable amputation

After notifying federal wildlife officials of the findings, the vet injected a lethal dose of pentobarbital.

Knowles put the body of the eightpound bird in a black plastic bag, sealed it and put it in a freezer in his basement. A few days later, the Fish and Wildlife Service sent a cardboard box and a packing label for Denver.

"This is not one of our more fun jobs, I tell you," Knowles said as he nestled the bag into the packing peanuts and placed a sheet of paper reading "EUTHANIZED" on the top. "We're here to help these birds."

A FedEx truck has to negotiate four miles of remote road to reach the Eagle Repository, housed in a vast and largely empty former Army chemical weapons facility. Inside, a lobby display is filled with stuffed polar bears, cobra-skin boots and other illegally trafficked wildlife contraband that has been confiscated by federal officers.

But in the lab, it's all eagles. A stack of shipping cartons sat near Wiist's table, which was covered with lopping shears, pliers and the other tools of dismembering large birds. The repository receives about a 2,400 eagles a year from refuges and rehab centers around the country.

Wiist processes 25 to 30 birds a day, spending 10 or 15 minutes on each.

He doesn't seek a cause of death, preserve or clean the bird in any way. He merely checks to see which parts are suitable for filling the requests of Native Americans, which range from loose feathers to whole birds.

Some eagles, which may have been lying dead in the wild for weeks, are too decayed to use. Others offer feathers, under plumes, maybe talons. If parts are missing or rotten, Wiist will borrow from other birds.

"I'm noted for being picky," Wiist said, a spectacular view of the distant Rocky Mountains in the window behind him. "People have waited a long time for these birds, and it means a lot to them."

He quickly fanned the right wing of the Alexandria eagle, counting 10 primary feathers, 14 secondary. The feathers were intact but worn, probably from its time flailing by the

"It was getting ready to molt," he said beneath his mask as he flipped the bird over to look at its left side. "Ah, this wing is pretty much torn

Because the bird was injected with a killing drug, the repository will not use the trunk. Some tribes may use the organs for medicine bags, Atencio said, and officials don't want to risk contamination.

Wiist's verdict: The Alexandria eagle will provide a right wing, tail feathers and its head. Each part may fill a specific order, or be make other birds whole.

He reached for the heavy shears. The repository makes twice-monthly shipments of eagle parts that the recipients use for powwows, naming ceremonies and funerals from Alaska to Florida.

"We don't ask what they want to do with them," Atencio said. "Some are pretty secretive. The most interesting ones are probably the ones we don't know about. "

Most go to members of tribes in the Plains states or the Pacific Northwest. But some come to the D.C. area.

Marian Hansson of Indian Head, near La Plata, received 112 eagle feathers from the repository in 2010. A member of the Kiowa Tribe, most of whose members live in Oklahoma, she wove them into the headdress she wore for a ceremony marking her son's military service.

Honoring warriors is an ancient use of eagle feathers, Hansson said, recalling her grandparents' stories of such ceremonies.

"They represented a warrior's valor and served as a reward for his coming back alive," said Hansson, who also has an eagle feather fan from her mother and a cluster of feathers from a medicine bundle passed down from her paternal grandmother.

Hansson had to wait four years for her feathers from the repository, but she said she never considered tapping the robust black market in eagle parts. A single feather can fetch $150, according to Fish and Wildlife Service officials. A whole bald eagle can go for up to $2,000; golden eagles, which are in higher demand, are even more expensive. (The tribes are not charged for what they receive from the federal repository.)

There also are Web sites offering "legal" eagle feathers, which are typically painted turkey plumes.

But for tradition-minded tribe members, there is no substitute for the real raptor. And if that requires waiting for an eagle to die somewhere like Alexandria and for the wheels of the federal government to slowly turn, well, they take the long view.

"The eagle is considered a messenger between human beings and our creator," explained Dennis W. Zotigh, cultural specialist at the National Museum of the American Indian in the District. "It's our most widespread object of ceremonial use, and has been since prehistory."

Information from: The Washington Post, http://www.washingtonpost.

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT / HELP WANTED

HEROKEE NATION®

Cherokee Nation whose headquarters are located in beautiful Tahlequah, Oklahoma is a national leader in Indian tribal governments and economic development in Oklahoma, We are a dynamic, progressive organization, which owns several business enterprises and administers a variety of services for the Cherokee people in Northeastern Oklahoma. Cherokee Nation offers an exceptional employee benefits plan with Comprehensive Health, Life, 401 (k), Holiday Pay, Sick Leave and Annual Leave.

> CURRENT OPPORTUNITIES Positions Close: 03/30/2012

#6329 R/FT Medical Technologist; W.W. Hastings Hospital, Tahlequah

#5998 T/PT Medical Technologist;

W.W. Hastings Hospital, Tahlequah Interested applicants please apply at www.cherokee.org

> Cherokee Nation Human Resources Department PO Box 948 Tahlequah, OK 74465 (918) 453-5292 or 453-5050

Employment will be contingent upon drug test results. Indian preference is considered.

Check nativetimes.com for more jobs! -New jobs posted throughout the week-

Records Administrator

Under the direct supervision of the Education Director, employee administers and implements routine operations that support the Education Department to include these programs: Adult Education, College, Vocational, Johnson O'Malley and Tribal Education Assistant Program. Employee maintains records management of the Education database. Greets and assists clients in person or on the phone. Performs general office support functions. Oversees data entry into the Education database. Ensures that system records are accurately recorded and periodically audits data. Inputs, generates and maintains program records, supportive information such as spreadsheets, and files on clients. Responsible for creating and printing detailed reports and querying the database. Performs general office support functions.

1-2 years college experience, 1-2 years customer service experience and 1-2 years of database management is required, Associate's Degree in Business Administration, Marketing or related field is preferred.

The Otoe-Missouria Tribe is an equal Opportunity Employer. Native American preference will be observed. All appointments are subject to drug screening and background checks.

Please submit employment application to Human Resources, 8151 Hwy 177, Red Rock, OK. 74651 by 4:30 p.m., April 4, 2012 or email to hr@omtribe.org. An application form can be found at www.omtribe.org (Human Resources\Forms). Resumes are accepted but will not substitute for application.

NATIVE AMERICAN HIRING PREFERENCE?

Advertise your jobs to Native Americans! E-mail your ad for a quote to: lisa@nativetimes.com

Sac & Fox Nation Casino is accepting Applications for General Manager

Qualifications: Bachelors Degree in Business / Marketing Strong Leadership Skills Casino Management Experience

Applicants must pass background and drug screen. Native American preference is recognized.

Submit resume by fax @ 405-395-0790 or visit our website at sandfcasino.com to apply online

Up to $169,700 for school! Enter the Navy BDCP program today! Focus on your grades, and have a future career w/NO Limits! Jobs_Dallas@navy.mil 877-628-9562

Request for Qualifications

RFQ / RFP

The Pawnee Nation of Oklahoma is advertising for Construction Management Services for the renovation of the Tribal Ceremonial Roundhouse which is located at 900 Agency Road on the Pawnee Tribal Reserve which is located east of Pawnee, Oklahoma. The complete Request for Qualifications including the criteria that will be used to select the most qualified firm is available upon written request.

Submit your request by fax or email (mrobedeaux@pawneenation.org) and please include your email address and/or your fax number)

Qualifications documents must be received no later than 4:30 pm on Monday, April 9, 2012.

Point of Contact for Information: Muriel Robedeaux, ICDBG Coordinator

Contact: Marshall Gover, President, Pawnee Nation of Oklahoma, (918) 762-3621. Fax: (918) 762-6446. Attn: ICDBG Ceremonial Roundhouse Project.

Osage Museum to unveil final 'Osage Ten' bust

KATHRYN RED CORN Osage Nation

Pawhuska, Okla. - The Tribal Museum, Osage Library & Archives, the oldest tribally-owned museum in the country, will commemorate the unveiling of the final Osage bust of THE OSAGE TEN on Saturday, April 28, 2012 at 10:00 a.m. at the Constantine Theatre, 110 W. Main, in Pawhuska, Oklahoma.

The creation of The Osage Ten began over 100 years ago in Pawhuska when molds and pictures were made of ten live models from the Osage Tribe and cast into full-size plaster busts by Smithsonian Institution's Department of Natural History. The Smithsonian created this collection to be displayed at the California-Panama Canal Exposition in 1915-16 as part of "The Evolution of Man" exhibit. Millions of people from around the world attended this historical event.

During the past seven years, the Osage Tribal Museum has been collaborating with the Smithsonian in obtaining replicas of The Osage Ten to be permanently displayed at the museum. This exhibit collection will bring to life again these Osage tribal members and, in a sense, bring them home to be honored and remembered of an era long Descendants of Albert Penn, the first replica bust to be unveiled in 2005, retrieved and donated their ancestors bust to the Osage Tribal Museum. The other busts that have been donated in the past six years are: Shun-kah-molah, Charles McDougan, Wah-To-Ke-Ah (William Fletcher), Henry Pratt, Ah-Hu-Shin-Kah (Little Wing), Che-Sho-Wah-Ke-Pah (Fidelis Cole), Wa-Xthi-Zhi (Charles Wah-Hre-She), and Wah-Noh-She-Shin-Ki (Principal Chief Fred Lookout).

After the final bust of Wahhrah-lum-pah (Margaret Goode) is unveiled on April 28, she will take her place with the other nine Osages on permanent exhibit at the Osage Tribal Museum, the only location in the world to view an exhibit of this kind.

A lunch will follow the unveiling hosted by the Osage Tribal Museum and Spyglass Energy Group, L.L.C.

Bacone hosts H2O exhibit

Bacone College

spring art exhibition

to Oklahoma's Water Issue. The along the Illinois, Cimarron, this event to serve as a reflection art exhibition will inaugurate Arkansas, Verdigris, and North of our sovereignty and hope for the public exhibition space in the new Merritt Donaghy Betts availability for our local water Library on Bacone's campus.

gas prices have skyrocketed and been thrown around as political ballyhoo, critical water issues have been rising like the slow moving floods of the Mississippi River. These issues include the persistent statewide drought; the litigation between the State of Oklahoma and the Choctaw the water rights for Sardis and scholarship. We conceive of MUSKOGEE, Okla. - The Lake and other similar cases; this as an opportunity to serve BaconeCollegeArtDepartment and the extensive personal and as a conduit through which is pleased to announce the economic woes related to the dialogue and creativity might 100-year and 500-year floods flow through our community. H2OK: The Native Responses that have struck the state We embrace the potential of Canadian Rivers. The projected the future." resources reveals the delicate America Meredith, Heather "In the last few years, while relationship between human Ahtone, and Tony Tiger. populations and the water the discussion about renewable that is needed to sustain them. April 2 and run through May energy, especially wind, have For indigenous communities 14,2012 with an artist reception water is recognized as an agent on April 14th 4:30-6:30 at the for community engagement, Merritt Donaghy Betts Library personal transformation and 2408 East Shawnee Muskogee, spiritual renewal.

> this project is conceived as an of Art Bacone College at opportunity to examine water tigert@bacone.edu for more currents from any and all of information.

> and Chickasaw Nations over these perspectives through art

The exhibition is curated by

The exhibition will open OK

For these reasons, and others, Contact Tony Tiger Director

EVENTS

*Email your powwow or other event info to: Lisa@ nativetimes.com. Name, date, time, place and contact information is free.

EVERY WEDNESDAY Kiowa class beginning in February at 6:30 pm, Oliphant Hall, Room 141, Tulsa University. Info call Sarah, (918) 445-5213

EVERY THURSDAY The Otoe-Missouria Substance Abuse and Behavioral Health Programs sponsor an open group for families touched by addiction from noon to 1 p.m. at the Otoe-Missouria Health Building. This is a confidential group. Call 580-723-4466 x252 or x262 for more information.

SECOND TUESDAY Cherokee Artists Association meeting at 202 E. 5th Street Tahlequah, Okla. Info: (918) 458-0008 or www. cherokeeartistsassociation.org Words. For events and times,

FOURTH THURSDAY Each month the American Indian Chamber of Commerce of Oklahoma  Eastern Chapter hosts a monthly luncheon at Bacone College, Muskogee, Okla. 11:30 a.m. at Benjamin Wacoche Hall. Please RSVP one week ahead of time. Phone: (918) 230-3759

EVERY 2ND SATURDAY Indian Taco Sales - from 11-2:30pm at OK Choctaw Tribal CCC Rally in The Valley Youth

Alliance, 5320 S. Youngs Blvd, Oklahoma City www. okchoctaws.org

MON/WED AND THURS The Marble City Nutrition Center serves hot meals at the Marble City Community Center at 11:30 a.m. Meals are free to anyone over 50, but a small donation is suggested to help with the expense of the program. Marble City Nutrition Center, 711 N. Main, Marble City,

Okla. Phone: (918) 775-2158

YOUTH COUNCIL The Native Nations Youth Council (NNYC) bimonthly meetings from 6:30pm -8:30pm @ the Youth Services of Tulsa Activity Center (311 S. Madison - on 3rd just west of Peoria). Call to confirm location. Info Call: Chad Gilley (918) 382-2204 or nnyc@ihcrc.org

THROUGH MARCH 31 Tulsa Library's Festival of call the AskUs Hotline, 918-549-7323, or visit the library's website, www. tulsalibrary.org.

THROUGH MAY Free beginner-level Cherokee language classes in communities throughout the tribe's jurisdiction. Once a week for ten weeks. For locations or to register, call Bill Andoe at 918-453-5151.

MARCH 31

Powwow at Coffeyville Community College. A youth competition and intertribal powwow. Doors open at Noon. Call Taylor Davis at 620-251-7700 ext. 2092.

Bacone College Stomp Dance on campus in the Warrior Gym. All ceremonial grounds, shell shakers, leaders, and visitors are welcome to participate. Free to attend and open to the public. Info (918) 360-3935 or kamps@bacone.edu

Wild Onion Dinner at Pickett Chapel United Methodist Church, 17610 S. Hickory Sapulpa, Ok, 5 miles south of Sapulpa on Hickory, 11am to 3pm. $8 adults, $4.00 12 and under. Proceeds to benefit our Oklahoma Indian Missionary Conference annual apportionments. Info: 918-321-3109

Birthday Celebration for Florabelle Franklin Yeahpau Wolf - 91 years Young. St. Patricks Catholic church - Parish Hall, Anadarko OK., 10 a.m - 5 p.m. Please bring a covered dish. Meat will be provided.

APRIL 3-5 OSHA 10-hour class. $10 fee - free for all TERO and 477 participants. Info and registration call Pawnee Nation Education Division 918-762-3227.

APRIL 6 Indian Taco Sale 11:00 AM

- 2:00 PM at Norman First American UMC, 1950 East Beaumont Drive, Norman, Okla. Call Ahead for Speedy Service. Free Delivery on Orders of 10 or More (405) 321-5640

APRIL 7 Indian Taco Sale 8 am to 4pm APRIL 14 $7.00 with drink and desert Call in orders welcome 918-752-5300. Duck Creek Community Ranch House, 10071 Ferguson Road Beggs, OK. Look for signs. Call Sue Walker 918-381-3793 or Jacqueline Rolland 918-752-5300

All You Can Eat Wild Onion Dinner 11 am -? at Springfield Church, 2 miles South on Hwy 27 from Okemah Exit, four miles East, then 2 miles South. Follow Signs. $9 per person $5 for children 12 & under.

Tulsa Creek Indian Community Wild Onion Dinner from 11-3 at 8611 S Union Ave, Tulsa OK 74132 Ph: (918) 298-2464

Ponca Gourd Dance 9th Annual Spring Dance White Eagle Cultural Center 5 miles south of Ponca City, OK (580) 268-3313

APRIL 9-14 Symposium of the American Indian, Northeastern State University, University Center, Tahlequah, OK .Hosted By: NSU Center for Tribal Studies. All events are FREE and open to the public

APRIL 13-14, NSU Powwow, University Center, NSU Tahlequah, OK Info call the Center for Tribal Studies, 918-444-4350 or tribalstudies@nsuok.edu

Wild Onion Dinner, 11:00 am to 2:00 pm, Sac & Fox Multipurpose Center, 215 N. Harrison, Shawnee, OK, Sponsored by: Seminole Hitchitee Methodist Church, Adults - $10/plate / Children - $7/plate (8 and under)

Rodeo Queen Pageant 10 am at Rockin DJ Arena, Tahlequah. Must have CDIB and ride alone. Info call Shirley Martin 918-642-5387.

Oklahoma Indian Missionary Conference SW District Churches Benefit Powwow at Comanche Nation Center, Apache, Okla. Gourd Dance at 2pm. More info call Aneeda Harjo 580-704-0106 or Tina Baker 580-591-1579.

All Gourd Honor Dance for Micheal Tsotaddle at Red Buffalo Hall, Carnegie, OK, 2p.m. - ? For more information call Darla Tsotaddle (405) 432-8377 or Mavis Tsotaddle (580) 654-1704.

APRIL 21 Inaugural Native American Conference & Powwow at Victory Christian Center/ Activity Center, 7700 S.

Lewis, Tulsa, Ok. Info call Stephen Loi 918.491.7830 or 918.346.4303

APRIL 24 Native American Art Festival, Tulsa Hard Rock Hotel. 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. sponsored by Seminole Nation of Okla. For booth space contact [walker.s@sno-nsn.gov] or 405-257-7241 by April 16.

APRIL 27 Kiowa Higher Education Graduates Banquet at Cross Timbers Restaurant in Anadarko, OK. Info call 580-654-2300 ext. 324

APRIL 28 "O-SKOO" Co-Ed Basketball Tournament (All Indun) PRE-"O-SKOO" ~ 30 YRS TO 39 YRS & "O-SKOO" ~ 40 YRS TO ??? YRS. $50.00 Entry fee. 8 Man Roster: 4 Ole Men & 4 Ole Women. For more info, call Tonkawa Tribe Education Programs: 580-628-2561 LISA ext 125 or LEAH ext 131. Fund Raiser for end of summer WIA Youth trip!

Church Fundraiser for New Joy Baptist Church 11:00 to 5:00, 1103 South Main, Sapulpa. All you can eat spaghetti lunch - Cost $8 All proceeds will go towards the church and church events. Call Jimmy Alexander 918-322-5407

Seminole Nation Honor Guard Powwow at Okfuskgee County Fairgrounds, Okemah, Okla.

UKB offering one-time reinstatement to rolls

M. THOMAS JORDAN

UKB Communications Office

TAHLEQUAH, Okla. The United Keetoowah Band of Cherokee Indians in Oklahoma is giving former tribal citizens a one-time opportunity to be reinstated into the tribe.

As the UKB Membership Ordinance does not have a provision for relinquished members to come back to the tribe, this is a one-time chance to come back.

Chief Wickliffe said some members were coerced into relinquishing from the tribe to receive medical care or job opportunities that were not available to them while they remained members of the UKB and now they have one chance to return to the tribe.

The idea for reinstatement was discussed in council for at least the last seven years. The council took formal action in the January council meeting by appointing a five-member ad hoc committee to process reinstatement requests for approval by the full council.

The tribal enrollment office is processing reinstatement requests March 26 through April 19 from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. during regular business days. Requests can be up to one page handwritten or half a page typed.

The requests should state why the former member relinquished and why they want to be reinstated with the UKB. The former member must provide a good reason for being reinstated and must have a good attitude.

During this time, the enrollment committee is available to attend district meetings to answer questions about the reinstatement process.

The actual requests must be turned in at the enrollment office in the UKB Community Services Building at the tribal complex or mailed to the enrollment office. Mailed requests need to be received in enrollment by 5 p.m. on April 19 at the latest.

Former members can, also, request that a reinstatement form be mailed to them.

Mail reinstatement requests to C/O UKB Enrollment Department P.O. Box 746 Tahlequah, OK 74465.

For more information, call the enrollment department at 918-453-9375.

SHS students earn art awards

Cherokee Nation Communications Office

MUSKOGEE, Okla. -Three Sequoyah Schools students recently took top honors in the Five Civilized Tribes Museum Student Art Show in Muskogee.

"The arts are an important component of the total emphasis for our students here at Sequoyah Schools, along with academics and athletics," said Geary Don Crofford, Sequoyah's dean of academics. "We are fortunate to have excellent and innovative instructors and leaders in art, music, drama and other areas."

Senior Christie Tiger-Blair won first with her artwork, "Story Telling Time." Her brother and fellow artist, Lisan Tiger-Blair, took first, second and third place in the sculpture category and won the Willard Stone Memorial Award. Rusty Vickery won second place in the cultural items category with his pottery piece, "Homeland of the Cherokee."

"I've had all three of these students in art class at some point during their career at Sequoyah," said Sequoyah art teacher Brandi Adair. "They are each very talented. The work they submitted was exquisite."

The students' artwork will remain on display in Muskogee at the Five Civilized Tribes Museum, 1101 Honor Heights Drive, until the end of the month. It is also available for purchase through the museum's store.

For more information on the Sequoyah Schools art program, contact Adair at 918-453-5400 or brandiadair@cherokee.org.

The Five Civilized Tribes Museum will be hosting its next show, Art Under the Oaks, beginning April 1. For more information visit www. fivetribes.org.

100 YEARS

Continued from Page 1

"There was a lot of prejudice," Josephine said of the past. She and Ed talked about the separate drinking fountains, bathrooms and places when there was segregation, including on trains and buses. She was born in 1912 when William Howard Taft was president. She has lived through 18 U.S. presidents at the helm, but said she does not have a favorite.

Josephine was born and raised in Apache, Okla. Her parents are Heva Lena Fisher and James Myers. She wasn't born in a hospital so instead of having a birth certificate, she has a letter from the Bureau of Indian Affairs. She has two sisters and six brothers, who have all passed on. Her two children are Ed and Barbara; she was four grandchildren, several great-grandchildren and one

When she grew up it was, "before all these modern things developed." She said it was the "horse and buggy days." Her older brothers, sisters and mother all received allotments and that is where she would sometimes help on her brothers' farm.

"We had cattle too but it was with all of the other farming," she said. "I was too young, I didn't get an allotment."

Josephine said powwows back then, "were just really more formal than they are today. I know I used to dance with my grandmother and my great aunt ... when I was a little girl. I always got teased. You know how the custom was, they give away when you're dancing," she said. "Someone threw some money under me when I was dancing and I wasn't supposed to pick it up. Somebody else was supposed to pick it up. I picked it up myself and took to the stand to go buy some soda pop ... they always tease me about it."

Ed laughed and later added there were no contests at powwows back then either. Josephine said while growing up in people would go into town to trade.

"I used to go with my grandmother to interpret for her because she didn't know too much English; mostly Comanche," Josephine said. Her grandfather is not Comanche.

"Fisher is German. The old man is from Fredericksburg. He was a captive when he was 10 or 12 years old. He was captured by the Comanches and a family adopted him and he became part of the Comanches. He spoke Comanche fluently," she said. "I understand (Comanche). I don't speak it too much because I don't have any one to speak to, but if someone talks to me or if I heard someone speaking I understand. I learned it when I was growing up. When we went to boarding school they tried to make us forget, you know, forget that language, but I know when I discovered this one classmate, roommate, and she was from the Shoshone area," Josephine said. "When we found out we could understand each other we used to hide in the closet and talk and compare words. It's very much like the Comanche language, some of it varies a little bit but they're mostly all the same."

When her family left the horse and buggy days behind, Josephine's family bought a car. She's not sure of the model or how she felt but thought the invention of a car was, "interesting, especially when I first got to ride in it," she said. "We lived out in the country so we drove it to town."

Josephine attended Catholic boarding school at Saint Patrick's Mission in Anadarko. She tried public school for a spell in Boone, Okla. but ended up going to high school at Haskell in Lawrence, Kan.

"I enjoyed attending Haskell ...

enroll in nursing, but I had to take home economics because I wasn't old enough but ... my learning of the home economics was real beneficial to me," Josephine said.

After Haskell, Josephine completed an art education program established by the BIA at Santa Fe Indian School in Santa Fe, N.M. Under the umbrella of the Indian Reorganization Act of 1934, American Indians were shaped into art teachers and placed in American Indian boarding schools to teach. She said 10 students were selected for this program, which included her neighbor from Apache, Allan Houser. Josephine studied the fiber and traditional arts curriculum. After graduating she was selected to teach at Chilocco (Oklahoma) Indian School. Josephine married Edward Wapp, Sr. and they had two children. This was before World War II.

PHOTO COURTESY COMANCHE NATION NEWS

Josephine Myers-Wapp recalls the stand-out moments of her 100 year life following her recent birthday celebration in Anadarko, Okla.

"Well, I was teaching at Chilocco," Josephine said. " My children were small and I couldn't get a full time housekeeper so I had to resign to take care of them. We went to California Apache, Saturdays were the day most whenever we got to the 11th grade because my husband was working in (years old)," Josephine said. "Yeah. and we were 17 or older we could the shipyard ... but we didn't stay too I made two A's. I couldn't believe long because the climate didn't agree with the children so I had to take them back to Oklahoma."

> Because of his football injuries, Edward Wapp, Sr., was not able to go to war but had to participate in the war effort and that's why he worked in California, Ed said.

The United States has been involved in seven wars throughout Josephine's life. She said she doesn't remember exactly how war changed the world back then but, "It was worrisome, especially since I had brothers having to go."

Josephine began teaching American Indian traditional arts and culture in 1963 at the Institute of American Indian Arts (IAIA) in Santa Fe. While there she assisted in teaching dance, which led to organizing a dance presentation for the 1968 Summer Olympic Games in Mexico City.

"The kids just really had a good time," Josephine said. "When we came back to the art school, we were loaded down with sombreros and guitars."

Josephine still has a gold trimmed tea set as a souvenir from their 10 day bus trip to Mexico; it sits on a shelf in her living

"I enjoyed spending time with the students and their learning really pleased me. I enjoyed teaching them because they were interested and really learned the things they were supposed to learn. We did some interesting things," Josephine said.

She has visited seven countries including Germany, France, Austria and Spain to study Native American material culture and to help museums correctly label and identify artifacts.

Josephine retired as a teacher in 1973, but it wasn't the last time she sat in a classroom. "I took a course in computer at 92 it. I enjoyed it. But I just haven't continued to use it. I just didn't want to be the only one in my family who didn't know about computers. I think that's the only reason I took it."

After retirement Josephine concentrated on finger weaving. Her work has been displayed throughout the United States, Europe, Canada, the Middle East and South America. Her oral autobiography is part of a collection in the Smithsonian Institution's National Museum of the American Indian's (NMAI) cultural resources center. NMAI also recruited Josephine in the 90s for a project involving contemporary artists their work and travel is documented in a book titled "We Travel: A Celebration of Contemporary Native American Creativity."

"She's been quite a role model for some of her students," Ed said. "Wherever I've been and people know I'm her son, people will make comments of how she was really influential in their lives."

Her friend Geneva Woomavoyah Navarro traveled from New Mexico along with Jerri Ahbehill to celebrate Josephine's 100th birthday with her. Navarro said Josephine's mother was a midwife and delivered her when they all lived in Apache. On her birth certificate it says 'Old Lady Fisher,' Navarro said.

"She certainly didn't look like 100 years old. She was visiting people, up and around ... I haven't seen too many 100 year olds," Navarro said. "There were so many people around ... She was glad to see everyone there. She's still a school teacher. She remembers everybody ... she never forgets names. She's always alert. She's such a friendly lady."

Josephine's advice is to, "Just live a clean life; leave the alcohol and drugs(alone) and you'll grow up to be 100."

She said, "I'm just glad I got to retire and come back to be with the Comanche people. (There was) a lot of relatives I didn't know and I got to meet them. Made a lot of friends. I'm glad I got to come."

Inside this issue:

- Creek Chief vetoes resolution opposing casino
- Annual Symposium on the American Indian
- Slam dunk success with a message

TODAY'S INDEPENDENT INDIAN NEWS

- A FREE PUBLICATION -

WWW.NATIVETIMES.COM

VOLUME 18 + ISSUE 14

PUBLISHED WEEKLY

APRIL 6, 2012

Echo Hawk resigns from BIA to accept Mormon job

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SALT LAKE CITY - The top official for the U.S. Bureau of Indian Affairs is resigning to accept a full-time leadership position with The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, ending three years with Secretary Ken Salazar says "opened a new chapter" in U.S. Indian tribes.

is being appointed to the accelerated the restoration of appeal. is the Mormon Church's third-Salt Lake City.

the department that Interior appointed Echo Hawk, 63, to in a statement. oversee the BIA in 2009.

relationships with American leadership, we have opened a $3.4 billion class-action a new chapter in our nation lawsuit with Native American Larry Echo Hawk, the to nation relationships with landowners over mismanaged assistant secretary of the American Indian and Alaska royalties. Interior for Indian Affairs, Native tribal governments, reached in late 2009 is under University law professor for 14 then. "It's not going to be easy."

Quorum of the Seventy, which tribal homelands, improved safety in tribal communities, highest governing body. The resolved century-old water announcement from the church disputes, invested in education, came Saturday during its semi- and reached many more annual general conference in milestones that are helping Indian nations pursue the future President Barack Obama of their choosing," Salazar said

During Echo Hawk's tenure, "With Larry Echo Hawk's the Interior Department settled The settlement

Salazar said he would work with Echo Hawk to ensure a smooth transition within the BIA. It was not clear who would be appointed to oversee the BIA after Echo Hawk's departure.

Echo Hawk, a member of the Pawnee Nation, was elected Idaho attorney general in 1990, the first Native American to be elected to the position in any state. He ran unsuccessfully in 1994 for Idaho governor as a Democrat.

He was a Brigham Young years before leading the BIA.

After his appointment, Echo Hawk said in a speech in Salt Lake City in 2009 that he wrestled with the decision to accept a position that would make him a "face" for a federal government that has had a sordid history of mistreating Indians. He finally reconciled his hesitation by vowing to be an "agent for change" instead of a mere caretaker.

"How do you reverse 200 years of struggles?" he said

Dave Wilson and his new pygmy goats

COURTESY PHOTO / STEPHI WILSON

Minority farmers small but growing group

S.E. RUCKMAN Native American Times Special Contributor

GERONIMO, OK- Out here on the flat prairie fields, there are few short cuts. The formula is hard work and sweat to make a living off the land in Comanche County. New farmer, Dave Wilson, is up early every day to work his 12-acres of leased land. Tall, robust with cowboy boots, he is every foot the farmer by

A transplanted Pima Indian from Arizona, he moved to the area with his wife and two children from Missouri just months ago. He "kind of fell into" acquiring the land from a local landowner and is giving farming a go because it's been his dream for the past five years, Wilson said. The farming tendency comes to him naturally because his grandfather, Daniel Black Water, was once the main irrigator for the Pima Tribe decades ago.

So while Wilson seeks his agricultural pursuits, he unwittingly became one of a small but growing group of minority farmers. Officials are seeing the figure for Indian farmers increasing because the official formula used for counting Native farmers has

Until recently, a whole reservation was counted as one farm, but census officials are now counting individual farmers within the same land area. As a result, the 2007 Census of Agriculture reports that 79,703 Indians work on some 61,472 farms in Alaska and the United States, a growth of 88 percent since 2002, a change mainly accredited to the tally method, U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) Census of Agriculture figures show.

The states with the most principal farm operators are Arizona, New Mexico, Nevada, Oklahoma and Montana. Indian farms In Oklahoma came about after land was broken up by the

See FARMERS Continued on Page 4

Tribe worries pipeline will disturb graves

KATIE FRETLAND Associated Press

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) - As President Barack Obama pushes to fast-track an oil pipeline from Oklahoma south to the Gulf Coast, an American Indian tribe that calls the oil hub home worries the route might disrupt sacred sites holding the unmarked graves of their ancestors.

Sac and Fox Nation Chief George Thurman said he fears workers placing the 485-mile Keystone XL pipeline that would run from Cushing to refineries on Texas' Gulf Coast could disturb holy ground without consideration of the tribe. He and another tribe member say the pipeline's route travels through areas where unmarked graves are likely buried.

"We've been here 171 years," said Sandra Massey, the Sac and Fox Nation's historic preservation officer. "We've been living and dying here. We are all over."

Obama announced last month in Oklahoma that he was directing federal agencies to expedite the southern segment of the Keystone XL line, removing a critical bottleneck in the country's oil transportation system. The full, 1,700-mile Keystone pipeline, which would run from Canada to the Gulf Coast, became a political flashpoint late last year when congressional Republicans wrote a provision forcing Obama to make a decision, and environmental groups waged a campaign to kill the project. Obama delayed the full project in January.

Shawn Howard, a spokesman for TransCanada, the Calgary-based Keystone pipeline operator, said the company works closely with Indian tribes whenever its operations have a potential impact on their lands. TransCanada has archaeologists and other experts to help identify and avoid areas of concern, he said.

Work stops immediately when artifacts or important materials are discovered, said Terry Cunha, manager of stakeholder relations for Keystone Pipeline System.

"We would then work with the tribe to ensure that the materials are handled properly and that we agree on a plan to move forward before work resumes," Cunha

According to a report released by TransCanada, a survey of the project found 70 archaeological sites, 18 individual artifacts

See PIPELINE Continued on Page 5

BIA takes over Apache Tribe's '638' programs

■ 638 programs include services such as transportation, improvement planning, social services, job placement and training and Indian Child Welfare.

LYN MURPHY Native American Times

ANADARKO, Okla. - The Bureau of Indian Affairs has assumed operation of the Apache Tribe of Oklahoma's 638 programs, citing a concern that the tribe could not continue serving those programs with its current "internal conflict."

The tribe has been plagued with financial difficulties, intratribal disputes and struggles with repayment of a loan issued by Wells Fargo Bank to the tribe's previous

"The tribe presently has a difficult situation in which it operates, due to internal conflict. So we hope that the internal issue can be overcome in the near future once the tribe's election is held," said Nedra Darling, BIA spokeswoman. "In order for us to reassume something there usually is a problem. If they're not working in the proper order that is something that we would step in to assume."

The BIA notified the tribe several years ago of its intent to reassume all of its Public Law 93-638 contracts and grants. According to the Department of Interior, in the early 1970s, Congress passed the Indian Self Determination and Education Assistance Act that allowed Indian tribes and tribal organizations to acquire increased control over the management of federal programs that impact their members, resources and governments. These agreements are referred to as "638 compacts and contracts."

Darlin said the tribe went through an appeals process in February. However, the Interior Board of Indian Appeals upheld the BIA's decision to reassume the tribe's 638 programs.

Homer Flute, Apache Business Committee vice-chairman, said the tribe's financial difficulties were brought on by the "actions of members of the previous Business

See APACHE Continued on Page 2

AAIP teams with Kickapoo Tribe to launch new diabetes initiative

Olympic Legend Billy Mills and Kickapoo Chairman Steve Cadue will serve as co-chairs

OKLAHOMA CITY - The Association of American Indian Physicians (AAIP) recently announced a new national diabetes prevention plan titled "Conquering Diabetes in Indian Country." Billy Mills, 1964 Olympic Gold Medalist and Oglala Lakota (Sioux) tribal member, will join Kansas Kickapoo Tribal Chairman Steve Cadue, as cochairs of this fundraising effort designed to create a national diabetes prevention initiative.

The Conquering Diabetes in Indian Country national effort will officially launch at the National Indian Gaming Association (NIGA) annual meeting slated for April 1-4 in San Diego, California.

AAIP President Dr. Donna Galbreath said the organization is tackling one of the biggest health issues in Indian Country. Diabetes is at near epidemic levels among Indian people with nearly twice as many Native Americans being diagnosed as compared to non-Native Americans.

"To make strides in defeating diabetes in our communities, we need to band together and work for a common cause," she said. "This is really an education and awareness campaign about diet, exercise and the tools we need to teach American Indians and Alaska Natives on how to stay healthy and diabetes-free."

Galbreath said AAIP was honored to be working with visionary tribal leaders like Cadue and Mills, who is also the Running Strong for Indian Youth spokesman. The duo will lend leadership experience and contacts within the Indian Nations to help AAIP raise both diabetes awareness and prevention AAIP currently is working under a Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) grant to eliminate diabetes-related disparities, the National Diabetes Plan will expand current prevention activities throughout Indian Country.

For more information on the AAIP/Kickapoo diabetes initiative, visit www.aaip.org or call the organization at (405) 946-7072.

An aerial view of the museum's "Hall of the People" with the Oklahoma City skyline in the background.

OKC Council pledges $9M to finish Indian museum

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) - The Oklahoma City Council has approved a $9 million pledge to support the completion of the American Indian Cultural Center and Museum.

Officials announced March 27 that the pledge is contingent on a $40 million commitment from the state of Oklahoma. Another $31 million is expected to be raised through private and tribal near the intersection of Interstates 35 and 40 for the museum in 1999, which was valued at $3.2 million.

Oklahoma City contributed the land

Some state legislators have been critical of the museum's total costs, estimated at $171 million.

City officials expect $4 million in new sales taxes annually as a result of visitor spending at the facility.

According to the museum's director, Blake Wade, construction is on track for completion by December 2014.

Continued from Page 1

Committee, their associates and attorneys."

"Through various time periods (2005-2011) of their intratribal disputes, the BIA has worked closely with the Apache Tribe providing them with technical Darling assistance," "Although no actual assistance has been requested at this time, the BIA staff is working with tribal staff on the transfer of the bureau-funded programs from the tribe to the BIA based on the resumption of the 638 contracts."

Darling said 638 programs include services such as transportation, improvement planning, social services, job placement and training and Indian Child Welfare.

"Once the tribe has resolved all the deficiencies and can demonstrate to the BIA they have the financial capability to account for funding, they are eligible to request to contract their program," Darling said.

The BIA would not run the tribe's programs indefinitely, she added.

The current situation, Flute said, is best described in the lawsuit Apache Tribe of Oklahoma v. Betsy Brown.

"The case history sums up the problems created by the previous Business Committee between Wells Fargo Bank and the Apache Tribe of Oklahoma. Wells Fargo Bank has been aggressively trying to collect on the debt," he said.

According to the lawsuit, the loan was purportedly for acquiring land to develop a proposed casino and remodel an existing casino.

Flute said the Business Committee is optimistic about the tribe's future and the tribe has never experienced this type of difficulty in the past.

"The most positive expectation is that the NIGC (National Indian Gaming Commission) will rule that the Wells Fargo Bank's contract with the Apache Tribe of Oklahoma is a management contract, if this is ruled a management contract then it could be ruled null and void the contract," he said.

Darling said the local BIA agency in Anadarko is "always willing to assist the tribes in any matters before them."

Even with the tribe's current financial situation, it is conducting regular business with its employees and tribal citizens.

Tribe buys restaurant, marina on Grand Lake

GROVE, Okla. (AP) - An Oklahoma Indian tribe has purchased a restaurant on Grand Lake that offers sightseeing riverboats and a marina for $3.9 million.

The Seneca-Cayuga Tribe announced the purchase of Royal Bay Restaurant, Royal Bay Convention Center, Royal Bay Marina and two Cherokee Queen riverboats March 23. The multi-deck paddle-wheel riverboats specialize in scenic cruises, parties and weddings on Grand Lake.

Officials say they plan to extend the operation hours of the restaurant and the riverboat, but tribal economic development director Hoyit Bacon says there are no plans for riverboat gaming.

In 2007, the Miami, Okla.-based tribe applied to the Bureau of Indian Affairs for 30 acres to be held in trust for gaming

Those plans included a 100,000-squarefoot, $60 million casino and resort, which would employ about 450 people.

Creek Chief vetoes resolution opposing casino

SUSAN HYLTON Tulsa World

OKMULGEE, Okla. (AP) - Muscogee (Creek) Nation Chief George Tiger has vetoed a National Council resolution opposing the Kialegee Tribal Town's construction and operation of a gaming facility in Broken Arrow.

Tiger said he vetoed the resolution last Friday because he had asked a council committee to postpone the vote for 30 days so that he could meet with Kialegee and other tribal town officials.

"I felt like we gave our word to the Kialegee and other tribal members too, and that we should honor it," Tiger said.

The Creek Nation was

Chief George Tiger

originally a confederacy of tribal towns in Georgia and Alabama. The Kialegee Tribal Town gained federal recognition as its own tribe in 1941, but its 439 members are still considered part of the Creek Nation.

The Creek Nation's two the National Indian Gaming other tribal towns are the Alabama-Quassarte and the Thlopthlocco, which operate gaming facilities in Wetumka and Okemah, respectively.

The National Council passed the resolution opposing the Kialegee casino in a split 9-4-1 vote on March 8, eight days short of Tiger's requested postponement.

Speaker Sam Alexander said some members of the council felt pressed to go ahead and vote on the resolution due to pressure from U.S. Rep. John Sullivan, R-Okla., and a vocal neighborhood group that has fiercely fought the casino.

"Sometimes there seems to be a sense of urgency, but we can't control the time frame of the Bureau of Indian Affairs or Commission," Tiger said. "As far as I'm concerned, the ball is in their court, and as a nation we can voice our opinion in terms of our opposition to it, but still yet, a decision is going to be made outside the realm of the Muscogee (Creek) Nation."

Alexander said the National Council will consider a veto override. A veto override would require a two-thirds majority, or 12 votes from the 17-member body.

"According to constitution, the chief has a right to exercise his objection with a veto. We look forward to resolving it at the next council meeting," Alexander said, noting that he will vote for the override.

the Kialegee Tribal Town does not have jurisdiction on the restricted Creek allotment owned by Marcella Giles and her sister Wynema Capps. Several modular buildings have already arrived on the plot and are being assembled in preparation for a summer opening of the casino.

The resolution also states that the Kialegee Tribal Town lacks a gaming license through the Muscogee (Creek) Nation gaming commissioner and noted that a district court has ruled that governmental powers cannot be transferred through a lease agreement.

Tiger said he takes no position on the resolution and referred to his comments at a January news conference

The resolution asserts that when he said the land should not be used for a casino by any other tribe without the Creek Nation's consent.

> He did not rule out the possibility that the casino project eventually could gain approval from the Creek Nation.

"The only position we have is we are going back to our traditional cultural belief that if we sit across the table from each other that issues can be worked out. It's not only this particular issue but others, as well," Tiger said.

The new chief said he has had three meetings so far with leaders of the tribal towns. "It's the first time in the history of the nation that we've been able to do that," he said.

WE HAVE YOU COVERED

Arvest Bank provides the financial solutions you need.

Personal & Business Checking Accounts*

All Arvest checking accounts come with the FREE services you need to do your day-to-day banking - Arvest Online Banking, Mobile Banking**, Arvest CheckCard, and 24-Hour Account Information Line.

Mortgage Loans:

Rural Development

FHA, VA or Bond

Section 184 Indian Home Loan

- Lower Monthly Payments - No Monthly Mortgage Insurance
- Lower Down Payment
- Low Fixed Rate

Mention this ad for a $75 Closing Cost Discount.***

*$100.00 minimum required to open a checking account. **Your wireless carrier may assess a fee for data services. Please consult your wireless plan or provider for details. ***Some restrictions may apply. See associate for details.

(918) 631-1000

arvest.com

Member FDIC TENDER

We proudly offer an array of services, from general dentistry to sedation, dental implants, and cosmetic dentistry - all designed expressly to meet our patient's changing needs. With four general dentists and four hygienists, we can maintain your oral health for a lifetime all at one location.

We Accept Contract Health & Sooner Care

We serve patients in the Drumright, Cushing, Stillwater, Stroud, Ponca City, and surrounding areas with personalized service and exemplary care. Call for your appointment today.

918-352-3312 or Toll Free 877-RH Melton drumrightdentalcenter.com

Wyoming tribe blasts bald eagle permit

BEN NEARY Associated Press

CHEYENNE, Wyo. (AP) - The Wyoming tribe that received the nation's first federal permit allowing members to kill bald eagles for religious purposes renewed a legal challenge against the government March 30, calling the permit a "sham" because of restrictions against killing the birds on the tribe's reservation.

The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service on March 9 granted the Northern Arapaho a permit allowing members to kill two eagles only outside the Wind River Indian Reservation. The Arapaho share their reservation with the Eastern Shoshone, who opposed the killing of eagles on the tribes' shared land.

Many American Indian leaders nationwide and those in the Northern Arapaho tribe initially hailed the permit decision as a victory for Native sovereignty and Native religions, which the federal government actively suppressed well into the last century.

However, in an amended lawsuit filed against the government last Friday, the Arapaho Tribe takes issue with the permit provision that would require tribal members to kill eagles off the Wind River Reservation. The tribe states that the state of Wyoming prohibits killing eagles off the reservation while the federal permit itself requires adherence to state

"Any tribal member taking an eagle pursuant to the March 9, 2012, permit is subject to arrest and prosecution by the State of Wyoming, whether the take occurs on federal, state or other lands " tribal attorney Andy Baldwin and his associates wrote in the amended complaint.

A spokeswoman for the Fish and Wildlife Service in Denver said the agency had no comment on the tribe's amended complaint because the issue is in litigation.

In its amended complaint, the Northern Arapaho tribe argues that federal government action barring tribal members from taking bald eagles for religious purposes violates their free exercise of religion.

Baldwin said the tribe discussed the permit concern with federal officials before filing the amended complaint but declined further comment. Attempts to reach tribal officials weren't immediately successful.

Bald eagles were removed from the federal list of threatened species in 2007. The birds remain protected under the federal Bald and Golden Eagle Protection Act. Several Indian tribes have been allowed permits to kill golden eagles for religious purposes.

The Northern Arapaho first filed suit against the Fish and Wildlife Service last fall seeking to force the federal agency to grant an eagle permit. That court action came more than two years after the tribe first applied for a permit.

The tribe's lawsuit filed last fall followed the contentious prosecution Winslow Friday, a young tribal member who killed a bald eagle without a permit in 2005 for use in his tribe's Sun Dance. Friday shot the eagle on his reservation.

Former U.S. District Judge William Downes dismissed the charge against Friday in 2006 saying it would have been pointless for him to apply for a permit. "Although the government professes respect and accommodation of the religious practices of Native Americans, its own actions show callous indifference to such practices," Downes wrote.

A federal appeals court reinstated the criminal charge against Friday. After the U.S. Supreme Court refused to hear his case, he ultimately pleaded guilty in tribal court and was ordered to pay a fine.

In response to written questions from Associated Press earlier this month, Matt Hogan, assistant regional director of the Fish and Wildlife Service, stated that Wyoming would not have to give its permission Northern Arapaho members to kill eagles off the reservation.

"Permission for take of eagles would not be required by the State of Wyoming," Hogan stated in a March 14 email. "However, one of the permit conditions is consent from the landowner from where the bird will be taken."

In a status report to a federal judge presiding over the Northern Arapaho Tribe's lawsuit filed March 13, federal lawyers stated that the Eastern Shoshone Tribe had informed the Fish and Wildlife Service that they opposed the killing of eagles on the Wind River Reservation because they believed it was against the tribes' joint law and order code. Attempts to reach Eastern Shoshone officials for comment Friday weren't immediately successful.

NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES

Publisher & Editor LISA SNELL editor@nativetimes.com

Contributing Writers Dana Attocknie WESLEY MAHAN KAREN SHADE

Advertising Sales KATHLEEN ROBERTSON LISA SNELL ROB WALTON

advertising@nativetimes.com

Distribution SHELBY HICKS STEVE LACY WESLEY MAHAN MICHAEL MARRIS KATHLEEN ROBERTSON Brenda Slaughter

The Native American Times, formerly the Oklahoma Indian Times, is published weekly (except the last week of the year) by Lisa Hicks Snell. Mailing address is PO Box 411 Tahlequah, OK 74465. All the contents within the Native American Times are copyrighted material. Any reproduction, redistribution without the written consent of the NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES is strictly

> Each week's issue is available for free download online at: www.nativetimes.com

Subscription rates: $65.00 for fifty-two issues, $32.50 for twenty-six issues, or $16.25 for thirteen issues. A single copy is $1.25 (Rates are for postage and handling) Send check or money order to:

> NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES Attn: Subscriptions P.O. Box 411 Tahlequah, OK 74465-0411

Phone: (918) 708-5838 Fax: (888) 689-4873

Postmaster: Send Change of Address Form 579 to: NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES P.O. Box 411, Tahlequah, OK 74465

WWW.NATIVETIMES.COM - News from the crossroads of Indian Country

BIA finally taking apps to fill Okla. director post

WASHINGTON — The Bureau of Indian Affairs is now taking applications to lead one of its largest regional offices after its top position was unofficially vacant for more than two years.

A member of the Seminole Nation of Oklahoma, Jeanette Hanna was named director of the Eastern Oklahoma regional office in May 2002, but was reassigned to Washington, D.C., in 2009 due to a personnel matter. During her absence, the office was overseen by acting area directors.

On Sunday morning, the position was listed on the federal government's Office of Personnel Management website, www. usajobs.gov, with an application deadline of April 30.

Calls to the Bureau of Indian Affairs to clarify the terms of Hanna's departure were unanswered.

Eastern Oklahoma regional office serves more than 20 tribes, including the Cherokee Nation, Chickasaw Nation, Choctaw Nation, Muscogee (Creek) Nation and its three federally-recognized tribal towns, the United Keetoowah Band of Cherokee Indians and the Osage Tribe. It has agencies in Ada, Okla.; Miami, Okla.; Okmulgee, Okla.; Pawhuska, Okla.;

SUPERNAW'S OKLAHOMA

INDIAN SUPPLY

Wholesale items for Pow Wow Vendors

Bone chokers $20 per dozen

Handmade lamp worked glass bead bracelets $1.00 each

Glass bead stretch bracelets 5 for $2.50

12 Necklaces: Chain w/ pendant and display pad $13.50 36 inch gemstone chip strands Reg. 3.95 now $2.00

36 inch turquoise chip strands Reg. 7.95 now $4.00

Always our regular stock of seed beads from 16/0 to 8/0, findings, leather, hackles, fluffs and thousands of other supply items.

Remember we've moved around the corner 109 North Broadway, Skiatook, OK 74070

New Dealers Cash or Credit Card Only.

Open Noon-6pm Mon. thru Fri. • 10am-5m Sat. • Closed Sun.

Local: 396-1713-Countrywide Toll Free 1-888-720-1967 Website: www.supernaw.com • Email: Supernaw@flash.net

STAFF REPORTS

Based out of Muskogee, Okla., the Talihina, Okla.; and Wewoka, Okla.

Native American hiring preference?

Advertise to Native Americans! FREE ONLINE with PRINT BUY E-mail your ad for a quote to lisa@nativetimes.com

Native inmates challenge tobacco ban

DIRK LAMMERS Associated Press

SIOUX FALLS, S.D. (AP) – A Lakota traditional healer said March 27 that tobacco is an integral part of Native American religious ceremonies and denying its use is akin to taking away the Bible from a Christian.

Richard Moves Camp, testifying during a federal trial challenging a South Dakota prison policy banning its use in such ceremonies, said tobacco has been a central part of prayer for thousands of years. It's traditionally mixed with other botanicals in pipes and smoked to bring peace and harmony and connected to cloth in prayer ties that are burned in fires as a symbol of offering, he said.

Inmates Blaine Brings Plenty and Clayton Creek, members of prisonbased Native American Council of Tribes, filed the suit in December 2009 against prison warden Doug Weber, corrections secretary Dennis Kaemingk and attorney general Marty Jackley.

James Moore, the officials' attorney, said ceremonial tobacco inside the state penitentiary was becoming increasingly abused and inmates had been caught separating it from their pipe mixtures and prayer ties. Moore said the state policy allows other botanicals such as red willow bark to be burned, and prison officials stopped short of banning the use of "That hasn't been done," Moore said. "All that is limited is what can be smoked in it."

The state prison system went tobacco-free in 2000 but made an exception for tobacco used in Native American ceremonies. But in an October 2009 letter eliminating that exemption, Weber said tobacco was being sold or bartered to other inmates.

"Sometimes, the prison gangs are pressuring the inmates to sell their tobacco instead of using it for spiritual reasons," Weber wrote.

Other states, including Nevada and New Mexico, have prison smoking bans but allow Native Americans to use tobacco during religious ceremonies.

Moore said that South Dakota's policy change followed more than 10 years of conversations with tribal elders and traditional healers, some of whom perform pipe ceremonies without tobacco.

He said there was no rush to South Dakota's judgment, and corrections department has fairly liberal policies regarding Native American religious practices that support sweat lodges, pipe ceremonies, drum music, prayer ties and powwows.

"This is something that's ingrained into the culture of the institution," Moore said.

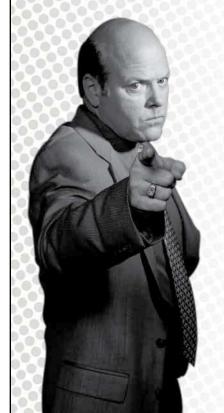

Brings Plenty and Moore in their suit said the policy change violates their U.S. Constitutional rights ensuring that no prisoner be penalized or discriminated against solely on their religious beliefs or practices.

Their attorney Pamela Bollweg, said prison officials have to show there's a compelling interest in limiting access, and even if there is a compelling interest they have to use the least restrictive alternative.

Creek, a Cheyenne River Sioux Tribal citizen who's been imprisoned since 1990, said he takes his role as a pipe carrier very seriously. It involves carrying the burdens of the world on one's shoulders and clearing oneself of any negative thoughts to respect the higher power.

He said tobacco is sometimes mixed with other botanicals in Native American ceremonies, but it is always part of the tradition.

Investigate BEFORE you invest

- Learn how to spot investment fraud
- Verify the registration of a brokerdealer or investment advisor with the Oklahoma Securities Commission before investing at securities.ok.gov
- Download your free investor protection kit at investedok.org twitter*

You Tube

Reeves Renovations

Bathrooms • Kitchens • Paint • Tile • Trim • Plumbing Electrical • Solar Panels • Windmills • Winterizing

Quality Work • Free Estimates

Professional Construction, Remodeling & Repairs

918-637-6736

johnwilliamreeves@juno.com Serving Mayes & Cherokee Counties

www.flyingeagletradingpost.com

Metal Roofing & Siding

Professional Construction and Home Repairs

Free Estimates

Charles Snell 918-507-2902

Native American Contractor

Proposal would create tribal national park

KRISTI EATON Associated Press

SIOUX FALLS, S.D. (AP) Officials from the Badlands National Park in South Dakota and the Oglala Sioux tribe are hoping a meeting with Interior Department officials will move them one step closer to creating the country's first tribal national

The U.S. government's War Department took what is now the South Unit from the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation to establish a practice bombing range in the 1940s. It was returned to the Oglala Sioux tribe in 1976 and has since been co-managed with the National Park Service. In 2002, disagreements arose between the tribe and the National Park Service over plans for the land and the tribe began pushing for greater control.

forward with management of paleontology," he said. the South Unit has been under Unit is mostly undeveloped and less traveled compared to the North Unit.

"This is wildly different. I've been at this for 26 years now, and I've never seen a general management plan that ever had a management option, because it's understood that it's a national park service operation," said Badlands National Park Superintendent Eric Brunnemann. "This unit sits on land that is tribal."

Officials will discuss moving forward with the plan. If approved, they can start discussing what the tribal national park will include, Brunnemann said.

John Yellow Bird Steele, the president of the Oglala Sioux tribe, already knows the park will offer one thing much sought after on the reservation: jobs.

"For a few of our people, it would be creating careers in The plan on how to move archaeology, anthropology,

Congress would need to development since 2005, with approve such a park - a step the preferred alternative that could take years - but being the creation of a tribal Oglala Sioux and park officials national park, to be managed are moving forward with and administered by the intentions of bringing more Oglala Sioux tribe. The South tribal awareness at Badlands.

Wilson is optimistic that one day he'll add cattle to his operation.

Allotment Act in the late 1800s. Here, farms are individual endeavors rather than reservation aligned, although some tribes, like the Muscogee (Creek) Nation and the Comanche Nation have tribal farm operations.

Wilson is so new to farming he does not qualify for any of the 2010 Keepseagle settlement for $ 760 million by the USDA. The lawsuit awarded Indian farmers monies for federal subsidies that were denied under guidelines.

His new occupation is novel but if the question comes up, he has learned to fend off any critics.

"People are amazed by my decision to be a farmer," he said. "They say, 'aren't you out looking for job?' like it's not work. I call it being a professional farmer."

Wilson's every day check list is like a near-forgotten catechism of chores. He's up around 5:30 a.m. daily to release and feed his chickens (he also sells eggs). He works his vegetables plots having in Ada. The Oklahoma State plowed the ground with his prized piece of farming equipment: A tiller.

"I lack a lot of the equipment," Wilson said. "But I welcome the advice on when to plant and I am working to University (OSU) farming outreach regards diversity in farming as an emerging trend they try to address at a grassroots level.

But OSU is discreet; the agency doesn't want to violate

COURTESY STEPHI WILSON

Dave Wilson is up at 5:30 a.m. daily to release anda feed his chickens.

produce on a regular cycle and to provide a livelihood for my family, you know, be selfsufficient."

Wilson, as an Indian farmer, is drawing the attention of professional agriculturalists like Claude Bess of the Oklahoma Cooperative Extension Service's Southeastern District office federal laws by asking farmers if they are Native. Sometimes, they go by clues; like family names or ties. So they don't have carry concrete figures on how many Indian farmers are in Oklahoma. They leave that to the feds, Bess said.

On a collective scale, Bess said OSU Extension is looking to expand interaction with both individual Indian and tribal farmers.

"We aren't talking money," he said. "But if we could make the contacts, we'd like to cosponsor with the tribes on all of our educational programs. We think we have a leg up, we're not going to tell them how to do it, but we'll give them information that will work for them."

Meanwhile, this week has been marked on the Wilson farm by the arrival of pygmy goats. Then it will be horses and a donkey. Standing in his cowboy boots and dungarees in a field of chickens, Wilson is optimistic that one day he'll add cattle to his operation. To him, it's just a matter of time.

"I set a goal and I don't like to quit," Wilson said. "I don't' see my farm as a short-time thing."

And at the end of a day, he usually has a new post for his farm's Facebook page. This is where his farming operation bucks a national trend since the agriculture census notes that Indian farms usually lack Internet access.

His Pima relatives are regular visitors to the Facebook site. They are enthusiastic and supportive about his farm.

"The pictures (I post) abound," Wilson said.

For information on or from OSU Extension, visit online www.oces.okstate.edu

COMMENTARY

When Leader Charge spoke, Kevin Costner listened

TIM GIAGO (Nanwica Kciji) Notes from Indian Country © 2012 Unity South Dakota

We've all had to send a "belated" birthday card in our lives, but today I am writing a "belated" column.

I say belated because two months ago I made a note to myself to remember the day my friend Doris Leader Charge died. It was on February 20, 2001, that Doris made her journey to the Spirit World. I set aside the note and it got buried under the day-to-day paper that gathers on my desk every week and time slipped by.

For those who never heard me repeat the headline in an article written by David E. Thigpen for People Magazine in January of 1991. His headline read, "Kevin Costner said the words but Doris Leader Charge made the Dances dialogue truly Sioux." Thigpen was referring to the role Leader Charge played in making the movie, Dances with Wolves" an Academy Award winner.

Doris was born on the Rosebud Reservation on May 4, 1930. She attended St. Francis Indian School before she was sent to St. Mary's School for Girls at Springfield, S.D. She was raised in a Lakota speaking family and did not learn to speak English until she was sent to the boarding school.

Dances with Wolves producer Jim Wilson was driven to make his movie as authentic as possible and found that many of the actors and extras, some of them Lakota and some from tribes other than Lakota, spoke little or no Lakota. He said, "Someone recommended of Doris Leader Charge let Doris Leader Charge, a fluent Lakota speaker and teacher of the language, and we set out to get her on board."

Leader Charge was a Lakota language instructor at Sinte Gleska (Spotted Tail) University on the Rosebud Reservation when Wilson sent her a script to translate from the English to Lakota. Three weeks later she sent the script back to him fully translated. Then Doris and a cousin translated each actor's lines on tape, first in English and then in Lakota and Wilson mailed the tapes to the cast members. Doris approached teaching the Lakota language parts to the two main characters, Kevin Costner and Mary McDonnell, a little differently. To her, Costner was a recent arrival to Lakota country so his knowledge of the language was limited and so she felt the he did not have to speak as fluently as McDonnell, who in the movie had been a white captive of the Lakota, had married a member of the tribe and therefore needed to be much more fluent in the Lakota language.

Thigpen writes, "When the actors began to rehearse outside of Rapid City, Wilson asked Leader Charge to be on hand as a dialogue coach." Wilson soon realized he needed her on the set 90 percent of the time. Wilson said, "If any of the extras were late or had not studied their parts, she scolded them and because she was an elder a lot of the younger Indians looked up to her and she smoothed things out a lot."

I worked with Michael Blake on the script of the movie with a lot of input from Doris. When he won the Academy Award for best screenplay I was amazed and thrilled to see Ms. Leader Charge walk on the stage with Michael and translate his English acceptance speech into Lakota for the folks back home on the Rosebud Reservation. I believe a lot of Hollywood stars in the audience were shocked and surprised by her elegance, grace and charm.

As an offshoot of the movie, Rodney Grant, the man who played "Wind in His Hair" stopped by my news office at Indian Country Today and all of my female employees wanted to pose for pictures with him. One of them noticed that his fly was unzipped and when it was subtly pointed out to him he turned a little redder than usual and stepped behind nickname of "Wind in His Doris went back to teaching at Sinte Gleska University without missing a beat. She used most of the money she earned from the movie to repair her home in Parmelee on the Rosebud Reservation. She earned $23,800 for her teaching and acting (she played Pretty Shield in the movie) and with that sum she purchased a new stove, refrigerator and a washer and dryer, and that was the extent of her Hollywood money splurge.

Leader Charge said of her movie role, "The kids are so proud that I'm their teacher and that I did all of those things. I hope the film shows young people on our reservation, where selfesteem is low, that you have to do the best you can and be proud of yourself."

Doris is buried at the Holy Innocents Cemetery near a door to zip up. The staff her home at Parmelee. To immediately gave him the the very end she was a leader and she did love to take charge, but above all she was a traditional Lakota woman who brought great pride to her oyate (people).

> So if you ever get a chance to see "Dances with Wolves" again, think about Doris.

> Tim Giago, an Oglala Lakota, is President of Unity South Dakota. He was a Nieman Fellow at Harvard with the Class of 1990. His weekly column won the H. L. Mencken Award in 1985. He was the founder of The Lakota Times, Indian Country Today, Lakota Journal and Native Sun News. He can be reached at UnitySoDak1@knology.net

The viewpoints expressed in columns and letters are the opinions of the writers and not necessarily the opinion or viewpoint of the Native American Times publisher or staff. Send letters to editor@nativetimes.com. Please keep letters to 350 words or less. Sign your name, tribal affiliation and city of residence for verification purposes.

NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES

Name:
Address:
City: State: Zip:
Phone:
☐ $65.00 for 52 issues ☐ $32.50 for 26 issues
□ $16.25 for 13 issues □ $1.25 single copy

Mail this form with a check or money order to: Native American Times • P.O. Box 411 Tahlequah, OK 74465 • 918-708-5838

VINITA 918-256-5585

LANGLEY 918-782-0011

MONKEY ISLAND 918-257-8869

www.okstatebank.com Equal Housing Lender Native American Owned

'Changing the culture of waste." NATIVE

TIMES recycles with Tahlequah Recycling Incorporated... shouldn't you? Reeves Renovations Professional Construction, Remodeling & Repairs

Bathrooms • Kitchens • Paint Tile • Trim • Plumbing Electrical • Solar Panels Windmills • Winterizing Quality Work • Free Estimates

918-637-6736 johnwilliamreeves@juno.com Mayes & Cherokee Counties

Follow Us! www.twitter.com/nativetimes

More Jobs. More News. More Features. Every Day.

www.nativetimes.com

Navajo Nation eyes Grand Canyon for development

FELICIA FONSECA Associated Press

of Navajo families have grazed livestock on a remote but spectacular mesa that overlooks the confluence of the Colorado and Little Colorado development.

But ancestral tradition and the tranquility of the landscape could be subject to change if the Navajo government's plans are realized for tourists from cliff tops to water's edge.

The vast 27,000-square-mile (70,000-squarekilometer) Navajo reservation abuts Grand Canyon National Park, and tribal leaders say they're losing out on tourist dollars and jobs for their people by leaving the land undeveloped. Navajo President Ben Shelly recently signed a nonbinding agreement that lists the gondola, a restaurant, a half-mile (800-meter) river walk, a resort hotel and spa and recreational vehicle park among the attractions of a proposed development that he says will bring up to $70 million a year in revenue to the tribe and 2,000 jobs to the impoverished reservation.

"We want people from all over the world to visit Navajo land and the Grand Canyon," Shelly said. "We have many of the world's wonders in True enough, but the National Park Service already is voicing objections to the large-scale development on its eastern flank. Environmental organizations and some Navajos who call the area home also oppose the project.

"This is just one more thing that is going to chip away at the solitude of the area, and it's really not the appropriate type of development for that area," said Alicyn Gitlin of the Sierra Club, an environmental group.

Similar proposals for a tramway that would take tourists from the East Rim to the river have been opposed by the local community of Bodaway-Gap. They oppose the scale and character of the current plan and want more say in what could be built there.

The confluence, as locals call it, is a 100-mile (160-kilometer) drive off Interstate 40 from Flagstaff off a rough dirt road. Sagebrush, rolling hills, arroyos, canyons and desert mark the landscape where the Colorado meets the bluegreen waters of the Little Colorado. It's mostly quiet, save for the occasional helicopter tour over the Grand Canyon or the shouts from river rafters below.

The land has remained undeveloped for decades because of a land dispute between the Navajos and the neighboring Hopi tribe, both of which claimed aboriginal ties to it. A construction ban implemented by former U.S. Commissioner of Indian Affairs Robert Bennett imposed a ban on home and land improvements in 1966. It was lifted in 2009, though little development has occurred on the 700,000 acres (280,000 hectares).

The western edge of the Grand Canyon outside the national park boundaries belongs to the Hualapai Tribe, which has a horseshoe-shaped glass bridge that juts out 70 feet (21 meters) over the canyon's edge and gives tourists a view of the Colorado River 4,000 feet (1,200 meters) below. Most people visiting the Grand Canyon go to the South Rim within the national park. The North Rim, also within the park, is less developed, but has a seasonal lodge.

The memorandum of agreement that Shelly signed with the Confluence Partners, LLC., on 100 percent agreement, but we're going to do Feb. 21 doesn't state the impacts of a development our part to bring development and jobs here to on the East Rim. But a member of the negotiating Navajo."

team, Deswood Tome, said the tribal government expects 3 million visitors a year as soon as 2015 and revenue to be between $40 million and $70 FLAGSTAFF, Arizona (AP) - Generations million annually - up to a half of the tribe's budget not including federal funds.

No one lives at the overlook to the confluence but a handful of people live nearby, and other rivers. This is the East Rim of the majestic families have said they want to move back Grand Canyon - the last with no significant since the construction ban ended. There is no water or electricity at the site and putting in the infrastructure would cost at least $60 million alone, which Tome said also could benefit residents. About 27 miles (43 kilometers) of dirt a resort and aerial tramway that would ferry road would have to be paved to reach the site, and water would have to be piped in from miles (kilometers) away.

> At full build-out, the project could approach $1 billion, said Lamar Whitmer, of the Confluence Partners, LLC.

> The tram would run from the East Rim and  $parallel \, the \, Colorado \, River \, before \, coming \, to \, a \, stop \,$ at the bottom of the canyon, where a restaurant would be located. A half-mile (800-meter) river walk, also running alongside the Colorado River, would give tourists a view of the confluence but stop short of it. The resort hotel and spa, other hotels, and commercial and retail space would be located on top of the canyon.

> The proposed attractions could create a jurisdictional dispute, depending on their distance from the Colorado River. The Navajos believe the reservation extends to the high water mark of the Colorado River, while the National Park Service says its boundary is a quarter-mile (400 meters) from the river's bank along the 61-mile (98-kilometer) stretch of the Colorado before it meets the Little Colorado.

> Grand Canyon park officials also want to maintain the wilderness characteristics of the East Rim, which is popular with backcountry hikers and not easily accessible, and make sure endangered species like the humpback chub are protected, said park Superintendent Dave Uberuaga. Environmental groups say the noise and light pollution would be unwelcome.

> "It's not Disneyland," said Lynn Hamilton of the Grand Canyon River Guides, a canyon advocacy and environmental group. "It's one of the seven natural wonders of the world. To mar that somehow with such commercialism right there, in your face would just seem contrary to what the value of Grand Canyon is."

> Environmentalists applauded the Navajo government for throwing out plans for an airport, verbally at least, though it remains in the written agreement.

> Shelly has vowed to protect sacred sites, and although he initially opposed any development at the confluence, his spokesman says it is one of the premier locations on the reservation to draw tourist dollars. But the tribe still must pursue land and leases from a community that appears

> This is what Tyrone Tsosie called his backyard as a child. He recalled his grandmother taking him out to the confluence and showing him how to use corn pollen – a staple of Navajo tradition - to pray to the rivers for blessings. Yucca root, white flowers and sage that grow there also are used for traditional and medicinal purposes, he

> "The main thing right now for my generation, we don't want that kind of change, development out there because we don't want to lose that scenery and lose all those memories," said Tsosie, who no longer lives in the area.

> Said Tome, "We're not always going to have

PREPARING FOR THE 7TH GENERATION: The Journey Continues April 17-19, 2012

KEEP ME SMOKE FREE

REED CONFERENCE CENTER • MIDWEST CITY, OKLA.

Sponsored by:

Cherokee Nation, Cheyenne and Arapaho Tribes, Chickasaw Nation, Choctaw Nation, Muscogee (Creek) Nation, Osage Nation, Oklahoma City Area Inter-Tribal Health Board, OU School of Community Medicine, Oklahoma State Department of Health, Oklahoma Tobacco Research Center, American Legacy, American Heart Association

KEYNOTE SPEAKERS:

Tuesday, April 17:

JONATHAN ORENS, MD

Professor of Medicine Chief of Division of Pulmonary & Critical Care Medicine Johns Hopkins Hospital

Wednesday, April 18:

CYNTHIA HALLETT

Americans for Non-Smokers Rights

TIM MILBRANDT

Mayo Clinic

Thursday, April 19:

DR. TERRY CLINE

Commissioner of Health Oklahoma State Department of Health

KEVIN COLLINS

Centers for Disease Control and Prevention

CONFERENCE REGISTRATION FORM

Conference Location:

Reed Conference Center, 5800 Will Rogers Rd., Midwest City, Oklahoma

REGISTRATION IS FREE

PLEASE COMPLETE ONE REGISTRATION FORM PER PARTICIPANT

Please check the dates that you plan to attend:	April 17	April 18	April 19
Name:
Please print legibly)
Organization/Tribe
Address:
City, State, Zip Code:
Telephone:
-mail:
Please let us know if you have any sp	pecial needs:
To Register, please m	nail, fax or e-mail	completed form	to:

Linda Robertson Office of Tribal Liaison 1000 N.E. 10th St. Oklahoma City OK 73117 Phone: 405/271-9444 EXT 56420 Fax: 405/271-1225 Email: lindaj@health.ok.gov

To Book Lodging: Sheraton at Reed Center (405/455-1800 Or copy the following link into a web browser http://www.starwoodmeeting.com/StarGroupsWeb/res?id=1201190271&key=6994D

and 34 historic structures in the area where the pipeline will be built in Oklahoma. The numbers were first reported by The Oklahoma Daily.

Seven of the sites met criteria to be eligible for the National Register of Historic Places, and TransCanada agreed to bypass six of them, said Oklahoma Historical Society Director Bob Blackburn. The site that will be partially destroyed is a Works Progress Administration drainage ditch built around the 1930s, he said. Details about the other sites and whether any Indian graves were included were not immediately known.

Blackburn said the federal government identified tribes, including the Sac and Fox Nation, that may be affected by the pipeline and asked for input. None of the tribes in Oklahoma corresponded with the Historical Society or indicated there were potential problems, he said.

"Some Indian tribe could have a site they never told anybody was important," Blackburn said. "If it is not entered into our database we may have missed it."

Thurman said he met Obama briefly near Cushing during his visit but he was not given enough time to raise the issue of unmarked graves. He said he was disappointed the pipeline was put on a fast-track without knowing whether sacred sites would lie in its way.

White House regional spokeswoman Caroline Hughes declined to comment and referred questions to the Interior Department.

In a statement, department spokesman Adam Fetcher said all permitting activity on the project will fully comply with the Native American Graves Protection and Repatriation

"If any construction is determined likely to result in the excavation of Native American human remains, the permitting agency will consult with potentially affiliated tribes and tribes recognized as having lands in the project area and complete a plan of action that the agency will take should an encounter with a tribal grave take place," the statement read.

During a recent tour of the nation, Massey said a number of tribal ancestors are buried in marked cemeteries but there are many other unmarked sites. At times, tribal members were buried along creek beds and generations later, it's possible that there are no longer remains at a particular location.

"Even if nothing is left, it's still a sacred site," she said.

The concern over whether the pipeline route could run through sacred Indian grounds has prompted some activists to protest its construction.

"We will walk the whole route, Cushing to the Red River, to make sure they don't destroy an Indian grave," said Fannie Bates, who is of Cherokee descent and from Oklahoma City.

Associated Press writer Kelly P. Kissel in Cushing contributed to this report.

Annual Symposium on the American Indian April 9-14

TAHLEQUAH, Okla.

– Marking four decades of celebrating indigenous cultures and addressing issues affecting tribes, the 40th Annual Symposium on the American Indian is April 9-14 on the campus of Northeastern State University.

Preliminary symposium activities begin April 9, with the full schedule running April 11-14. This year's theme is "The Journey of Sovereign Nations: Self-Determination and Human Rights." The event is organized by NSU's Center for Tribal Studies and the American Indian Heritage Committee.

"The symposium will reflect on four decades of change for American Indians from the 1970s revitalization of tribal governmentstothemorerecent United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples," said Dr. Phyllis Fife, director of the Center for Tribal Studies. "The lineup of distinguished speakers represent leading scholars and professionals. Throughout the week of activities, the history, education, human experiences, the arts, social well-being and politics that impact tribal governments and indigenous peoples will be examined."

Confirmed speakers for the symposium include Walter Echo-Hawk, Quinton Roman Nose, Marcella Giles, LeAnne Howe and Sterlin Harjo.

Echo-Hawk is an author and attorney. He has worked to protect the legal, political, property, cultural and human rights of Indian tribes and Native peoples. He will deliver the opening keynote address on "Implementing the U.N. Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples." He is the author of "In the Courts" of the Conqueror: The 10 Worst Indian Law Cases Ever Decided, "which will be the topic of his Wednesday afternoon session. Echo-Hawk is a citizen of the Pawnee Nation.

Marcella Giles

Roman Nose served as the education director of the Cheyenne and Arapaho Tribes of Oklahoma. He helped develop the Cheyenne and Arapaho Tribal College on the campus of Southwestern Oklahoma State University in Weatherford. He currently serves as president of the National Indian Education Association. Roman Nose will speak on the Indian Education Act and the involvement of the NIEA in the professional development of teachers and other educators, and as a voice for improvement of education delivery for Indian children and adults. He is a citizen of the Cheyenne and Arapaho Giles has served as attorney general for the Muscogee (Creek) and Seminole nations. Now in private practice, she is a consultant on trust reform for the Intertribal Monitoring Association on Indian trust funds. She will deliver an address on Indian land rights and trust issues. Giles, a citizen of the Muscogee (Creek) Nation and Oklahoma native, has held positions with the

LeAnne Howe

U.S. Department of Justice and the U.S. Department of the Interior. Her legal experience included cases involving individual Indian allottees in federal and state courts and Individual Indian Money (IIM) account holders in eastern Oklahoma for oil and gas issues. She is involved with cultural resources protection, economic development and environmental compliance.

LeAnne Howe is an author, playwright and scholar at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign where she teaches American Indian Studies, literature, studies, performance and Indigenous theater. An award winning author and poet, she was selected as the John and Renee Grisham writer-inresidence at the University of Mississippi at Oxford for 2006-2007. She also wrote and narrated a PBS documentary, "Indian Country Diaries: Spiral of Fire" in 2006, and co-wrote, with James Fortier the documentary "Playing Pastime: American Indian Fast-Pitch Softball," and "Survival." Her book "Miko Kings: An American Indian Baseball (2007) examines the roots of American baseball.

In 2010-2011 Howe received the Distinguished William J. Fulbright Scholarship and lived in Amman, Jordan, during the "Arab Spring" where she taught at the University of Jordan and researched a new novel. She recently won the Tulsa Library Trust's American Indian Words Award. Howe is an enrolled citizen of the Choctaw Nation.

Walter Echo-Hawk

Harjo is an award-winning filmmaker. On April 10 he will host a seminar, "The Digital Native Voice," from 3-5 p.m. and the American Indian Film Series from 7-9 p.m. in the auditorium of the W. Roger Webb Educational Technology Center. The afternoon seminar will focus on contemporary approaches in American Indian filmmaking.

Harjo belongs to the Creek and Seminole tribes and is a writer, producer, director and documentarian for film. With roots in rural Hughes and Seminole counties, he remains immersed in the traditions and language of Creek and Seminole life. At age 23 he began writing and making films from a perspective inside the Native community. Eight years later, his roster includes two feature films, each of which premiered at the Sundance Film Festival: "Four Sheets to the Wind" (2007) and "Barking Water" (2008). His work includes a growing number of documentary films and a short narrative.

Sterlin Harjo

He was named one of the Sundance Film Institute's first five Annenberg Film Fellows in 2004 and received the Creative Promise Award from Tribeca All Access in 2006. In 2010 he was invited to be a juror at Sundance for his unique perspective and range of experience. He is currently creating documentaries for This Land Press in Tulsa and working on other creative projects.

Leading the 10th Annual Indigenous Language Documentation Revitalization Seminar, cosponsored by the Oklahoma Native Language Association, is Dr. Mary Linn of the University of Oklahoma Sam Noble Museum of Natural History. She will be assisted by Dr. Colleen Fitzgerald from the University of Texas-Arlington and Dr. Brad Montgomery-Anderson of the NSU College of Liberal Arts.

The seminar is 6-8 p.m. on April 12 and 8 a.m. – 5:30 p.m. on April 13 in the University Center Morgan Room. Open to everyone, the target audience will be language instructors, students, language learners, researchers, linguists and program developers. The central theme will be "pronunciation."

Linn will speak Thursday evening with a "state of the state overview" of language happenings in Oklahoma and the growing role of second language learners in Native language revitalization efforts. On Friday, Fitzgerald will address "The Grammar of Sound: Creating Sound Memories for Language Teaching." Fitzgerald is the chair of the Department of Linguistics and Teaching English to Speakers of Other Languages.

Montgomery-Anderson, assistant professor English at NSU, conducts the Oklahoma Workshop on Native American Languages (OWNAL) on Saturday from 8 a.m. - 5 p.m. in the UC Morgan Room. OWNAL is a workshop focused on descriptive studies of indigenous languages of North America. The primary audience will be professional linguists and scholars. linguistics Α registration fee is required. Contact Montgomery-Anderson at 918-444-3610 for information.

April 13-14 is the always popular NSU Powwow which will include the Gourd Dance, Grand Entry, intertribal dancing, contests and vendors. Hours are 6-10 p.m. Friday and 2-midnight Saturday. Master of Ceremonies will be Choogie Kingfisher; Arena Director Chuck Bread; Head Man Dancer Otto Hamilton; Head Lady Dancer Geneva Hamilton; Head Gourd Dancer Chris Chanate; and Color Guard will be the United Keetoowah Band Honor Guard.

For more information about the 40th Annual Symposium on the American Indian contact the Center for Tribal Studies at 918-444-4350 or tribalstudies@nsuok.edu.

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT / HELP WANTED

CHEROKEE NATION $^{\circ}$

Cherokee Nation whose headquarters are located in beautiful Tahlequah, Oklahoma is a national leader in Indian tribal governments and economic development in Oklahoma, We are a dynamic, progressive organization, which owns several business enterprises and administers a variety of services for the Cherokee people in Northeastern Oklahoma. Cherokee Nation offers an exceptional employee benefits plan with Comprehensive Health, Life, 401 (k), Holiday Pay, Sick Leave and Annual Leave.

CURRENT OPPORTUNITIES | WW HASTINGS HOSPITAL #4713 Inpatient RN/PRN/OR/T/PT, Closes 4/3/2012

POSITIONS CLOSE 4/13/2012 #5768 Medical Technologist/R/PT

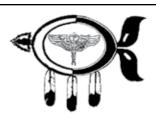

#5768 Medical Technologist/R/PT #6105 Medical Technologist II/R/FT #5745 Medical Technologist/R/FT

Interested applicants please apply at www.cherokee.org

Cherokee Nation Human Resources Department PO Box 948 Tahlequah, OK 74465 (918) 453-5292 or 453-5050

Employment will be contingent upon drug test results. Indian preference is considered.

Check nativetimes.com for more jobs!
-New jobs posted throughout the week-

Health Info. Mgr.

FT - Monday thru Friday
Starting Salary: $52,000.00
Duties: Has full resp. and accountability for planning, directing, reorganizing, coordinating and controlling the overall day to day aspects of Health Information Management Department.

Accountant

Kickapoo Community Childcare Center McLoud,OK, FT - Monday thru Friday Salary: Dependent on Experience Must have excellent computer skills and prevous exp. in a childcare payment program.

Send resume to: Kickapoo Tribal Health Center, POB 1360, McLoud, OK 74851 or email to cherylkto@yahoo.com

Look for Native American

5 tips to 'spring clean' your resumé

Career Coach and Author Ford R. Myers Offers Five Simple Ideas to Develop an Attention-Getting Resumé

HAVERFORD, Penn. – If you find that your resume isn't getting the results you want, spring is the perfect time to clean it up.

Ford R. Myers, Career Coach, Speaker and Author of "Get The Job You Want, Even When No One's Hiring," (John Wiley & Sons, http://www.getthejobbook.com) suggests the following five tips to freshen up your resume this spring.

1. BE BRIEF:

Less is always more. Of the five main sections of a resume - Header/Contact Information, Career Summary, Professional Experience, Education and Affiliations or Professional Development - the Career Summary is where brevity counts most.

"The Summary is a brief statement of who you are, where you're 'coming from,' and what skills and expertise you have to contribute to an organization. All you'll need to grab the reader's attention are five or six lines of text highlighting the benefits and contributions you offer as a professional," states Myers.

2. BE SPECIFIC

Resumes that get noticed focus on specific, tangible results. Quantify everything you can, including retention rates, sales numbers, profit margins, numbers of projects, numbers of people, performance quotas, and so on. Whenever possible, use percentages, dollars and hard numbers.

"Although individuals should be as specific as possible throughout the entire resume, quantification should be used most in the 'Professional Experience' section. Here is where your past jobs, roles, responsibilities, and accomplishments are listed. This is also the section where most employers and recruiters focus 90% of their attention. The information you present here, and how you present it, can decide the fate of your candidacy within about 10 seconds of resume scanning time," explains Myers.

3. BE ACTIVE.

Myers urges resume writers to use strong action verbs at the beginning of every sentence. Words such as "lead," "launch," "direct," "build," "manage" and "conduct" have a lot more impact than a passive phrase such as "responsible for."

4. BE SELECTIVE

Focus on information that is truly relevant to your career goal and edit out the rest. "There is no need to focus on your high school achievements or volunteer work if they are not relevant to the career you are looking for or if they are in your distant past," says Myers.

5. BE HONEST

Myers warns job seekers to never lie on a resume. "If you lie or 'stretch the truth,' you will always lose in the long run," he says.

"Your resume is a 'living document' that will be edited and updated through the course of your job search and your entire career," adds Myers. "Taking a good look at it this spring, and at the start of every season, will help you put your best foot forward."

For more information and other useful tips for achieving career success, visit http://www.getthejobbook.com

Copyright (C) 2012, Career Potential, LLC. All Rights Reserved. Reprinted by permission of Ford R. Myers, a nationally-known Career Coach and author of "Get The Job You Want, Even When No One's Hiring." Download your free bonuses now at http://www.careerbookbonuses.com.

Ford R. Myers is President of Career Potential, LLC. His firm helps clients take charge of their careers, create the work they love, and earn what they deserve! Ford has held senior consulting positions at three of the nation's largest career service firms. His articles and interviews have appeared in many national magazines and newspapers, and he has conducted presentations at numerous companies, associations and universities. In addition, Ford has been a frequent guest on television and radio programs across the country. More information is available at: http://www.getthejobbook.com and http://www.careerpotential.com.

MODERN AMERICAN INDIAN LEADERS

By Dean Chavers, Ph. D.

Indian leaders of the modern age. Tribal leader

Stories of 87 Indian leaders of the modern age. Tribal leaders, war heroes, literary heroes, education heroes, sports heroes, movement heroes, religious heroes, and others. A MUST for every school library and Indian Studies program.

Hardback, two volumes, 792 pages, 40 pictures.

Available at www.mellenpress.com

Order yours today! Great textbook!

NATIVE AMERICAN HIRING PREFERENCE? ADVERTISE YOUR JOBS WITH NATIVE TIMES!

NACF announces 2013 artist fellowships

VANCOUVER, Wash. - said NACF Program Director The Native Arts and Cultures Reuben Tomás Foundation is calling for Fellowships.

six disciplines: visual arts, literature and traditional arts. June 21.

excellence, have made a the opportunity for study, significant impact in their reflection, experimentation the NACF awarded $904,000 discipline, earned respect from their colleagues and achieved recognition in their field. Work must be evolving and current.

notion that Native artists In September, a panel will offer profound contributions review the applications and to intellectual inquiry and community sustainability,"

"Native artists are at thresholds applications for its 2013 Artist of exploration in unfolding creative terrains; they are Award money will total deepening their impact on $20,000 and will be made in the field of contemporary arts practice and are forging new filmmaking, music, dance, recognition in national and global communities. Through The application deadline is the fellowship program, we hope to foster the creativity Artists must demonstrate of Indigenous artists, allowing and discovery."

Native artists are defined as AmericanIndianfromfederally recognized U.S. tribes, Alaska "The NACF embraces the Native or Native Hawaiian. fellows will be announced in November.

All applicants must apply Roqueñi. online at www.nacf.us/user/ register. Call Roqueñi at 360-718-7057 for questions and support or email reuben@ nativeartsandcultures.org.

The NACF is the first national 501(c)(3) charity committed to building a fund dedicated exclusively to foster the revitalization, appreciation and perpetuation of Native arts and cultures.

In two years of granting, in grants to 54 American Indian, Alaska Native and Native Hawaiian artists and organizations in 20 states.

For more about the NACF, visit www.nacf.us and sign up for the free e-newsletter or become a fan of the organization on Facebook.

Festival focuses on 7th generation

Festival, set for 1 to 5 p.m. April

The festival is free and open to the public.

This year's program is centered on family and specifically the "seventh generation," which looks at a tradition of planning forward to what may be left for seven generations down the Onondaga Nation, has said that "one of the first mandates given us as chiefs, to make sure future - with the importance items for purchase, including and to make every decision that and responsibility we have art, beadwork, jewelry shawls we make relate to the welfare in taking care of our natural and well-being of the seventh generation to come ... What Native American Festival themed crafts and activities about the seventh generation? Chairperson. "The library in the library's children's Where are you taking them? has What will they have?"

NORMAN, Okla. - The be seen as seventh generation Public Library sustainability, which is an dancing from both local Native continues a tradition of ecological concept that urges youth, as well as a group of celebrating the area's Native the current generation of dancers from the Riverside American culture with its humans to live sustainably Indian School. The students seventh Native American and work for the benefit of the come from several different seventh generation into the tribes and bring dancing styles 15 at the library, 225 N. Webster future. It also originated with reflective of their individual the Iroquois which strives to cultures. think seven generations ahead (a couple hundred years into storyteller and another regular the future) and decide whether contributor to the festival over the decisions they make today would benefit their children this year's event. seven generations into the of the Norman and surrounding several traditional Oren Lyons, Chief of the communities, I felt it natural to incorporate the importance shown commitments department. in both these areas and this An additional, and perhaps festival provides an excellent 405-701-2676 or visit www.

The festival will feature

Patrick Redbird, a Kiowa the years, will be the emcee for Kricket Rhoads Connywerdy, a Kiowa and Caddo will return "The library being a vital part to the festival as well to tell Native American stories.

A Native Marketplace will be of family - past, present and set up in the main library with and ornaments, and children resources," said Julie Moring, can take part in a variety of

For more information call more contemporary view, can opportunity to showcase them." justsoyouknow.us/norman.

EVENTS *Email your powwow or other event info to: Lisa@ nativetimes.com. Name, date, time, place and contact information is free.

EVERY WEDNESDAY Kiowa class beginning in February at 6:30 pm, Oliphant Hall, Room 141, Tulsa University. Info call Sarah, (918) 445-5213

EVERY THURSDAY The Otoe-Missouria Substance Abuse and Behavioral Health Programs sponsor an open group for families touched by addiction from noon to 1 p.m. at the Otoe-Missouria Health Building. This is a confidential group. Call 580-723-4466 x252 or x262 for more information.

SECOND TUESDAY Cherokee Artists Association meeting at 202 E. 5th Street Tahlequah, Okla. Info: (918) 458-0008 or www.

FOURTH THURSDAY Each month the American Indian Chamber of Commerce of Oklahoma  Eastern Chapter hosts a monthly luncheon at Bacone College, Muskogee, Okla. 11:30 a.m. at Benjamin Wacoche Hall. Please RSVP one week ahead of time. Phone: (918) 230-3759

EVERY 2ND SATURDAY Indian Taco Sales - from 11-2:30pm at OK Choctaw Tribal OSHA 10-hour class. $10

Alliance, 5320 S. Youngs Blvd, Oklahoma City www. okchoctaws.org

MON/WED AND THURS The Marble City Nutrition Center serves hot meals at the Marble City Community Center at 11:30 a.m. Meals are free to anyone over 50, but a small donation is suggested to help with the expense of the program. Marble City Nutrition Center, 711 N. Main, Marble City, Okla. Phone: (918) 775-2158

YOUTH COUNCIL The Native Nations Youth Council (NNYC) bimonthly meetings from 6:30pm -8:30pm @ the Youth Services of Tulsa Activity Center (311 S. Madison - on 3rd just west of Peoria). Call to confirm location. Info Call: Chad Gilley (918) 382-2204 or nnyc@ihcrc.org

THROUGH MARCH 31 Tulsa Library's Festival of cherokeeartistsassociation.org Words. For events and times, call the AskUs Hotline, 918-549-7323, or visit the library's website, www. tulsalibrary.org.

> THROUGH MAY Free beginner-level Cherokee language classes in communities throughout the tribe's jurisdiction. Once a week for ten weeks. For locations or to register, call Bill Andoe at 918-453-5151.

APRIL 3-5

fee - free for all TERO and 477 participants. Info and registration call Pawnee Nation Education Division 918-762-3227.

APRIL 6 Indian Taco Sale 11:00 AM - 2:00 PM at Norman First American UMC, 1950 East Beaumont Drive, Norman, Okla. Call Ahead for Speedy Service. Free Delivery on Orders of 10 or More (405) 321-5640

APRIL 7 Mary Mae Hall-Zotigh Barnes Honor Dance starting at 2pm at Otoe-Missouria Cultural Center-Red Rock, OK. Info call Julia Tah: 580.723.4240 John Shotton: 580.723.4466

Indian Taco Sale 8 am to 4pm $7.00 with drink and desert Call in orders welcome 918-752-5300. Duck Creek Community Ranch House, 10071 Ferguson Road Beggs, OK. Look for signs. Call Sue Walker 918-381-3793 or Jacqueline Rolland 918-752-5300

All You Can Eat Wild Onion Dinner 11 am -? at Springfield Church, 2 miles South on Hwy 27 from Okemah Exit , four miles East, then 2 miles South. Follow Signs. $9 per person $5 for children 12 & under.

Tulsa Creek Indian Community Wild Onion Dinner from 11-3 at 8611 S Union Ave, Tulsa OK 74132 Ph: (918) 298-2464

Ponca Gourd Dance 9th Annual Spring Dance White Eagle Cultural Center 5 miles south of Ponca City, OK (580) 268-3313

APRIL 9-14 Symposium of the American Indian, Northeastern State University, University Center, Tahlequah, OK .Hosted By: NSU Center for Tribal Studies. All events are FREE and open to the public

APRIL 13-14, NSU Powwow, University Center, NSU Tahlequah, OK Info call the Center for Tribal Studies, 918-444-4350 or tribalstudies@nsuok.edu

APRIL 14 Azalea Powwow, 2:00pm until 11:00pm in the Muskogee Civic Center Arena. Info call Vinnie Hoover (918)478-9227 or Joyce Deere (918) 230-4734 ADMISSION $3.00 AT THE DOOR

Wild Onion Dinner, 11:00 am to 2:00 pm, Sac & Fox Multipurpose Center, 215 N. Harrison, Shawnee, OK, Sponsored by: Seminole Hitchitee Methodist Church, Adults - $10/plate / Children - $7/plate (8 and under)

Rodeo Queen Pageant 10 am at Rockin DJ Arena, Tahlequah. Must have CDIB and ride alone. Info call Shirley Martin 918-642-5387. APRIL 14

1704.

Oklahoma Indian Missionary Conference SW District Churches Benefit Powwow at Comanche Nation Center, Apache, Okla. Gourd Dance at 2pm. More info call Aneeda Harjo 580-704-0106 or Tina Baker 580-591-1579.

All Gourd Honor Dance for Micheal Tsotaddle at Red Buffalo Hall, Carnegie, OK, 2p.m. - ? For more information call Darla Tsotaddle (405) 432-8377 or Mavis Tsotaddle (580) 654-

APRIL 21 Taco Sale 11-3 at Tulsa Creek Indian Community, 8611 S. Union, Tulsa. 918-298-2464. $8 per plate. Proceeds benefit Senior trip to NICOA Elders Conference.

Victory Christian Center Native American Ministry conference: 9:00a.m. 4:00p.m. Powwow: 7:00-11:00p.m. at Victory Christian Activity Center. Contact: 918.491.7830

APRIL 24 Native American Art Festival, Tulsa Hard Rock Hotel. 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. sponsored by Seminole Nation of Okla. For booth space contact [walker.s@sno-nsn.gov] or 405-257-7241 by April 16.

APRIL 27 Kiowa Higher Education Graduates Banquet at Cross Timbers Restaurant in

Anadarko, OK. Info call 580-654-2300 ext. 324

APRIL 28

"O-SKOO" Co-Ed Basketball Tournament (All Indun) PRE-"O-SKOO" ~ 30 YRS TO 39 YRS & "O-SKOO" ~ 40 YRS TO ??? YRS. $50.00 Entry fee. 8 Man Roster: 4 Ole Men & 4 Ole Women. For more info, call Tonkawa Tribe Education Programs: 580-628-2561 LISA ext 125 or LEAH ext 131. Fund Raiser for end of summer WIA Youth trip!

Church Fundraiser for New Joy Baptist Church 11:00 to 5:00, 1103 South Main, Sapulpa. All you can eat spaghetti lunch - Cost $8 All proceeds will go towards the church and church events. Call Jimmy Alexander 918-322-5407

Seminole Nation Honor Guard Powwow at Okfuskgee County Fairgrounds, Okemah, Okla. Gourd Dancing 1-5pm, Supper Break 5-6pm, Gourd Dancing 6-7pm and Grand Entry at 7pm. Info call Alex Fish 405-432-7858. Vendors call Phillip Coon 918-623-6810 or 405-432-7399.

APRIL 28 18th Annual CSUEA Youth Powwow at Frisco Center, Clinton, Oklahoma. Gourd dancing at 3 pm, supper at 5 pm, grand entry at 7 pm. Info: Charlene Wassana 580-331-3300.

Slam dunk success with a message

BRETT MOSS

Choctaw Nation of Oklahoma

DURANT, Okla. - In the history of the Choctaw people, many have risen to success in their field of expertise, but one Choctaw in particular has leaped above the rest to success, a 48-inch vertical leap to be exact.

Phoenix native and slam dunk champion Kenny Dobbs spent some time in the Durant area recently to attend the Madness in March All-Indian Basketball tournament, bringing with him gravity-defying dunks and an encouraging testimony of his rise to success.

Searching "Kenny Dobbs" on youtube or google will quickly flood the screen with jaw-dropping slamdunks. Kenny is a heavily decorated slam-dunk contest champion and dunk inventor with the title of 2010 Phoenix Sprite Slam Dunk Champion, 2011 Sprite LA Slam Dunk Champion and 2011 "Ball Up/ Streetball" Slam Dunk Champion as just a few bullet points on his resumé.

As a member of the Choctaw Nation, Kenny was delighted to spend time in the Choctaw Nation. He was able to meet with Chief Gregory E. Pyle and even get his basketball signed. Kenny was brought to Durant by Ivy Bridge College as a celebrity guest for the Madness in March event to serve as a motivation for the youth to create positive goals in their lives and pursue those goals with diligence.

Kenny was chosen to speak to the participants of Madness in March because his story was not always one of success. Kenny had to overcome tremendous odds to get where he is today, and at one point he could describe his life in one word: "hopeless." His ability to find the drive to overcome a hopeless situation and his ability to dunk a basketball while jumping over four people was a combination that sparked interest in all ages.

Kenny grew up in a gang atmosphere, becoming involved in drugs and alcohol at a young age. He spent his time with a group of friends who kept his aspirations at bay and damaged his hopes of playing professional sports, a dream he had as a little boy.

He spent his time concerned with partying, which led him to be expelled from his home at the age of 15. His education suffered and he was not able to play high school sports, which severely lowered his chances to play anything past the street court.

All of his reckless activity came to a climax at the age of 17, when he and several friends were involved in a robbery. Those with him were caught while Kenny escaped. His accomplices reported him as the main culprit and divulged his location to law enforcement. Kenny was arrested and was told he would be tried as an adult.

As he sat in jail awaiting trial he began to seriously consider the choices in his life. He began to realize he needed to make changes. "I cried out to God," said Kenny as he told how he began ask God to help him out of this situation and promised Him that he would make those changes he knew he needed. "I went from being this hardcore thug little man, to being a scared little boy that just wanted his momma to hold him," continued Kenny as he described his desperation.

When Kenny had his day in court, his prayers had been answered. Both the witness of the crime and police officer who was set to testify failed to show up in court that day, and the others involved owned up to their portion of the crime, granting Kenny only fines and no jail time.

"My attorney looked to me and he

COURTESY / NATIVE AMERICAN BASKETBALL INVITATIONAL

Kenny Dobbs has played basketball with teams overseas, performed in sold-out arenas and won the amateur slam-dunk contest at the NBA All Star Weekend. He had offers to play for big bucks internationally, sign contracts with sponsors, and offers to try out for professional basketball. He turned them all down.

said, 'It's a miracle that you aren't going to prison.' And when he said that, it was a remembrance of the month before when I was sitting in the jail cell and crying out to God, making a promise," exclaimed Kenny. From this point he knew he would have to make those changes he had promised to make.

His first goal was to finish high school. He had dropped out around the time he was kicked out of his home with only three credit hours. He had the option for a GED, but as one of the eldest in the generation of his family, he wanted to be an example and get his diploma. He now had the goal, but those influences which brought him down before were still holding him back.

One night while Kenny was out, his sister was sleeping in his bed > and bullets began to fly through the window all around her. No one was injured, but as the next day dawned, he came home to over 30 shell casings and bullet holes covering the section of the house where he usually spent his time.

He looked over his room, seeing bullet holes in posters depicting violence and drug abuse and realized these influences and the associations with certain people were not only endangering his future and life, but his family as well. He then came to the conclusion that the first step in meeting his goal was to cleanse his life of those influences which brought him down.

Though he endured criticism for his it, he made known his decision saying, "I have a plan and a purpose for my life and I am not going to waste it." He cut out those people from his life and began to focus and work like he never had before. He needed 22 credits to graduate high school and did not want to spend three and a half years earning them, so he hit the books hard.

He enrolled in a program allowing him to attend school from 7:30 a.m. until 6:30 p.m. "When I got out of school, I would take home these great big books and have to read about five chapters, and then take a test online," said Kenny as he remembered his studies He would write the words "diploma" and "graduation" above his door, so when he woke up he would be reminded of his goal and keep himself motivated.

Each of his tests was worth a quarter of a credit, and after a year and a half of solid schooling without breaks or vacation, he had finished his high school education. He had completed his first major goal and tasted success. He then knew he could do anything and used this experience as the blueprint for all his future accomplishments.

His next goal was college. He attempted to get sport scholarships with several schools, but without a high school resumé and coaching, none would look at him. Eventually he got his shot while talking with Glendale Community College. It happened by chance they were doing a scrimmage while Kenny was visiting and they let him hit the court. He did not fail to impress and was signed soon after.

This was his first experience with a real team and actual coaching. It improved his knowledge of his body and abilities. He began to jump higher and gain a greater ability to dunk. He took these improvements to a local "Hoop It Up" dunk competition. He won this competition with ease.

Shaquille O'Neil's happened to be at that event and invited Kenny to compete in a dunk event in Las Angeles promoting Shaq's new shoe, Dunkman. This was Kenny's first time against major opposition.

As he stretched and readied himself for action he watched many opponents complete impressive dunks during the warmup. He began to feel nervous and unconfident, dreading his turn on the court.

Inspiration came when the match began. He noticed the others were doing the exact same dunks in the main event they were doing in practice. He realized he had seen them at their best already and there was nothing else to expect from them while he still had many tricks up his sleeve.

After slamming down an off-thebackboard windmill dunk, "the crowd went crazy and these guy's jaws dropped," explained Kenny as he told how he won the event. "After that point, I realized, never doubt in myself again, never let somebody intimidate me to take me out of my game plan," he continued.

As he emerged victorious, Kenny witnessed the excitement in the crowd, especially with the youth. He began to think about how he could impress and captivate audiences with his talents, and the potential he had with that attention. He thought of how dunking was the most attention-getting action in the game of basketball and explored the potential to intertwine his testimony with his talent.

While he was completing this high school education, he was also growing his faith in God by becoming involved in discipleship classes. This strengthened his faith, boosted his confidence and allowed him to begin spreading his words of encouragement to those who were currently in the negative situations he knew too well. At the age of 19 he became a youth pastor for Glory to the Lord Church.

He had continued working with troubled youth up to this point, steering them away from the kinds of ways he once knew and on to a path of success. He had done considerable work in the Phoenix area to forward his message, and as he won this particular completion, he realized the most effective medium he had to deliver it.

He resolved to become "the best slam dunk artist in the world." With that title he would be able to travel many places, impress many people and most of all, spread his inspiration more than ever. With his next goal in mind, the climb to the top began.

Since that time Kenny has soared above the opposition, dedicated his body to training and his time to spreading his message of encouragement. He has sustained a considerable wrist injury that took months to heal, a leg injury from which some thought he would never completely recover, and a head injury he sustained from the rim during a competition which he went on to win; all experiences which he uses to illustrate how perseverance and hard work will overcome obstacles hindering progress.

He has played with teams overseas, performed in sold-out arenas and won the amateur slam-dunk contest at the NBA All Star Weekend. He had offers to play for big bucks internationally, sign contracts with sponsors, and offers to try out for professional basketball.

He has turned down these offers to be able to keep performing for youth so he can motivate them to stay in school and away from negative lifestyles. During the year of 2011 he devoted more time to Native American lands, attempting to help out those with a similar cultural background to his own.

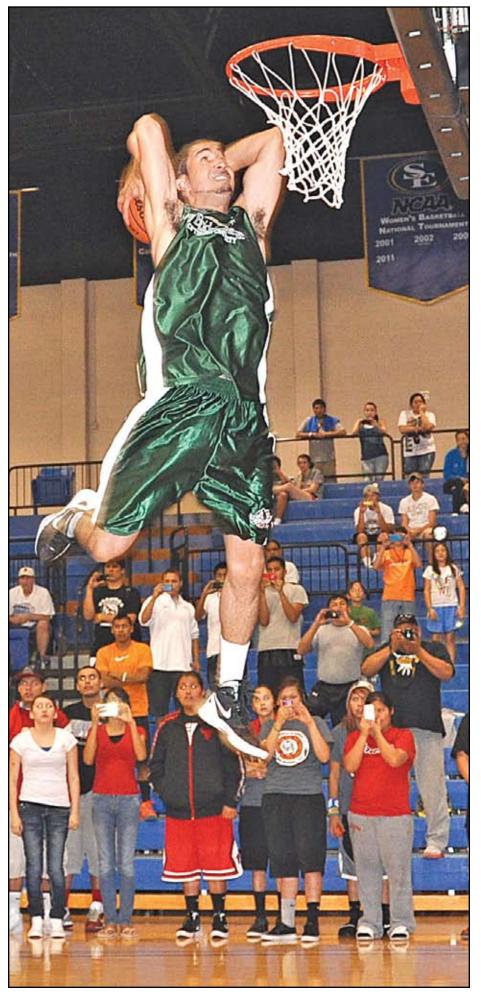

Now that he has been at this mission for some time, he is beginning to see his work pay off. The youth he has spoke to now contact him and let him know his influence helped their situation considerably.

"That is what keeps me passionate... no amount of money that I can get paid is going to be able to equal the sense of saving these young peoples' lives and encouraging them," said Dobbs "Hearing these stories is letting me know that I truly am having a huge impact in these young people's lives and I wouldn't trade that for anything," he continued.

To pursue his goal of being the best basketball dunker, he postponed his college career for a time, but has recently enrolled with Ivy Bridge College and can take classes online anywhere he travels. He shares this fact to parents in the crowd at his shows, telling them it is never too late for education.

Kenny is a parent himself. He and his wife, Danae, are the proud parents of two daughters, Uriah, 6, and Audrina, 3. He takes delight in the fact that his daughters are showing promise in basketball much like he did during his youth.

Kenny hopes to finish his degree and become well versed-in political sciences, noting that he is currently able to affect the youth by relating to them, steering them towards a positive path, but he desires to take on more responsibility in the policy aspect. He hopes with a better knowledge of the politics, he will be able to make situations like those of his youth less prominent among the youth of tomorrow.

BRETT MOSS / CHOCTAW NATION OF OKLAHOMA

Kenny Dobbs shows of his dunking talents at Bloomer Sullivan Arena on the campus of Southeastern Oklahoma State

Inside this issue:

- ND oil boom taking toll on Affiliated Tribes
- NYO Games show off Indigenous athleticism
- Museum opens Enoch Kelly Haney exhibit

TODAY'S INDEPENDENT INDIAN NEWS

- A FREE PUBLICATION -

WWW.NATIVETIMES.COM

VOLUME 18 + ISSUE 16

PUBLISHED WEEKLY

APRIL 20, 2012

Echo Hawk to conclude tenure at DOI

■ Secretary Salazar commends Larry Echo Hawk for his leadership, service

WASHINGTON - Secretary of the Interior Ken Salazar announced last week that Assistant Secretary for Indian Affairs Larry Echo Hawk will resign his position effective April 27. Echo Hawk, a citizen of the Pawnee Nation of Oklahoma, is leaving the Department of Interior after nearly three years to assume a leadership position in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

"Larry has done an extraordinary job at Interior, opening a new chapter in our nation-to-nation relationship with American Indian and Alaska Natives tribal governments and carrying out President Obama's vision for empowering Indian nations," Salazar said. "During his tenure, the Department accelerated the restoration of tribal homelands, improved public safety in tribal communities, resolved century-old water disputes, made critical investments in education, and reached many more milestones that are helping Indian nations pursue the future of their choosing. We thank Larry for his exemplary leadership and wish him all the best as he begins a new chapter in his life."

"The opportunity to participate in remedying the negative perceptions of the federal government in Indian Country was a formidable challenge at first, but I am proud to say that I have served my country as an agent for change here in Indian Affairs," said Echo Hawk. "I believe at the end of this Administration, the work we accomplished will leave a lasting legacy for American Indian and Alaska Natives. I want to thank President Obama, Secretary Salazar, the American Indian and Alaska Native tribal nations and the many devoted employees at Interior who supported my leadership and allowed me the opportunity to serve Indian Country."

Donald "Del" Laverdure, Principal Deputy Assistant Secretary of the Interior for Indian Affairs, will serve as Acting Assistant Secretary until President Obama nominates a new Assistant Secretary to be confirmed by the U.S. Senate. Laverdure is a member of the Crow Nation and has served in a leadership role at Interior since 2009.

"Del has played a key role in many of Interior's meaningful accomplishments over the past three years, and I am confident that he is the right person to lead Indian Affairs as we continue to fulfill President Obama's vision for reconciliation and empowerment for Indian nations," Salazar added.

Under Echo Hawk's leadership, Interior has reenergized its commitment to fulfilling this nation's trust responsibilities to Native Americans. The Department has broken the logjam on trust land applications and streamlined the process as part of the most substantial overhaul of the Department's leasing process in 50 years. Since 2009, the Department has acquired more than 158,000 acres of land in trust on behalf

See ECHO HAWK Continued on Page 2

Former Crow attorney to fill in at top BIA post

HELENA, Mont. (AP) - A Laverdure has been deputy Bureau of Indian Affairs.

serve as acting assistant secretary other tribes. of the Interior for Indian affairs after Larry Echo Hawk resigned to role until President Barack Obama take a position with The Church of nominates a new assistant secretary Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

former Crow attorney has been assistant secretary since 2009. named the interim head of the U.S. He was previously the chief legal counsel for the executive branch The Interior Department said of the Crow tribe and has held Monday that Del Laverdure will judgeships with the Crow and > Laverdure will serve in his new who is confirmed by the Senate.

Native America's first 'Top Model' has big plans

Mariah Watchman, citizen of the Confederated Tribes of the Umatilla, auditioned for America's Next Top Model during a nationwide casting call on June 29, 2011. DANA ATTOCKNIE Native American Tim

FORT PECK INDIAN RESERVA-TION - Mariah Watchman knows what she wants and what it takes to get it.

"I'm just going to work hard and keep this tunnel vision of being the first Native (American) super model," Watch-

Her recent adventure on the America's Next Top Model: British Invasion was another accomplishment in her career where she met fashion icon Tyra Banks and People's Revolution founder Kelly Cutrone.

"Everything was just amazing; I wouldn't trade it for anything. Ever since the time I very first auditioned, I knew that it was my goal ... my passion. It was really important to me to be the first Native American to make it on the show; first tribal enrolled member, and that was always my mission," Watchman, 20, said. "I ended up getting eliminated on the second episode and it was really hard at the time. I was kind of in a sense, not embarrassed, but because I'm such a competitive person in everything that I do, to be eliminated second, that was something I didn't expect. But I still did it to the best of my abilities; at least getting to make the top seven in the whole United States, and then on top of that being the first Native to ever make it."

Watchman is enrolled with the Confederated Tribes of the Umatilla near Pendleton, Ore. She was born in Missoula, Mont. and that's also where she auditioned for America's Next Top Model during the nationwide casting call on June 29, 2011.

"I had the same chances thousands of other girls did ... I had to make it through a couple of rounds, video submissions ... It was a long process, but I finally made it to the final casting call in L.A. I actually had to keep it under wraps for a long time," She said. "The whole experience all together was just amazing. I would never change it. I was happy that even though I had gotten eliminated second that I felt like I did a really good job of representing Native Americans ... Being the first Native I felt like I had this big weight on my shoulders ..."

See MODEL Continued on Page 8

Tribes, government agree to $1 billion settlement

SHANNON DININNY

YAKIMA, Wash. (AP) - The federal government will pay more than $1 billion to settle a series of lawsuits brought by American Indian tribes over mismanagement of tribal money and trust lands, under a settlement announced April 11.

The agreement resolves claims brought by 41 tribes from across the country to reclaim money lost in mismanaged accounts and from royalties for oil, gas, grazing and timber rights on tribal lands.

Negotiations continue on dozens of other cases.

The settlement was announced jointly by the Justice Department and the Interior Department, which manages more than 100,000 leases on tribal trust lands and about 2,500 tribal trust accounts for more than 250 federally recognized tribes.

"These settlements fairly and honorably resolve historical grievances over the accounting and management of tribal trust funds, trust lands, and other non-monetary trust resources that, for far too long, have been a source of conflict between Indian tribes and the United States," Attorney General Eric Holder said.

Ending the long-running dispute allows the governments involved to move beyond distrust and antagonism, and empowers Indian communities going forward, Interior Secretary Ken Salazar said.

All tribes have had a dark relationship with the federal government, said Gary Hayes, chairman of the Ute Mountain Ute Tribe, whose reservation covers southwest Colorado, southeast Utah

See SETTLEMENT Continued on Page 4

Judge lets Kansas join dispute over tribal land

The Wyandotte Nation filed its lawsuit last year to force the Interior Department to accept into trust a tract of Park City land the tribe bought in 1992.

ROXANA HEGEMAN Associated Press

WICHITA, Kan. (AP) - The state of Kansas received permission April 12 to join the legal fight over the Wyandotte Nation's efforts to build a casino in Park City, a case that pits American Indian sovereignty against the state's economic interest in controlling gambling.

U.S. Magistrate Judge David Waxse let Kansas to intervene in a federal lawsuit filed by the tribe, saying it is "abundantly clear" that Kansas has an interest in the outcome of the litigation. The judge noted Kansas now has taxing, regulatory and legal authority over the land where the tribe hopes to build.

The Wyandotte Nation filed its lawsuit last year to force the Interior Department to accept into trust a tract of Park City land the tribe bought in 1992. The Indian Gaming Regulatory Act allows tribes to conduct gambling only on Indian lands, defined as land within its reservation or held in trust by the United States.

Wyandotte Nation, formerly known as the Wyandotte Tribe of Oklahoma, contends that after it received federal recognition in 1978, it needed to reacquire lands lost as a result of "failed federal policies." The Wyandotte Nation contends it bought the Park City land using money Congress set aside to buy property to put into trust for the tribe's benefit.

"We are pleased with the ruling and look forward to representing the state of Kansas in this matter," Jeff Wagaman, deputy chief of staff for the Kansas attorney general's office, said in an email.

An attorney representing the tribe did not immediately return a message left for

See KANSAS Continued on Page 4

ND oil boom taking toll on Three Affiliated Tribes

TALLI NAUMAN
Native Sun News

WASHINGTON – Concluding an April 3 meeting with elected tribal and state leaders at the Fort Berthold Reservation, U.S. Department of the Interior Secretary Ken Salazar unveiled accountability measures to aid oil and gas development on public and Indian trust lands in North and South Dakota, Montana and other states across the country.

Salazar's rendition followed his April 2 trip with North Dakota officials to boomtowns and man-camps in the Bakken oilfields, the fastest-growing oil and gas development area in the U.S.

It came one week after Mandan, Hidatsa and Arikara Nation Tribal Business Council Chairman Tex Hall testified to a U.S. Congress Appropriations subcommittee that the Three Affiliated Tribes need more money and streamlined processes to meet the challenges of the boom at Fort Berthold.

"(The) Interior (Department) is committed to expanding safe and responsible oil and gas development on public lands and Indian trust lands," Salazar said in a prepared statement he framed "as part of President Obama's all-of-the-above energy strategy."

President Barack Obama made a trip through Western energy-resource states in late March to promote the "all-of-the-above" strategy aimed at supporting every possible kind of domestic power production.

Salazar highlighted the implementation of new "automated tracking systems that could reduce the review period for drilling permits by two-thirds and expedite the sale and processing of federal oil and gas leases." It responded to Hall's earlier request for a "permanent onestop shop" permitting process to simplify paperwork.

With Bureau of Indian Affairs supervision and lease management, the Three Affiliated Tribes have encouraged oil production, generating massive increases in royalties for the tribal government and individual landowners.

Royalties from individual allotments on Indian trust lands in 2008 totaled $1.8 million, and rose to $106.7 million in 2011. In the first three months of 2012, royalties totaling nearly $60 million were collected, Salazar said.

The increases came after Salazar dissolved the Minerals Management Service and delegated its responsibilities to three separate branches of the new Bureau of Ocean Energy Management, Regulation and Enforcement.

The reorganization was largely in response to charges of industry-government collusion, the BP Deepwater Horizon drilling rig disaster in 2010, and an effort by allotment owners nationwide to reap overdue, concealed benefits from oil and gas leasing.

Compared to the last three years of the previous administration, receipts are up due to a 13-percent increase in domestic oil production during the first three years of the Obama administration, according to Salazar.

The volume of drilling applications in the Bakken shale formation has ballooned

PHOTO COURTESY/TAMI A. HEILEMANN, DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR OFFICE OF COMMUNICATIONS Tex G. Hall, far left, chairman of the Three Affiliated Tribes of North Dakota, discussed oil and gas leasing with, from left to right, U.S. Rep. Rick Berg (R-ND); Interior Secretary Ken Salazar; U.S. Sen. John Hoeven (R-ND), and North Dakota Gov. Jack

500 percent during the past five years, half of it on American Indian mineral estates, Salazar noted. Since 2007, applications to drill on Fort Berthold, in the heart of the Bakken, have gone from 0 to 175. More than $3 million in drilling permit fees were collected there in fiscal 2011, Salazar said in the prepared Dalrymple at the Fort Berthold Reservation on April 3.

Inspections by the Interior's Bureau of Land Management also continue to rise. In fiscal year 2007 the bureau conducted four inspections on Indian minerals; in fiscal year 2011, a total of 429 inspections were conducted. For the same time frame, for non-Indian federal minerals, inspections rose from 200 to 718.

As the lead agency for permitting, inspection and enforcement activities for both federal and tribal resources, the BLM is responsible for ensuring measures to maintain environmental quality and human safety.

The impact of the oil boom has prompted Hall to prod Congress for housing to support a new health facility; funding to address the severe damage that oil and gas development has caused to roads; continued funding for permanent "one-stop shop" permits like that provided in fiscal year 2012; additional BIA and BLM personnel to process the oil and gas permits for tribes, and legislative postponement of federal funds to implement the BLM's newly proposed regulations on hydraulic fracturing.

"While the oil and gas boom on the reservation and in the region has brought with it many positive things, it has also brought us some serious problems," Hall testified on March 27 in Washington, D.C. "One of those problems is a total lack of available housing within 100 miles of our reservation," he told the House Appropriations Subcommittee on Interior, Environment and Related Agencies

Related Agencies.

Hall said the tribe needs affordable housing, especially in order to provide for staff to open its new health clinic. "Since the boom, every available housing unit within 100 miles of our new clinic has already been placed under contract or lease. Even when housing does open up, which is extremely rare, two- and three-bedroom homes are now renting for in excess of $2,500 per month."

"The bottom line is that we need a minimum of $12 million to construct homes for the 60-plus (Indian Health Service)-funded employees that this committee has appropriated dollars to hire," he said. "The MHA Nation has already done its part by spending in excess of $1.6 million in tribal funds to prepare the site for these new homes and bringing in the utilities, but we simply cannot afford to construct those units."

Hall showed lawmakers pictures of "the road safety crisis that oil and gas development has created" on the 1-million-acre reservation. More than 260 miles of the 1,081 miles of road on the reservation are tribal or BIA. And just a little over 25 percent of all the reservation's roads are paved.

"None of these roads were built to handle the types of heavy equipment and heavy trucks utilized by the oil and gas industry," said Hall. "Those roads have been almost totally destroyed by oil- and gasrelated traffic."

"I fear every day that I will get a call telling me that a school bus full of children has tipped over killing a number of our students," he said. "I already receive almost daily calls telling me of serious accidents involving our members. In fact, we now have so many accidents on my reservation that my staff does not even bother to call me unless the injuries are lifethreatening. The situation has now gotten to be that bad."

"If the federal government truly wants to see oil and gas development within the boundaries of the United States, it has to take responsibility for the damage that this type of production causes to its own federal roads and small communities like MHA," Hall said.

-----

Copyright permission by Native Sun News www.nsweekly.com

ECHO HAWK

Continued from Page 1

Larry Echo Hawk

of tribal nations.

Interior is also working to implement the landmark Claims Resolution Act of 2010 that included the Cobell Settlement, a $3.4 billion settlement that honorably and responsibly addresses long-standing injustices.

Echo Hawk has worked to meet the critical water needs of NativeAmerican communities, helping to reach historic water rights settlements that offer a fair resolution to decades of conflict and litigation. For communities, like the Taos Pueblo and Aamodt case pueblos in New Mexico; the Crow Tribe of Montana and the White Mountain Apache Tribe in Arizona, the permanent water supply will vastly improve the quality of life and offer greater economic

During his tenure, Echo Hawk worked across the federal government, including the Department of Justice, to help build safer communities and implement the Tribal Law and Order Act that President Obama signed into law in 2010. Echo Hawk strengthened law enforcement and launched an intense community policing pilot program on four reservations experiencing high crime rates. The Safe Indian Communities initiative, a two-year program, has so far achieved a 35 percent overall decrease in violent crime across the four communities.

Echo Hawk has also led the wayindraftingacomprehensive and transparent consultation policy for the Department that will provide a strong, meaningful role for tribal governments at all stages of federal decision-making on Indian policy.

President Obama nominated Echo Hawk on April 20, 2009 and the Senate confirmed him as the Assistant Secretary-Indian Affairs on May 19, 2009. He was sworn into office by Secretary Salazar on May 22, 2009.

Echo Hawk was elected Attorney General of Idaho in 1990, the first American Indian in U.S. history to achieve that distinction. He also served two consecutive terms in the Idaho House of Representatives, from 1982 to 1986. A former U.S. Marine, Echo Hawk began his law career as a legal services attorney working for impoverished Indian people in California, then opened a private law office in Salt Lake City. He also served as the Chief General Legal Counsel for the Shoshone-Bannock Tribes of the Fort Hall Indian Reservation in Idaho from 1977-1986.

Echo Hawk received his Juris Doctor degree from the University of Utah in 1973; and attended Stanford Graduate School of Business's MBA Program, 1974-1975. Echo Hawk, 63, and his wife Terry have six children and 24 grandchildren.

Kialegee casino could soon open doors amid protest

JUSTIN JUOZAPAVICIUS Associated Press

BROKEN ARROW, Okla. (AP) – A tiny Oklahoma Indian tribe of fewer than 450 members could partly open a casino in this Tulsa suburb by the end of the month despite protest from thousands of residents, a pendingstatelawsuitseeking to stop the building and permission from a national gaming organization.

The Kialegee Tribal Town, headquartered in Wetumka in southeastern Oklahoma, broke ground on the 20-acre site near the Creek Turnpike late last year and has trucked in several pre-fabricated buildings in recent weeks to temporarily house the Red Clay Casino. When it opens, the gaming center will be among several larger casinos already operating in Tulsa County – the closest is about 10 miles away from the site.

The casino quickly drew the ire of residents, pastors and school administrators, who fear the tribe is trying to force the development on the conservative bedroom community of 99,000.

Opponents say the casino will only be a few blocks from the future site of an elementary school and pre-kindergarten center and worry it could attract a flurry of criminal activity to the area. More than 10,000 people have also signed a petition to keep the casino out

The facility is located several blocks from an 80-acre parcel purchased by the district for a new elementary school and pre-kindergarten center, where nearly 1,000 students are expected to attend when the buildings open in the fall of 2013. Dozens of angered parents have lobbied the district to oppose the casino because of the proximity and safety concerns, such as inadequate roads and crosswalks to accommodate the increased traffic.

In February, Oklahoma Attorney General Scott Pruitt sued the tribe in Tulsa federal court, accusing it of moving ahead with construction without obtaining federal approval to lease the property.

to lease the property.

"No one, tribal or otherwise, is above state or federal laws," Pruitt said in a statement. "The Kialegees do not have the authority to pick and choose which steps to follow in the federal or state approval process of establishing casinos." A hearing is set for May 16.

"It's alarming to me that with so much opposition, they would continue to move forward at such a rapid pace," said resident Seth Spreiter, member of the group Broken Arrow Citizens Against Neighborhood Gaming. "To me, it honestly feels like they are trying to get the casino in operation, thinking that once they get the doors open, it will be much harder to shut them down."

The land is currently owned by two sisters who have attempted to transfer their parcel to the tribe, but a district judge has refused to approve the transaction, deferring instead to the federal government to determine whether the land can be leased. The National Indian Gaming Commission, which decides whether the land in question can be used by the tribe for a casino, did not return phone messages seeking comment.

Tribal leaders and a Washington D.C.-based attorney representing the casino development group did not return calls seeking comment.

In a statement issued days after residents discovered that construction had begun, tribal leader Tiger Hobia said the Kialegee have kept the federal government and the city up to date on the casino plans. Hobia also claimed that the casino is necessary because the tribe lacks enough resources to fund programs that serve its members. On a website promoting the casino, the tribe estimated the facility will employ up to 120 people and have a $250 million economic impact on the city.

Like many local politicians who have expressed reservations about the project, Broken Arrow Mayor Mike Lester is growing tired of waiting on Washington.

"The general sense we received from our meetings (with the gaming commission) is it's a process," Lester said. "I really got the indication they would provide us an answer fairly soon, but we're almost a month out from that meeting."

Chris Buskirk, pastor at Abiding Harvest United Methodist Church – located a few hundred feet near the casino site – accused the tribe of pushing ahead with the project without any sense of apprehension that it might lack the credentials to do so.

"I want to be a champion of our Indian brothers and sisters, but there seems to be a swashbuckling attitude of entitlement," he said. "It seems out of step to me. It seems odd that people who have experienced so much oppression and mistreatment are so callous to ignore that when they are participating in it themselves."

Buskirk, whose church is home to a gambling addiction recovery group, said what will be a "grand, money-making opportunity for some" could result in "destruction" for others.

Resident DeEtta Hughes, who lives within a mile of the building site, said members of the opposition group are still hopeful the casino can be stopped.

"Casinos do not need to be in communities across from schools and churches and homes," she said. "There are more than 100 casinos in the state of Oklahoma – we don't need any more."

Athleticism of indigenous cultures on display at Alaska's annual NYO Games

Open to Alaska students from 7th through 12th grades, the NYO Games provide insight into Alaska's rich cultural heritage while promoting a healthy lifestyle and good sportsmanship.

JACK BONNEY

Anchorage, Alaska -For hundreds of years, Alaska's Native peoples used games to practice hunting and survival skills. These games helped develop strength, endurance and control over the body. Today, thousands of Alaska youth continue the tradition, with the best meeting in Anchorage for the NYO Games - formerly the Native Youth Olympics – April 27-29, 2012.

The action takes place at the Dena'ina Civic and Convention Center as 500 athletes from 50 communities will compete in such events as the wrist carry, Eskimo stick pull, and one- and two-foot high kick. Open to Alaska students from 7th through 12th grades, the NYO Games provide insight into Alaska's rich cultural heritage while promoting a healthy lifestyle and good sportsmanship. Often during the games, competitors will be seen helping each other with technique. Many schools teach Native games as part of their physical education curriculum or as an after-school culture club.

Each of the 10 events is based on skills used by Alaska's first peoples; the games include:

The One-Foot High Kick

Considered the headline event of the games, competitors jump off both feet and attempt to kick a ball suspended high in the air with one foot, landing back on that same foot. Anchorage's Brian Randazzo Jr. kicked 111 inches to win the event last year; on the girls' side, Wasilla's Alice Strick tied her own world record at 91 inches.

The One-Hand Reach

A game to test a person's control over their body. Competitors balance

COURTESY / VISIT ALASKA FLIKR PAGE

Extra balance is needed for the 'One Hand Reach.' In this event competitors balance their weight on the palm or knuckles of one hand, reach to touch a suspended ball with the free hand and then put the free hand on the floor without any other part of the body touching the floor.

the body on both hands in a squat position. Once the balance has been attained they will reach out with one hand in an attempt to touch a suspended ball. Then the free hand must return to the floor before any other part of the body.

The Alaskan High Kick

Perhaps one of the most acrobatic events, the athlete tries to kick a ball suspended overhead while balancing on a single hand in an event that demands the mind and body work in harmony to maintain control. The athlete who kicks the target at the highest height is the winner.

For a full schedule of events visit the NYO Games website. They are hosted by Cook Inlet Tribal Council, Inc., the nonprofit social service agency for Cook Inlet Region, Inc.

While the NYO Games only run three days, it's not the only opportunity to see Native games or explore Alaska Native culture in Anchorage. The Alaska Native Heritage Center does daily demonstrations of the games. The center has tools, watercraft, clothing and art from each of Alaska's Native cultures, as well as traditional dwellings set alongside a two-acre lake and walking trails. More information can be found at www.alaskanative.net.

The Anchorage Museum, featuring the Smithsonian Arctic Studies Center, showcases indigenous Alaska artifacts, many of which have never been on display. They include an 1893 Tlingit war helmet and an 1866 Gwich'in Athabascan tunic with dyed quill designs, one of the Smithsonian's oldest objects. The Anchorage Museum's collection permanent displays Alaska's cultural heritage, including information on early contact with Russians and New England whalers, the Gold Rush era and a presentday reflection of Alaska's indigenous people. For more information about the Anchorage Museum, visit www. anchoragemuseum.org.

- For more information visit www. Anchorage.net.

VINITA 918-256-5585

LANGLEY 918-782-0011

MONKEY ISLAND 918-257-8869

www.okstatebank.com Equal Housing Lender Native American Owned

tahlequahrecycling.com 918-316-5856 "Changing the culture of waste." TM

Native TIMES

recycles with Tahlequah Recycling Incorporated... shouldn't you?

NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES

Publisher & Editor LISA SNELL editor@nativetimes.com

Contributing Writers Dana Attocknie WESLEY MAHAN KAREN SHADE

Advertising Sales KATHLEEN ROBERTSON LISA SNELL ROB WALTON advertising@nativetimes.com

Distribution SHELBY HICKS STEVE LACY Wesley Mahan MICHAEL MARRIS KATHLEEN ROBERTSON BRENDA SLAUGHTER

The Native American Times, formerly the Oklahoma Indian Times, is published weekly (except the last week of the year) by Lisa Hicks Snell. Mailing address is PO Box 411 Tahleguah, OK 74465. All the contents within the Native American Times are copyrighted material. Any reproduction, redistribution without the written consent of the NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES is strictly

> Each week's issue is available for free download online at: www.nativetimes.com

Subscription rates: $65.00 for fifty-two issues, $32.50 for twenty-six issues, or $16.25 for thirteen issues. A single copy is $1.25 (Rates are for postage and handling) Send check or money order to:

> NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES Attn: Subscriptions P.O. Box 411 Tahlequah, OK 74465-0411

Phone: (918) 708-5838 Fax: (888) 689-4873

Postmaster: Send Change of Address Form 579 to: NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES P.O. Box 411, Tahlequah, OK 74465

WWW.NATIVETIMES.COM News from the crossroads of Indian Country

Junior high drops Indians mascot name

BUFFALO GROVE, Ill. (AP) - After more than five decades being known as the Indians, Aptakisic Junior High in Buffalo Grove is bowing to changing sensibilities and renaming its mascot the Eagles.

Principal Jessica McIntyre she tells the Daily Herald in Arlington Heights the change was not driven by any particular complaint or request. McIntyre noted the school did not use the image of an Indian, but the name does appear on sports banners and gym uniforms.

She said that while the name Aptakisic still honors the former mascot, the students "didn't feel connected to the Indian."

Mascots have been an issue at the collegiate level, with schools, including the University of Illinois and Bradley University, retiring or changing their Native American themed mascots or team nicknames. Some of the efforts have sparked controversy.

Native sports website relaunches

NDNSPORTS.COM website relaunches its website with a new design and continues providing the most up-to-date information on Native American athletes.

BRENT CAHWEE

OKMULGEE, Okla. - After a few years of being dormant, NDNSPORTS.COM relaunched its website in early 2012. Founded in 2000, the NDNSPORTS.COM website had become the largest resource for Native American sports news and profiles by providing the most up to date information on current college and professional athletes. Back under the direction of the founders, the website has relaunched with many of the same features and a new layout that is visually appealing to users on computers, tablets, and smart phones.

While the website has a new look and feel, the goal remains the same says co-founder John Harjo, "The goal has always and will always be about promoting Native American athletes." In terms of content, there will be more one-on-one interviews with athletes and more profiles of athletes that have been provided in the past. "We want ndnsports to be your one stop shop for news concerning Native American athletes on a daily basis, we know many existing Native American publications provide sports coverage but do so on month-by-month basis.", says other co-founder, Brent Cahwee. "We are looking to provide as much as we can by gathering information on a

In addition to the launch of the website, the NDNSPORTS founders have also developed social media outlets to coexist with the website. Users will be able to follow NDNSPORTS on Facebook™ and Twitter™ for the most up-to-date information and later this year there will be a smart phone App that people will be able to download.

Also, our relationships with the Native American communities over the years have allowed us to foster relationships with many sports, community and tribal leaders. We are looking to continue to build on those relationships and with our knowledge and expertise we will offer a variety of services later this year. Eventually, we want to develop as many college and professional athletes as we can but the first step is re-establishing the website. So please visit the website and we will provide information about our programs and services as soon as they are developed.

For more information visit http:// www.ndnsports.com - Sports News

Nike, basketball star, debut new N7 shoe

JILL ZANGER

OKLAHOMA CITY - Kevin Durant of the Oklahoma City Thunder wore the new Nike N7 Zoom KDIV in a home contest April 11 against the LA Clippers to support N7, a community program and fund dedicated to providing access to sport and physical activity for Native American and Aboriginal communities with a focus on youth. Playing in Oklahoma has brought Kevin close to the cause, and he collaborated with Nike's basketball and N7 teams to find a meaningful way to give back to the fans and community who have supported him by raising awareness for N7. "Everybody Leaves a Footprint" is the N7 tagline, referencing how each of us inevitably has an impact that affects future generations. The N7 Zoom KDIV is Kevin's footprint.

The Nike N7 Zoom KDIV will be available in white and black later this spring at Nikestore.com and Nike retail locations as part of the Summer 2012 Nike N7 collection. The turquoise color highlighted on the special version of his signature shoe is deeply symbolic of friendship and community in Native American culture, and is the foundation color of the N7 collection. A portion of profits from sales of the N7 collection help to support the N7 Fund, which awards grants to Native American and Aboriginal grassroots sport and fitness programs for youth. The fund has raised more than $1 million for grantees since it began, including the Central Oklahoma American Indian Health Council and local program 4 The Love of the Game. Learn more at www. niken7.com.

IMAGE COURTESY NIKE

The NIKE N7 Zoom KDIV will be available at Nikestore.com

Living a Balanced Life with Diabetes

The National Diabetes Education Program Urges Health Care Professionals to Promote Better Diabetes Self-care in Tribal Communities

The National Diabetes Education Program (NDEP) has created a new tool kit to help health care professionals reach out to their American Indian and Alaska Native patients with information to promote better diabetes self-care. The Living a Balanced Life with Diabetes tool kit features culturally appropriate resources to address the barriers to diabetes self-management that are pervasive in tribal communities.

At nearly 16.1%, American Indians and Alaska Natives have the highest ageadjusted prevalence of diabetes among all U.S. racial and ethnic groups. The diabetes death rate among American Indians and Alaska Natives is nearly three times the rate for the general U.S. population. The high prevalence of diabetes among American Indians and Alaska Natives makes the Living a Balanced Life with Diabetes tool kit a valuable new resource for health care professionals who serve these populations.

Self-care of diabetes can prevent or delay the disease's complications in any population. However, challenges such as substance use, depression, and the stigma associated with mental health issues can make good self-care difficult. Many tribal communities face these challenges. It is important to help people with diabetes address mental health issues to reduce the risk of many avoidable diabetes complications.

The Living a Balanced Life with Diabetes tool kit contains a variety of materials to address these issues, including the following:

- Barbara Mora's using Our Wit and Wisdom to Live Well With Diabetes audio CD and book, which describes her journey with diabetes.
- Indian Health Diabetes Best Practice: Depression Care booklet on how to screen for and treat depression and when to refer patients to mental health
- Health for Native Life magazine articles covering stressors such as anger
- Depression screening tools, including a patient health questionnaire and a depression checklist.
- Tip sheets on alcohol and smoking, self-esteem, and healthy food choices.
- Suicide Prevention Hotline magnet with contact information.
- Resource list with information on diabetes control, suicide prevention, nutrition, physical activity, and telephone hotlines.

We encourage you to distribute these materials to health care professionals in your communities who serve American Indians and Alaska Natives. Order free tool kits at www.yourdiabetesinfo.org or 1-888-693-NDEP (6337). If you have any questions on how to promote the tool kit, please contact NDEP at aianpt@

The NDEP is jointly sponsored by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention and the National Institutes of Health, with the support of more than 200 partners.

Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. Number of Americans with diabetes rises to nearly 26 million [press release]. Atlanta; 2011 January 26. Available from URL: http://www.cdc.gov/ media/releases/2011/p0126_diabetes. html?s_cid=2011_p0126_diabetes.

Indian Health Service. Trends in Indian health: 2002-2003 edition [brochure]. Rockville, MD: U.S. Department of Health and Human Services; 2009 October. Available from URL: http://www.ihs. gov/nonmedicalprograms/ihs_stats/files/ Trends_02-03_Brochure.pdf.

KANSAS

comment.

"The practical impact of this litigation could be to decimate Kansas' sovereign interest over the Park City Tract entirely," Waxse wrote.

Waxse concluded the state's interest in having authority over people and land within its territorial boundaries was a "significant and legally protectable interest," adding the court need not consider whether the state's interest in preventing the establishment of a casino that would compete with the stateoperated casino was sufficient to justify intervention.

Kansas granted Peninsula Gaming the exclusive right to operate a casino in south-central Kansas, where it recently opened the Kansas Star Casino just 25 miles from where the tribe wants to build its casino.

While the Wyandotte Nation argues in its lawsuit that federal law compels the Interior Department to accept the land into trust, while Kansas claims the exact opposite: that the law prohibits the trust acquisition. So while tribe is seeking a court order compelling the Interior Department to accept land into trust, the state is asking that the Interior Department be barred from accepting it.

The Interior Department did not oppose the state's request to join in the case, though it does not concede its claims. The tribe had opposed the move by the state to join

Gestational Diabetes threatens health of pregnant mothers, infants

OKLAHOMA DEPT. OF HEALTH

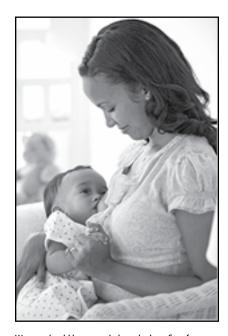

OKLAHOMA CITY - Findings from a recent survey of new Oklahoma mothers found that almost one in 10 reported Gestational Diabetes Mellitus (GDM), or high blood sugar, during their pregnancy. GDM is associated with increased risks for lifelong poor health outcomes for mothers and infants, according to the Oklahoma State Department of Health.

For children of women with previous GDM, there is an increased risk of developing childhood obesity, prediabetes, and type 2 diabetes. Infants have increased risk of being very large at birth, which can cause problems at delivery for both mother and infant.

For mothers, GDM includes increased risk of cesarean section delivery, more days in the hospital after delivery, and developing type 2 diabetes later in life. The risks were highest for mothers 30 years or older, those obese prior to becoming pregnant, women who have had a previous birth, and those women living in lower income households of less than $15,000 a year. Overweight or obese women with GDM had even greater risks for negative health

Data from the survey also suggest increased costs for the health care system and the state as a whole as some women experiencing GDM and their offspring have complications and longer hospitalizations.

The Oklahoma State Department of Health offers these recommendations for health care providers as opportunities to decrease the number of women who develop GDM:

Women should be counseled on the benefits of breastfeeding for obesity prevention.

- 1. At annual women's health visit, assess the family's health behaviors and counsel on weight management, nutrition, physical activity, and ways to reduce the risk of obesity and type 2
- 2. Counsel women on the importance of the postpartum health checkup; schedule the postpartum visit with delivery provider or medical home at delivery discharge.
- 3. Provide diabetes management of blood glucose and blood pressure levels to help prevent complications during pregnancy, or refer women with GDM for appropriate diabetes management. Use a diabetes management team including certified nurse, nutrition and pharmacy educators, behavioral health specialists, and case management.

- 4. Counsel women on the benefits of breastfeeding for obesity prevention.
- 5. Adopt a Gestational Diabetes Screening Protocol for routine gestational diabetes screening at the first prenatal visit, the 24 to 28 weeks visit, postpartum visit, and women's annual health visit. Recommended protocols are from the American Congress of Obstetrics and Gynecology and the American Diabetes Association.
- 6. Adopt the Institute of Medicine's weight gain for pregnancy as protocol and assess weight gain at each prenatal visit. Women whose weight gain exceeds the medical standard should be counseled on appropriate weight gain and encouraged to sign a contract for behavioral changes including caloric balance, cardiovascular physical fitness, and stress reduction.

Survey data are part of the Pregnancy Risk Assessment Monitoring System, a surveillance system administered by the Oklahoma State Department of Health to monitor behaviors of women before, during and after pregnancy. On a monthly basis, PRAMS surveys between 200 and 250 mothers in Oklahoma. To read the entire PRAMS study, visit: http://www.ok.gov/health/documents/  $PramsGram_DIABETES_FEB_2012.pdf$

For information about having a healthy baby, visit the "Preparing for a Lifetime, It's Everyone's Responsibility" website at: http://iio.health.ok.gov.

SETTLEMENT

and northern New Mexico. But the settlements will assist tribal governments in supplementing decades of inadequate funding throughout Indian Country, helping to improve public safety, infrastructure and health care, he said.

"The seeds that we plant today will profit us in the future and continue for generations to come," Hayes Nation in Oklahoma. said.

The Ute Mountain Ute Tribe will receive nearly $42.6 million.

The government did not release the dollar amounts each tribe will receive, though some were entered into U.S. District Court record in Washington, D.C. Among those, recipients of large sums include Montana's Confederated Salish and Kootenai Tribes at $150 million, Idaho's Nez Perce Tribe at nearly $34 million, and New Mexico's Mescalero Apache Nation at nearly $33 million.

By comparison, the tiny Nooksack Tribe in northwest Washington state will receive $25,000. The tribe has about 2,000 members.

Washington state's Confederated Tribes of the Colville Reservation, also part of the settlement, had announced their $193 million settlement in February, as did Montana's Assiniboine and Sioux Tribes from the Fort Peck Reservation, which settled for $75 million.

Last year, the government announced a $380 million settlement with the Osage

A total of 114 tribal governments filed suit after Elouise Cobell, a member of the Blackfeet Tribe from Browning, Mont., brought a similar claim on behalf of thousands of individual Indians over the government's mismanagement of their trust

The government ultimately settled the Cobell case for $3.4 billion, but it remains under appeal for various reasons by four people.

Congress delayed approval of that settlement for months. But unlike the Cobell case, money for the tribes' settlements already has been appropriated under a congressionally approved judgment fund, Interior spokesman Adam Fetcher

NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES

Mail this form with a check or money order to: Native American Times • P.O. Box 411 Tahleguah, OK 74465 • 918-708-5838

We proudly offer an array of services, from general dentistry to sedation, dental implants, and cosmetic dentistry - all designed expressly to meet our patient's changing needs. With four general dentists and four hygienists, we can maintain your oral health for a lifetime all at one location.

We Accept Contract Health & Sooner Care

We serve patients in the Drumright, Cushing, Stillwater, Stroud, Ponca City, and surrounding areas with personalized service and exemplary care. Call for your appointment today.

918-352-3312 or Toll Free 877-RH Melton drumrightdentalcenter.com

COMMENTARY

Dulaney was named 'Waonspekiye' or Teacher

TIM GIAGO (Nanwica Kciji) Notes from Indian Country © 2012 Unity South Dakota

The first I ever heard of Professor William I. Dulaney was in 1983 when I received a letter, it was not known as snail-mail back then, saying that he had been reading my newspaper, Lakota Times, and he wanted to talk to me about a couple of things that perhaps, we could work on together.

After several phone discussions we came up with the idea of forming a Native American newspaper association of some kind. We found an ally in a Navajo gentleman named Loren Tapahe. Loren was the publisher of the Navajo Times, a weekly newspaper that served the people of the largest Indian reservation in America.

Of course, it was not the Navajo Reservation any longer because a progressive tribal chairman by the name of Peter MacDonald had decided that his land was not a reservation, but was indeed a Nation.

Tapahe was newspaperman through and through. He loved newspapers and had transformed the Navajo Times into one of the truly great Indian newspapers in America. I also was a great admirer of the Navajo Times and when I founded my own newspaper on the Pine Ridge Reservation, I adopted the word Times and since the Navajo Times used the name of its people preceding the word Times, I chose the name Lakota Times after my people, the Lakota.

Professor Dulaney, Tapahe, my managing editor Adrian Louis, a Paiute Indian from Nevada, and I formed the core of the group that would reach out to any and all of the Indian newspaper editors in America in hopes of organizing a group of newspapers into a national organization. Professor Dulaney and I raised enough money through the Gannett Foundation (now the Freedom Forum) to hold our initial meeting on the campus of Penn State University.

At our second meeting on the Choctaw Nation in Oklahoma we named the newly formed organization the Native American Press Association, a name that was changed to Native American Journalists Association at the urging of Allen Neuharth; head of the Gannett Newspaper Group and of the Gannett Foundation. Neuharth had stepped forward and was the first to extend financial assistance to us. The only thing Neuharth and I had in common was that we were both from the state of South Dakota and we both loved the newspaper business dearly.

Standing quietly on the sidelines with advice and encouragement through all of this was Professor Bill Dulaney. My respect and admiration for Bill grew and grew over the ensuing years. His love for the Native American press also grew the more he met with us and we shared our mutual experiences. When presented him with a star quilt at our second annual convention in Scottsdale, Arizona in 1985, a beautiful Indian designed quilt which we draped over his shoulders, he cried unashamedly.

Bill and I have stayed in touch for most of the 27 years I have known him. He came out to South Dakota and spent time with me and my family on the Pine Ridge Reservation and while he was at it, he became a professor of journalism once more and set up a classroom for my young staff of Lakota writers.

I learned a few years ago that Bill has cancer and he is now fighting for his life. I urged NAJA to honor him in some fashion and two years ago they gave him a plaque which he treasures. Nearly four years ago Bill subscribed to a newspaper I had just started called Native Sun News. He took out a six months subscription because he did not expect to live much longer than that. He has since been proven wrong because the next year he took out a one year subscription and he has been renewing that subscription every year since 2009. He claims the paper is better than his daily newspaper in Jacksonville, Florida. He always knew how to make me feel good.

Professor Dulaney is now in his mid-eighties and the one thing he always wanted since getting to know so many Native American newspaper editors, publishers and journalists was to have an Indian name, preferably a Lakota name.

Last week he was given the name "Waonspekiye" at a ceremony held for him on the Pine Ridge Reservation. His new Lakota name means "Teacher" and that is what Professor Dulaney has been to so many Native American journalists over the past 27 years. We bonded on the Choctaw Nation in 1984 when Bill, Loren and I went jogging while Adrian Louis was out chasing armadillos.

Many years ago my daughter Marie, I think she was about 4 years old at the time, described Prof. Dulaney as "that man who wears a short coat and has no hair." Her description of the outer man was pretty accurate, but she never saw his inner beauty which consisted of a heart big enough to fill a house, a passion for newspapers and journalism, and a deep love for the Native American journalists who became his lifelong friends.

May his remaining days be spent doing the things he loves and reading the newspapers that bring him such joy.

Tim Giago, an Oglala Lakota, is President of Unity South Dakota. He was a Nieman Fellow at Harvard with the Class of 1990. His weekly column won the H. L. Mencken Award in 1985. He was the founder of The Lakota Times, Indian Country Today, Lakota Journal and Native Sun News. He can be reached at UnitySoDak1@knology.net

Dr. King, Lewis, more: We all have heroes

Dr. King opened up doors for both Blacks and Indians. No one acknowledges it, but our later gains through the Indian Civil Rights Act, the Self-Determination Act, and a dozen and a half more pro-Indian laws would not have been possible without the groundwork being laid in the civil rights movement.

AROUND THE CAMPFIRE DR. DEAN CHAVERS

© Copyright 2012

I have had more heroes in my life than most people, I think. They started appearing to me when I was still a boy, and are still coming forth now that I am an old man. Most but not all were Indians. I wrote two books about 87 of the Indian heroes; it was published in 2007.

I was sitting on a bus in the dark at Utapao, Thailand in 1968 when I heard about one of my heroes being killed. One of the southern boys, who predominated in our Air Force squadron, came in and said, "They got that nigger." Everyone knew who he meant; no one asked whom he meant. A small cheer went up, but I shed tears in the dark. That night was one of the hardest missions I ever flew.

Dr. Martin Luther King had been my hero for years by then. I started following him when he led the Birmingham bus boycott in 1955 that had been started by Mrs. Rosa Parks, another one of my heroes. I was mildly threatened once by one of the Mississippi boys, who told me my liberal views would get me into trouble. But they never did. That lowdown dawg J. Edgar Hoover and the FBI, who tried for years to ruin Dr. King's reputation, did it no harm. But they partly ruined theirs. Hoover was determined to prove that Dr. King was a communist, but he never did. The allegations Hoover made were

The Freedom Rides, the march out of Selma, the speech on the Mall in Washington, the fight of the garbage workers in Memphis, and a dozen other efforts marked the life of this great man. He did more for the U. S. than many of our Presidents.

Dr. King opened up doors for both Blacks and Indians. No one acknowledges it, but our later gains through the Indian Civil Rights Act, the Self-Determination Act, and a dozen and a half more pro-Indian laws would not have been possible without the groundwork being laid in the civil rights movement.

Congressman John Lewis, who also led the civil rights movement, is a strong hero to me. I watched Louis Henry Gates present him his genealogy the other week on TV. It turns out that his great-grandfather was one of the freed slaves who registered to vote in December 1867 as soon as the law permitted. So the Congressman told Dr. Gates that voting must run in his blood.

He remained bloody but unbowed from the age of 17 until today. I met him briefly on the day he was first sworn in to the House in 1987. Three of us were having breakfast with Sen. Ben Nighthorse Campbell when Mr. Lewis came by. What a thrill it was to me.

I remembered seeing him trampled by horses and beaten with clubs in the confrontation at the Edmund Pettis Bridge. I saw him being beaten earlier than that on the first Freedom Rides. He told Dr. Gates how he wrote a letter to Dr. King as a high school student, asking to meet him. Dr. King sent him the money for a bus ticket. He rode the bus from Troy, Alabama that Saturday morning to meet Dr. King in his office. It changed his life forever. He is still fighting the good fight.

Despite being controversial, Richard Oakes remains one of my heroes. Richard was the undisputed leader of the Alcatraz occupation; he started it all. I wrote a chapter in a forthcoming book about all the positive changes that have happened after Alcatraz. They include ICWA, 638, NAGPRA, AIRFA, and a dozen other laws and programs. Richard and LaNada Boyer from Fort Hall were the people who made Alcatraz happen.

When I was still a young whippersnapper, I met Roger Jourdain, who was Chairman at Red Lake for 36 years. He adopted me, more or less, by 1970. Roger was the first person at NCAI who started using the term "tribal sovereignty." Other tribal leaders, who had been beaten down and cowed by the BIA, used to look at him and ask what he was talking about.

He and Wendell Chino from Mescalero brought the term back into use, by their advocacy as well as their actions. They took a lot of heat. People from Red Lake burned Roger's house down. His wife Margaret and their kids got out just in time.

But Roger died not seeing his dream of an Indian Marshall Aid Plan come into being. He said the U. S. had built the nations of Europe, including Germany and Italy, back up after defeating them in the Second World War. But the U. S. had only destroyed Indian nations, and had done nothing to rebuild them. This is still true.

Wendell, who was my height, five feet and six inches, allegedly strapped a billy club on his side and dared the BIA and its goons to mix it up with him at Mescalero. When he was first elected in 1953, the tribe was on its knees. The BIA ran everything. Wendell was determined to put them back on their feet. Today, the tribe is much better off, has a large degree of self-rule, and is doing much better economically.

But Wendell died not seeing his dream of an Indian think tank come true. One morning in 1991 he showed up at my office and asked if I had time to go to breakfast. I said, "Sure, I will be glad to go with you." He and I sat at Carrows Restaurant for the next three hours as he laid out his plans for a research institute. "Everyone but Indians has a think tank," he told me. "Big Oil, manufacturers, the insurance companies, the banks—everyone but Indians has a think tank."

"And Reagan took 25% of the initiatives from the American Enterprise Institute, the Republican think tank, and made them into laws. What did Indians get during that time? Almost nothing."

"I want you to put it together," he said. But when I sent invitations to a dozen and a half tribal leaders, I got no responses. We still need that think tank. No one knows some of the leading indicators we should know about in Indian Country—the joblessness, the poor health, the poor education, the drug use, the domestic abuse, and the poor housing.

Wendell and Roger were both way ahead of their time, which is the curse of strong heroes. They can see things the rest of us cannot.

Pat Locke, who was my mentor for 35 years, was also one of my heroes. Most people will not be involved in any movement in their lifetimes. A couple of percent will be involved in one movement. The extraordinary person will start a movement. Starting a movement, whether to improve schools or to fight breast cancer, requires an extraordinary level of determination.

Pat started eight movements in her lifetime. It still astonishes me what she did. The tribal departments of education, the tribal collegemovement, the native language preservation movement, the preservation of native religions, the repatriation of sacred objects—all owe their start to this Standing Rock woman.

Pat was the person who got the legislation written in many cases. She wrote most of the language for the Native American Languages Act (NALA). She personally helped to found 10 of the tribal colleges; she would help to put a board together, work out an agreement with a local college to help the tribal college get started, and help to raise the money to get it started.

She spent years lobbying Congress. She had the insight to do this when almost no one else was doing it. She had sore feet many times from walking the marble halls. Spend all day walking on that marble, and your feet will kill you.

The first Navajo to earn a doctorate degree, Dr. Sam Billison, was one of my heroes. Sam was one of the famous Navajo Code Talkers during World War II. But he came home to attend college, start teaching in Texas and Oklahoma, and earn his doctorate degree at Arizona in 1954. He served on the Navajo Tribal Council and ran the education department for the tribe. He was the founder of the National Indian Education Association.

All these heroes had their detractors. I have personally heard people disparage and curse every one of these heroes. Roger and Wendell were dictators, Dr. King was a communist, Cong. Lewis was a trouble maker, Pat was a Johnny-come-lately, Richard was too hotheaded, and so on. But this type of backbiting always comes from some small person who has never done anything to change the world. These people abound. You can find them under every rock you turn over.

Dr. Chavers is director of Catching the Dream, a national scholarship and school improvement program in Albuquerque. His next book, to be published by Peter Lang, is titled "The American Indian Dropout."

LETTER

Dear Native Times Editor,

When Kevin Durant sported the new line of Nike N7's in a recent home game, it was an exciting and prideful night for Native Americans in Oklahoma and across the nation. The Association of American Indian Physicians (AAIP) is a proud partner of Nike N7 Foundation dedicated to providing access to sport and physical activity for Native American youth - and proud fans of Kevin Durant. When a superstar of his magnitude emphasizes the importance of Native people and issues it brings an added level of awareness. "Everybody Leaves Footprint" is the N7 theme and it refers to how each of us has an impact that affects our future generations. A portion of the profits from the N7 shoe collection help support grassroots programs for Native kids, including the Central Oklahoma American Indian Health Council. Access to sport is a huge issue for tribal nations. The obesity rate in Indian Country is at an epidemic level and Native youth are twice as likely to be obese as other racial groups according to data from the CDC. AAIP's Healthy Active Native Communities program works with tribes nationally to curb obesity and the diseases and conditions that result from it, like diabetes and heart disease. We are addressing these critical issues head-on and sending a new message out to our young people and leaders, like Nike N7 and Kevin Durant, are leaving footprints that we can all take pride in. You can support Native sports by participating and supporting the Jim Thorpe Games, June 10-17 in Oklahoma City.

Margaret Knight
Executive Director,
Association of American Indian Physicians
Oklahoma City, OK

The viewpoints expressed in columns and letters are the opinions of the writers and not necessarily the opinion or viewpoint of the Native American Times publisher or staff.

Send letters to editor@nativetimes.com. Please keep letters to 350 words or less. Sign your name, tribal affiliation and city of residence for verification purposes.

Nashville District wants to return Native American remains

BILL PEOPLES

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (April 10, 2012) - The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers Nashville District wants to return the remains of one Native American to their tribe after being found in Cheatham County last

The Corps is seeking comments on a plan to transfer custody of the human remains in accordance with the Native American Graves and Repatriation

Dr. Valerie McCormack, Nashville District cultural resources manager, said the remains were discovered in October 2011 on a beach in front of a bank on Cheatham Lake. "The remains may have eroded from the river bank after the May 2010 flood, or they may have been looted," she said.

After the 2010 flood there were numerous incidents of people looting Native American graves on the Cumberland River. It is illegal to remove artifacts from federal land, and punishment for illegally removing artifacts from Corps land can lead to a felony conviction and up to a $500,000 fine under the Archaeological Resources Protection Act.

The Corps consulted with modern tribes whose ancestors lived in the Cumberland River Valley. The remains are suspected to date from a time period that makes it difficult to precisely pinpoint descendents. During historic time Chickasaws occupied lands in the Tennessee River Valley, but their hunting and trading area included a vast area including Cheatham

As part of the effort to return the remains to a correct Nation, the Corps is publishing public notices in the Tennessean, the Ada Evening News, home of the Chickasaw Nations, and the Tulsa World, home of many of the Nations that were removed from Tennessee.

If no other tribe or individual claims the remains before May 21, 2012, the custody of the remains will be transferred to the Chickasaw Nation.

Claims for custody can be submitted in writing to U.S. Army Corps of Engineers Nashville District, (CELRN-PM-P), 801 Broadway, Nashville, TN, 37203. Call McCormack at 615-736-7847 for more information.

'Telling the Tales of Ft. Parker' EHP creates oral history collection

SHELLEY BLUEJAY PIERCE Native American Times Special Contributor

BILLINGS, Mont. - The Extreme History Project, based in Livingston, was on location this past week for filming and recording of oral histories for their Ft. Parker Oral History Project. The interviews, given by several elder members of the Crow tribe, detail the early reservation period during the 1868 to 1884 time frames and seek to preserve the wealth of information available from members of the community.

Filming took place at the Little Big Horn College, Crow Agency Montana, and in private residences where Marvin Stewart, Grant Bulltail, Mardell Plainfeather, Stan Stevens, and Walter Pease, all descendants of the early Indian agencies, recounted their own family history. The interviews were conducted by Marsha Fulton and Crystal Alegria of the Extreme History Project and were filmed and recorded by Adam Sings in the Timber of Sings in the Timber Photography.

The project, funded by The Montana Department of Transportation, and in partnership with Project Archaeology, will supply transcriptions as well as DVD's of interviews to several institutions throughout Montana and be made available to the public. They will also become a part of the digital archive which The Extreme History Project is creating on their website.

"We were so fortunate to be able to connect with some of the descendantsof people associated with both the first and second agencies," states Marsha Fulton, co-director of the Extreme History Project.

"They verv generously gave us their time and stories that have been passed down through their families. We learned so much more about these people and this time period which will fill in the history we have previously uncovered from documents and letters," continued Fulton.

The first two Crow agencies, Fort Parker, located just outside of Livingston (a.k.a. the Mission Agency) and the second agency near Absarokee, served as the two initial locations for the tribe prior to the final move to their current location in southeast Montana near Billings. Fort Parker, the very first Crow Indian agency, was established by the Laramie Treaty of 1868. The Crowlost millions of acres of territory with the establishment of each of these agencies.

Crystal Alegria, co-director of the Extreme History Project explained, "These stories have much to tell us about the Indian perspective of this period which has long been un-documented. We believe that bringing this story to light can have real value in bringing communities together here in Montana, and across the country."

Grant Bulltail recounts his family history during The Extreme History Project interview.

The Extreme History Project is a public history organization which seeks ways of using history to build bridges between communities. The current oral history project will bring the surviving historical stories from both Native and non-Native community members in order to honor both sides of a conflicting time in U.S. history.

Alegria also noted that, "We feel it is so important for the general public to have easy and ready access to this information for research, opportunities and education."

The Extreme History Project has been studying the history surrounding the site at Fort Parker in preparation for the oral history project, their book, documentary and community education programs. organization strives to make history relevant for community while finding new and innovative ways to experience the events that shaped the present.

For more information on The Extreme History Project, visit http://extremehistory.wordpress.

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT / HELP WANTED

Auditor (Level I/II & III)

Positions are involved with program integrity efforts in an evolving health care system where public demand for economy, efficiency and accountability in government spending is ever increasing. Responsible for conducting both internal performance and productivity reviews and external financial and compliance reviews.

Requirements:

· Auditor I - Bachelor's in acct or in a related field including 30 hrs of acct OR Master's degree in acct or in a related · Auditor II - Bachelor's in acct or in a related field, including 30 hrs of acct OR; Master's degree in acct or in a related field, AND; 1 yr and 6 months of exp in governmental auditing, acct or finance.

• Auditor III - Bachelor's in acct or in a related field including 30 hrs of acct OR; Master's degree in acct or in a related field, AND; 2 yrs of auditing, acct, and /or financial exp. Certification can substitute for 1 year of exp.

Reasonable accommodation may be made for individuals with disabilities.

To apply visit: www.okhca.org/jobs Submit application & questionnaire form by the deadline: April 23rd

OK Health Care Authority Attn: Human Resources 2401 N.W. 23rd St., Suite 1-A Oklahoma City, OK 73107 personnel@okhca.org E0E

American Indian College Fund in Denver, CO Is currently seeking to fill the following positions:

 Development Officer Program Officer

Full job description and application details visit our website at: www.collegefund.org or email letter of interest w/salary requirements, writing sample and resume to: applications@collegefund.org

The Iowa Tribe of Oklahoma, located South of Stillwater, is accepting applications for the following positions in the Perkins, OK area:

> Court Administrator Realty Manager Realty Specialist Dispatcher Police Officer Tribal PREP Coordinator Surveillance Officer I

View job descriptions at www.iowanation.org/jobs Great Benefits! Health, Dental, Vision, Group Life, Flex, 401(k) with 6% match, sick, vacation, holidays, STD, LTD, Voluntary Life, Accident & Cancer plans.

Apply online at http://www.iowanation.org/hireme

Equal Employment Opportunity Employer Native American preference

Health and Wellness Director

The Notah Begay III Foundation (http://www.nb3foundation.org) seeks a Health and Wellness Director for our innovative, quickly growing youth services organization in the Albuquerque, NM area. This dynamic, committed person will develop and implement health and wellness programs and activities for the placebased programming at San Felipe Pueblo including interventions related to increasing access to healthy foods, nutrition education, physical fitness programming and community, and leadership development initiatives that will promote the reduction of childhood obesity and type 2 diabetes. Master's degree and 5+ years experience.

For a full job description and to apply, please visit: http://www. nb3foundation.org/health-andwellness-director.html by Friday, May

American Indian hiring preference applies.

Delaware Tribe of Indians current opportunities:

1. Executive Assistant to the Chief, position will be responsible for assisting the Chief on correspondence, scheduling, and other tasks as assigned, also responsible for Tribal Enrollment and Human Resources, pay will be commensurate with experience. Medical, dental benefits included.

2. Wellness Center Attendant, part time position will be responsible for maintaining the Wellness Center, exercise equipment, and assisting Tribal Members as needed, hours are 5-8 pm M-F and 8 am-1 pm Sat, closed Sun, pay will be $10/hr.

Please email resumes to bwilliams@ delawaretribe.org or fax to 918-337-6591 or mail to 170 NE Barbara Street, Bartlesville, OK 74006, applications can be found on www.delawaretribe. org/careers, no phone calls please.

Positions close April 27th. Tribal/ Native American preference will be observed.

Check nativetimes.com for more jobs!

-New jobs posted throughout the week-

Fremont County School District #38, Arapahoe, Wyoming Is accepting applications for the > following positions: Business Manager

SPED Paraprofessional – Current And for the 2012-2013 school year:

K-8 Principal

Director of Curriculum and Instruction Transition Coordinator

Student Behavior Interventionist/Advocate

Federal Programs and Grant Director

Documentation required:

District Application

Resume

• Strong Letter of Interest • Three current letters of recommendation with at least one from a previous supervisor Copies of all college transcripts & certifications

Please apply at www.schoolspring.com

OPEN UNTIL FILLED For information, please contact: Connie Gay, HR Specialist 445 Little Wind River Bottom Road Arapahoe, WY 82510 307.856.9333

NOTICE OF NON-DISCRIMINATION: Applicants for employment are hereby notified that this school does not discriminate on the basis of race, sex, color national origin, age, or disability in admission or access to, or treatment or employment in its programs and activities. Any person having inquiries concerning the school's compliance with the regulations implementing Title VI, Title IX, the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA), or Section 504 is directed to contact the district Superintendent in his capacity as Section 504/ADA Coordinator at 445 Little Wind River Bottom Road (307) 856-9333, who has been designated by the school to coordinate efforts to comply with the regulations reaardina nondiscriminatio

RFP / RFQ

PROFESSIONAL AUDITING SERVICES

Proposal Deadline: May 11, 2012, S:00 PM

Contact: Christie Modlin (cmodlin@kiowagc.com)

The Kiowa Gaming Commission are soliciting Proposals from qualified national firms of certified public accountants to audit the Kiowa Casinos financial statements for the fiscal years ending September 30, 2012, 2013, and 2014 with the option of auditing its financial statements for each of the two subsequent fiscal years. In addition to the financial audit there shall also be a minimum internal controls (MICS) audit as required by the National Indian Gaming Commission (NIGC).

To be considered 5 copies of a proposal must be received by certified US Mail or Federal Express at the Kiowa Gaming Commission, 2439 Ponderosa Drive, Chickasha, OK 73018 by 5:00pm on Friday May 11,2012.

To request the full scope of work, please contact Christie Modlin (cmodlin@kiowagc. com) or Margaret Komalty (mkomalty@kiowagc.com) or call (405) 222-0072.

Request for Qualifications

The Pawnee Nation of Oklahoma

Re-Advertisement

is advertising for Construction Management Services for the renovation of the Tribal Ceremonial Roundhouse which is located at 900 Agency Road on the Pawnee Tribal Reserve which is located east of Pawnee, Oklahoma. The complete Request for Qualifications including the criteria that will be used to select the most qualified firm is available upon written request.

Submit your request by fax or email (mrobedeaux@pawneenation.org) and please include your email address and/or your fax number)

Qualifications documents must be received no later than 4:30 pm on Monday, April 30, 2012.

Point of Contact for Information: Muriel Robedeaux, ICDBG Coordinator

Contact: Marshall Gover, President, Pawnee Nation of Oklahoma, (918) 762-3621, Fax: (918) 762-6446. Attn: ICDBG Ceremonial Roundhouse Project.

LEGAL

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE MUSCOGEE (CREEK) NATION OKMULGEE DISTRICT

IN THE MATTER OF THE GUARDIANSHIP OF: M.C., a Minor Child Case No. GD-2012-05

NOTICE BY PUBLICATION

DANIEL CULLY OR ANY UNKNOWN FATHER

YOU ARE HEREBY NOTIFIED that the above-entitled matter is set for hearing on a PETITION FOR GUARDIANSHIP at the hour of 10:00 p.m. on the 11th day of JUNE, 2012, in the Muscogee (Creek) Nation District Court at the Muscogee (Creek) Nation Complex in Okmulgee, Oklahoma. Your failure to appear at the hearing on June 11th, 2012, may result in a default judgment being rendered against you.

Court Clerk_

NATIVE AMERICAN HIRING PREFERENCE? ADVERTISE YOUR JOBS WITH NATIVE TIMES!

AARP seeking Indian Elder nominations

AARP Oklahoma last week announced it is accepting nominations for the 2012 AARP Indian Elder Honors.

The Fourth Annual AARP Oklahoma Indian Elder Honors will recognize 50 outstanding tribal elders who have made a positive impact in their tribe, community, state or country. Nominations can be submitted by tribal governments or by individuals now through May 31st, said AARP State President Marjorie Lyons.

"The AARP Oklahoma Indian Elder Honors has become one of the highlights of the year for us," Lyons said. "It is a celebration of Indian culture and people - many of whom have never been recognized before - and a way to recognize the significant contributions of older Indians in Oklahoma."

The goal is to have at least one honoree from each of Oklahoma's 38-federally recognized Indian tribes, she said.

Nominations are being accepted online at: www. aarp.org/ok or via a letter of nomination explaining the contribution of the nominee that can be mailed directly to: AARP Oklahoma at 126 N. Bryant, Edmond, OK 73034.

must be

Nominees

an enrolled member of federally-recognized Oklahoma Indian Tribe and must be living. Past honorees have included linguists, artists, ministers, educators, veterans, tribal and community leaders, matriarchs and patriarchs.

For more information on the 2012 AARP Oklahoma Indian Elder Honors, e-mail AARP Oklahoma at ok@aarp. org or call 1-866-295-7277. To make an online nomination, visit: www.aarp.org/ok

AICCO Tulsa Chapter names officers

TULSA, Okla. - Tulsa Chapter American Indian Chamber of Commerce of Oklahoma has selected new chapter officers and has named Traci Phillips, as Chapter Chair. Phillips is President and CEO of Natural Evolution, Inc. Additional executive officers for 2012 include Tracy Copeland, TGI Enterprises, Inc., Vice

Chair; Ginette Overall, Power Ready LLC, Treasurer; Tim Watts, American Heritage Bank, Secretary; Rachel Navarro, ONE Architecture, Public Relations; George Shannon, Technical

For more information email Rachel Navarro, rachel@1architecture.com.

Applications Company, Marketing.

SUPERNAW'S OKLAHOMA INDIAN SUPPLY

Wholesale items for Pow Wow Vendors

Bone chokers $20 per dozen

Handmade lamp worked glass bead bracelets $1.00 each Glass bead stretch bracelets 5 for $2.50

12 Necklaces: Chain w/ pendant and display pad $13.50 36 inch gemstone chip strands Reg. 3.95 now $2.00 36 inch turquoise chip strands Reg. 7.95 now $4.00

Always our regular stock of seed beads from 16/0 to 8/0, findings, leather, hackles, fluffs and thousands of other supply items.

Remember we've moved around the corner 109 North Broadway, Skiatook, OK 74070

New Dealers Cash or Credit Card Only.

Open Noon-6pm Mon. thru Fri. • 10am-5m Sat. • Closed Sun. Local: 396-1713-Countrywide Toll Free 1-888-720-1967

Website: www.supernaw.com • Email: Supernaw@flash.net

PAWNEE TITLE VII INDIAN EDUCATION

30th ANNUAL OUTH POW-WOW

PAWNEE, OK

SATURDAY MAY 5, 2012 PAWNEE HIGH SCHOOL GYM 600 CLEVELAND

NPIC PRINCESS NPIC BRAVE

Dorcas Half-Zotigh Granddaughter of Harry & Helen Pickering Justin Townsend Son of MaryFaye BlackOwl

Son of Andrea Kemble

Son of Damon & Francie Roughface

Matthew Gooday

Warren Pratt, Jr.

Damon Roughface

Head Singer Anthony Kemble

Head High School Boy Ryland Moore Son of Randy & Melissa Moore

Sommer Dawn Moore Head High School Girl Daughter of Brad Moore & the Late Bunnie Sue Moore

Head Little Boy Kamden Jones Son of Joe & Jodi Jones

Head Little Girl Taylor Grant Daughter of Nolan Grant & April Moor

Head Gourd Dancer Ed Yellowfish

Son of Ed & Sydna Yellowfish Asst. AD Alex Roughface

Son of Lisa Gooday Water Boys Aaron Carroll Son of Bobby & Alice Carroll Kyle Horn

Son of Bob & Gerri Horn Goodfox Family

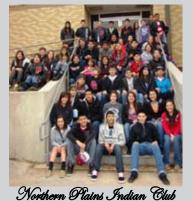

Co-Host Oklahoma City Public Schools Indian Education OKC/PS Native American Student Color Guard Gourd Dancing 2:00 pm

5:30pm Elementary Cafeteria Supper Break Grand Entry 7:00pm

Must be enrolled in a Primary/Secondary School to participate in contests

> Tiny Tots / 0-KG ist-5th

> > 6th-i2th

2011-2012

ARE WELCOME $40 & DONATION ITEM BRING YOUR OWN CHAIRS & DISHES

FOR MORE INFORMATION CALL JUNE HAMILTON OR ALICE CARROLL @918-762-3564

EVENTS

*Email your powwow or other event info to: Lisa@ nativetimes.com. Name, date, time, place and contact information is free.

EVERY WEDNESDAY Kiowa class beginning in February at 6:30 pm, Oliphant Hall, Room 141, Tulsa University. Info call Sarah, (918) 445-5213

EVERY THURSDAY The Otoe-Missouria Substance Abuse and Behavioral Health Programs sponsor an open group for families touched by addiction from noon to 1 p.m. at the Otoe-Missouria Health Building. This is a confidential group. Call 580-723-4466 x252 or x262 for more information.

SECOND TUESDAY Cherokee Artists Association meeting at 202 E. 5th Street Tahlequah, Okla. Info: (918) 458-0008 or www. cherokeeartistsassociation.org Cherokee language classes

FOURTH THURSDAY Each month the American Indian Chamber of Commerce of Oklahoma  Eastern Chapter hosts a monthly luncheon at Bacone College, Muskogee, Okla. 11:30 a.m. at Benjamin Wacoche Hall. Please RSVP one week ahead of time. Phone: (918) 230-3759

EVERY 2ND SATURDAY Indian Taco Sales - from 11-2:30pm at OK Choctaw Tribal Alliance, 5320 S. Youngs Blvd, Oklahoma City www. okchoctaws.org

MON/WED AND THURS The Marble City Nutrition Center serves hot meals at the Marble City Community Center at 11:30 a.m. Meals are free to anyone over 50, but a small donation is suggested to help with the expense of the program. Marble City Nutrition Center, 711 N. Main, Marble City, Okla. Phone: (918) 775-2158

YOUTH COUNCIL The Native Nations Youth Council (NNYC) bimonthly meetings from 6:30pm -8:30pm @ the Youth Services of Tulsa Activity Center (311 S. Madison - on 3rd just west of Peoria). Call to confirm location. Info Call: Chad Gilley (918) 382-2204 or nnyc@ihcrc.org

THROUGH MAY Free beginner-level in communities throughout the tribe's jurisdiction. Once a week for ten weeks. For locations or to register, call Bill Andoe at 918-453-5151.

APRIL 19 UKB Illinois District Meeting at 6:30 p.m. in the Vian Satellite Office.

APRIL 21 Peoria Tribe Special Election for position of Grievance Committee. Polling at Admin. Bldg. Conference Room, 118 S. Eight Tribes Trail, Miami, Okla. Polls open 9am-Noon.

UKB Tahlequah District Meeting, 6 p.m. in the Rocky Ford Community Building

Chilocco class of 1962 will meet at 11:30 a.m. on on April 21 at the Chilocco campus. The meeting will be in conjunction with the campus work day and the North Central Chapter meeting. For more information call Charmain Billy 580 762-7938 or Jack Baker 405 612-1099

Spring contest powwow at Rose State College in the Professional Training and Education Center, Midwest City, Okla. Free & open to the public. Dinner at 5pm. Grand Entry at 7pm. Info call Mechelle Aitson-Roessler 405-736-0203 or Alan Neitzel 405-736-0347.

Taco Sale 11-3 at Tulsa Creek Indian Community, 8611 S. Union, Tulsa. 918-298-2464. $8 per plate. Proceeds benefit Senior trip to NICOA Elders Conference.

Arts & Crafts Fair fundraiser, 12:30 – 4:30 at Okfuskee County Fairgrounds – Hwy #62. Booth Space available inside. For more information contact: Sandi Golden (918) 623-6437 Email: imgoldsandi@yahoo.com

Victory Christian Center

Native American Ministry conference: 9:00a.m. 4:00p.m. Powwow: 7:00-11:00p.m. at Victory Christian Activity Center. Contact: 918.491.7830

APRIL 24 Native American Art Festival, Tulsa Hard Rock Hotel. 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. sponsored by Seminole Nation of Okla. For booth space contact [walker.s@sno-nsn.gov] or 405-257-7241 by April 16.

APRIL 26 UKB Delaware District Meeting, 6:30 p.m. in the Jay Community Center.

UKB Cooweescoowee District Meeting, 6 p.m. in the First Christian Church in Pryor.

APRIL 27 Kiowa Higher Education Graduates Banquet at Cross Timbers Restaurant in Anadarko, OK. Info call 580-654-2300 ext. 324

APRIL 28 "O-SKOO" Co-Ed Basketball Tournament (All Indun) PRE-"O-SKOO" ~ 30 YRS TO 39 YRS & "O-SKOO" ~ 40 YRS TO ??? YRS. $50.00 Entry fee. 8 Man Roster: 4 Ole Men & 4 Ole Women. For more info, call Tonkawa Tribe Education Programs: 580-628-2561 LISA ext 125 or LEAH ext 131. Entry deadline April 20.

Church Fundraiser for New Joy Baptist Church 11:00 to 5:00, 1103 South Main, Sapulpa. All you can eat spaghetti lunch - Cost $8 All proceeds will go towards the church and church events. Call Jimmy Alexander 918-322-5407

Seminole Nation Honor Guard Powwow at Okfuskgee County Fairgrounds, Okemah, Okla. Gourd Dancing 1-5pm, Supper Break 5-6pm, Gourd Dancing 6-7pm and Grand Entry at 7pm. Info call Alex Fish 405-432-7858. Vendors call Phillip Coon 918-623-6810 or 405-432-7399.

APRIL 28 18th Annual CSUEA Youth Powwow at Frisco Center, Clinton, Oklahoma. Gourd dancing at 3 pm, supper at 5 pm, grand entry at 7 pm. Info: Charlene Wassana 580-331-3300.

Restoring Harmony Heroes of Hope Contest Powwow at Westside YMCA, 5400 S. Olympia Ave., Tulsa, Okla. Info contact Tim Shadlow 918-382-2217 or tshadlow@ ihcrc.org

MAY 4 Indian Taco Sale 11:00 AM - 2:00 PM at Norman First American UMC, 1950 East Beaumont Drive, Norman, Okla. Call Ahead for Speedy Service. Free Delivery on Orders of 10 or More (405)

321-5640

MAY 5

All you can eat breakfast fundraiser sponsored by the Yuchi/Euchee Heritage Festival. 7am-1pm Covenant Harvest Chapel, 722 N Hodge St., Sapulpa, Okla. Info call Kathy, 918-695-0195

MAY 8 Lazy Stitch Beading Workshop, Museum of the Red River, 812 E Lincoln Rd, Idabel, Okla. Info call Jeanette Bohanan 580-286-3616

JUNE 1 Indian Taco Sale 11:00 AM - 2:00 PM at Norman First American UMC, 1950 East Beaumont Drive, Norman, Okla. Call Ahead for Speedy Service. Free Delivery on Orders of 10 or More (405) 321-5640

JUNE 8 Chilocco Powwow in the Event Center of the First Council Casino, seven miles north of Newkirk, OK. Gourd dance begins at 2:00 p.m. with grand entry at 6:30. Featured will be the Apache Fire Dance. Contact Garland Kent, Sr at 580- 352-2670.

JUNE 8-10 Red Earth Festival, Cox Convention Center, Oklahoma City

Gaylord-Pickens Museum opens 'Touching the Past' by Enoch Kelly Haney

SHELLEY ROWAN

OKLAHOMA CITY - On April 26, the Gaylord-Pickens Oklahoma Heritage Museum will open Touching the Past in its Tulsa World Gallery. In keeping with the gallery's mission to showcase Oklahoma artists, the exhibit will be a retrospective internationally-recognized

"Standing Guard" by Enoch Kelly Haney

painter and sculptor Enoch Kelly Haney's 40-year career. The exhibit is sponsored by the Muscogee-Creek Nation.

Haney is a full blood Seminole-Creek Indian. From humble beginnings in rural Seminole County, Haney became the first full blood American Indian to serve in the Oklahoma Legislature and an internationally-recognized artist. When Haney was merely two years old, his mother noticed his artistic ability. He went on to professionally train at Bacone College in Muskogee and graduated from Oklahoma City University with a degree in Fine Arts. His art has been exhibited throughout the United States, England, Austria and Asia. Haney has won many awards including the title of Master Artist of the Five Civilized Tribes.

In addition to decades of success, Haney became the highly esteemed creator of the 22-foot, bronze sculpture entitled, The Guardian, chosen to top the Oklahoma State Capitol Dome. Haney has created many commissioned sculptures including the Chickasaw Warrior at the Chickasaw Nation Headquarters in Ada, the Standing His Ground sculpture at Seminole State College in Seminole and 7-foot replicas of The Guardian at various businesses and college campuses through the state of Oklahoma. Haney also created roundels for the Chickasaw Nation Cultural Center, the State House of Representatives and the State Senate Chambers at Oklahoma State Capitol.

Haney currently resides in Norman, Oklahoma and works full-time as a sculpture.

Touching the Past will be on display April 26 through July 28 at Gaylord-Pickens Museum and is sponsored by the Muscogee-Creek Nation. An opening reception will be held Thursday, April. 26 from 5 to 7 p.m. at the Museum located at NW 13th Street & Shartel Avenue. The reception is free to the public made possible by the Muscogee-Creek Nation. RSVP to Corie Baker at 405.523.3206 or clb@oklahomaheritage.com.

Through high-tech, interactive exhibits, the Gaylord-Pickens Museum allows visitors to experience Oklahoma's story through its people. Video-driven displays and computer touch screens provide guests a unique look into the lives of famous and everyday Oklahomans who have impacted our state, country and world.

For more information about the Museum, the Tulsa World Gallery or Touching the Past, visit www.oklahomaheritage. com or call 405-235-4458.

NWC debuts Art Biennale, prizes for weather in art

MICHAEL BENDURE

NORMAN, OKLA. How does weather affect the artistic muse? The National Weather Center at the University of Oklahoma teams up with the Fred Jones Jr. Museum of Art and the Norman Arts Council to explore the theme of weather in art with the National Weather Center Biennale - the first national juried exhibition featuring art about weather. The biennale officially begins Earth Day, April 22.

Prizes totaling $25,000 will be offered to the top winners. An overall prize of $10,000 will be awarded to one work for Best in Show, with $5,000 given to the first-place winners in three categories: painting, works on paper and photography.

"Art reflects human relationship with the environment and particularly with weather," said Berrien Moore, director of the National Weather Center. "Lightning bolts and cloud imagery in Native American pottery, the skies and atmospheres of Georgia O'Keeffe, the Clearing Storm, Sonoma County Hills of Ansel Adams; weather vibrates through art. We are delighted to invite artists to the first National Weather Center Biennale: art's window on the impact of weather on the human experience."

Moore also is the dean of the OU College of Atmospheric Geographic Sciences and vice president of Weather and Climate Programs and Chesapeake Energy Corporation Chair in Climate Studies.

The National Weather Center Biennale is open to artists of any nationality

The National Weather Center at the University of Oklahoma announces the upcoming opening of a new national art biennale on Earth Day, 2012. The juried art competition explores the impact of weather on humanity through three forms of media: photography, works on paper and painting. The biennale is open to the public. Painting by Tony Abeyta (Navajo, b. 1965) Storm from the South, 2011.

over the age of 18.

Registration begins April 22 on the biennale's official website at www. nwcbiennale.org. Artists may enter up to three works in any combination of categories. The entry fee is $25 for the first entry and $10 for each subsequent entry. Registration closes Oct. 1. Works selected for an exhibition to be held in 2013 will be notified in late 2012.

The exhibition of selected works, including the prize winners', will open to the public Earth Day, April 22, 2013, at the National Weather Center and will close June 2, 2013.

"The University Oklahoma's mission education is clearly reflected both in the quality of art and programming at the Fred Jones Jr. Museum of Art and in the global integrity and technologicaladvancesofthe National Weather Center," said Ghislain d'Humières, director of the FJJMA. "The National Weather Center Biennale unites visual art with weather in a truly unique, interdisciplinary supported collaboration by OU President David L. Boren."

Alan Atkinson, an art instructor at OU, will serve as the exhibition curator and part of the initial selection committee. Joining Atkinson as initial jurors will be Moore and Erinn Gavaghan, executive director of the Norman Arts Council. The initial judges will select 100 works from the submitted art entries for the exhibition.

Three nationally renowned guest jurors representing national meteorology, contemporary art museums and current artists will then select the winning pieces from each of the three categories, as well as the Best of Show prize, from the initial 100 selected works. These judges will be announced at a later date on the biennale's website.

"It is easy to see how the weather influences peoples' daily lives, but art often exerts a more subtle influence," said Atkinson. "It makes sense to combine them in a venue that will underscore the ways that both art and weather shape our humanity."

Completed in 2006, 244,000-square-foot National Weather Center building is the anchor of a unique research and learning community including the nation's largest academic meteorology program. The central space for the exhibition will be the 9,600-square-foot atrium with gallery lighting and full security.

"This is an exciting institutional partnership that represents a great opportunity for artists from around the world to examine the forces of nature at the very point where they impact the human experience, through the agency of weather," said Atkinson.

Additional information about the Fred Jones Jr. Museum of Art is available online at www.ou.edu/ fjjma.

MODEL

Watchman's final photo shoot challenge was to pose as a toddler with another model. Kris Jenner and her youngest daughters Kendall and Kylie of "Keeping up with the Kardashians" were the celebrity guests and models for the shoot.

"I am proud that she maintained her cultural values while on a reality TV show... and most importantly, for returning to her reservation community on the Umatilla Indian Reservation to address all of her supporters – even on elimination night!" Lindsey Watchman, Mariah's father said. "That is courage, but also pride, humility, respect and gratefulness towards all those whom help raise this young Indian woman."

Watchman began modeling when she was 15, and the summer she turned 16 she fulfilled her first international modeling contract in Bangkok, Thailand. Later when she was 17 going on 18, she had a threemonth contract to model in Hong Kong. Two days before leaving to Hong Kong she graduated as the 2009 salutatorian from Nixyaawii Community School on the Confederated Tribes of the Umatilla Indian Reservation (CTUIR). After Hong Kong, she lived in Miami for six months then took a year off from modeling to attend Haskell Indian Nations University in Lawrence, Kan. She wanted to make sure she was taking the right path, and she always wanted to play basketball at a collegiate level.

"When I was younger I wanted to go to college and be an athlete, and that is what I always thought I was going to do," Watchman said.

Her father was her first basketball coach, soon realized during her sophomore year, it was time to "back off and let others help mold her, and for me to just become a 'fan' like the rest of the community," he said. "Mariah is truly an example of the adage 'It takes a village to raise a child."

After a year at Haskell she realized modeling is her true passion, and she wants to have a "huge voice to help create change."

Watchman signed with Image Modeling Development (IMD) in Medford, Ore. when she was 15. IMD continues to be her "mother agency" although she has contracts with Wilhelmina Models, which is based in New York. She also attended the International Modeling and Talent Association, and works all aspects of modeling includingrunway, commercial, print, editorial, and fashion. She has been in magazines including Seventeen Magazine, Nordstrom, Delia's teen fashion catalog, and in the music video "On Fire" for Lil Wayne and Birdman.

"I was essentially strongarmed to take Mariah to meet Teresa Pollman, whom would end up being her "mother" agent ... and a great role model as well for her. I have always exposed Mariah to various activities, but let her gauge her own interest ... then go from there," Lindsey Watchman said. "Modeling was her dream, and I made sure she rode that interest as long as I could afford ... which is when the industry took over the expenses. To Teresa, we are both very grateful for not only seeing potential, but for becoming a 'surrogate mother' in this new territory she was about to explore - mostly on her own."

In addition to modeling and eventually acting, Watchman said there are a lot of different issues she wants to tackle including finding ways to provide economic growth to struggling reservations and becoming a business woman. She hopes to develop her own t-shirt clothing line called N8TV; with 10 percent of the proceeds going to different charities and organizations. She said her father worked for the National Congress of American Indians so tribal politics also interests her. Overall, she sees no limits.

"The possibilities endless because if you create enough opportunity, then your possibilities should be endless," she said. "I hope to make a lot of waves; be a mover and a shaker in Indian Country and I love meeting all these people along the way. I'll continue to use my heart and continue to follow my dreams."

Her mother is Cynthia Turcotte, and Watchman is the oldest of 11 kids. She has eight sisters and three brothers.

"I'm always trying to do my best for them and show them the way. That's what made me push all the time ... I want to be able to help them ...," Watchman said. "All my siblings are pretty excited; then I have all my little sisters who almost all of them want to be models too. We're a bit like the Brady Bunch ..."

Watchman said her sisters' elementary school friends autographed requested pictures; then she laughed and said her little sister asked for an autograph too. "I'm like you don't need one, I'm your sister. I'm like, that would just be weird," Watchman giggles.

Lindsey Watchman said his daughter has always been comfortable in front of a diverse group of people. They spent three years in Germany while he was in the Air Force, he said, and he realized that much of her knowledge would come from her exposure to different types of teachers.

"Thus she learned basketball from someone else, learned our female roles in the Longhouse and how to pick berries and dig roots (by several Elders), (and) learned a different language (Walla Walla) from the one I was learning and teaching (Nez Perce). In short, she had an array of interests that I merely supported her in," he said. "I can honestly say, I AM her No.1 fan and very happy to be riding along her journey with her. She has so much more to do and become ... I must merely watch ... like everyone else."

Watchman is now evolving into a teacher as well. Since her ride on America's Next Top Model ended, she's kept busy visiting people throughout Indian Country. She has been to the Crow reservation for a life story lecture and autograph signing event, in Montana for the "Runway to Congress" fashion show fundraiser, in North Dakota making her debut as a celebrity ring girl for an MMA fight in front of George Foreman, and on the Fort Peck Indian Reservation to speak to kids at a youth ministry. She will be at the Gathering of Nations powwow on April 26-28 in Albuquerque, N.M., and she hopes to make it to Riverside Indian School in Anadarko, Okla.

She said she tells kids to find out what they really want to do in life and make it their goal. Once they have their goal they should hold on to it and do everything in their power to attain it.

"I basically let kids know not to be a victim of circumstance ... whether it be coming from a dysfunctional family, or coming from not having the finances, or coming from being a minority, (or) coming from being on a reservation. I let them know that all of those should not be factors," she said. "Whatever they decide to be, they can do it, with the right work and determination and the right resources."

She also reminds aspiring models that she started when she was 15, and location is paramount. Models have to be available, and prime locations for the high fashion industry are New York, Los Angeles and Miami, she said. Watchman is now based out of Miami again.

"When you start really young it gives you a chance to gain a lot more experience because modeling something that you can't do forever," Watchman said. "Start building your book or portfolio is one of the most important things you can do in your beginning stages."

She said young models should be aware of radio ads from modeling agencies that claim to have connections to the best agencies then they require money up front. She said if the agency believes in a model enough they will upfront the money and then it will go towards a contract.

"There are always opportunities for girls who are serious; it just takes hard work and dedication all the time, and dedication to your craft," Watchman said. "The path that I'm on and that I'm making for myself is not one that is usual. It's a path that takes a lot of hard work and I spend a lot of time away from my family and made a lot of sacrifices ... "

Watchman said she has received some negativity from people because she's a "light skinned Native."

"I'm an enrolled member, I still speak my language ... I'm Native in my heart and I'm always going to be," Watchman said. "Honestly, I want to be the best model that I can be, I want to be the first Native American super model ... my culture is everything that I stand for ... I'm trying to push myself to new limits of where I can go in the high fashion industry for Indian Country ... and kind of lead the way ... I test out my measures of where I can go and just always show that if you work hard

Watchman's website will soon be up at MariahWatchman.com and will include her photos, autobiography and her t-shirt enough ... you will get there."

Inside this issue:

- Muscogee (Creek) Nation buys retail complex
- Inuit woman wins environmental award
- Chickasaw Press wins book awards

TODAY'S INDEPENDENT INDIAN NEWS

- A FREE PUBLICATION -

WWW.NATIVETIMES.COM

NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES

VOLUME 18 • ISSUE 17

PUBLISHED WEEKLY

APRIL 27, 2012

FBI won't reopen reservation cases

The agency was asked to reopen investigations into more than 50 deaths from the 1970s and unsolved murders that occurred since 2000.

KRISTI EATON
Associated Press

SIOUX FALLS, S.D. (AP) – The FBI won't reopen decadesold investigations into the deaths of more than 50 people on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation unless new information emerges, an official with the bureau said Thursday.

The decision came after Oglala Sioux Vice President Tom Poor Bear and James Toby Big Boy, chairman of the tribal council's Judiciary Committee, asked U.S. Attorney Brendan Johnson to reopen the investigations into the deaths in the 1970s and what they believe are additional unsolved murders that have occurred since 2000.

"Mr. Johnson, we ask that you demand the FBI and (Bureau of Indian Affairs) Division of Law Enforcement to reopen ... the unsolved and largely uninvestigated murders of the individuals whose names are enclosed with this letter as well as those whose names shall be forthcoming," Poor Bear and Big Boy wrote in their letter March 16.

The FBI in 2000 issued a report detailing their investigations into the deaths of 57 people that occurred during a violent period of the 1970s, when the murder rate on the reservation was the highest in the nation. The report said the bureau was right in closing the cases, even in situations where no one had been prosecuted for a death deemed unnatural.

"Absent new information, there's no intention to reopen any of these investigations," Kyle Loven, chief counsel for the Minneapolis Division of the FBI, told The Associated Press in an interview Thursday. Loven's statement was the government's first public response to the request.

In a statement, tribal officials said they are disappointed with the FBI's decision but are hopeful a meeting with Johnson next month will persuade federal officials to change their mind.

The tribe has said they will not publicly release the list of names because of privacy concerns but said its list does include names listed in the 2000 FBI report that they felt were insufficiently investigated and prosecuted. One person listed in the 2000 report, for instance, was killed with an axe. According to the report, a suspect was identified but was not prosecuted because of impairment caused by a mental condition. In another instance, a man was fatally stabbed through the neck and right side of the face. The autopsy report showed the death was deemed a suicide and the FBI did not investigate.

Before the FBI rejected the request to re-open its investigations, Lisa Shellenberger, an outside attorney working with the Oglala Sioux, said the work done on the cases was "just not convincing."

"The conclusions that they issued for each name, each unsolved murder, were pretty sparse and limited and without additional information or additional public knowledge besides a couple sentences, that's supposed to clear up the taking of an individual?" said Shellenberger, an attorney with Westminster, Colo.-based Smith, Shelton, Ragona & Salazar.

See FBI Continued on Page 3

COURTESY CHEROKEE NATION COMMUNICATIONS OFFICE

(Left to right): Bill author Chuck Hoskin Jr., Councilor David Thornton, Chief Bill John Baker, Deputy Chief Joe Crittenden and Council Speaker Tina Glory-Jordan

Cherokee Council passes shield law, names commissioners

TAHLEQUAH, Okla. — The Cherokee Nation is now one of the first tribes in the country to offer journalists protection from revealing their sources, thanks to a shield law adopted unanimously by the Tribal Council at its April meeting.

"In the process of news gathering, often times a journalist has to talk to a source in order to build their information, to build their knowledge about how to cover a story, and they often have to give that source confidentiality assurances," said Deputy Speaker Chuck Hoskin Jr. "For the most part, this will protect journalists and their sources from fearing they're going to be hauled into court and disclosed."

Authored by Hoskin, the bill is modeled after the shield law used by the state of Oklahoma. The new policy does not apply to defamation, libel or slander cases. It also

See CHEROKEE Continued on Page 2

COURTESY

Yannash Ushi Scott teaches a Choctaw language class inside the First United Methodist Church of Madill in southeastern Oklahoma.

Language preservation goes grassroots in 'Chocasaw' Country

S.E. RUCKMAN
Native American Times
Special Correspondent

MADILL, Okla. – Ask the Chahta Anumpa Preservation Society about language being a living, breathing thing and they are likely to mention that they want to resuscitate Choctaw in the same breath. During a weekly in-class session, this grassroots language organization finds itself amid an effort to lasso Indian languages back from the brink of being forgotten.

The sleepy, rural town finds itself in unofficial territory. Located in the Chickasaw jurisdiction, Madill is along the intersection of the Chickasaw and Choctaw Nations. The town of 3,700 lies in what locals call "Chocasaw" Country, a hybrid Indian consciousness in southeast Oklahoma.

Inside the First United Methodist Church of Madill, the Chahta Anumpa Preservation Society gathers to study and speak Choctaw or "Chahta." They are led by Yannash Ushi Scott, a former Iraqi War veteran and, at one time, a

See LANGUAGE Continued on Page 6

Tribal consultations on education sought

Secretaries Salazar and Duncan Seek Tribal Consultations on Proposed Framework to Spur Educational Advancement in Indian Country

WASHINGTON – As part of President Obama's commitment to empowering Indian nations, Secretary of the Interior Ken Salazar and Secretary of Education Arne Duncan announced last week that their Departments will begin tribal consultations on a draft agreement to help expand educational opportunities and improve academic achievement for American Indian and Alaska Native students.

The draft Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) would frame a partnership to implement the White House Initiative on American Indian and Alaska Native Education which seeks to close the achievement gap between Indian students and non-Indian students; decrease the alarmingly high dropout rates of all American Indian and Alaska Native students; and help preserve and revitalize Native languages, histories and cultures. The initiative commits federal agencies to work closely with tribal governments and use the full range of their education expertise, resources and facilities to achieve the initiative's goals.

"Education is key to the fabric of healthy communities," said Secretary Salazar, who co-chairs the President's initiative. "But we need to do better when it comes to meeting the academic and cultural needs of our American Indian and Alaska Native students across the nation. These tribal consultations will be critical in developing the most effective framework to raise the bar for Indian Country education."

Education Secretary Duncan said, "The strength of tribes and our nation's future prosperity are inextricably tied, and together we can dramatically improve the lives of our Native students. These consultations will be invaluable and will continue our efforts to listen to, and learn from, the tribal leaders who know these communities best."

The President's initiative, established by Executive Order on December 2, 2011, addresses the Federal Government's trust responsibility to protect the unique rights and promote the well-being of the Nation's tribes, while respecting their sovereignty. One of the specific outcomes called for in the Initiative is the establishment of an MOU to provide a means for the Departments of the Interior and Education to work together with tribal leaders, as well as continue a framework for transferring statutory education grant funds from Education to Interior.

The Department of Education has substantial expertise and resources to help improve Indian education, specific experience with federally funded programs and a responsibility to work with Interior's Bureau of Indian Education (BIE) school system to ensure excellence in education. The Bureau of Indi-

See EDUCATION Continued on Page 3

JOSH SLANE / COURTESY MUSCOGEE CREEK NATION COMMUNICATIONS

The Muscogee (Creek) Nation purchased Riverwalk Crossing in Jenks for $11.5 million Tuesday, April 17. The tribe has plans to use the area to promote economic development.

Muscogee (Creek) Nation purchases shopping complex

JENKS, Okla. – The Muscogee (Creek) Nation purchased Riverwalk Crossing in Jenks for $11.5 million today, and the tribe has plans to use the area to promote economic development.

"We're very excited," said Principal Chief George Tiger. "For the Nation to put together a team of elected officials and personnel shows due diligence and says a lot about the direction the tribe is taking, as well as a positive direction in economic development."

The property, which is located on the banks of the Arkansas River, was purchased at the Tulsa County Sheriff's auction.

The tribe's next step will be to locate a management group on the national level to evaluate the property for retail potential, Tiger said.

NCAI names Graduate Health Fellowship recipient

WASHINGTON - The National Congress of American Indians (NCAI) has announced Lisa Begay of Mesa, Arizona as its inaugural Native Graduate Health Fellowship recipient. Ms. Begay, a veteran of the US Navy, is a Navajo dental student at the Arizona School of Dentistry and Oral Health, where she is enhancing her knowledge of dental health to complement her substantial field experience. The Fellowship will include both a financial award of $5,000 and professional development in tribal health policy.

"As a dedicated, positive agent for change, Ms. Begay is an exceptional example of someone serving Indian Country on the ground and making a real difference," said NCAI President Jefferson Keel, "We commend Ms. Begay for her commitment and we look forward to assisting her in her professional development and her ongoing efforts to improve Native health."

Ms. Begay is a veteran of the US Navy. She began her career as a dental hygienist for the Indian Health Service (IHS) and has led numerous community initiatives to improve oral health among Native children and families. These initiatives include helping to implement the "Cavity Free Club" at the Albuquerque IHS Dental Clinic and coordinating a mass mailing of first-birthday cards to Native children to encourage parents to make their child's first dental appointment. Devoted to fostering the next generation of leaders in Native health, Ms. Begay has also served as an instructor for a national IHS course for dental assistants and encourages other Native students to consider dentistry fields.

In its first year, NCAI's Native Graduate Health Fellowship is a part of NCAI's commitment to equipping the next generation of Native leaders. NCAI received nearly 40 applications from students representing 26 tribes. A review committee comprised of NCAI staff and key leaders in Native health selected the inaugural Health Fellow, as well as two finalists, on the basis of demonstrated commitment to American Indian and Alaska Native health, academic achievement, and community engagement. The program aims to build a pipeline of Native health professionals who can support tribal sovereignty and who are prepared to lead in promoting health policies and practices that address the unique needs of American Indians and Alaska Natives.

NCAI deeply appreciates the generous support of Robert Burnette and the Seventh Day Adventist Church in helping launch the fellowship. The Klamath Tribes, the Kiowa Tribe, the Ketchikan Indian Community, and the Jamestown S'Klallam Tribe also pledged a combined $4,000 to help sustain the Fellowship's endowment. NCAI is planning to expand this Fellowship into other high-need areas in Indian Country, such as education and economic development. For more information about supporting the fellowship, contact Peter Morris at (202) 466-7767 or pmorris@ncai.org.

Miami chief's historic home to be dedicated

VIVIAN SADE
The Journal Gazette

FORT WAYNE, Ind. (AP) – Local history buffs are excited about the upcoming dedication of the home of a rich and famous Miami Indian chief as a national historic landmark.

The home of Miami Chief Jean Baptiste de Richardville was built in 1827 and was where numerous treaty negotiations between the U.S. government and the Miami Indians took place. In early March, the Fort Wayne site was named a National Historic Landmark by the National Park Service, part of the Department of the Interior.

Mike Galbraith, executive director of ARCH, spoke Tuesday at the History Center, outlining how his organization spearheaded the movement to acquire the designation.

"The extraordinary lengthy process was like putting together a jigsaw puzzle with many pieces," Galbraith said.

There was an abundance of research that had already been done, he said, and more that had to be completed for the application.

Members of the Miami Tribe of Oklahoma are hoping that a new national historic landmark in Fort Wayne will help spread their message that they are still a strong, vibrant neonle

Directors of the Myaamia (Miami) Project at Miami University in Oxford, Ohio, also spoke of the significance of the Richardville home. Daryl Baldwin, director of the Myaamia Project and George Ironstrack, assistant director and education coordinator, work together to restore, preserve, and maintain Miami language, culture and history.

Both said they hope the site will be a place where members of the Miami tribe will gather and learn of the sacrifices made by their ancestors.

"My people still call Fort Wayne home," Baldwin said. "Perspectives and experiences may differ, but the story of (Chief Richardville) belongs to all of us."

Pin-iwa awiiki, or the "Wildcat's house" as named a National Historic Landmark in March.

Audit of Oklahoma American Indian museum sought

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) – Gov. Mary Fallin has requested an audit of the American Indian Cultural Center and Museum.

State Auditor and Inspector Gary Jones told the Tulsa World last week that he didn't know when his office would complete the audit. The museum will pay for the audit's costs.

In a letter to Jones last week, Fallin asked that he review the efficiency and effectiveness of current management and oversight of the museum's operations.

The audit is one of the conditions she and some lawmakers agreed to before additional bond money would be considered to complete the museum.

Some lawmakers don't want to provide more state funding for the project, which already has received $67.4 million in bond funding.

Native American Cultural and Education Authority CEO Blake Wade says he welcomes the audit.

COUNCIL

Continued from Page

excludes court proceedings where no other witnesses are available to provide the same information.

In other business, the Council passed resolutions confirming the nominations of Josh King and Bobby Mayfield to the Cherokee Nation Housing Authority's board of commissioners. The nomination of Susan Chapman Plumb to the Cherokee Nation Foundation board was confirmed, as well.

Additionally, the Council passed acts increasing the comprehensive operating budget by $12.5 million to more than $506 million and the comprehensive capital budget by $8.1 million to more than $113. The increases are to help fund the Vinita Health Center and a child care center in Stilwell.

The Council also passed an act changing the number of Tribal Councilors on the advisory board of Cherokee Nation Businesses from six to eight and affirming those appointed to the board in January.

Passed acts to update the child support code to extending a child's support orders to age 20 if he or she is attending high school and changing the interest rate on child support orders from 10 percent to 5 percent.

Approved bills to clarify language and authorize the Cherokee Nation to give assistance to community organizations and to subsidize licensed tobacco retailers by decreasing the amount of sales tax paid on non-tobacco products.

The next regular Council meeting is scheduled for Monday, May 14, at 6 p.m. in the Tribal Council Chambers of the W.W. Keeler Complex in Tahlequah.

PEARY L. ROBERTSON

ATTORNEY AT LAW (405) 382-7300

INDIAN LAW
PROBATE
ADOPTIONS

RESTRICTED LAND ISSUES

SOCIAL SECURITY DISABILITY

J.D, Oklahoma City University; MBA, Cameron University; B.B.A. (Economics), University of Oklahoma

1700 N. MILT PHILLIPS AVENUE, SEMINOLE, OKLAHOMA

VISIT US AT WWW.FACEBOOK.COM/PEARYROBERTSON

SUPERNAW'S OKLAHOMA INDIAN SUPPLY

Wholesale items for Pow Wow Vendors
Bone chokers $20 per dozen

Handmade lamp worked glass bead bracelets $1.00 each
Glass bead stretch bracelets 5 for $2.50

12 Necklaces: Chain w/ pendant and display pad $13.50 36 inch gemstone chip strands Reg. 3.95 now $2.00 36 inch turquoise chip strands Reg. 7.95 now $4.00

Always our regular stock of seed beads from 16/0 to 8/0, findings, leather, hackles, fluffs and thousands of other supply items.

Remember we've moved around the corner 109 North Broadway, Skiatook, OK 74070

New Dealers Cash or Credit Card Only.

Open Noon-6pm Mon. thru Fri. • 10am-5m Sat. • Closed Sun.

Local: 396-1713-Countrywide Toll Free 1-888-720-1967

Website: www.supernaw.com • Email: Supernaw@flash.net

Appeals court hears Arizona tribe's casino project

PAUL ELIAS Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) - A federal appeals court on April 16 took up an Arizona Indian tribe's complicated legal fight to build a massive casino and resort near a Glendale, Ariz., neighborhood, on property the tribe owns 160 miles from the headquarters of its sprawling reservation.

The three-judge panel of the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in San Francisco gave no hint of how or when it would rule after sharply questioning lawyers on both sides for nearly an hour.

At issue is whether federal law permits the Tohono O'odham Nation to convert property it quietly purchased

Continued from Page 1

EDUCATION

an Education, which directly operates or provides grants to tribes to operate an extensive primary, secondary, and college level school system, has an interest in enhancing access to federal funding pro-

The education initiative addresses critical issues and unique challenges affecting the quality of instruction, student achievement, high dropout rates and tribal languages on the verge of extinction. The expected educational outcomes would help preserve and revitalize native languages, ensuring students the opportunity to learn their languages, cultures and histograms and expertise.

in 2003 into an Indian reservation, which would strip authority from state and local officials who argue the casino project clashes with zoning and state laws.

A high school is located a few blocks from where the casino is to be erected, which is about a mile from a retail and entertainment district where Phoenix's professional football and hockey teams play their home games. About 30,000 people live within two miles.

The suburban property is in an unincorporated island of Maricopa County and bordered on three sides by the city of Glendale, which is adjacent to Phoenix.

Local and state officials argue that the proposed 150,000-square-foot casino demonstration projects, effective reforms, improved accountability, partnerships with public, private and philanthropic groups, and national networks to share best practices. The initiative would improve educational opportunities for all American Indian and Alaska Native students, including those attending schools operated and funded by BIE, those attending public schools in cities and in rural areas, and those attending postsecondary institutions, including tribal colleges and

The upcoming tribal con-

For more information on the Department's tribal concfm and www.edtribalconsulsultations build upon four recent roundtable discussions universities.

tations.org.

will require them to beef up fire, police and other civic requirements in an area not equipped to accommodate a Las Vegas-style resort.

The tribe says it bought the property with congressionally allocated money it was given after a federal government dam caused extensive flooding of the original reservation.

The Department of the Interior declared the Glendale property a reservation in 2010.

The tribe had received $30 million to replace nearly 10,000 acres of ancestral reservation land damaged by the dam. The tribe says the 135 acres purchased within the city limits of Glendale in 2003 is part of that replacement program, and the project is located about 60 miles from the damaged land.

Glendale, the state of Arizona and another tribe filed a lawsuit to overturn the Department of the Interior decision. Several other tribes submitted so-called friendof-the-court briefs opposing the casino. A judge last year sided with the Tohono O'odham Nation, which is represented by former U.S. Solicitor General Seth Wax-

"This is an acre-for-acre replacement that was an Indian reservation even before Arizona was a state," Waxman argued to the three-judge panel Monday. He said Interior Secretary Ken Salazar correctly deemed the land a reservation.

Lawyers for Glendale and tribes opposing the project argued that the Tohono O'odham Nation went "reservation shopping" with the government's money and shouldn't be allowed to turn just any piece of property it purchases into a reservation and then a sprawling casino the size of the Venetian Hotel and Casino in Las Vegas.

Arizona Solicitor General Dave Cole said allowing the tribe to build a casino within Glendale but denying city, county and state officials any authority over the project makes the concept of local control "nothing more than an illusion."

Federal law generally bars gambling on reservations created after 1988, but there are a few exceptions.

VINITA 918-256-5585

LANGLEY 918-782-0011

MONKEY ISLAND 918-257-8869

www.okstatebank.com Equal Housing Lender Native American Owned

918-316-5856

recycles with Tahlequah Recycling

tahlequahrecycling.com

"Changing the culture of waste." TA

TIMES

Incorporated... shouldn't you?

NATIVE

AMERICAN

TIMES

Publisher & Editor

LISA SNELL

editor@nativetimes.com

Contributing Writers

Dana Attocknie

WESLEY MAHAN

SC high court takes up Indian child adoption case

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) -The South Carolina Supreme Court is taking up arguments in a custody case involving a Charleston couple, an Oklahoma father and a federal law meant to protect Native American children.

Because it's an adoption case, Tuesday's arguments

The case pits the couple who nurtured a 2-year-old girl named Veronica against the child's biological father, a Cherokee Nation member who took her to Oklahoma late last year after winning custody.

The case also concerns the federal Indian Child Welfare Act. The 1978 law was passed because many Indian children were being removed from their homes by public and private agencies.

The act gives the child's tribe and family the right to a say in decisions affecting the child.

AICCOK OKC CHAPTER SCHOLARSHIP

Help a deserving Native American student reach for

OVERVIEW

The OKC Chapter has historically provided scholarships for many years. Typically one acholarship is awarded to the top male and female entrants, as decided by the OKC Chapter Board of Directors. In 2012, we plan to notify the recipient student(s) by May 10 to allow them to list their scholarship in their graduation materials. We will present the actual scholarship award at the August luncheon.

SPONSORSHIPS

There are 2 ways that your organization can help:

- 1. Sponsor a branded, stand-alone scholarship. (Minimum award $250). Special emphasis can be requested (e.g. math or science, healthcare, etc).
- 2. Contribute to the AICCOK-OKC Chapter General Scholarship Fund.

CONTACTS

To sponsor a scholarship, contact: James Lambertus, OKC Chapter Chair, aiccokc@earthlink.net, 405-650-5996 or Fran Smith, Treasurer, fran.smith@bank2online.com 405-946-2265.

To make a contribution to the Fund online, please click: http://tiny.cc/aiccokc_scholarshipfund

More Jobs. More News. More Features. Every Day.

www.nativetimes.com

KAREN SHADE Advertising Sales KATHLEEN ROBERTSON

LISA SNELL ROB WALTON advertising@nativetimes.con

Distribution SHELBY HICKS STEVE LACY WESLEY MAHAN MICHAEL MARRIS KATHLEEN ROBERTSON BRENDA SLAUGHTER

The Native American Times, formerly the Oklahoma Indian Times, is published weekly (except the last week of the year) by Lisa Hicks Snell. Mailing address is PO Box 411 Tahleguah, OK 74465. All the contents within the Native American Times are copyrighted material. Any reproduction, redistribution without the written consent of the NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES is strictly prohibited.

> Each week's issue is available for free download online at: www.nativetimes.com

Subscription rates: $65.00 for fifty-two issues, $32.50 for twenty-six issues, or $16.25 for thirteen issues. A single copy is $1.25 (Rates are for postage and handling) Send check or money order to:

> NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES Attn: Subscriptions P.O. Box 411 Tahlequah, OK 74465-0411

Phone: (918) 708-5838 Fax: (888) 689-4873

Postmaster: Send Change of Address Form 579 to: NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES P.O. Box 411, Tahlequah, OK 74465

WWW.NATIVETIMES.COM - News from the crossroads of Indian Country

with federal officials, tribal ries, while receiving complete and competitive educations leaders and Indian educators that prepare them for higher on best practices to improve education and fulfilling ca-Indian education. Among the strategies proposed to achieve these outsultation policies please visit: http://www.doi.gov/tribes/ comes are capacity building for tribal educational agen-Tribal-Consultation-Policy.

cies, enhanced teacher training and recruitment, pilot

U.S. Attorney Johnson cited the prosecution of John Graham and Fritz Arlo Looking Cloud in the 1975 killing of American Indian Movement activist Annie Mae Aquash as a sign that federal officials are dedicated to prosecuting cases with enough information even decades later.

Aquash's death had gone unsolved until Looking Cloud was convicted of first-degree murder in 2004 in federal court. Graham was convicted in state court in 2010.

"Whenever we have a case that we believe we can pursue and prosecute, we're going to do it. It doesn't matter if it's 20 years, 30 years old, we're going to do that," Johnson said, adding that public safety on the Pine Ridge reservation and the state's other reservations are a high priority for him.

Stickball · Drawing · Fancy dancing · Beadwork Traditional language Shooting hoops

Think of the possibilities! Step up and mentor a Native American child. Commit to changing a child's future. Commit to creating an impact in your tribal community.

How it Works

Step One: Fill out an application at www.bbbsok.org Step Two: Submit application. Receive phone call from BBBS to set

Step Three: Attend an in-person interview. Bring copy of Drivers License, Proof of Insurance, Three References and complete a criminal background check.

Step Four: Once approved — matched with a child with similar

Step Five: Pat on the back...you're making a difference!!!

All matches are supported by professional staff at local BBBS agencies. BBBS Match Support Specialists regularly consult with volunteers, children, and parents.

Want more information?

Contact Kristy Smithson, BBBSOK Manager of Native American Partnerships, by phone (405) 606-6309 or email kristv.smithson@bbbsok.org | www.bbbsok.org

Oregon takes second step toward banning mascots

STEVEN DUBOIS Associated Press

SALEM, Ore. (AP) – A draft resolution presented to the state Board of Education on Thursday would require Oregon schools to retire their Native American mascots within five years or risk losing state funding.

If approved as early as May, the rule would be one of the nation's strongest, and require 15 high schools, mostly in small towns, to erase Native American mascots from uniforms, sports fields, websites, trophy cases and even school stationery by July 1, 2017. Moreover, schools identified as the Braves, Indians and Chieftains would have to adopt a new nickname. Schools called the Warriors would be allowed to retain their nickname if they alter their mas-

The regulation would also apply to an unknown number of elementary and middle schools.

Since the 1970s, more than 600 high school and college teams have dropped Native American nicknames, including 20 in Oregon. But some small communities have resisted the trend, saying their nicknames and mascots are a source of pride and tradition.

The six-member board tackled the emotional topic last month, and Thursday was the first public release of the formal rules. The five-year transition period is intended to help districts pay for changes and give them time to pick a popular new nickname, said Cindy Hunt, government and legal affairs manager for the state Department of Education.

The Enterprise School District in Eastern Oregon changed its mascot from the Savages and Outlaws several years ago at a cost of $15,000 to $20,000. According to Hunt, the transition has taken a decade and is still not quite complete: "People in the community still have the old image."

Though no vote was taken, the board chaired by Brenda Frank, a member of the Nez Perce tribe, seemed in favor of the rules, with one member questioning whether they could be enforced by 2014. During the public comment period, state Rep. Sherrie Sprenger, a Republican from Scio, questioned why the issue is coming up now, when it wasn't on her radar when the legislature adjourned the first

"People are concerned about the she said. "If the goal is understanding, I don't think we're getting there."

But most of the public comment was in support of the resolution, with Native Americans saying the mascots, even if well-intentioned, tionalized," said Neva Lenk, 24, of Portland. "It is not an honor to be taunted by opposing team or schools because of your race. It is not an honor to be used as a mas-

week of March.

process; they don't feel it's open,"

do not reflect their traditions. "It is not an honor to be fic-

Tribal citizens want voice on nickname debate

DAVE KOLPACK Associated Press

FARGO, N.D. (AP) - An attorney for an American Indian group suing the NCAA in hopes of saving the University of North Dakota's Fighting Sioux nickname said Thursday that a 2007 settlement should be thrown out so namesake tribes can be heard.

Reed Soderstrom, a Minot lawyer, argued in federal court that the Spirit Lake and Standing Rock Sioux tribes were not included in the discussions when the NCAA and the state of North Dakota negotiated the agreement.

"The Sioux people have been repeatedly refused a seat at the table to discuss this issue," Soderstrom said during a hearing on a motion by the NCAA to dismiss the law-

The settlement called for UND to retire the nickname if it did not get approval from both of the state's Sioux tribes by December 2010. Only Spirit Lake passed a resolution supporting the name. The Standing Rock tribal council, which has passed several resolutions opposing the nickname, has not allowed a vote on the issue.

Jonathan Duncan, an attorney for the NCAA, said the tribes are not members of the NCAA and the complaint has no legal basis. U.S. District Judge Ralph Erickson had few questions on Duncan's arguments, but interrupted the Kansas City lawyer when he complained about Soderstrom's accusations that the NCAA ignored the will of the Sioux people.

Erickson asked why approval was required from only one Seminole tribe for Florida State to keep its nickname and from only one Chippewa tribe for Central Michigan to keep its moniker, when there are several bands of both tribes. The judge indicated the requirement for UND to get written approval from two tribes discounts the Spirit Lake tribe.

"Aren't they Sioux enough?" the judge asked.

Duncan did not respond directly to Erickson's query, but repeated his earlier assertion that the NCAA did nothing to violate terms of the settlement. He said the policy does not require colleges to change their nicknames, and one school has agreed to keep its nickname under sanctions by the NCAA.

Soderstrom argued extensively about a 1969 religious ceremony on the UND campus in which Standing Rock and Spirit Lake Sioux elders reportedly granted the school perpetual use of the nickname, but Erickson said he has trouble understanding how that complies with the settlement.

"Let us move forward (with the lawsuit)," Soderstrom said.

Erickson said he would rule in the near future.

John Chaske, a Spirit Lake tribal member who is part of the lawsuit and attended Thursday's hearing, said afterward that he believes his group's arguments are valid, but they might not win the legal

"That always worries me," he said. "We're in a mainstream world here and things might go against us because of how the legal system believes."

Chaske said Erickson was thorough and appears to understand the perspective of the tribal mem-

UND is one of the last schools standing in the nickname debate that started in 2005 when the NCAA listed 19 schools with American Indian nicknames, logos and mascots it deemed to be "hostile and abusive." UND sued the NCAA, and that led to the settlement.

A law requiring the school to keep the moniker was repealed eight months after it took effect last year, after the NCAA refused to budge on sanctions. But ardent nickname supporters gained enough signatures to put the issue on the June 12 ballot, and the state Supreme Court last month refused to block that election.

If Fighting Sioux supporters lose, UND intends to drop the moniker.

Exhibit examines portrayal of American Indians

CHUCK HAGA The Grand Forks Herald

GRAND FORKS, N.D. (AP) - A child's bowl decorated with Mickey Mouse and Donald Duck as Indians. A cigarette lighter featuring the Cleveland Indians' Chief Wahoo.

An ad for Chief Oshkosh Beer. Chief Wahoo on a PEZ candy dis-

A set of "drunken Indian" salt and pepper shakers. A photograph of a t-shirt from a long-ago UND-North Dakota State University football weekend, with an Indian figure about to have carnal relations with a startled bison. The crude slogan on the shirt urges the Indian

The exhibit at UND's Memorial Student Union, part of the annual Time Out dedicated to Indian culture, history and traditions, is Richie Plass' way of speaking out on a long-running dispute over how Indians are portrayed.

"It's the good, the bad and the ugly of how our names and images have been used and are being used," he said Tuesday as he unpacked hundreds of photographs, posters, children's toys, paintings and other artifacts.

The "good" include a photograph of four generations of an Oneida Indian family, "just being people," and a famous poster showing Geronimo and three other defiant Apache Indians, armed with rifles. "Homeland Security," the poster is titled. "Fighting terrorism since 1492."

The "bad" include children's plastic hatchets, multi-colored "feather" bonnets and cowboys-and-Indians lunch boxes - and high school banners urging the hometown Indians to "scalp" their opponents.

Plass has taken his collection "from Long Island to California," asking people to study the images and think about what they say. He said he was eager to come to Grand Forks.

"This is the eye of the storm here," he said, "with everything that's gone back and forth with the Fighting Sioux."

Of the much-loved, much-disputed logo, he said: "I think it's very stereotypical."

Plass was invited to UND by the Indian Student Association. While some Indian students support the name or say they don't care, others have actively opposed it. Several have sued in federal court demanding that it be dropped.

The exhibit, in the union's Badlands Room, will be on display through Fri-

"Look at this," Plass says, approaching a photograph of the 1999 Kansas City Chiefs pro football team.

The players wear Indian dress and carry shields, rifles and knives. The photo is titled "The Tribe," and each player is identified by an Indian name. The late star linebacker Derrick Thomas is listed as Chief Iron Eyes.

"Not a one of them is Indian," Plass

Another poster has been part of the national movement against Indianbased nicknames for many years. It shows team banners, all but one fake: New York Fighting Jews, Chicago Blacks, San Antonio Latinos, San Francisco Orientals, St. Paul Caucasians and Washington Redskins.

"It's our 'n-word," " Plass said of the Redskins name.

Jaydecq Serich, 21, a UND junior from Grand Rapids, Minn., was one of the first visitors Tuesday. She is Ojibwe on her mother's side and feels torn by the debate over the Fighting Sioux. "I have mixed feelings because you have the school pride but you also have your own traditions," she

"The logo is always being tossed back and forth. I can see where both sides are coming from, but I'm thinking it might be time to change." Plass, 60, operates www.changingwinds.org, a clearing house for people, schools and organizations working against the use of Indian names and

The Sioux-Bison cartoon is the only Fighting Sioux item he has, "but hopefully this week I'll be able to take some more stuff home with me," he said.

Some visitors tell him they disagree with his theme, or they say some uses of Indian imagery are sincere and honoring. He will engage critics and persuade some but not others, he said. "Sometimes they'll say, 'I think I understand better now where you are coming from."

Where he started from, he said, is a school gym in Shawano, Wis., where in 1968 the Shawano High Indians basketball team stormed onto the floor led by a boy in buckskin and feathers, dancing as a representative of the local Menominee tribe. There's a picture of the mascot from an old newspaper

The mascot was Plass.

"The principal and the basketball coach asked me to dress up and lead the team out," he said. "I said, 'No, we don't do that stuff for show.' But they told me to talk to my parents about it."

His parents suggested he talk with other members of the tribe, and they told him to consult an elder.

The man said, "They want a show? Give them a show. Just don't wear anything sacred."

The first time he dressed and danced as an Indian and led his team out, the response was good, Plass said. "There were a lot of people from the reservation there. I went over and shook my dad's hand and gave my mother and grandma a kiss."

But when he went with the team to a game in another town, "the whole gym laughed at me, and I freaked out," he said. "People whooped and yelled things and threw paper cups and pop-

"I was in tears, and I said 'No more." From then on, I wanted to tell people that we are more than beads and feathers. We're doctors, teachers, entertainers, truck drivers. We are people, and there is no honor in being laughed at."

His personal mascot experience was good, bad and ugly, he said. He learned from it and took direction from it.

"I've never felt any anger about that," he said. "But over the years, I've felt tons and tons of shame."

NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES

Name:
Address:
City:	State: Zip:
Phone:
☐ $65.00 for 52 issues ☐ $32.50 for 26 issues
☐ $16.25 for 13 issues	☐ $1.25 single copy

Mail this form with a check or money order to: Native American Times • P.O. Box 411 Tahlequah, OK 74465 • 918-708-5838

We proudly offer an array of services, from general dentistry to sedation, dental implants, and cosmetic dentistry - all designed expressly to meet our patient's changing needs. With four general dentists and four hygienists, we can maintain your oral health for a lifetime all at one location.

We Accept Contract Health & Sooner Care

We serve patients in the Drumright, Cushing, Stillwater, Stroud, Ponca City, and surrounding areas with personalized service and exemplary care. Call for your appointment today.

918-352-3312 or Toll Free 877-RH Melton drumrightdentalcenter.com

Inupiat woman one of 6 environmental prize winners

LISA DEMER Anchorage Daily News

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) - Her father was a Point Hope whaling captain. Her mother taught her how to butcher the bowhead and care for the meat. The family depended on the sea and land for so much.

Caroline Cannon's lifelong connection to the Arctic Ocean pushed her to become one of the state's most vocal opponents of offshore oil drilling.

Now, just as Shell Oil is poised to drill exploration wells off Alaska's northern coast, her advocacy has won her a coveted environmental award.

Cannon, an Inupiat mother of nine and grandmother of 26, is one of this year's winners of the Goldman Environmental Prize, described as the world's biggest for grassroots environmentalists.

Cannon and the other five winners from around the world were officially announced Monday. Each will receive $150,000.

Cannon is the former president of the Native Village of Point Hope, the tribal council that has been involved in a number of lawsuits aimed at stopping oil exploration and drilling in the Arctic. She lost her spot on the village council in a close election last year but expects to get back on soon. Point Hope, a village of about 700 people, is 330 miles southwest of Barrow on a gravel spit that forms the western-most extension of the northwest Alaska coast. The village is one of the oldest continuously occupied Inupiat areas in Alaska, according to the state Division of Community and Regional Affairs.

Cannon has spoken up against offshore drilling countless times. At a national tribal summit with President Barack Obama in 2009, she told him "we are not prepared for this." She has sat down with environmental leaders and with Shell. She's traded barbs with Pete Slaiby, Shell's vice president for Alaska operations, and didn't quiet down after he corrected some of her assertions in a letter to the editor.

"When you have something you feel strongly about, there's no turning that light off," Cannon said in an interview. "Meaning it's stronger than me."

She isn't convinced any oil company could clean up a spill in the Arctic.

"They can say they've got it down pat. They've got the response. They have all means. Their ships will be there. They have the people trained," Cannon said, repeating what she and other villagers have been told. But the nearest Coast Guard station is maybe 1,000 miles away. The weather can turn fierce fast and prevent help from arriving. If oil spilled, it might not be cleaned up before freezeup. The traditional ways are too dear to lose, she said.

Federal regulators have approved Shell's oil spill response plans for both the Beaufort and Chukchi seas. Shell hopes to drill exploratory wells in both locations during this summer's open water season using separate drilling rigs accompanied by more than a dozen other vessels that could respond in the event of a spill. The company says it is using the most advanced equipment and has invested billions in its Alaska offshore program. zar said in February that Shell will be operating under "the strongest oversight, safety requirements, and emergency response plans ever established."

Shell declined to comment on Cannon or the recognition she's receiving.

Court challenges by the Point Hope tribe and numerous environmental groups including Greenpeace, the Sierra Club, the Center for Biological Diversity, and the Alaska Wilderness League had stalled its efforts for Cannon said her parents, Henry and Emma Nashookpuk, had a dog team that hunters used to get to caribou grounds and down to the sea ice for seals. Harvested seals were preserved in the snow head down -life-saving food for villagers and dogs, she said.

One rare year when Point Hope whaling crews didn't land a whale, a friend in Barrow gave her muktuk that she shared with elders. "One elderly woman literally cried because that was so precious. That is who we are. That little block of muktuk that we brought to her," Cannon said.

Villagers call the ocean "our garden and our identity," Cannon said.

Betsy Beardsley, environmental justice director for the Alaska Wilderness League, said Cannon is a powerful speaker.

"She just has a way of painting a picture of life in the Arctic and what's at stake," said Beardsley, who planned to be in San Francisco for Monday's award ceremony. "Many times people are left in tears."

Even if Shell is able to drill this summer, Cannon's advocacy has made a differ-Interior Secretary Ken Sala- ence, Beardsley said.

STEVE FISCH AP / COURTESY GOLDMAN ENVIRONMENTAL PRIZE

In this April 13, 2012 photo released by the Goldman Environmental Prize, Caroline Cannon poses with her prize in San Francisco. Cannon, an Inupiat mother of nine and grandmother of 26, is one of this year's winners of the Goldman Environmental Prize, described as the world's biggest for grassroots environmentalists.

Villagers are not united against oil drilling. Some see the prospect of jobs and want to give Shell a chance. Still many appreciate Cannon for being well informed, and willing to stand up to the oil company, said Peggy Frankson, the tribal council executive director.

"Shell tries to come here with all the answers but Caroline as well as others, they ask the tough questions they can't answer," Frankson

This is the 23rd year for the Goldman prize. An international jury picks the winners from nominees submitted by environmental groups and activists. The nomination process is confidential, and vetting the candidates takes months.

are: a woman from Kenya fighting a massive dam, a Russian trying to reroute a highway that would bisect a forest, a priest leading a movement against a nickel mine in the Philippines, a mother in Argentina whose infant died from pesticide poisoning organizing others against toxic agriculture chemicals, and an activist in China whose online database and map exposes factories that violate environmental regulations.

The late Richard Goldman and his wife, Rhoda, a Levi Strauss heiress, created the prize in 1990 to reward "ordinary individuals who take extraordinary actions to protect the earth and its inhabitants," their San Francisco-based foundation

US Department of Labor releases proposed tribal consultation policy

WASHINGTON - The U.S. Department of Labor last week published in the Federal Register a proposed tribal consultation policy, creating a formal process through which the department will engage in consultation with federally recognized tribes on actions or policies that will have a significant impact on tribal nations. This policy would apply to any department action that affects federally recognized Indian tribes and requires that the department's government-to-government consultation involve both appropriate tribal and department officials.

"The development of the Labor Department's tribal consultation policy honors the relationship between the Native American community and the U.S. government, thanks to the president's leadership calling for ongoing engagement with tribal nations and communities," said Secretary of Labor Hilda L. Solis. "This policy aims to strengthen the U.S. government's interactions with sovereign tribal nations. We look forward to receiving feedback and implementing the policy."

On Nov. 9, 2009, President Obama cited Executive Order 13175, which was issued by President Clinton, tasking executive branch departments and agencies with engaging tribal nations to formalize federal programs that impact tribal com-

Following the president's charge, the Department of Labor began devising a plan. A series of consultative listening sessions, including meetings with representatives of the Native American community, the department's Native American Employment and Training Council, and the National Congress of American Indians, preceded the finalization of the tribal consultation policy proposed today.

A public comment period will end June 18. Following the comment period, the department will evaluate comments for prospective changes to the proposed policy. To view the proposal and submit comments, visit http://www.federalregis-

COMMENTARY

The Book of Mormon: The whiter the skin the closer to God

TIM GIAGO (Nanwica Kciji) Notes from Indian Country © 2012 Unity South Dakota

Larry Echo Hawk is leaving his position as Assistant Secretary of the Interior for Indian Affairs after he was named to the Church of Jesus Christ Latter-day Saints' First Quorum of the Seventy during a recent general conference of the Mormon Church in Salt Lake City, Utah.

George P. Lee, Navajo, was the first Native American called to the Seventy in 1975. He served for 14 years before he was excommunicated for "apostasy" or desertion of his religious principles and "conduct unbecoming a member of the Church." Lee died in 2010 at age 67.

The Mormon Church has a history of rocky and contradictory dealings with Native Americans or Lamanites, as they were known in the beginning.

According to Brigham Young, "There is a curse on these aborigines of our country who roam the plains and are so wild that you cannot tame them. They are of the House of Israel; they once had the Gospel delivered to them, they had oracles of truth; Jesus came and administered to them after his resurrection and they received and delighted in the Gospel until the fourth generation when they turned away and became so wicked that God cursed them with this dark and benighted and loathsome condition."

Prophet Spencer W. Kimball, the man who sent out the call to Mr. Lee to join the Seventy, said in 1960, "The day of the Lamanites is nigh. For years they have been growing delightsome and they are now becoming white and delightsome as they were promised." He described different Indian children who were "as light as Anglos. "These young members of the Church are changing to whiteness and delightsomeness. One white elder jokingly said that he and his companion were donating blood regularly to the hospital in the hope that the process might be accelerated."

The Mormon Church, as it has evolved, has been forced to rewrite the Book of Mormon in order to accommodate its efforts to convert Native Americans and African-Americans. Both races were excluded from leadership in the Mormon Church prior to the recent revisions of the Book.

In an article titled, "Is the Mormon Church stuck with an embarrassing book it cannot historically support?; Rick Ross wrote, "Mormons grow up with the belief that Native Americans are somehow related to a lost tribe from Israel. That tribe, they are told, came across the ocean about 600 B.C. to America, led by an otherwise unknown Jewish prophet named Lehi."

The Book of Mormon originally stated that when Lamanites converted they would then become "white and delightsome." In 1981 the Church decided to replace the word "white" with "pure."

Most white Americans have looked upon the stories of the Lamanites as racist. In 1971 the official Mormon publication the Ensign stated, "As we attempt to solve the complex puzzle we call life, there is a constant search for elements that will clarify the picture. For [Mormons] one of the keys to this great pattern of existence is the group of people known as Lamanites."

He continued, "Those not of the Church call these people Indians, although the term actually refers to a broader group than that. Most members of the Church know that the Lamanites, who consist of Indians of all the Americas as well as the islanders of the Pacific, are a people with a special heritage."

A study done at BYU revealed, "Ironically, the database compiled by BYU can only conclude that there is no evidence of a Native American/Israel connection. In fact, no DNA study at any university has ever demonstrated otherwise." Ross added, "However, it is doubtful that BYU would ever release any research that could potentially prove embarrassing to the Church."

So here we have the LDS Church faced with potential errors in the Book of Mormons, that started off with faulty data that proved to be an embarrassment and has been pointed out by some church members and by many Native Americans as racist: the whiter the skin the closer to God.

Many Native Americans were converted to Mormonism over the years. The Indian tribes living in the lands settled by the Mormons found they were losing their land and resources until they were forced into a state of extreme poverty. The Indian tribes living in Utah, Nevada, Arizona and New Mexico soon became dependent upon the welfare handed out by the Mormon Church in order to survive. Thousands of Navajo and other tribes saw their children taken from them and moved into the homes of Church members where they were used extensively as child labor. Along with the hard work they were converted into the faith without truly understanding their status within the church hierarchy.

Larry Echo Hawk served as an ineffective Assistant Secretary of the Interior. Will he make a difference as a member of the First Quorum of the Seventy for Native Americans? History will be the judge of that.

The question lingers: Is the Mormon Church stuck with an embarrassing book it cannot historically support? Will the Book of Mormon one day be rationalized as simply an allegory conceived and used by Joseph Smith, the founder, to inspire his followers? In the final analysis it all comes down to whether faith will triumph over fiction.

And I will continue to ask myself why any sensible Native American would belong to a Church that will not fully accept them until they become white.

Tim Giago, an Oglala Lakota, is President of Unity South Dakota. He was a Nieman Fellow at Harvard with the Class of 1990. His weekly column won the H. L. Mencken Award in 1985. He was the founder of The Lakota Times, Indian Country Today, Lakota Journal and Native Sun News. He can be reached at UnitySoDak1@knology.net

LANGUAGE

The Chahta Anumpa (Choctaw Language) Preservation Society is independent from the Choctaw Nation of Oklahoma and receives no tribal funding or support.

prisoner in the Oklahoma Department of Corrections (OKDOC).

Scott served one year for concealing stolen property including assault and battery with a dangerous weapon during a domestic altercation. It was then that his father urged him to cling to his identity. He began to develop a curriculum for his language in the penitentiary. After his release in 2010, Scott began a language class that he says mirrors conversational Choctaw common in southeastern OK.

The fluent Choctaw speaker combines his in-person group with online classes via Facebook (300+ friends) and YouTube. Scott writes a Chahta curriculum and posts short videos because "it's one thing to see the written language and another to hear it spoken."

The Chahta Anumpa (Choctaw Language) Preservation Society is independent from the Choctaw Nation of Oklahoma and receives no tribal funding or support. The Durant-based tribe has an official language department which has been used by hundreds of students. Their separate efforts undergird the tribe's language in the hopes of boosting fluency across the Having grown up around traditional Choctaw speaking grandparents, Scott said speaking the language was a basic necessity. His kind of upbringing (fluent speakers raising immersed ones) is fading quickly, according to language watchdogs.

The Intertribal Wordpath Society, an online group that keeps track of the state's Native language speakers, estimated in 2006 that the Choctaw Nation of Oklahoma had about 4,000 speakers. In a tribe that now officially numbers more than 270,000 this is but a fraction of the Southeastern Oklahoma based nation. Roughly, 26 of the state's 38 tribes still have speakers, the organization estimates.

Using the latest mediums to reach potential students is just part of an emerging strategy for language revitalization. The Chahta Anumpa Preservation Society has also adopted new word formations in Choctaw for "cell phone" and "text message."

The students in the Chahta Anumpa Preservation Society range in age from 6 to 92.

The new words are phrased just so, combining practical aspects of old words and melding them together. Once the "new" word is formed, Scott said a committee made up of fluent tribal elders either approves or discards the phrase.

"I'm not just making up words," Scott said. "For example, cell phone is 'By way of speaking."

Members who tune in online or come to Scott to learn Choctaw from scratch do it for their own reasons. The students (ages 6 to 92) all use the same curriculum, one that differs from the traditional emphasis or approach to learning Choctaw. The standard version is modeled on member, Roy Burst, has been taking Scott's class for several months after seeing the class posted on a buddy's Facebook page.

the Byington method, which

"I'm trying to keep it current," Scott said. "I'm taking baby steps with all the cours-

Scott asserts that the Byington Method, developed by Presbyterian minister Cyrus

Byington, was developed as a means to reach the Choctaws theologically. It gave them the Gospel in a written way they could understand circa

Choctaw is multi-faceted and features regional dialects, said one of Scott's online students. The language is spoken in pockets throughout Oklahoma, Louisiana and Mississippi. Jena Band

the 1860s.

Scott finds outdated.

A speaker of "broken Choctaw" since he was a boy, Burst said dialects differ and speakers from different areas will often poke fun at the other listening for differences. Scott's version is helping him expand linguistically, Burst

"It's close to what I've already learned," he said "He goes slow on the videos and that helps me a lot."

But some say that Scott's method inverts the subjectverb order and is Anglicized rather than the traditional version. Meanwhile, others insist letting a tribal language flex is a natural outgrowth of revitalization, said Leanne Hinton, a linguist with the University of California, Berkeley.

Hinton has extended her efforts with California's Havasupai Tribe and written a book, "How to Keep Your Language Alive: A Commonsense Approach to One-On-One Language Learning."

"In a language that is still spoken every day by its people, new words would develop naturally either through borrowing or through the mechanisms available within the language," Hinton said by e-mail. "But when a language ceases to be used, then new things and new concepts pile up without any words to describe them."

Hinton said a lingering debate in the Native language movement is whether it will change too much and "lose its original soul." Speaking a tribal language is for those who are using it in a traditional manner to express their life's experience and for those who see it as a channel to tune into their tribal identity. Both approaches have merit.

"I believe a language can grow to encompass both the old and the new," the Berkeley linguist said.

California faces a different peril than Oklahoma, linguistically. Most tribes there have fewer members making the situation double edged. Smaller means more people can learn a language but not everyone in a tribe is interested. The Golden State has about 107 recognized tribes and around 50 non-recognized bands. All the while, the clock ticks on fluency, cultural officials said.

Scott has walked a divergent path in his life; church, Army, family, jail and classroom. He hung onto his language in all weathers. Chahta, his mother language, anchored him, he said. Meanwhile, a new group is preparing to graduate from Chahta Anumpa Preservation Society in late April.

"I want someone in Bosnia to hear 'Halito (hello),' and know what that means," Scott said. "I want to hear my language spoken again."

From prison to classroom: Language, culture helps man turn life around

Edison Red Nest's interest in learning and eventually teaching Lakota to others began to take shape during a period of incarceration and rehabilitation.

DENICE ABY Alliance Times-Herald

ALLIANCE, Neb. (AP) -Edison Red Nest is a Lakota language instructor, teaching youth, and soon adult courses, also, in Alliance.

In a series of seven lessons, Red Nest offers participants of all ages the opportunity to gain a basic knowledge of the pronunciation and meaning of the Lakota language.

"It's the same textbook – the same curriculum - as on the reservation," he said.

In guiding his students through each lesson, Red Nest is very relaxed, using flash cards and humor - making it a fun experience for the kids.

His interest in learning and eventually teaching Lakota to others began to take shape during a period of incarceration and rehabilitation, in which he learned about the language, as well as mastering the drumming technique and its meaning in traditional native culture.

"I took advantage of the programs," he said, "... and went through the treatment program."

Along with putting his effort into completing college courses, he said it became time of spiritual growth, where he began to look to the Lakota culture for guidance in his own life.

By 2008, Red Nest said he and some friends would set up drums and sing in local parks as a way to practice drumming, while entertaining and teaching others through the ancient culture of the Lakota.

Currently, Red Nest is a youth organizer at the Native American Center in Chadron and commutes to and from Alliance.

Red Nest also has a parttime position with Supportive Systems for Rural Homeless Youth: a program that assists teens and young adults ages 16 to 22, in finding resources when seeking employment, medical care, counseling or other needs. At this time, Red Nest is working closely with two individuals within the program.

"It is very rewarding - I'm proud of myself - my girlfriend is proud of me."

"It's just a good feeling to go from selling drugs to helping kids."

Red Nest also teaches his students about the drums, and of course, being at the YMCA facility, Red Nest said he incorporates a physical fitness aspect into the program, getting his students to play basketball and other games,

For now, Red Nest points out that the program is in the early planning stages, saying, "We're just getting on our feet, getting organized - but it's growing."

The classes are offered free of charge, and Red Nest wants to keep it that way.

"We're not going to turn anybody away," he said, pointing out that if necessary, he would pay for the expense out of his own pocket or offer transportation for his students, simply to continue to offer this positive educational experience for the kids.

"It wouldn't be possible without parents," he said, and hopes that families will continue to support the program.

Red Nest said everyone is welcome to participate, and he wants the community to know, "We are real - we are legit, and all they need is a willingness to learn."

For information on the program, contact Edison Red Nest at 760-4336 or Mary Wernke at 487-6397.

CLASSIFIEDS

LEGAL

Housing Authority of the Peoria Tribe of Indians of Oklahoma, Miami, Okla. is seeking a

Deputy Executive Director

POSITION SUMMARY: Responsible to the Executive Director for directing and controlling the operation of low rent and housing assistance programs in accordance with the policies and procedures of the Peoria Housing Authority, NAHASDA regulations, and any pertinent federal, state, and tribal requirements.

Four (4) year degree in business, public administration or equivalent is preferred and a minimum of two years supervisory experience in Housing Management. Prefer a candidate familiar with Housing Development and management programs funded through federal, state, tribal and/or private entities and with extensive knowledge of the Native American Housing Assistance and Self Determination Act of 1996.

PHA offers competitive wages, paid holidays, paid time off, 401K plan plus medical, dental, disability and life

Position will be open until 3:00 p.m. Monday, April 30, 2012. Please mail or hand deliver resume with cover letter and three references to Peoria Housing Authority, 3606 Sencay Avenue, Miami, OK. 74354, Attn: Jason Dollarhide, Executive Director.

Indian Preference is Observed

Health and Wellness Director The Notah Begay III Foundation

(http://www.nb3foundation.org) seeks a Health and Wellness Director for our innovative, quickly growing youth services organization in the Albuquerque, NM area. This dynamic, committed person will develop and implement health and wellness programs and activities for the placebased programming at San Felipe Pueblo including interventions related to increasing access to healthy foods, nutrition education, physical fitness programming and community, and leadership development initiatives that will promote the reduction of childhood obesity and type 2 diabetes. Master's degree and 5+ years

For a full job description and to apply, please visit: http://www. nb3foundation.org/health-andwellness-director.html by Friday, May

American Indian hiring preference applies.

Delaware Tribe of Indians current opportunities:

EMPLOYMENT / HELP WANTED

1. Executive Assistant to the Chief, position will be responsible for assisting the Chief on correspondence, scheduling, and other tasks as assigned, also responsible for Tribal Enrollment and Human Resources, pay will be commensurate with experience. Medical, dental benefits included.

2. Wellness Center Attendant, part time position will be responsible for maintaining the Wellness Center, exercise equipment, and assisting Tribal Members as needed, hours are 5-8 pm M-F and 8 am-1 pm Sat, closed Sun, pay will be $10/hr.

Please email resumes to bwilliams@ delawaretribe.org or fax to 918-337-6591 or mail to 170 NE Barbara Street, Bartlesville, OK 74006, applications can be found on www.delawaretribe. org/careers, no phone calls please.

Positions close April 27th. Tribal/ Native American preference will be observed.

Miss An Issue? Download for FREE www.nativetimes.com

GWY9 D36 CHEROKEE NATION®

Cherokee Nation whose headquarters are located in beautiful Tahlequah, Oklahoma is a national leader in Indian tribal governments and economic development in Oklahoma, We are a dynamic, progressive organization, which owns several business enterprises and administers a variety of services for the Cherokee people in Northeastern Oklahoma. Cherokee Nation offers an exceptional employee benefits plan with Comprehensive Health, Life, 401(k), Holiday Pay, Sick Leave and Annual Leave.

CURRENT OPPORTUNITIES

#6124 Certified and/or Registered Respiratory Therapist/T/PT #4500 Inpatient RN/PRN/OR/T/PT #6395 Inpatient RN/PRN/ICU/T/PT #5903 Inpatient RN/PRN/ICU/T/PT WW Hastings Hospital, Tahlequah POSITIONS CLOSE 4/24/2012

#6217 Cook I/R/PT Human Services, Family and Elderly Assistance, Nowata POSITION CLOSES 4/25/2012

Interested applicants please apply at www.cherokee.org

Cherokee Nation Human Resources Department PO Box 948 Tahlequah, OK 74465 (918) 453-5292 or 453-5050

Employment will be contingent upon drug test results. Indian preference is considered.

Check nativetimes.com for more jobs! -New jobs posted throughout the weekIN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE MUSCOGEE (CREEK) NATION OKMULGEE DISTRICT

IN THE MATTER OF THE GUARDIANSHIP OF: M.C., a Minor Child Case No. GD-2012-05

NOTICE BY PUBLICATION

DANIEL CULLY OR ANY UNKNOWN FATHER YOU ARE HEREBY NOTIFIED that the above-entitled matter is set for hearing on a PETITION FOR GUARDIANSHIP at the hour of 10:00 p.m. on the 11th day of JUNE, 2012, in the Muscogee (Creek) Nation District Court at the Muscogee (Creek) Nation Complex in Okmulgee, Oklahoma. Your failure to appear at the hearing on June 11th, 2012, may result in a default judgment being rendered against you.

Court Clerk

NATIVE AMERICAN HIRING PREFERENCE?

Advertise to Native Americans! E-mail your ad for a quote to: lisa@nativetimes.com

Apache twins take musical talents to Hollywood

BERNIE DOTSON The Indpendent

GALLUP, N.M. (AP) - Shawndev and Tawnva Gomez learned life lessons growing up around the church and their father's hair shop. Both places were spots where locals gathered to worship and talk about the issues of the day. They were places where Shawndey and Tawnya - nicknamed 'Dey and Nite' and identical twins born 12 minutes apart - learned to interact with the public. And also places where they became hooked on music.

"We started singing at a very young age when we went to church in Gallup," Tawnya explained.

The Gomez family, father Iav and mother Shirley, and brother, Jayson, 32, attended Gallup's First Assembly of God Church.

"For us, that and the hair shop were important. But it was church where we really, really sang and got involved in music," Tawnya said.

Shawndey Michael and Tawnya Monique have gone on to an adult life largely spent in the entertainment field. Now 30 years old and Hollywood, Calif., residents with resumes that boast performances in Brazil, Mexico, Canada, Australia and in practically every state of the United States, the Gallup High School graduates come back to 'G' town as often as possible, Tawnya said. Feature roles in the Native American-themed film, "More Than Frybread," about a cooking competition among the 22 tribes in Arizona, proved that singing and playing instruments - Shawndey the piano and Tawnya the acoustic guitar isn't their sole strong suit.

"I first saw them at a Iames and Ernie event at the El Morro Theatre a few years back," Travis Hamilton, producer of 'Frybread,' said, referring to the popular Chinle, Ariz.-based comedy duo. "I auditioned them and it turned out that they were amazing. They were always prepared, could always make changes as directed on the spot. It seems to be not that big of a step for a performer to jump from the stage to the screen. I needed twins in the film and how many twins are there in the world? They also were a great attraction to keep some of our extras on the set for another day," Hamilton joked.

ADRON GARDNER / GALLUP INDEPENDENT

In this April 11, 2012 photo, twin sister singers Shawndey, left, and Tawnya Gomez, of Gallup, N.M., pose for photos

The twins, who are part Mexican, part Yavapai ing up in the Indian Capital was sometimes tough. With their long hair and drop-dead gorgeous looks, the two can turn on the backslapping charm at the drop of a hat. But they're also shrewd performers and have learned to be equally astute when it comes to the business side of entertain-

Apache, admit that grow-

"We never feel completely successful because we always feel like we have to achieve more," Shawndey > said. "We consider ourselves very down to Earth. We don't feel like we've succeeded in our own minds. We like getting to share the experiences with each other."

Growing up in a close-knit family on the north side of Gallup, it was Michael Jackson, Janet Jackson, Carole King, The Beatles, Karen Carpenter and DeBarge who shaped their musical interests. That influence parlayed the two into engagements like singing the national anthem at a San Francisco 49ers football game, singing background vocals for songstress Alicia Keys and rapper Soulja Boy and a breakout world tour with pop star Hillary Duff, far cries from the homecoming queen, Cinderella pageants and prom court days of Gallup.

"I am very proud of them, more than proud," Jay Gomez, 56, said. Jay owns and operates Pro Cuts in Gallup and also is an adjunct instructor of hair at the University of New Mexico-Gallup. A drummer and pianist who followed ZZ Top, Acoustic Alchemy and Stevie Wonder, Jay still remembers his time spent in Lake Tahoe and San Fran-

"You know, I was trying to get my music a little further out there," he said. About his daughters, Jay Gomez added, "More than anything else, I am very happy and proud that they're good people, too."

Mom Shirley Gomez says it was definitely Jay's side of the family where Shawndey and Tawnya got their musical and entertainment skills. A Rancho Cucamonga, Calif., hairstylist, Shirley said, "They were singers in church and believers in Christ. Yes, I'm very proud of them. Their resilience has long surpassed mine. His side (Jay) of the family for sure was where the music gene came from," Shirley Shawndey and Tawnya debuted their self-titled CD in 2009 that was partially produced in New Mexico. On it, the two showcase their supreme writing talents, with Tawnya's focused vocals and ability to stretch notes particularly evident. A follow up CD is set to come out this fall.

CHC announces 41st Trail of Tears Art Show winners

TAHLEQUAH, Okla. - The Cherokee Heritage Center announced the winners of the 41st Annual Trail of Tears Art Show and Sale during an awards celebration on Friday, April 20 at the Cherokee Heritage Center. The 2012 Grand Prize has been awarded to Dan Corley, Cherokee Nation, for "Reflection."

The 41st Annual Trail of Tears Art Show and Sale runs through May 20 and features authentic Native American art in Oklahoma's longest continuing Native American art show. The Cherokee Heritage Center is located at 21192 S. Keeler Drive, Park Hill, Okla.

This year's annual exhibition includes 87 Native American artists from 13 Tribal Nations featuring 145 art pieces. Native American citizens from federally recognized tribes competed in several divisions and categories including painting, sculpture, pottery, basketry, graphics, jewelry, miniatures and a special Trail of Tears themed category.

With 35 winners in eight categories and nearly $10,000 awarded, the following summary highlights the Trail of Tears Art Show and Sale 2012 Grand Prize and First Place winners:

"The Trail of Tears Art Show and Sale draws the best Native American artists from across the country to one of Oklahoma's longest running art shows," said Karen Cooper, executive director at the Cherokee Heritage Center. "We are enjoying record participation again this year and I'm certain everyone visiting the show will be thrilled with the splendor and imagination of the Native American artwork on display."

A complete list of winners and all artwork on sale at the 41st Annual Trail of Tears Art Show and Sale are available online at http://www.Cherokee-Heritage.org.

COURTESY CHEROKEE HERITAGE CENTER 2012 Grand Prize Winner, "Reflection," by Dan Corley, Cherokee

"The Cherokee Heritage Center is not only the premier cultural center for Cherokee tribal history, culture and the arts, but also home to one of the preeminent Native American art shows in the U.S.," said Bill John Baker, Principal Chief of the Cherokee Nation. "With such broad representation of Tribal Nations, the Trail of Tears Art Show and Sale truly highlights a wide range of Native American talent, culture and diversity."

The Cherokee Heritage Center is open 9 a.m.-5 p.m. seven days a week from May 6 to Sept. 3. It is closed during January and on Sundays from Feb. 1 to April 29 and Sept. 4 to Dec. 31.

Admission is $8.50 per adult, $7.50 per senior (55 and older) and students with proper identification, and $5 per child. Admission price includes all attractions. Entry to the grounds and museum store are free.

For additional information contact the Cherokee Heritage Center at (888) 999-6007, email at info@cherokeeheritage.org or visit http://www.Cherokee-Heritage.org.

EVENTS

*Email your powwow or other event info to: Lisa@ nativetimes.com. Name, date, time, place and contact information is free.

EVERY WEDNESDAY Kiowa class beginning in February at 6:30 pm, Oliphant Hall, Room 141, Tulsa University. Info call Sarah, (918) 445-5213

EVERY THURSDAY The Otoe-Missouria Substance Abuse and Behavioral Health Programs sponsor an open group for families touched by addiction from noon to 1 p.m. at the Otoe-Missouria Health Building. This is a confidential group. Call 580-723-4466 x252 or x262 for more information.

SECOND TUESDAY Cherokee Artists Association meeting at 202 E. 5th Street Tahlequah, Okla. Info: (918) 458-0008 or www.

FOURTH THURSDAY Each month the American Indian Chamber of Commerce of Oklahoma - Eastern Chapter hosts a monthly luncheon at Bacone College, Muskogee, Okla. 11:30 a.m. at Benjamin Wacoche Hall. Please RSVP one week ahead of time. Phone: (918) 230-3759

EVERY 2ND SATURDAY Indian Taco Sales - from 11-2:30pm at OK Choctaw Tribal Alliance, 5320 S. Youngs Blvd, Oklahoma City www. okchoctaws.org

MON/WED AND THURS The Marble City Nutrition Center serves hot meals at the Marble City Community Center at 11:30 a.m. Meals are free to anyone over 50, but a small donation is suggested to help with the expense of the program. Marble City Nutrition Center, 711 N. Main, Marble City,

Okla. Phone: (918) 775-2158

YOUTH COUNCIL The Native Nations Youth Council (NNYC) bimonthly meetings from 6:30pm -8:30pm @ the Youth Services of Tulsa Activity Center (311 S. Madison - on 3rd just west of Peoria). Call to confirm location. Info Call: Chad Gilley (918) 382-2204 or nnyc@ihcrc.org

THROUGH MAY Free beginner-level Cherokee cherokeeartistsassociation.org language classes in communities throughout the tribe's jurisdiction. Once a week for ten weeks. For locations or to register, call Bill Andoe at 918-453-5151.

> APRIL 24 Native American Art Festival, Tulsa Hard Rock Hotel. 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. sponsored by Seminole Nation of Okla. For booth space contact [walker.s@sno-nsn.gov] or 405-257-7241 by April 16.

APRIL 26 UKB Delaware District Meeting, 6:30 p.m. in the Jay Community Center.

UKB Cooweescoowee District Meeting, 6 p.m. in the First Christian Church in

APRIL 27 Kiowa Higher Education Graduates Banquet at Cross Timbers Restaurant in Anadarko, OK. Info call 580-654-2300 ext. 324

APRIL 28 'Honoring Victims of Crime' Celebration Powwow In Observance of 'National Crime Victims Rights Week' 2012 at Red Buffalo Hall, Carnegie. A dance to honor the lives of loved ones and the victims, survivors, and families they left behind. We have invited several guest speakers and encourage family members of any Tribe to come and speak on their experiences with the criminal justice system in Indian Country during this event. We will also have a 'Wall of Remembrance' for families that want to display photos, articles, or other memorabilia regarding their family member. We ask that you assemble these on a poster board for easy display & transport. For more information contact Ben Wolf at 405.532.2625 or www.csudh.

edu/csl/All/socialjustice.asp,

Benwolf11kiowa@yahoo.

"O-SKOO" Co-Ed Basketball Tournament (All Indun) PRE-"O-SKOO" ~ 30 YRS TO 39 YRS & "O-SKOO" ~ 40 YRS TO ??? YRS. $50.00 Entry fee. 8 Man Roster: 4 Ole Men & 4 Ole Women. For more info, call Tonkawa Tribe Education Programs: 580-628-2561 LISA ext 125 or LEAH ext 131. Entry deadline April 20.

Church Fundraiser for New Joy Baptist Church 11:00 to 5:00, 1103 South Main, Sapulpa. All you can eat spaghetti lunch - Cost $8 All proceeds will go towards the church and church events. Call Jimmy Alexander 918-322-5407

Seminole Nation Honor Guard Powwow at Okfuskgee County Fairgrounds, Okemah, Okla. Gourd Dancing 1-5pm, Supper Break 5-6pm, Gourd Dancing 6-7pm and Grand Entry at 7pm. Info call Alex Fish 405-432-7858. Vendors call Phillip Coon 918-623-6810 or 405-432-7399.

18th Annual CSUEA Youth Powwow at Frisco Center, Clinton, Oklahoma. Gourd dancing at 3 pm, supper at 5 pm, grand entry at 7 pm. Info: Charlene Wassana 580-331-3300.

Restoring Harmony Heroes of Hope Contest Powwow at Westside YMCA, 5400 S. Olympia Ave., Tulsa, Okla. Info contact Tim Shadlow 918-382-2217 or tshadlow@ ihcrc.org

MAY 4 Indian Taco Sale 11:00 AM - 2:00 PM at Norman First American UMC, 1950 East Beaumont Drive, Norman, Okla. Call Ahead for Speedy Service. Free Delivery on Orders of 10 or More (405) 321-5640

MAY 5 All you can eat breakfast fundraiser sponsored by the Yuchi/Euchee Heritage Festival. 7am-1pm Covenant Harvest Chapel, 722 N Hodge St., Sapulpa, Okla. Info call Kathy, 918-695-0195

MAY 6 Pawnee Nation Title VI Elders Program Benefit Mother's Day Dance at Pawnee Campgrounds. Gourd Dance at 2pm. Supper at 5pm. For more info call 1-918-762-4042

MAY 8 Lazy Stitch Beading Workshop, Museum of the Red River, 812 E Lincoln Rd, Idabel, Okla. Info call Jeanette Bohanan 580-286-3616

MAY 12 Gray Horse War Mothers Annual Soldier Dance at Gray Horse Indian Village, east of Fairfax, Okla., turn east on Harrison off HWY 18. Supper at 5:30. Raffle tickets sold for 3 drawings. Info call Margie Burkhart 918-816-2014 or Mary Elsberry 918-396-3314.

MAY 26 Art Class: Slate Rock Art Paintings by Bill McCulley at Council House Museum, 106 W. 6th Okmulgee, Okla. Students will learn to paint and Create artwork on slate rock found along the Illinois River in Oklahoma. Lessons in fundamentals of art will be taught to help the beginning painter. Class is limited to 20 people. Reserve your spot call 918-756-2324 or csago71@sbcglobal.net 10 a.m.-2 pm. Free.

JUNE 1 Indian Taco Sale 11:00 AM - 2:00 PM at Norman First American UMC, 1950 East Beaumont Drive, Norman, Okla. Call Ahead for Speedy Service. Free Delivery on Orders of 10 or More (405) 321-5640

JUNE 8 Chilocco Powwow in the Event Center of the First Council Casino, seven miles north of Newkirk, OK. Gourd dance begins at 2:00 p.m. with grand entry at 6:30. Featured will be the Apache Fire Dance. Contact Garland Kent, Sr at 580- 352-2670.

JUNE 8-10 Red Earth Festival, Cox Convention Center, Oklahoma City

Chickasaw Press takes home 2 Oklahoma Book Awards

Awards for Design/Illustration and Children/Youth categories are taken home by the Chickasaw Press.

REBECCA AYRES

Chickasaw Nation

OKLAHOMA CITY - Chikasha Stories, Volume One: Shared Spirit and Ilimpa'chi' (We're Gonna Eat!): A Chickasaw Cookbook were named winners of the Children/Young Adults and Design/Illustration awards, respectively. The awards were handed out on Saturday, April 14, during the 23rd annual Oklahoma Book Awards banquet at the Oklahoma Sports Hall of Fame and Jim Thorpe Museum in Oklahoma City.

Chickasaw Nation Governor Bill Anoatubby said that the authors, artists and others responsible for producing the books deserve to be honored for their accomplishments.

"We expect these books to have a very positive impact in the homes of Chickasaws across the country," said Gov. Anoatubby. "These stories and recipes may very well inspire many more Chickasaws to continue including traditional food, stories and culture as part of their family life for generations to come."

Sanford Mauldin's photography and the designs of Skip McKinstry and Aaron Long were honored for Ilimpachi, while storyteller Glenda Galvan and artist Jeannie Barbour were recognized for their work on Chikasha Stories.

Division of History and Culture Administrator Dr. Amanda Cobb-Greetham said that the Chickasaw Press continues to meet its mission of preserving, perpetuating, and providing an awareness of Chickasaw history and culture.

"When Governor Anoatubby founded the Press in 2007, he had a vision for the future. From day one, the Chickasaw Press set out to provide quality publications that told the Chickasaw story," said

Dr. Cobb-Greetham. "Tonight, that vision takes another step in the right direction. I'm so proud of everyone who was involved in these projects. There are a lot of blood, sweat and tears in these books. It was truly a team ef-

About the Oklahoma Book Awards:

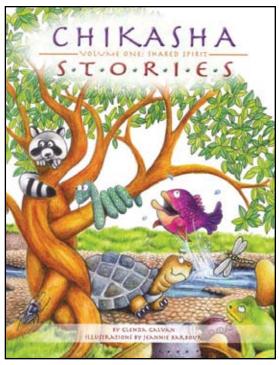

The banquet was sponsored by the Oklahoma Center for the Book, part of the state Libraries Department and a state affiliate of the Center for the Book in the Library of Congress. The awards recognize books written the previous year by Oklahomans or about Oklahoma. Of the 121 books entered in the competition, 35 were selected as finalists. Twenty-five of the finalists were by authors, poets, designers or illustrators who reside in Oklahoma.

About Chikasha Stories, Volume One: Shared Spirit:

In Chikasha Stories, Volume One: Shared Spirit, premier Chickasaw storyteller and tribal elder Glenda Galvan tells traditional stories drawn from the tribe's oral traditions. Illustrating the tales are original artworks by award-winning Chickasaw artist Jeannie Barbour. Presenting the stories in both English and Chickasaw, Chikasha Stories is the first of an important series of books intended to revive and maintain the storytelling tradition so vital to the roots of Chickasaw and Native culture.

About Ilimpa'chi' (We're Gonna Eat!): A Chickasaw Cookbook:

Recipes, reminiscences and lessons in Chickasaw lifeways are the main ingredients in Ilimpa'chi' (We're Gonna Eat!): A Chickasaw Cookbook. Well-known Chickasaw cooks JoAnn Ellis and Vicki Penner share more than forty recipes, accompanied by scenes from their lives spent cooking, eating and growing up around foods prepared in Chickasaw kitchens and over outdoor cooking fires. Their stories reveal the organic connections between food, family and Chickasaw Nation history. Presenting traditional and traditionally inspired recipes for wild game, meat and fish, wild vegetables and fruits, garden produce and breads, they describe and celebrate the roles of these dishes in the feasts of Chickasaw culture.

Chikasha Stories, Volume One: Shared Spirit is a collection of traditional stories drawn from the tribe's oral traditions

The Chickasaw Press, the first tribal press of its kind, publishes books about Chickasaw history and culture. Both books are available through the Chickasaw Press at www.chickasawpress.com or 580-622-7157 and the University of Oklahoma Press, http://www.oupress.com. These and other books from the Chickasaw Press can also be purchased at the Chickasaw Cultural Center Gift Shops in Sulphur, Okla-

Restoring Harmony Powwow this weekend in Tulsa

TULSA, Okla. - Indian Health Care Resource Center of Tulsa Systems of Care will be hosting the 2012 Restoring Harmony powwow April 28th 2012 at the West Side YMCA in Tulsa. The Restoring Harmony Powwow is a community effort to raise awareness for children's mental health needs and services available in the greater Tulsa area. This year's theme will be "Heroes of Hope." A Hero of Hope is a caring adult who provides a child or youth with the kind of positive support and influence that can help the young person develop or enhance resilience. For children and youth receiving behavioral health services, data show that the effects of trauma can be reduced when there is a connection with a supportive adult. Through this connection, children and youth are much more likely to: show improved behavioral and emotional skills, show improved academic performance, engage in less criminal behavior, and have greater ease with building attachments. Reactions to traumatic experiences vary by individual, and with help from families, friends, providers, and other Heroes of Hope, children and youth can enhance their resilience so they can be prepared for future challenges.

- For more information see a copy of the flyer below.

Inside this issue:

- Navajo community banks on solar array
- Oklahoma Indian ballerina dies
- Art as a vehicle: Expressing cultural ideals

TODAY'S INDEPENDENT INDIAN NEWS

- A FREE PUBLICATION

WWW.NATIVETIMES.COM

VOLUME 18 + ISSUE 18

PUBLISHED WEEKLY

MAY 04, 2012

Despite Republican protest, Senate OKs renewing VAWA

■ Under an expansion of the Violence Against Women Act, Native American officials would be allowed to arrest, prosecute and imprison non-Indians.

LAURIE KELLMAN Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Senate overcame election-year gender politics April 26 to pass a bill renewing the government's main domestic violence

The 68-31 vote marked the first time since the Violence Against Women Act first passed in 1994 that its renewal has drawn opposition in the Senate, reflecting the increasing polarization of the chamber and hair-trigger political sensitivities over women's issues in this presidential and congressional election

"In 2012, we should be beyond questioning the need for the Violence Against Women Act," Vice President Joe Biden said in a statement. He urged the House to act quickly so President Barack Obama can sign the renewal into law.

But the path there could be equally tricky. Majority Republicans are writing their own version, which is likely to resemble a GOP alternative widely rejected by the Senate.

Twice renewed without opposition in the Senate, the bill of programs to prevent domestic violence and sexual abuse ran headlong into the partisan warfare that has shut or slowed legislative business since the 2010 elections. Not helping smooth the way: the broader political fight for pivotal female voters and the Democrats' election-year narrative that accuses Republicans of waging a "war

The bill would reauthorize the Violence Against Women Act for five years with funding of $659.3 million a year, down $136.5 million annually from the last act, which has expired.

See VAWA Continued on Page 4

COURTESY RINCON BAND OF LUISENO INDIANS & THE LA JOLLA BAND OF LUISENO INDIANS

Two hundred people from various Southern California Indian tribes came together to increase awareness of sexual assault against Native women and to show support for the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) voted on by the United States Senate last week. Tribal leaders expressed shock that for the first time in more than 15 years Congress has allowed the VAWA to expire. In the past, the legislation had strong bi-partisan support and was enacted in 1994. VAWA was reauthorized in 2000 and 2005 by unanimous consent of Congress.

AP PHOTO I SUSAN MONTOYA BRYAN

Hundreds of dancers pour onto the floor at University of New Mexico Arena for the grand entry during the 29th Annual Gathering of Nations in Albuquerque, N.M., on Friday, April 27, 2012. The event draws more than 3,000 dancers and singers and tens of thousands of spectators for three days of competitions and the crowning of Miss Indian World.

Powwow draws tens of thousands

SUSAN MONTOYA BRYAN Associated Press

ALBUQUERQUE, Mexico (AP) – The start of this year's powwow season got under dancers crowded onto the floor of University of New Mexico Arena, each one pounding their feet in rhythm to dozens of beating drums.

Donning traditional clothing of beads, bells, feathers, fringed leather and shells, they came from Canada, both coasts of the United States and everywhere in between.

"It's a wonderful spectacle to see," said Jason Whitehouse, a master of ceremonies for the 29th Annual Gathering of Nations.

Aside from the thousands of dancers and singers who participate in competitions, way April 27 as hundreds of as many as 150,000 spectators Native American and indigenous were expected to pass through the doors during the three-day event. It wrapped up late Saturday with award ceremonies and the crowning of Miss Indian World.

> Organizers bill the Gathering of Nations as one of the world's largest powwows.

> Caleen Sisk, tribal chief of Northern California's Winnemem Wintu Tribe, bought tickets for her family last Friday. To her, the gathering is also about celebrating the differences among Native people. More than 500 tribes are represented at this year's event.

"It's one of the things I think that's missing in the whole country. People don't realize we're still here," she said. "We're still living and we're still practicing our traditional ways."

At the bottom of the arena, better known as The Pit, the air was thin, the floor was packed and the jingling of bells was almost deafening as the dancers came together for the opening ceremony and the first of four grand entries.

The vibrations carried up the

See POWWOW Continued on Page 8

Tense FBI, AIM exchange during Wounded Knee talk

KRISTI EATON Associated Press

SIOUX FALLS, S.D. (AP) - American Indian Movement founder Clyde Bellecourt lashed out at the son of a former FBI agent who was in charge during the Wounded Knee takeover in 1973 on April 27 at a conference meant to foster reconciliation.

The exchange took place during a panel discussion as John Trimbach was talking about the book he and his father wrote, "American Indian Mafia." His father, Joseph, was the special FBI agent in charge of the region when protesting AIM activists took over the village of Wounded Knee on the Pine Ridge Reservation for 71 days.

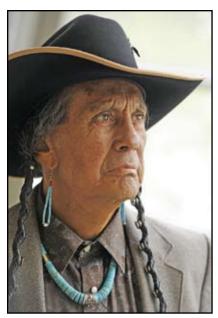

"The FBI wanted to kill us. The FBI brought in all the military branches from the United States federal government," Bellecourt said.

John Trimbach was focusing on what he called a hidden side of the uprising in which activists were beaten, raped and killed. He claimed the crimes were condoned by AIM leadership.

At various points during the speech at the annual Dakota Conference at Augustana College, Bellecourt stood up from his front-row seat and waved an affidavit that he said proved Joseph Trimbach wanted to kill American Indians and lied about investigations.

"In this document, Mr. Trimbach was chastised many times as head of the FBI in Minneapolis for falsified affidavits," said Bellecourt, who wasn't part of the panel discussion. "This has all been proven. You were sworn to tell the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth."

Russell Means, former leader of the AIM (American Indian Movement), poses for a portrait Friday, April 27, 2012 at Augustana College in Sioux Falls, S.D.

Trimbach responded only by saying answers to those allegations were in the Later in the evening, former AIM activist Russell Means spoke to a crowd of about 400 people about what he said was the misrepresentation of AIM choosing violence.

"Not one time in the history of AIM can you name an offensive violent action. We just didn't turn the other cheek," he said.

Bellecourt founded AIM with Dennis Banks and others in the late 1960s to protest the U.S. government's treatment of American Indians and demand the government honor treaties with tribes. One of the group's most well-known events was the 71-day armed takeover of Wounded Knee to protest government corruption.

The exchange between Bellecourt and Trimbach was one of many emotional moments at the conference's session examining key questions from the takeover.

At one point, the widow of civil

See TALK Continued on Page 3

CAICH Powwow for health in Kansas City

DANA ATTOCKNIE Native American Times

KANSAS CITY, Kan. Teaching healthy behavior has its hurdles, but understanding the community can make the leap fun and beneficial for everyone. That's why the Center for American Indian Community Health (CAICH)! In Kansas City makes health and powwow synonymous.

"Some of the challenges in helping people create a healthy lifestyle are to get them interested in learning about health or getting them to participate in health screenings. If you tell people we are having a talk about being healthier or we are doing health screenings most of the time people are not going to come out and participate," Angel Cully said. "We have to come up with events that will appeal to the Native American community to attend ... we have integrated the health screenings with our powwow."

Cully, Iowa Tribe of Kansas and Nebraska, is a CAICH community outreach coordinator and is getting ready for the 6th annual American Indian Health Research and Education Alliance (AIHREA) powwow on May 3 and 4, 2012 at the Johnson County Community College in Overland Park, Kan. Along with the customary dance contests, drum contest and hand drum contest, will be health screening booths for blood cholesterol, blood glucose, blood pressure, body fat percentage, hemoglobin A1c for diabetes management, lung function test, vision test, hearing test, cancer risk assessment, heart disease risk management and foot exams. All health screenings are free to anyone who attends.

Angel Cully

CAICH designs programs to lower the rates of cancer, cigarette smoking, diabetes and other health issues in Native

See HEALTH Continued on Page 4

Navajo community banks on proposed solar array

SUSAN MONTOYA BRYAN Associated Press

TO'HAJIILEE, N.M. (AP) - This flat, dusty stretch of prairie in central New Mexico is where the leaders of a remote, sparsely populated American solar panels capable of producing and investor perceptions. enough electricity for more than reservation.

in $6.5 million recently awarded by the money is earmarked for tribes portfolio standards." in the West, and most of that will be Mexico and Arizona off the ground.

has been doled out for nearly 160 projects from Alaska to Maine as part of the DOE's Tribal Energy Shandiin Solar, the Navajo name for Program. This year's grants come as Congress considers new measures aimed at reducing the bureaucratic U.S. on tribal land, MacCourt said. hurdles tribes face in developing their resources and as the Obama administration looks for ways to little as nine months. speed up the leasing of land for clean energy projects.

potential.

With tens of millions of acres held in trust for tribes, experts say Indian Country has the potential to supply more than four times the nation's resources blowing across tribal lands could meet another 14 percent of the

"Just huge, absolutely huge" is how Michael Utter, chief executive of the nonprofit consulting corporation Rural Community describes the potential.

Utter and Oregon attorney Doug spring winds. MacCourt are among the technical, financial and legal experts helping dust, Delores Apache, president of become engaged with energy generation and transmission.

Renewable energy development offers some of the same glimmers than gaining a foothold in a new of economic salvation and selfdetermination as the casino boom did earlier for some tribes. However, the experts say it's much harder for sovereign tribes to break into the energy market because of capital Indian community envision a sea of limitations, government regulations

"One of the real challenges is 10,000 homes miles away from the how to you get the outside world to understand these are players just The To'Hajiilee solar project is one like anybody else in the business," of 19 energy projects that will share MacCourt said. "They're bringing some very valuable assets to bear, the U.S. Department of Energy to especially in the western U.S. where spur renewable energy development most states have statutory mandates on tribal lands. About two-thirds of they have to meet for renewable

The assets are clear at To'Hajiilee going toward getting projects in New a wide open, sunbaked expanse that sits right under buzzing power lines Over the last decade, $36 million that lead to New Mexico's largest metropolitan area.

> The To'Hajiilee project - dubbed sunlight - would be the largest utilityscale solar photovoltaic array in the Once a power purchase agreement is inked, construction would take as To'Hajiilee's economic development team and SunPower Corp., the At stake is a wealth of untapped company helping develop the $124 million project, are talking with utilities, local municipalities and the federal government about purchasing the electricity from the array.

"I think if we're able to find a power electricity needs with solar. Wind buyer fairly quickly, we certainly ought to be breaking ground this fall. That's our goal," said Rob Burpo, president of First American Financial MacCourt said. Advisors, Inc., one of the consulting groups working with To'Hajiilee.

> The site has already been Innovations, transformed into desert pavement by months of drought and relentless

> > Her boots covered in fine yellow Inc., walks across the spot where the for a 4 megawatt solar farm. solar panels will be situated.

For her, the project is about more Rock Sioux Tribe will be embarking industry. She ticks off a list of what revenue from the plant would mean for her community: a daycare center, programs for senior citizens and veterans, better roads, more efficient wells for drawing water, language preservation programs and scholarships for youngsters.

"It's going to mean a whole lot," Apache said. "We have no means of economic development. No dollars. We don't have anything at all."

The building where To'Hajiilee residents hold their community meetings has been condemned for more than 15 years. Still, Apache said they make due during winter meetings by making sure the elderly are wrapped in blankets and the fire inside the building's small wood stove is stoked.

To'Hajiilee isn't alone. Tribes across the country are plagued by poverty, high unemployment - in some cases more than 50 percent - and access to health care and education often require long, bumpy rides off the reservation.

And in many parts of Indian Country, basic services such as running water and electricity would be considered luxuries.

Without the seed money provided by the DOE funding, Utter said it would be nearly impossible for communities like To'Hajiilee to get energy projects off the ground.

Still, the sheer potential in Indian Country means the energy market will not be able to ignore tribes much longer as the country's appetite for electricity continues to skyrocket,

In northwestern New Mexico, where coal, oil and natural gas have been the economic drivers, the Navajo Nation plans to use its share of the DOE funding to explore the potential for developing up to 4,000 megawatts of solar power.

Jemez Pueblo in the mountains of tribal communities such as To'Hajiilee To'Hajiilee Economic Development north-central New Mexico has plans

In North Dakota, the Standing

In this March 13, 2012 photo, Delores Apache, president of To'Hajiilee Economic Development Inc., points to where solar panels will be installed near the Navajo community of ToʻHajiilee, N.M. Once constructed, the plant stands to be the largest photovoltaic array on tribal land.

on a feasibility study to support the development of at least 50 megawatts of wind power. In Arizona, the San Carlos Apaches, Gila River Indians and Pascua Yaqui Tribe are looking to

A massive wind project is planned by the Penobscot Indian Nation in Maine, and biomass-fueled power plants are being considered by tribes in Montana and Minnesota.

The resources might be different, but the thread connecting the projects involves an effort to craft leases and other agreements with developers to ensure Native Americans can reap more benefits than those provided by past coal and uranium deals.

"There's a strong desire in Indian Country to step out of the role of just a landlord that is collecting rents to being involved in the equity ownership," MacCourt said.

Erny Zah, spokesman for Navajo President Ben Shelly, said tribal officials are working to revamp an energy policy that dates back to the 1980s.

"Three decades later, energy production has changed immensely and so has our view of energy," Zah said. "We're looking now to become actual partners and producers rather than being dependent upon outside companies giving us lease fees and royalty fees. We're looking to be a player rather than being a dependent."

The 30-megawatt solar photovoltaic plant planned for the outlying Navajo community of To'Hajiilee would cover more than 200 acres. Financing options include tax incentives, loan guarantees and bonds that could be used by utilities to pay for the power for the next 20 years. To'Hajiilee is working with an investment bank to finalize a financing model.

The tribe signed a lease agreement in March and a limited liability company has been formed to take care of ownership, financing and other legal obligations. Federal officials have also signed off on an environmental

A couple of historical areas will be protected and grazing will be allowed to continue throughout much of the

Five years in the making, Apache has hosted meeting after meeting to keep her fellow community members abreast of the progress and has met with attorneys, energy experts and financiers around the country. Despite feeling worn out at times, she said knows she has to keep going to make the solar array a reality.

Scanning the southern horizon of her homeland, she pointed to the base of the hill where the solar panels would stop. She then spotted a hawk soaring overhead.

"Look at that," she said. "Now that's a good sign."

WE HAVE YOU COVERED

Arvest Bank provides the financial solutions you need.

Personal & Business Checking Accounts*

All Arvest checking accounts come with the FREE services you need to do your day-to-day banking - Arvest Online Banking, Mobile Banking**, Arvest CheckCard, and 24-Hour Account Information Line.

Mortgage Loans:

Rural Development

FHA, VA or Bond

Section 184 Indian Home Loan - Lower Monthly Payments

- No Monthly Mortgage Insurance
- Lower Down Payment
- Low Fixed Rate

Mention this ad for a $75 Closing Cost Discount.***

*$100.00 minimum required to open a checking account. **Your wireless carrier may assess a fee for data services. Please consult your wireless plan or provider for details.
***Some restrictions may apply. See associate for details.

(918) 631-1000

arvest.com

Member FDIC TRANS

2:00 pm 5:30pm Elementary Cafeteria 7:00pm Must be enrolled in a Primary/Secondary School to participate in contests Tiny Tots / 0-KG ist-5th 6th-I2th Water Boys Aaron Carroll Son of Bobby & Alice Carroll Kyle Horn Son of Bob & Gerri Horn Northern Plains Indian Club Goodfox Family 2011-2012 Co-Host Oklahoma City Public Schools Indian Education ARTS & CRAFT VENDOR ARE WELCOME $40 & DONATION ITEM OKC/PS Native American_Student Color Guard BRING YOUR OWN CHAIRS & DISHES EVERYONE WELCOME! FOR MORE INFORMATION CALL JUNE HAMILTON OR ALICE CARROLL @918-762-35 or angie echohawk@918-762-3618

Widow of civil rights activist wants him home

DIRK LAMMERS Associated Press

SIOUX FALLS, S.D. (AP) - When civil rights activist Ray Robinson arrived at Wounded Knee in April 1973 to stand alongside Native Americans in their fight against social injustice, he excitedly called his wife back home and told her, "This could be the spark that lights the prairie fire."

"No, it's not. Come home. Please come home," his wife, Cheryl Buswell-Robinson, recalled begging of him.

The black activist and follower of Martin Luther King Jr. never made it home to Bogue Chitto, Ala. He was declared dead, but his body never was found and little is known about what happened. Not knowing has haunted Buswell-Robinson and the couple's three children for nearly 40 years.

The United States government handles investigations on reservations. Minneapolis-based FBI spokesman Kyle Loven said the Robinson case is a pending investigation, so federal prosecutors and investigators can't discuss it.

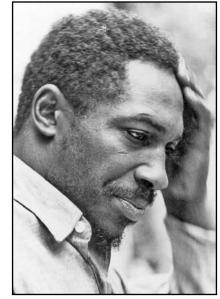

Buswell-Robinson, 67, flew into Sioux Falls from Detroit on Thursday ahead of a conference commemorating the 40th anniversary of the 1973 American Indian Movement takeover of the Pine Ridge reservation village of Wounded Knee.

She's not looking for arrests or prosecutions. She just wants to know where her husband's body is so she can give him a proper burial.

"People have information as to where his body is buried," she said.

Two Native Americans were confirmed to have died during the 1973 siege, and rumors of other deaths persist. FBI documents that now are public suggest the possibility of people buried at Wounded Knee during the occupation. There's no mention of Robinson in the FBI correspondence, but two documents reveal the presence of two black people toward the end of the standoff:

- On May 5, 1973, a transcript of an interview with a man who claimed to be at Wounded Knee the week prior stated "he heard that one black man and one black woman had recently arrived."

AP FILE PHOTO | ROBINSON FAMILY

An undated photo provided by the Robinson family shows civil rights activist Ray Robinson. Robinson traveled to the 1973 takeover of the Pine Ridge reservation village and he never returned and his body was never found.

- A May 21, 1973, FBI memo reported an Indian woman who left the village on April 20, 1973, counted 200 Indians, 11 whites and two blacks.

Buswell-Robinson said those two were most likely Robinson and a black woman from Alabama who went with him. The woman returned after the standoff; Robinson didn't.

Buswell-Robinson filed a missing person's report with the FBI and in October 1974 traveled to Rapid City and the AIM headquarters in St. Paul, Minn., but said she learned nothing about what happened to her husband. In the years after Robinson's disappearance, she corresponded with writer and political activist Barbara

In a letter dated Dec. 29, 1974, Buswell-Robinson wrote that she had been told Robinson backpacked into Wounded Knee at night and was later shot for not following an order to immediately report to AIM co-founder Dennis Banks.

AIM member Richard Two Elk of Denver told The Associated Press in 2004 that he had seen someone shoot Robinson in the knees, but the reason was because he had refused to pick up a gun and was constantly annoying people in the bunker. Two Elk declined an email request from the AP this week to talk further about the incident.

Banks, in a telephone interview Thursday, said he can't recall ever meeting Robinson. He said the only recollection of Robinson he has is when his family visited AIM in St. Paul to ask for information.

"Over the years, the Robinson name has popped up and I'm not sure even who would have that information or where it was," Banks told the AP. "That's a complete blank to me."

Banks said there was no formal AIM investigation into the disappearance of Robinson or anyone else during Wounded Knee.

"We never conducted any, like, major search for anybody that was missing, just except by word of mouth, 'Did you guys ever see this or that?' That's as far as I know and that's as far as it went,"

Clyde Bellecourt, another AIM cofounder, said he wasn't in Wounded Knee in April 1973. He left a month or so earlier to form the Wounded Knee Legal Defense-Offense Committee and act as AIM's spokesman.

"I've heard some rumors about this Robinson thing, but supposedly that happened a long time after I was gone, if anything did happen," he said. "Nobody's ever talked to me about it implicating anybody or even said it's happened."

Perry Ray Robinson Jr. was born Sept. 12, 1937. He was in Washington in 1963 for Martin Luther King Jr.'s "I Have A Dream" speech, and attended the 1964 funeral of three white civil rights workers killed in Mississippi.

In 1968, Robinson was among the protesters who set up Resurrection City, a camp at the Washington Mall. Robinson likely was at Wounded Knee for just a day, but Buswell-

Robinson is surprised so many AIM members don't remember him. The personable 6-foot-2 black man with a deep baritone voice would have stood out on a Midwest American Indian reservation, she said.

Robinson's nonviolent approach probably was not well received at what was a violent situation, and it's possible AIM members incorrectly suspected he was a federal informant, Buswell-Robinson said. It's also likely he dealt with some racism, she said.

"I'm hoping that AIM people can look in their hearts and realize this was a good man. This is a brother," Buswell-Robinson said. "This is a man that was willing to give his life for justice for what's right."

She said she traveled to the conference from her current home in Detroit because she'd like to talk to AIM leaders, anyone who was at Wounded Knee and the two women who ran the clinic where Robinson may have been taken.

At the least, she wants to get the Wounded Knee record corrected so it acknowledges her husband's presence.

"Maybe that's the best I can hope for, that in the official record Ray's name won't be excluded," Buswell-Robinson said. "Because right now, it's like he never existed."

Continued from Page 1

rights activist Ray Robinson broke down in tears as she pleaded with anyone with information about her husband to come forward. Ray Robinson disappeared during the occupation in 1973. His body has never been found, though he has been declared dead.

Buswell-Robinson said she's not looking for arrests or prosecutions. She insisted that she simply wants to know where her husband's body is located so that she could bring his remains home for a proper burial. Copies of a black-and-white photo of Robinson from 1971 were handed out to audience members.

VINITA 918-256-5585

LANGLEY 918-782-0011

MONKEY ISLAND 918-257-8869

www.okstatebank.com Equal Housing Lender Native American Owned

tahlequahrecycling.com 918-316-5856 "Changing the culture of waste." TA

TIMES

recycles with Tahlequah Recycling Incorporated... shouldn't you?

NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES

Publisher & Editor LISA SNELL editor@nativetimes.com

Contributing Writers Dana Attocknie WESLEY MAHAN KAREN SHADE

Advertising Sales KATHLEEN ROBERTSON LISA SNELL ROB WALTON

advertising@nativetimes.com Distribution SHELBY HICKS STEVE LACY

WESLEY MAHAN MICHAEL MARRIS KATHLEEN ROBERTSON BRENDA SLAUGHTER

The Native American Times, formerly the Oklahoma Indian Times, is published weekly (except the last week of the year) by Lisa Hicks Snell. Mailing address is PO Box 411 Tahleguah, OK 74465. All the contents within the Native American Times are copyrighted material. Any reproduction, redistribution without the written consent of the NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES is strictly

> Each week's issue is available for free download online at: www.nativetimes.com

Subscription rates: $65.00 for fifty-two issues, $32.50 for twenty-six issues, or $16.25 for thirteen issues. A single copy is $1.25 (Rates are for postage and handling) Send check or money order to:

> NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES Attn: Subscriptions P.O. Box 411 Tahlequah, OK 74465-0411

Phone: (918) 708-5838 Fax: (888) 689-4873

Postmaster: Send Change of Address Form 579 to: NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES P.O. Box 411, Tahlequah, OK 74465

WWW.NATIVETIMES.COM News from the crossroads of Indian Country

True American Indian

www.flyingeagletradingpost.com

Metal Roofing & Siding

Professional Construction and Home Repairs

Free Estimates

Charles Snell 918-507-2902

Native American Contractor

Stickball · Drawing · Fancy dancing · Beadwork Big Brothers Big Sisters Traditional language Shooting hoops

Think of the possibilities! Step up and mentor a Native American child. Commit to changing a child's future. Commit to creating an impact in your tribal community.

How it Works

Step One: Fill out an application at www.bbbsok.org Step Two: Submit application. Receive phone call from BBBS to set up an interview.

Step Three: Attend an in-person interview. Bring copy of Drivers License, Proof of Insurance, Three References and complete a criminal background check.

Step Four: Once approved – matched with a child with similar

Step Five: Pat on the back...you're making a difference!!!

All matches are supported by professional staff at local BBBS agencies. BBBS Match Support Specialists regularly consult with volunteers, children, and parents.

Want more information?

Contact Kristy Smithson, BBBSOK Manager of Native American Partnerships, by phone (405) 606-6309 or email kristv.smithson@bbbsok.org | www.bbbsok.org

AICCOK OKC CHAPTER SCHOLARSHIP

Help a deserving Native American student reach for their dreams.

OVERVIEW

The OKC Chapter has historically provided scholarships for many years. Typically one acholarship is awarded to the top male and female entrants, as decided by the OKC Chapter Board of Directors. In 2012, we plan to notify the recipient student(s) by May 10 to allow them to list their scholarship in their graduation materials. We will present the actual scholarship award at the August luncheon.

SPONSORSHIPS

There are 2 ways that your organization can help:

- 1. Sponsor a branded, stand-alone scholarship. (Minimum award $250). Special emphasis can be requested (e.g. math or science, healthcare, etc).
- 2. Contribute to the AICCOK-OKC Chapter General Scholarship Fund.

CONTACTS

To sponsor a scholarship, contact: James Lambertus, OKC Chapter Chair, aiccokc@earthlink.net, 405-650-5996 or Fran Smith, Treasurer, fran.smith@bank2online.com 405-946-2265.

To make a contribution to the Fund online, please click: http://tiny.cc/aiccokc_scholarshipfund

Hopi Code Talkers honored

VIDA VOLKERT Gallup Independent

high desert of Arizona thousands of miles away talkers due to the need for Talkers. They are all gone 10. - and prayed for a last secure real time actionable and most never talked time before they boarded intelligence." ships and joined their units Infantry Division, on the shores of Angaur Island, Palau.

The mission was to provide the U.S. military of casualties during World with a strategic location in War II, according to hurts now." the Pacific Ocean during historic records. But the World War II. But the U.S. forces circled the island the Hopi Veteran Affairs, Japanese intelligence had and the Japanese base and said war is against the been so good at breaking successfully gained control. Hopi tradition. This is why military codes that the This takeover contributed the Hopi men who were mission depended on the to the final victory in the drafted during World War Hopi men to use their Pacific and eventually the II might have struggled unique language to confuse successful end of World tremendously during their the enemy, U.S. Army Maj. Gen. with the 81st Regional Beck said.

how strong we were, we on the Code Talkers?" could not create a code (by the Japanese)," Beck from being successful in lost during the battle. our missions. ... If they can destroy that unit."

The 223rd Infantry No one will ever know. Regiment landed on the islandandquicklyadvanced three years ago and he burned or buried their in the Pacific campaigns through the jungle. Maj. never talked about what military outfits and medals and served with the 5th Air

The mission lasted island. Muller's ship was memorial. attacked the morning of War II, Beck said.

"Your families, they Support Command Gill P. contributed to the success with our tradition, with of this operation," Beck the Hopi, we don't like "What we found in said. "What it must have to take pride in military WWII is that no matter been to them, to depend accomplishments," he said.

that could not be decoded Travis Yaiva might have their land and families, with a pair of tweezers. wondered the same. Then, but never went beyond the When they opened it, it had told an audience that in his late 80s, quietly sitting boundaries of their sacred a diagram that included included family members in his living room in Bacavi land in search of trouble. a communication pattern of the Hopi Code Talkers Village, the Hopi man There's a reason the early used by the 5th Bomber who gathered at the first might have remembered Hopi villages were built Command, 5th Air Force. official Hopi Code Talker the takeover of the island, on top of high mesas and Memorial at the Hopi the Hopi words he and his the people lived peaceful Veterans Memorial Center comrades used to encode agricultural lives. They did in Kykotsmovi on April the operation, and the not want any trouble. 23. "That prevented us thousands of lives that were might He have

Gen. Paul Muller, who happened during the time as part of the cleansing Force.

sent to him using code relatives of the Hopi Code about the war.

"They were not proud Hopi with the U.S. Army's 223rd for three days of brutal of it," Dolores Yaiva, 58, Infantry Regiment, 81st confrontations between said, fighting tears, during forces in and around the the Hopi Code Talker "This emotional. I never knew the 18th, and this battle had what they went through. take over the island and one of the highest number With understanding of what they went through it S. Yaiva, of Bacavi; Frank Eugene Talas, director of service.

"You have to remember,

In the Hopi tradition, the More than 60 years later, men only fought to defend It had to be pulled apart word 'warrior," Talas said.

When the Hopi Code destroy that code, they can questioned the motives of Talkers returned to their and Pooyouma the war and the outcome. peaceful villages they might have gone through Yaiva passed about cleansing ceremonies and communications network was on the mother ship he served, not even during process, Talas said. That is several miles away, was his final days, at the care of another reason it has been in charge of the mission. his daughter Dolores Yaiva, difficult to identify all the GALLUP, N.M. (AP) - It Historic records from the she said. That is one of the Code Talkers. They did not was Sept. 17, 1944. Eight 81st Infantry Division reasons Beck's account keep records, perhaps in an young Hopi men thought conclude that "sensitive of the battle of Angaur attempt to forget that time about their families and information regarding the Island provided some sort of their lives. Recently, two peaceful villages in the landings would have been of closure for many of the more Hopi Code Talkers were identified, totaling > 223rd Infantry Regiment included eight Code Talkers: Charles T. Lomakema, Shugopavi; Honani Sr., of Shungopavi; Franklin Shupla, of Tewa; Percival Navenma, of Mishungnovi; Floyd Dann Sr., of Moenkopi; Travis Chapella, of Tewa; and Warren R. Kooyaquaptewa, > Orville Wadsworth, of Shungopavi, and Rex Pooyouma, of Hotevilla Village, both members of the U.S. Army Air Force during World War II, were recently identified.

Talas said after Wadsworth passed his family found a containing a document that was folded and so old that it was almost glued together. This and other documents were sent to the experts for review and they confirmed Wadsworth had been a "We shy away from the code talker. He became the last to be identified.

> Both Wadsworth members of a secret Native American Code Talker even its sponsor, Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison of Texas-and McCainwere among the 15 Republicans who voted for the final Democratic bill.

The 31 Republicans who voted no said they support the spirit of the act but had problems with the Democratic rewrite up for consideration.

Sen. Jim DeMint, R-S.C., for example, said he opposed the bill in part because he believes abused women are best served by state and local governments.

And Sen. Jon Kyl, R-Ariz., said he voted 'no' because he believes the tribal provisions in the bill would be unconstitutional. Under the measure, Native American officials would be allowed to arrest, prosecute and imprison non-Indians, who cannot vote in tribal elections or have a say in crafting laws that could

S. 1925 can be accessed at http:// thomas.loc.gov

Americans, while being respectful of cultural traditions. In 2010, CAICH was awarded a five-year grant from the National Institute for Minority Health and Health Disparities (NIMHD) to establish and support their research and services.

"Community Outreach is one of the most important things we do at CAICH. We want to keep the community informed about what we do and our progress and we want input from community members about next steps," Cully said. "To help us keep the community informed, we have a website, publish a quarterly newsletter with other American Indian Health Research and Education Alliance partners (Native Health in the Heartland), and hold annual Community Research Forums."

CAICH works to advance efforts of AIHREA. AIHREA was formed in 2005 when KUMC united with seven organizations whose commitment are to improve the health of American Indians. Some AIHREA research partners include the American Indian Council, Inc., Kansas City Indian Center (formerly Heart of America Indian Center), and Johnson County Community College.

"Our goal is to train and educate the next generation of Native health researchers and health care professionals, hoping that they will return to their communities and help to address health disparities," Cully said. "We have provided over 50 students with internship opportunities for either pay or credit. We also have 12 Youth Ambassadors. Our Youth Ambassador program is for student leaders from all over the United States. It gives them the opportunity to educate and promote health and wellness in every aspect of American Indian culture, education and society. The program is designed to help develop and prepare participants for youth leadership roles, in health and wellness education, and community service."

One program initiated by public request is a quit smoking program called All Nations Breath of Life. The program, offered in-person or via telemedicine, recognizes the ceremonial use of tobacco while helping people to quit recreational smoking.

"We are excited to report that preliminary results from our program show that between 20 percent and 25 percent of participants are smokefree six months after beginning the program. This is similar to the best programs available for other ethnic groups and is significantly better than the less than 10 percent reported for American Indians in other programs," Cully said. "Through this program we have also learned that American Indians who use tobacco for traditional or ceremonial purposes are more likely to be smoke-free a year after quitting than those who do not. We are excited to learn this because our program is based on respecting traditional tobacco."

Another tailor-made program is for adult American Indians who need to lose weight. The program, led by Shelley Bointy, MSW, Fort Peck Assiniboine and Sioux tribes of Montana, helps people who "are not yet pre-diabetic or have currently controlled diabetes. The program is group-based and teaches participants about eating right and exercising," Cully said.

CAICH is currently conducting research or providing services to the: Kickapoo Tribe of Kansas, Iowa Tribe of Kansas, Choctaw Tribe of Oklahoma, Northern Ponca Tribe of Nebraska, and Omaha Tribe of Nebraska.

Cully said they are always willing to work with tribes throughout the United States and look for new opportunities to do so. She said there are many health concerns in American Indian communities but education and understanding can lead people to a healthy life style.

"We often times find out a reason a person doesn't get screened for something such as colon cancer is they haven't been told the importance of the test and how often it needs to be performed. We have also come in contact with many people who are afraid to get screened because the word 'cancer' scares them," Cully said. "We have to work to educate them to show that you can be cured from cancer if it's caught early enough. Because people don't tend to get screened, when a American Indian person is diagnosed with cancer many times the cancer is in late stages."

Anyone who attends the AIHREA powwow can visit the "ASK a Doc" station for an individual consultation with a doctor. More than 1200 free health screenings were given at last year's powwow, and the doctor makes sure to follow up with participants who are at-risk for anything they're screened for.

"We call the participant and see if they have gotten into follow up care and if they haven't then we try to help them get into care instead of just identifying a problem and sending them on their way," Cully said.

For more information about the AIHREA "Our Nations Energies" Health and Wellness Powwow call AIHREA at (855) 552-2424 Ext. 1 or visit www.AIHREA.com. For more information about CAICH visit www.caich.org.

Since 2002, the NIMHD has established more than 85 Centers of Excellence (COE). According to the NIMHD website, the NIMHD COEs are located in 31 states, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, and the U.S Virgin Islands. The types of institutions are broad and include majority research institutions, medical schools, HBCUs, Hispanic serving institutions, tribal colleges, and liberal arts colleges. CAICH receives additional funding from NIMHD, the National Cancer Institute, Susan G. Komen for the Cure, and Kansas University Cancer Center. Earlier projects were funded by the American Cancer Society, the American Lung association, the Health Care Foundation of Greater Kansas City, and the Kansas University Medical Center (KUMC) Research Institute, CAICH has three advisory boards: a Community Advisory Board, Student Leader Advisory Board and Executive Community Advisory Board.

The money pays for such programs as legal assistance for victims, enforcement of protection orders, transitional housing and youth prevention programs.

Democrats sought to expand the law by adding protections certain to draw conservative opposition. One would explicitly name gays, lesbians and transgender people to the group of those protected under the law. Another would raise the cap on visas granted to abused legal and illegal immigrants from 10,000 to 15,000. A third would expand the authority of Native American officials to handle cases of abuse of Indian women by non-Indians.

The bill drew 61 co-sponsors, more than enough to block filibusters and set up a political dare to Republicans: Vote no, and you're waging a "war against women."

The strategy raised hackles among Republicans, who insisted they had women's interests at heart, too. Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., said the narrative was a distraction from issues Democrats would rather not discuss, such as the economy and gas prices.

"We face an abundance of hard choices," said McCain, the GOP's 2008 presidential nominee and a leading supporter of Republican hopeful Mitt Romney this year. "Divisive slogans and declaring of phony wars are intended to avoid those hard choices and to escape paying a political price for doing so."

To prove it, Republicans offered alternatives that would delete the references to gays, lesbians and transgender people, keep the cap on visas at its current level and allow tribal authorities to go to federal court for protective orders on behalf of abused Native American women.

But the Senate rejected the options overwhelmingly. And in the end, be used against him, Kyl said.

NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES

Name:
Address:
City:	_ State:	_ Zip:
·		·
Phone:
☐ $65.00 for 52 issues ☐ $32.50 for 26 issues
☐ $16.25 for 13 issues	$ 1.2	5 single copy

Mail this form with a check or money order to: Native American Times • P.O. Box 411 Tahlequah, OK 74465 • 918-708-5838

We proudly offer an array of services, from general dentistry to sedation, dental implants, and cosmetic dentistry - all designed expressly to meet our patient's changing needs. With four general dentists and four hygienists, we can maintain your oral health for a lifetime all at one location.

We Accept Contract Health & Sooner Care

We serve patients in the Drumright, Cushing, Stillwater, Stroud, Ponca City, and surrounding areas with personalized service and exemplary care. Call for your appointment today.

918-352-3312 or Toll Free 877-RH Melton drumrightdentalcenter.com

COMMENTARY

lacksquare

Tatanka Iyotanka, Sitting Bull, was a pure Lakota traditionalist

TIM GIAGO (Nanwica Kciji) Notes from Indian Country © 2012 Unity South Dakota

One coldwinter day Tatanka Iyotanka (Sitting Bull), the great Lakota warrior, was sitting on a bench in front of his home with his two wives on the Standing Rock Sioux Reservation in South and North Dakota.

He looked off in the distance at an approaching buckboard and smiled to himself as he pointed with his lower lip at the dust stirred up by the wagon. I am told he was a man with a great sense of humor.

Sitting Bull knew exactly who was driving the wagon and the question he would be asked when the wagon finally reached his door. And sure enough, as the wagon got closer he and his wives could see clearly that it was the minister from the local church.

He climbed down from the buckboard and approached Sitting Bull as he shook the dust from his black hat. The minister exchanged a few pleasantries and then got down to the business of why he was making this visit. He said to the great Lakota leader, "It is un-Christian of you to have two wives. It is against the will of God. And it is barbarian and heathen."

Sitting Bull sat there with his head cocked and listened patiently to the outburst of the minister. He was being dressed down by this white man but his only emotion was the slight smile on his face. Finally he raised his hand to quiet the angry minister and waved his hand at his two wives and said to the minister, "Well, there they are: you tell them which one has to leave." And that was pure Lakota logic. Which of these Lakota women would be deprived of a loving home? Lakota logic had baffled the white man for a century or more.

It was this logic based on centuries of Lakota culture and traditions that was so foreign to the white settlers that they waved it off without ever making an effort to understand it. Lakota men had more than one wife at times because they considered it their duty based on their survival to care for, feed and clothe a woman who did not have a home, or perhaps their second wife was married to a brother who was killed in battle. Often a Lakota man took over the responsibility of caring for a fallen brother's wife and children: To the children he became atay or

Many Lakota saw Sitting Bull as a great spiritual leader. When the infamous Ghost Dance (at least infamous to the white people), Sitting Bull allowed the dance to be performed near his home at Standing Rock. Hundreds of white settlers were terribly frightened of the Ghost Dance because it announced the return of all the Lakota who had gone before and many of the male dancers donned a shirt that became known as a Ghost Dance shirt, and this shirt would protect them even from bullets.

The local newspapers began to express concern, anger and fear of this new religion that was sweeping the Indian reservations of North and South Dakota. The dance was never intended to bring on an uprising, but was always meant to bring hope and pride back to the Lakota people. If only the white men had learned this there would have been no massacre at Wounded Knee that year of 1890.

When the tribal police came to the home of Sitting Bull to arrest him for allowing the Ghost Dance to take place on his land a scuffle ensued and the great Lakota warrior was assassinated.

Although Sitting Bull had made excursions across America and Europe as a member of the Buffalo Bill Wild West Show, he had never lost his feelings for his people, culture or traditions. He refused to bend to the will of the Indian agents and continued to live in the traditional way and for this he was considered a bad influence upon the Lakota and he was feared. Sitting Bull knew that the process of acculturation did not equate with equality. While those who acculturated and converted to Christianity prospered somewhat and hence were looked upon as "civilized," those who did not were often shunned as "uncivilized." And he was 100 percent right: The white man's interpretation of "civilized" clearly did not mean equal. Indians were not citizens of the United States and were not allowed to vote or run for

A common term applied to those non-conformists has found its way into the lexicon of today's conversation: When one does not conform they are said to be "off the reservation." And this is truly ironic because the non-conformists usually were on the reservation.

Today in America it is the traditionalists or non-conformists who are leading their people back to their culture. The traditional Lakota women are now the keepers of the traditions and culture. Like Sitting Bull, the traditionalists have remained steadfast in their spirituality and language and have set the example for those who thought that they would be better off by abandoning their traditional beliefs.

When Sitting Bull asked the white minister which wife he should choose to leave his home he spoke volumes about the assault that was about to begin upon his people, an assault with the sole intent of destroying a culture that was thousands of years old.

Sitting Bull College on the Standing Rock Reservation is named for this great leader.

Tatanka Iyotanka could have said to the minister and for all of the Lakota people, "The road to hell is paved with good intentions."

Tim Giago, an Oglala Lakota, is President of Unity South Dakota. He was a Nieman Fellow at Harvard with the Class of 1990. His weekly column won the H. L. Mencken Award in 1985. He was the founder of The Lakota Times, Indian Country Today, Lakota Journal and Native Sun News. He can be reached at UnitySoDak1@knology.net

Super elders among us: Centenarians in Indian Country

S.E. RUCKMAN

Everyone's been reminded this was the year a century ago that the Titanic sunk in the North Atlantic Ocean. Another remarkable moment occurred when Elizabeth Humetewa from the Hopi lower village of Moenkopi climbed down from the clouds into the physical world. As a member of the Baa kop wungwa clan, not many ceremonials or weddings went by that she didn't have some sort of participation.

The Arizona tribe recently announced that they had not only one but four centenarians in their ranks. The Hopis thoughtfully sent me pictures of two of their elders beaming into a camera. I peered closely into them as if I were looking for some kind of coded answer. Each Hopi elder was certainly someone's great-grandmother and great-grandfather.

Satisfaction of some sort sat on the edge of their smiles. Not much regret was visible at this point, I mused. A trace of nostalgia, perhaps, but there was no trace of the nail-biting, gut-wrenching anxiety common to those a third of their age. Getting to the age of 100 in Indian Country takes some kind of special dispensation-an inherent stamp of approval by the tribal ancestors. It seems they would be able to see the infant turn into the child into the adult into the elder in a blink of an eye.

The Hopi seniors were lauded just for the simple miracle of being themselves. Tribal officials gave them Pendleton blankets, certificates and lapel pins. Then it was on to a hearty lunch. Something told me these are the real celebrities in Indian Country. Charismatic tribal leaders come and go but Indian elders who reach the century mark are the ones who got it going on.

These are the kind of folks alive before cars, televisions and cell phones became words. Kind of puts it into context as we jog along in the technological race. Paradoxically, by the time humans reach 100 years old, communicating and getting around become technical exploits.

That doesn't mean that Wesley Honahnie, 103, who also comes from the Hopi Lower Moenkopi village, doesn't enjoy being outside when he can get there. He lived as a farmer and rancher, growing corn, watermelon, squash. Marsah Balenquah of the Hopi's Bacavi Village takes part in the local church events and has been a year in the centenarian's club at 101 years old. In absentia, the tribe counts Evelyn Lassor from the Oraibi Village as one of their own although she lives in Brooklyn NY.

Meanwhile, the Comanche Nation 's Josephine Myers-Wapp forged a solid reputation teaching at Santa Fe's Institute of American Indian Arts (IAIA) then retired in the early 1970s. Now revered for her finger weaving, Wapp lived a whole career before I got the hang of catching the bus for elementary school. These are but a few of the tribal centenarians I could find. I know there's more.

Nationally, census numbers show that over 53,000 Americans reached the century birthday. The closest I could find for Indian elders at or older than 100 were 1990 statistics that showed 264 super-elders, if you will. Since the U.S. number of centenarians for that time was just under 35,000 in 1990, I'll bet the figure for Indian Country has grown since then, too.

But I hear that it's harder to get to 100 years old these days. Access to quality health care and the perils of modern day living make the feat a bit trickier across the board. That puts a premium on the advice given by these elders on how to advance like a pro. The answers I have read vary from eating simply, not smoking or drinking and never retiring. It stands to reason some of it involves inheriting a perfect strand of genetic pearls.

Maybe environment has its say so. The lower village of Moenkopi might be the Native equivalent to the island of Amami in Japan that boasts a hefty share of centenarians. The Japanese accredit it to their natural diet. I place my chips on diet as well. Surely, a traditional menu at Moenkopi in the early part of the last century set the curve on longevity.

Becoming a centenarian is kind of like hugging a butterfly, not necessarily impossible but a feat that takes some delicate maneuvering. I suspect that no one who reaches one hundred years ever guesses that they will leave such enduring footprints. They tread where we all aspire to

S.E. Ruckman is a citizen of the Wichita and Affiliated Tribes in Anadarko, Okla. She graduated from the University of Oklahoma's School of Journalism and has written for the Tulsa World and is currently a special contributor to the Native American Times. She is a freelance writer who is based in Oklahoma.

The viewpoints expressed in columns and letters are the opinions of the writers and not necessarily the opinion or viewpoint of the Native American Times publisher or staff.

Send letters to editor@nativetimes.com. Please keep letters to 350 words or less. Sign your name, tribal affiliation and city of residence for verification purposes.

Reeves Renovations

Professional Construction, Remodeling & Repairs

Bathrooms • Kitchens • Paint • Tile • Trim
Plumbing • Electrical • Solar Panels
Windmills • Winterizing
Quality Work • Free Estimates

Serving Mayes & Cherokee Counties –

918-637-6736

johnwilliamreeves@juno.com

SUPERNAW'S OKLAHOMA INDIAN SUPPLY

Wholesale items for Pow Wow Vendors

Bone chokers $20 per dozen

Handmade lamp worked glass bead bracelets $1.00 each Glass bead stretch bracelets 5 for $2.50

12 Necklaces: Chain w/ pendant and display pad $13.50 36 inch gemstone chip strands Reg. 3.95 now $2.00 36 inch turquoise chip strands Reg. 7.95 now $4.00

Always our regular stock of seed beads from 16/0 to 8/0, findings, leather, hackles, fluffs and thousands of other supply items.

Remember we've moved around the corner 109 North Broadway, Skiatook, OK 74070

New Dealers Cash or Credit Card Only.

Open Noon-6pm Mon. thru Fri. • 10am-5m Sat. • Closed Sun. Local: 396-1713-Countrywide Toll Free 1-888-720-1967

Website: www.supernaw.com • Email: Supernaw@flash.net

Okla. Indian ballerina Moscelyne Larkin dies

KATIE SELVIDGE Tulsa Ballet

TULSA, Okla. - It is with great sadness that Tulsa Ballet announces the death of its co-founder, Edna Moscelyne Larkin Jasinski ("Moussia.") With Miss Larkin's death a vivid era in the formation of Tulsa's arts organizations

Miss Larkin and her husband, Roman Jasinski, were the breath and soul of the early Tulsa Civic Ballet and their former students throughout the world are testaments to their talent, technique, and artistic training.

Miss Larkin (who danced under the stage name "Moussia Larkina" "Moscelyne Larkin") was admired throughout her professional career for her on-stage magnetism and her exceptional leaps and turns. She excelled in roles that required charm, speed, and

Born January 14, 1925 in Miami, Oklahoma to a Russian-born mother, Eva Matlagova, and a Shawnee Peoria / Welsh father, Ruben (Babe) Larkin, Miss Larkin remained proud of her dual cultural heritage and her Oklahoma roots throughout

At the age of 13, after training with her mother, the talented young dancer moved to New York City to study with Celli, Mordkin and Vilzak-Shollar. The legendary choreographer Michael Fokine, fascinated by her talent and exotic looks, choreographed a studio piece for her, and Mordkin stopped his class one day to say to her, "You're a little fish now, but one day you're going to grow up and be a big fish and you're going to eat up all the other

At the age of 15 1/2 Larkin skipped school to audition for Colonel de Basil's Original Ballet Russe and was immediately accepted into the corps de ballet. Within days she met principal dancer Roman Jasinski and three years later she married him. It was a marriage that would last for forty years until he predeceased her in 1991.

A natural linguist, Larkin mastered the Russian spoken in the Company, Spanish from years of touring South America, and smatterings of French, but her husband's native Polish remained a lifelong challenge. Because the Ballet Russe spent the years of World War II in South America, those years became, for Miss Larkin, both an extended honeymoon and an educational emersion into the history and legacy of dance. She considered them the best years of her life.

Bit by bit she performed new roles, rising ever higher on the Ballet Russe ladder. Favorite roles from that period were the 'Waltz' in Les Sylphides, 'Guile' in Paganini, the dance competition in Graduation Ball and the 'Blue Bird" pas de deux from Aurora's Wedding.

In 1947, at the end of a tour to Europe where a London critic termed Larkin "...the first ray of sunshine after the war," the Jasinskis left the Original Ballet Russe and returned to America with no job, no plans. "It was time."

Filling the employment gap, Larkin danced four full performances a day (rehearsing between performances) as Prima

JOHN McCORMACK | COURTESY TULSA BALLET

Edna Moscelyne Larkin Jasinski was born Jan. 14, 1925 in Miami, Okla. to a Russian-born mother, Eva Matlagova, and a Shawnee Peoria / Welsh father, Ruben (Babe) Larkin. She remained proud of her dual cultural heritage and her Oklahoma roots throughout her Ballerina at the Radio City Music Hall, and she was one of the first dancers to perform regularly on television, dancing for six months on the weekly Fay Emerson show to the baton of orchestra leader Skitch Henderson.

In 1948 Jasinski joined Serge Denham's Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo as a principal dancer, and Larkin joined the company at the beginning of the following season. She added new roles to her repertoire, among them the 'Cowgirl' in Rodeo (she was choregrapher Agnes de Mille's preferred dancer for that part), 'Zobeïde', in Schéhérazade,

'the Young Girl' in Massine's Beau Danube and lead roles (Cancan, 'Glove Seller') in Gaité Parisienne.

In 1952 Denham asked Jasinski to head a small Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo Concert Company with a few principals and corps members. This company made U.S. history by bringing ballet to college campuses and Small Town America. Miss Larkin was one of the ballerinas, a role she gave up a year later when she became pregnant. Their son, Roman Larkin Jasinski, was born in Tulsa February 21,

By then Miss Larkin's mother had a thriving ballet school in Tulsa, so after private tours with Russian ballerina Alexandra Danilova to the Philippines, Japan, Panama, and throughout the U.S., the Jasinskis decided to retire to Oklahoma, join Matlagova's

They were part of the professional exodus from major dance centers that enabled talented students to stay in their home towns and receive top professional training. The Jasinskis, however, carried that training further.

In 1956 they pulled together a few talented students from several Tulsa studios, and, as principal dancers, led a performance at Temple Israel. The response was so positive, that they and pianist Rosalie Talbott incorporated Tulsa Ballet Arts a few months later. This was the company that would ultimately become today's fully professional, internationally-acclaimed, Tulsa Ballet.

In 1957 the Jasinskis masterminded the first "Oklahoma Indian Ballerina Festival." Larkin, Yvonne Chouteau, Maria Tallchief and Rosella Hightower, all of Oklahoma Indian heritage, performed excerpts from Swan Lake, Giselle, and other ballets, augmented by the local corps de ballet. Only Marjorie Tallchief was absent.

By 1967 Yvonne Chouteau and her husband, Miguel Terekhov, joined the Jasinskis in producing the second festival. In this, Marjorie performed. {Maria had already retired.) Both Festivals were the subject of laudatory articles throughout the U.S. and Europe that brought artistic accolades to the young state of Oklahoma.

Soon stars from American Ballet Theatre, New York City Ballet and other stellar companies were flocking to Tulsa, Oklahoma to receive personal coaching from the Jasinskis in the Ballet Russe repertoire, and to perform with the local company.

Roman Jasinski began to build his choreographic talents, Miss Larkin proved herself a demanding and inspirational teacher / coach, many of their young studentdancers were accepted into the country's most prestigious companies, and the fledgling Tulsa Ballet began to be noticed throughout the nation as a worthy successor to Ballet Russe technique, artistry and

When the Jasinskis arranged for the revival of lost or littleknownworksfromBalanchine, Fokine, Massine, and other great choreographers of the past, the ballet world took immediate and appreciative

Miss Larkin was named "Outstanding Indian of the Year" by the Council of American Indians in 1976. In 1978, she was inducted into the Oklahoma Hall of Fame and later, she and the other four Oklahoma Indian Ballerinas were given the rare designation "Oklahoma Treasure" at the Governor's Arts Awards of 1997. Miss Larkin and Mr. Jasinski together were given the Lifetime Achievement Award from the Tulsa Arts and Humanities Council when inducted into the Tulsa Hall of Fame in 1988, and received honorary degrees from the University of Tulsa (1991). Beyond doubt, their highest professional accolade came in 1988 when they were presented the annual Dance Magazine Award for their "shining example" in creating a major mid-American company in the classical tradition where none had existed before.

The partnership ended in 1991 with the death of Jasinski, but Larkin carried on as Artistic Director Emerita of Tulsa Ballet, and teacher, with her son Roman, at their Jasinski Academy. Always conscious of her Native American heritage, she made a special effort to encourage and promote the education and advancement of Native American children. In 1996 Miss Larkin was named "Outstanding Oklahoman of the Year" by "Oklahoma Today."

Larkin has been a resident at a local nursing home since 2005 and is survived by her son, Roman Larkin Jasinski, and her deceased brother Lloyd's children and grandchildren.

Donations in her memory may be made to the Jasinski Endowment Fund of Tulsa

5 tips to creating a world-class employment reference list

DETROIT - Your references: are they really that important in the hiring process? In a word absolutely. Unfortunately, professional references are perhaps the most overlooked and underutilized tool in most people's employment arsenal.

If you're not using your references to your best advantage, you may be making an inadvertent error in your search for new employment. An excellent resume may get your foot in the door for an interview, but it's your references that will likely "seal the deal" and get you the actual job offer.

So ask yourself: Will the list of job references I have created ensure that stellar new job offer?

The professional referencechecking firm of Allison & Taylor offers these five tips on how to create a compelling reference list:

1. First, think about your list content. Will you always use the same references? Or does employment diversity require that you create more than one set, each tailored to your specific expertise in that field?

2. Who's to say you can't use a reference from your not-so-recent past? If it's relevant - and the reference is willing - go all the way back to college if appropriate. In fact, a professor may make an excellent reference if their input is germane to the job you're applying for.

3. Are your references really striving to "sell you" to employers? Are you offering up only the input of the HR department? They will generally give a canned "dates and title" response, which is not what potential employers really seek. Try to provide references that can actually career. speak to your abilities.

aware of what your reference out their contact information will truly say about you by contacting a professional reference checking organization.

4. Is it always necessary to career use a supervisor? Certainly not. Of course, someone who has seen your day-today performance is best - but don't close off your options by assuming that person has to be your direct supervisor. You can certainly go above them perhaps your supervisor's boss can provide a more accurate (and flattering) reference. Then again, who reported to you? It's often the people who work for you that know you format for references? Always provide the pertinent contact details. There's nothing more frustrating for an employer than trying to contact references with incorrect or outdated information. If they have to hunt down your references, you're much more likely to wind up in the discard pile - wrong information projects (your) lack of attention to detail.

References should include company name, reference title, name, email, mailing address and phone. Also, include a in your search for that new quick blurb regarding your relationship to the reference. Once you've created a great About Allison & Taylor: list of references, stay in their good graces. Always follow the "Golden Rules of Job Reference Etiquette":

and ask them if they are willing to provide favorable job references on your behalf. As an additional courtesy, offer them an update on your

2. Let your references know Better still, ensure you're each and every time you give and thank them for their efforts.

Keep your positive references informed of your and educational progress. They will be more inclined to see you in a stronger light as you progress.

4. Note that spending time communicating with your prospective employer takes valuable time from your references' workdays. If you plan to use these positive references over the years, you need to give something back. For instance, each time your reference supports you with a new prospective employer, send them a personal thank-What's the correct you letter or (at a minimum) an email. Better still, send a thank-you note with a gift card for Starbucks, or offer to take your former boss to lunch/dinner.

> 5. If you win the new position, call or email your former boss and thank them again for their support. Also, let them know your new contact information.

> Present your references in the best light and then treat them like the valuable commodities they are. They will truly be invaluable assets

Allison & Taylor and its principals have been in the business of checking references for corporations and individuals1. Call your former bosses since 1984. Allison & Taylor is headquartered in Rochester, Mich. For further details on services and procedures please visit http://www.allisontaylor.

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Oklahoma is a national leader in Indian tribal governments and economic development in Oklahoma, We are a dynamic, progressive organization, which owns several business enterprises and administers a variety of services for the Cherokee people in Northeastern Oklahoma. Cherokee Nation offers an exceptional employee benefits plan with Comprehensive Health, Life, 401 (k), Holiday Pay, Sick Leave and Annual Leave.

CURRENT OPPORTUNITIES

#4500 Inpatient RN/PRN/OR/T/PT, WW Hastings Hospital

#5903 Inpatient RN/PRN/T/PT/ICU, WW Hastings Hospital

POSITIONS CLOSE 5/01/2012

Interested applicants please apply at www.cherokee.org Cherokee Nation

Human Resources Department PO Box 948 Tahlequah, OK 74465 (918) 453-5292 or 453-5050 Employment will be contingent upon drug test results, Indian preference is considered.

Miss An Issue? Download for FREE www.nativetimes.com

LEGAL

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE MUSCOGEE (CREEK) NATION OKMULGEE DISTRICT

IN THE MATTER OF THE GUARDIANSHIP OF: M.C., a Minor Child Case No. GD-2012-05

NOTICE BY PUBLICATION

DANIEL CULLY OR ANY UNKNOWN FATHER

YOU ARE HEREBY NOTIFIED that the above-entitled matter is set for hearing on a PETITION FOR GUARDIANSHIP at the hour of 10:00 p.m. on the 11th day of JUNE, 2012, in the Muscogee (Creek) Nation District Court at the Muscogee (Creek) Nation Complex in Okmulgee, Oklahoma. Your failure to appear at the hearing on June 11th, 2012, may result in a default judgment being rendered against you.

Court Clerk

NATIVE AMERICAN HIRING PREFERENCE?

Advertise to Native Americans! E-mail your ad for a quote to: lisa@nativetimes.com

FREE

ONCERTS

GATES OPEN AT 5PM RAIN OR SHINE

ALL AGES WELCOME. BRING YOUR OWN CHAIRS. NO OUTSIDE COOLERS, FNOD OR DRINKS ALLOWED.

COMING SOON!

Travis Tritt

Thursday, June 21 • 7 pm Tickets are $40

Ticket Info

Order your Event Center tickets at osagecasinos.com!

Visit the Osage Box Office in Tulsa or call (918) 699-7667. Cash and all major credit cards accepted. Must be 18 to attend. No refunds or exchanges.

Fulfill your thrill.

osagecasinos.com

(918) 699-7777 | f Find us on Facebook!

Tulsa Bartlesville Sand Springs Ponca City Skiatook Hominy Pawhuska

©2012 Osage Casino. Management reserves all rights.

EVENTS

*Email your powwow or other event info to: Lisa@ nativetimes.com. Name, date, time, place and contact 50, but a small donation is information is free.

EVERY THURSDAY The Otoe-Missouria Substance Abuse and Behavioral Health Programs sponsor an open group for families touched by addiction from noon to 1 p.m. at the Otoe-Missouria Health Building. This is a confidential group. Call 580-723-4466 x252 or x262 for more information.

SECOND TUESDAY Cherokee Artists Association meeting at 202 E. 5th Street Tahlequah, Okla. Info: (918) 458-0008 or www. cherokeeartistsassociation.org

FOURTH THURSDAY Each month the American Indian Chamber of Commerce of Oklahoma - Eastern Chapter hosts a monthly luncheon at Bacone College, Muskogee, Okla. 11:30 a.m. at Benjamin Wacoche Hall. Please RSVP one week ahead of time. Phone: (918) 230-3759

EVERY 2ND SATURDAY Indian Taco Sales - from 11-2:30pm at OK Choctaw Tribal Alliance, 5320 S. Youngs Blvd, Oklahoma City www. okchoctaws.org

MON/WED AND THURS The Marble City Nutrition Center serves hot meals at the Marble City Community Center at 11:30 a.m. Meals are free to anyone over suggested to help with the expense of the program. Marble City Nutrition Center, 711 N. Main, Marble City, Okla. Phone: (918) 775-2158

YOUTH COUNCIL The Native Nations Youth Council (NNYC) bimonthly meetings from 6:30pm -8:30pm @ the Youth Services of Tulsa Activity Center (311 S. Madison - on 3rd just west of Peoria). Call to confirm location. Info Call: Chad Gilley (918) 382-2204 or nnyc@ihcrc.org

MAY 4

Indian Taco Sale 11:00 AM - 2:00 PM at Norman First American UMC, 1950 East Beaumont Drive, Norman, Okla. Call Ahead for Speedy Service. Free Delivery on Orders of 10 or More (405) 321-5640

Indoor Stomp Dance hosted by Sequoyah Schools dorm council, 7pm-11:30pm in SHS old school gym, Tahlequah. Raffles for cakes, grocery baskets and other items. Bring your chairs and shells/cans. For info. contact Amanda Little at 918-453-5193 or Mary Chanate at 918-660-1209

MAY 4-5 "Our Nations Energies" Health and Wellness Pow wow.Over $16,000 in prize money! GYM and Field House, Johnson County Community College 12345 College Blvd., Overland Park, Kansas. Call AIHREA at (855) 552-2424 Ext. 1 or www.AIHREA.

MAY 5

All you can eat breakfast fundraiser sponsored by the Yuchi/Euchee Heritage Festival. 7am-1pm Covenant Harvest Chapel, 722 N Hodge St., Sapulpa, Okla. Info call Kathy, 918-695-0195

MAY 6

Pawnee Nation Title VI Elders Program Benefit Mother's Day Dance at Pawnee Campgrounds. Gourd Dance at 2pm. Supper at 5pm. For more info call 1-918-762-4042

MAY 8

Lazy Stitch Beading Workshop, Museum of the Red River, 812 E Lincoln Rd, Idabel, Okla. Info call Jeanette Bohanan 580-286-3616

MAY 12 Stumbling Bear's Descendants Powwow 2pm -11pm, Red Buffalo Hall, Kiowa Complex, Carnegie, Okla. Call Jon for more info 580-530-9117

Gray Horse War Mothers Annual Soldier Dance at Gray Horse Indian Village, east of Fairfax, Okla., turn east on Harrison off HWY 18. Supper

3 drawings. Info call Margie Burkhart 918-816-2014 or Mary Elsberry 918-396-3314.

Okmulgee Indian Community/Activies Commitee Bingo and Food Sale starting @ 6 PM at Okmulgee Indian Community Center. Info call Amber Burgess 918-752-8420 or amber.burgess@okstate.edu

MAY 26 The Sac and Fox Nation Veteran's Organization 6th annual Memorial Day Gourd Dance & Powwow. Gourd Dancing Starts at 2pm. Traditional Dinner for all participants from 5pm until 6pm. Grand Entry at 7pm. We put a flag on every deceased vets' grave in 10

tribal cemeteries.

Art Class: Slate Rock Art Paintings by Bill McCulley at Council House Museum, 106 W. 6th Okmulgee, Okla. Students will learn to paint and Create artwork on slate rock found along the Illinois River in Oklahoma. Lessons in fundamentals of art will be taught to help the beginning painter. Class is limited to 20 people. Reserve your spot call 918-756-2324 or csago71@sbcglobal.net

JUNE 1

Indian Taco Sale 11:00 AM - 2:00 PM at Norman First American UMC, 1950 East Beaumont Drive, Norman, 10 a.m.-2 pm. Free.

at 5:30. Raffle tickets sold for Okla. Call Ahead for Speedy Service. Free Delivery on Orders of 10 or More (405) 321-5640

JUNE 2

Tinker Intertribal Powwow in Joe B. Barnes Regional Park in Midwest City, Okla. from 1:00 p.m. to 11:00 p.m. Interested vendors or participants should contact Corene Chakenatho at (405) 734-7366.

JUNE 8

Chilocco Powwow in the Event Center of the First Council Casino, seven miles north of Newkirk, OK. Gourd dance begins at 2:00 p.m. with grand entry at 6:30. Featured will be the Apache Fire Dance. Contact Garland Kent, Sr at 580-352-2670.

JUNE 8-10 Red Earth Festival, Cox Convention Center, Oklahoma City

JUNE 10-16 Jim Thorpe Native American Games at Remington Park, Oklahoma City. Proceeds benefit the Jim Thorpe Bright Path Youth Programs and Awakening The Spirit Diabetes Prevention and Control program. Contact Annetta Abbott: 405-208-9253 www.jimthorpegames.com

JUNE 14 Iowa Tribe of Oklahoma 4th Annual Golf Tournament

kicking off Iowa Tribal

Powwow - 8am at Cimarron Trails in Perkins, Okla. Registration begins at 7am. Info call Linda Andre 405-547-5352 Ext 23

JUNE 16

The 17th Annual Oklahoma Indian All-State Basketball Games at the sports center on the Oklahoma Wesleyan University campus in Bartlesville. Games will start at 6:00 P.M. For more info: contact us 918-642-3162, paradox@valornet.com

JUNE 23

Creek Council House Museum's Indian Art Festival 106 W. 6th, Okmulgee, OK; 10:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. For Free Booth Space or Register into $1000 Art Competition Contact: csago71@sbcglobal.net; 918-756-2324

JUNE 30 47th Annual Coker Reunion, Masonic Building, 1729

HWY 9 West, Seminole, Okla. All descendants of London Coker and wife Mary Washburn are invited. Potluck meal at Noon. For more info call 405-382-3044.

JULY 6

Indian Taco Sale 11:00 AM - 2:00 PM at Norman First American UMC, 1950 East Beaumont Drive, Norman, Okla. Call Ahead for Speedy Service. Free Delivery on Orders of 10 or More (405) 321-5640

Art as a vehicle: Expressing cultural, historical ideals

His pieces are displayed in museums, galleries, government buildings and homes in locations around the world.

LARISSA COPELAND Choctaw Nation of Oklahoma

DURANT, Okla. – To represent the tribe as a presenter at Choctaw Days at the Smithsonian's National Museum of the American Indian (NMAI) is a huge, humbling honor, says artist D.G. Smalling of Oklahoma City, an honor that helps to affirm the skills and ideals he has dedicated his life to representing.

"Number one, to be there with the tribe is a very important thing; it validates me as an artist. It validates, too, that the nation sees value in it. That is exciting to me, that I'll be there presenting with my peers," he says.

"Second, the Smithsonian is a big thing, huge," he adds. "To be there, to just be present for this, it means a lot. I grew up as a kid going to the Smithsonian and I always get excited about it."

Creating art has been a lifelong venture for Smalling, though he's only been at it professionally for nine years. Though his Choctaw roots are prevalent in his work, his methods are varied and his influences vast. Smalling is quick to point out that his style is such that he can't be boxed into any particular category.

"I'm an artist," he asserts, "not just a 'Native artist.' I'm Native, yes, but I am adamant about not being pigeonholed with who I am as an artist. I need the flexibility."

It was this diversity that has made different cultures seek out and appreciate his work. His first piece exhibited to the public was in a Cuban gallery in Miami, Fla., something that helped affirm to himself that he was being taken seriously in the field.

"The fact that it was a non-Native gallery that exhibited my art authenticated to me that I am an artist," he says. "It showed me that subject matter wasn't what was important. It was the skill of my technique that attracted them to my

Today, his pieces are displayed in museums, galleries, government buildings and homes in locations around the world. Smalling creates in many formats, from painting and drawing, to sculptures of steel and glass. "My art is proportionate, fluid."

Working with Choctaw hieroglyphs, one technique he often uses is a contemporary "one line" format, the drawing of a single, constant line without interruption to create intricately detailed sketches. "I use the old ways but keep it modern," he says. "That's exciting to me."

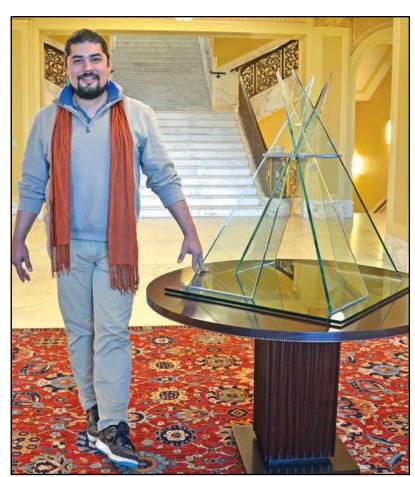

His methods are also simple and done with commonly used tools, such as Sharpie® markers and pens. "I want kids to be able to see what I do and what I use so they'll realize, 'hey, I can do that,' when they see that my tools are readily available," he says, crediting the diversity of exposure to other artists and situations throughout his life.

Smalling grew up in Idabel and Haworth, but then at age 8, he and his family packed up and left southeastern Oklahoma to do missionary work overseas. Together, they lived in Switzerland, Cameroon, and South Africa, where he was continually influenced both politically and artistically by his travels and exposure to other cultures

After graduating high school in South Africa, while his parents continued their missionary work in numerous countries around the world, Smalling returned to the United States to attend the University of Oklahoma where he earned his degree in political science. Today, while creating art feeds one passion, his full-time job in Oklahoma Supreme Court Justice Yvonne Kauger's Sovereignty Symposium office, fuels another passion for him – educating tribal members.

"I owe a debt to my tribe," he explains. "My great-grandmother, it would have been so easy for her to forget, to not carry on the language, the culture. We could have disappeared so easily. But she refused. My faith and my debt is so much that I have to continue it. It's a beautiful obligation.

"It is important for us to remember that someone far back in our families felt strongly enough that we need to be Choctaw, that in the face of everything that tried to submit it, to beat it out of them,

LARISSA COPELAND | COURTESY CHOCTAW NATION OF OKLAHOMA

Choctaw artist D.G. Smalling poses with a sculpture he created using glass and steel. The four-sided tipi, which he says represents tribal, state, and federal judicial systems working together in unison and with necessary transparency, is prominently displayed in the Oklahoma Judicial Center's Supreme Court Reception Room in Oklahoma City.

they refused," he continued. "That's why I refuse. I celebrate it that we survived. That's why I say there is a debt. This is who I am and I'm proud of that."

Along with the responsibility of educating and empowering of tribal members, he believes strongly for tribes to encourage the output of quality art and Native-created items. "We fought long and hard to control our art," he says, referring to the Indian Arts and Crafts Act of 1990. "It's important that we understand and respect that."

He says tribes can ensure that idea by developing an artist registry with quality artists who accurately reflect its history and views. "Outside people go to the registry when seeking out art from a particular tribe and registries are often their starting point. The registry reflects back on the tribe and is why the artists need to be vetted – to ensure the tribe is represented in the right way. The quality is just as important as who is making it."

Smalling plans to take that to heart when he presents at Choctaw Days at the NMAI in Washington, D.C. There, he will display his work and do demonstrations, along with lectures and presentations on the Choctaw Code Talkers. Smalling is a great-grandson of World War I Code Talker Calvin Wilson.

Choctaw Days will take place at the NMAI from June 20-23. The public is encouraged to visit the event and experience Smalling's artwork and knowledge, along with additional artists, dancers and others representing the tribe, and take part in a memorable, rich Choctaw cultural experience.

Additionally, Smalling can be heard every Saturday morning hosting a radio program on Oklahoma City station, The Spy FM. His hour-long show is dedicated to discussing pertinent topics and trends with leaders and friends in Indian country, and also showcasing the music of Native artists, giving them a platform to show their diversity and talent. Podcasts and apps to remotely listen to his show are available for download on www.TheSpyFM.com/shows/ndn-country/.

Sequoyah prepares for alumni weekend

TAHLEQUAH, Okla.— The first weekend in May has become known to the Sequoyah Schools' alumni and staff as the annual "alumni weekend." The event is a homecoming of sorts for graduates of the past, and a time for anyone who has ever been a part of Sequoyah Schools to come home and see their friends, classmates and former teachers.

The Sequoyah Alumni Association has put together a host of events to give alums ample opportunities to come home, celebrate and share their memories of Sequoyah.

"Anyone with a connection to Sequoyah is invited to attend," said Wauneta Sanders, event coordinator and Sequoyah alumnus.

The weekend will kick off with a taco sale and auction in the Tsa La Gi community meeting room at 5 p.m. on Friday, May 4.

Saturday will be filled with an alumni golf tournament at the Cherokee Trails Golf Course at 8 a.m., a family picnic and annual business meeting at 12:30 p.m. in the lower level of Sequoyah Schools' The Place Where They Play, and a banquet at 5 p.m. in the Sequoyah Schools' cafeteria followed by a social, dance and gospel singing at locations to be announced. Banquet tickets are $10 each and may be purchased at the door

Events will wrap up on Sunday, May 6, with a breakfast at 8:30 a.m. in the Sequoyah Schools' cafeteria. Breakfast is $3 per person.

For more information on the alumni golf tournament, please contact Jefferson Adair at 918-458-0878. For more information on all of the alumni events, visit the Sequoyah Alumni Association website at www. sequoyahalumni.net.

POWWOW

Continued from Page 1

bleachers as spectators lifted up their cameras and smartphones to catch some of the action.

Whitehouse said Gathering of Nations is still much like it was when it first started more than two decades ago – a chance for younger generations to meet with elders, hear their stories and talk about how things have changed and the progress made by Native people.

"It's the perfect example of how we pass down our history," he said.

Inside this issue:

- Weaving Native culture into corporate culture
- Immersion school using garding to teach
- Comanche Museum wins national award

TODAY'S INDEPENDENT INDIAN NEWS

- A FREE PUBLICATION

WWW.NATIVETIMES.COM

VOLUME 18 + ISSUE 19

PUBLISHED WEEKLY

MAY 11, 2012

U.N. investigator visits Tulsa, hears Indian Country concerns

■ S. James Anaya will provide a public report documenting the situation Indigenous people face in the United States in an upcoming session of the UN Human Rights Council.

DANA ATTOCKNIE Native American Times

TULSA, Okla. - After six weeks in the first grade, Beverly Patchell's grandson decides, "I don't want to be Indian anymore; they're bad."

Patchell provided personal testimony as an example of how the inaccurate portrayal of Indigenous people in history books, prejudice and overall education barriers affect Indigenous people. She was one of more than 30 Indigenous leaders who took turns voicing concerns to United Nations Special Rapporteur S. James Anaya on May 3 at the University of Tulsa (TU).

Anaya spent 12 days in the U.S. listening to Indigenous leaders in the District of Columbia, Arizona, Alaska,

Washington State, South Dakota, and Oklahoma. He is beginning an investigation, the first of its kind, which will measure how state and federal laws, policies and programs in the United States mirror the principles of the U.N. Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples. The declaration was passed by the U.N. General Assembly in September 2007. The United States initially voted against the declaration in 2007, but later endorsed it in December 2010.

Patchell, who represented the Alaska Natives Nursing Association, said Indigenous

See CONCERNS Continued on Page 4

NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES PHOTO | DANA ATTOCKNIE

United Nations Special Rapporteur S. James Anaya greets an attendee May 3 at the University of Tulsa. Anaya spent 12 days in the U.S. listening to Indigenous leaders in the District of Columbia, Arizona, Alaska, Oregon, Washington State, South Dakota and Oklahoma.

Bank freezes C&A tribes' accounts

RANDY ELLIS The Oklahoman

CONCHO, Okla. (AP) A Clinton bank issued an administrative freeze on bank accounts of the Cheyenne and Arapaho Tribes of Oklahoma - prompting tribal leaders to declare a state of emergency Friday and announce that tribal assistance to the elderly, poor, children and medically needy could be drastically cut.

Tribal employees will be trimmed to a 32-hour workweek starting next week, said Lisa Liebl, a tribal spokeswoman. The tribe has several hundred employees, she said.

The tribes' Lucky Star casinos at Concho, Clinton, Canton, Watonga and Hammon are expected to continue normal operations, although that could change as tribal officials continue to evaluate the crisis, she said.

"We are presently looking at all our options and will not take our eyes off the goal of getting the funds restored and the essential governmental services provided," disputed tribal Gov. Janice Prairie Chief-Boswell said in a prepared statement.

Janice Prairie Chief-Boswell

The First Bank and Trust Co. of Clinton took action to freeze the accounts Tuesday amid a billowing conflict over tribal leadership.

Boswell and Leslie Wandrie-Harjo have been quarreling for more than a year over which of the two is the tribes' lawful

The dispute has polarized tribal members and sparked protests and fist fights.

Caught in the middle is the First Bank and Trust Co. of Clinton, which maintains the majority of the tribes' major bank accounts, said Scott Meacham, the bank's attorney.

The governor of the tribes is

See BANK Continued on Page 2

Ariz. Apache Tribe in turmoil over ballot flap

■ There also have been power struggles within New York's Seneca Nation of Indians, Arizona's Hopi Nation and the Cheyenne and Arapaho Tribes in Oklahoma.

SUSAN MONTOYA BRYAN Associated Press

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) -An arrest warrant has been issued for the chairman of Arizona's White Mountain Apache Tribe, as four candidates who were denied a spot on the ballot question the outcome of a recent tribal council election. David Jordan, a New Mexico attorney who represents the candidates, said May 3 he plans to take the case to federal court. He contends his clients' rights to participate in the electoral process were violated. "I've never seen anything like this," Jordan told The Associated Press. "The government is simply refusing to follow tribal court orders. The tribal police department refuses to follow court orders. Democracy is 100 percent broken down."

Four council seats were up for grabs in April's general election. Jordan said his clients qualified but that longtime Tribal Chairman Ronnie Lupe directed the council to keep them off the ballot.

The arrest warrant naming Lupe stems from a tribal judge finding him in contempt last week for not appearing in court to address the election issues.

The judge had also ordered that last Wednesday's inauguration ceremony be put off, and that a "proper election" be scheduled. But the inauguration of new council members went on as Lupe and White Mountain Apache legal officials did not immediately return calls seeking comment.

Lupe has led the White Mountain Apache for more than 30 years. His administration is accused of ignoring the court's orders.

Previous orders by the tribal court that called for suspending Lupe and ordering the tribal election postponed also went ignored, prompting Chief Judge Reagan Armstrong Sr. to ask the Bureau of Indian Affairs to intervene. The call for Lupe's suspension came in December amid allegations of misconduct.

The Arizona tribe is not alone when it comes to tribal government being upended by internal politics.

New Mexico's Isleta Pueblo is wading through a similar dispute as the governor and council of that American Indian community push for restraining orders against two outspoken councilwomen questioned how tribal business was being conducted. The women also were criticized for starting a Facebook page and blog to voice their concerns.

In North Dakota, the Standing Rock Sioux Council voted at the end of March to keep Chairman Charles Murphy in his leadership post after hearing allegations that he acted improperly in making various personnel moves.

There also have been power struggles within New York's Seneca Nation of Indians, Arizona's Hopi Nation and the Cheyenne and Arapaho Tribes.

There are more than 560 recognized tribal governments across the United States. Each one has its own system of government, but it's rare for them to have a true separation of powers with distinct judicial, legislative and executive branches. The Navajo Nation is one of the few, if not only, examples, Jordan said.

"Most were set up as systems where

See APACHE Continued on Page 2

MOAPA BAND OF PAIUTE INDIANS PHOTO | HTTP://WWW.MOAPAPAIUTES.COM/ABOUT US.HTM

When coal is burned, carbon dioxide, sulfur dioxide, nitrogen oxides and mercury compounds are released into the air, according to the EPA. Research has shown those fine particles can be linked to serious health problems, including premature death.

Nevada tribe fights coal plant in pollution battle

CRISTINA SILVA Associated Press

MOAPA, Nev. (AP) - Kami Miller's heart flutters irregularly, she needs an inhaler to breathe and she's been diagnosed with thyroid problems. Even more troubling, her 12-year-old son already has the same health

For the Miller family, there is little doubt why they and their fellow tribal citizens living on the tiny Moapa Band of Paiutes reservation outside Las Vegas are struggling with a litany of medical problems. Steps away from their front doors, a 50-yearold, coal-burning power plant churns out a blanket of white and yellow smoke that hangs over their reservation and obscures the mountain views their people have long admired.

"We just want some clean air to breathe," Miller, 37, said.

The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency is on a decades-long mission to decrease air pollution from coal-fired power plants because of the thick haze they create that obscures the iconic views and stunning vistas listed as the authorized signatory on tribal accounts, Meacham said. Since Boswell and Harjo each claim to be governor, the bank finds itself in a quandary over whose signature it should recognize as legitimate in authorizing withdrawals or transfers of funds, he said.

See POLLUTION Continued on Page 3

The bank has asked Custer County District Judge Floyd Douglas Haught to resolve the banking issue. A hearing is set for June 8.

The specific bank accounts that were frozen were established to provide essential tribal governmental services, Liebl said.

Liebl said she didn't know the exact amount of frozen funds, but said she was told it was "millions of dollars."

"It's definitely a jolt," Liebl said. "These are funds used for federal programs and

"It's going to affect food vouchers to our elders," she said. "We are immediately halting all travel."

Liebl issued a news release Friday that contained a lengthy list of services the frozen accounts were set up to provide. The list included such things as shelter to homeless children, money to investigate child abuse and neglect, food and clothing assistance, head start education assistance, foster care programs, firefighter services and emergency medical assistance.

Freezing the tribes' bank accounts will not totally block tribal leaders' access to funds, since they have some smaller accounts in other banks and continue to receive cash flow from casinos, Meacham said.

"If they are motivated to pay employees, they have access to money to pay employees,"

Still, Meacham said banking officials know that freezing accounts could create hardships.

"It's certainly not something the bank took lightly," Meacham said. "It was done only as a last resort."

Meacham said the bank tried to come up with creative ways to keep the accounts open, including negotiating with Boswell and Harjo to try to work out an arrangement where both signatures would be required on checks until the leadership dispute is resolved.

That effort failed because of the bitterness of the dispute, he said. Banking officials eventually decided they had to take action, he Strange as it now seems, Boswell and Harjo ran on the same ticket and took office in January 2010, with Boswell serving as governor and Harjo as lieutenant governor.

They soon parted ways, however, with Boswell suspending Harjo for insubordination and Harjo turning to the tribal legislature and courts for assistance in ousting Boswell.

The dispute has escalated, with each setting up competing administrations. Boswell continues to operate out of the tribal headquarters in Concho, while Harjo and her allies have set up an office in El Reno. Each side recognizes different tribal court judges, who have issued conflicting rulings.

Harjo and Boswell factions issued competing news releases Thursday and Friday -each blaming the other for the current crisis.

"Ms. Harjo's continuous, greedy quest for control and power has certainly gone too far this time, jeopardizing essential governmental services to both Cheyenne and Arapaho Tribal members and nonmembers alike," states the news release by Boswell's faction.

Harjo responded: "If Boswell upheld the Cheyenne and Arapaho Constitution with an honest and transparent government, there would be absolutely no reason for the bank to immediately 'administratively' freeze our companies.

The tribe claims 12,185 enrolled tribal citizens, 8,664 of whom live in Oklahoma, according to Wikipedia.

Judge throws out tribes' Sioux nickname lawsuit

DAVE KOLPACK Associated Press

FARGO, N.D. (AP) - A judge has thrown out a federal lawsuit by a committee of tribal citizens trying to save the University of North Dakota's Fighting Sioux nickname, an issue that has been debated on several fronts since the NCAA in 2005 declared the moniker hostile and abusive.

The suit was filed against the NCAA by several members of the Spirit Lake Sioux tribe and one member of the Standing Rock Sioux. It asked for at least $10 million and a reversal of the NCAA policy banning the use of American Indian imagery in post-season competition.

The NCAA filed a motion in December to dismiss the lawsuit, saying the tribes lacked standing to bring it and their claims that the tribes' civil and religious rights were violated are not supported by facts. A federal judge ruled late Tuesday in favor of the governing body of college athletics.

Reed Soderstrom, the tribal committee's lawyer, said he planned to meet with other attorneys to see if there's a "crack in the door" for an appeal.

"It has been a rough day, but there were no guarantees," Soderstrom said.

NCAA spokesman Christianson said in a statement that the court made the right decision and "agreed that the plaintiffs had no viable claims, their rights were not violated and the NCAA's championships policies are lawful."

U.S. District Judge Ralph Erickson, a graduate of the UND law school, began his written explanation by summarizing the firestorm that has divided supporters of the Grand Forks university.

"Spanning a spectrum of protests for and against the name, tribal resolutions, state laws and fierce public debate, the NCAA's championship policy has created significant turmoil with the state of North Dakota over the propriety and continued use of the Fighting Sioux nickname," Erickson wrote.

The fight began when the NCAA told 19 schools to get rid of American Indian nicknames or risk sanctions. Some of the schools got permission from namesake tribes and were allowed to keep the nickname. UND received approval from Spirit Lake, but Standing Rock refused to hold a vote on the issue.

The North Dakota Legislature opted to take on the NCAA, passing a bill in early 2011 requiring UND to use the nickname and Indian head logo. The law was repealed eight months later after NCAA officials told state representatives it would not budge on penalties.

A citizen's group then gathered signatures to put the issue to a statewide vote in June. The state Supreme Court refused to block that election when asked to rule on whether the law is constitutional.

Legal bills obtained earlier by The Associated Press show the legal fight over the nickname vote has cost taxpayers more than $46,000 in lawyers' fees.

"I still think there are some more peaks and valleys ahead between the ballot measures and everything that is going on," Soderstrom said. "The people get to decide, and that's the beauty of this whole thing."

In his ruling on the Spirit Lake and Standing Rock committee's lawsuit, Erickson noted the NCAA is a private association free to govern its members as it sees fit. Many of the committee's arguments, he said, were "entirely without merit, and the ones that could potentially have been meritorious could only have properly been brought by UND."

Even if the school brought action, Erickson said, it would be an iffy proposition.

The Spirit Lake reservation is located entirely within the state of North Dakota, whereas the Standing Rock reservation straddles the border between North Dakota and South Dakota, with its tribal headquarters in Fort Yates, N.D. Some nickname supporters have argued Standing Rock's interest in the issue is tempered because many members live in South Dakota.

Soderstrom acknowledged his group "hung our hats" on a 1969 pipe ceremony held on the UND campus when a delegation from Standing Rock and at least one representative from Spirit Lake reportedly bestowed to the university permanent rights to use the nickname.

Erickson rejected the committee's argument that the NCAA was violating that contract.

"While the court respects the sanctity and solemnity that tribal traditions richly deserve, the 1969 pipe ceremony has no legal significance on the facts as pled by the committee," Erickson said.

Beer companies seek dismissal of suit

GRANT SCHULTE

Associated Press

LINCOLN, Neb. (AP) - Beer vendors in a tiny Nebraska town would be forced to discriminate against residents of a neighboring South Dakota American Indian reservation if a judge agrees with a lawsuit accusing the retailers and others of knowingly contributing to the reservation's alcohol-related problems, attorneys said in asking for the lawsuit to be dismissed.

The argument is among several made in motions filed April 27 asking a judge to dismiss the $500 million lawsuit filed by the Oglala Sioux Tribe against some of the world's largest beer makers, as well as their distributors and the four beer stores in the reservation border town of Whiteclay.

The lawsuit asks that breweries, retailers and distributors pay damages for health care and law enforcement costs, developmental problems in children and other alcohol-related problems on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation. Thetribe also wants a judge to restrict alcohol sales in Whiteclay.

Lawyers for the beer companies said in court papers that such an order would force Whiteclay's beer stores to discriminate against American Indians from Pine Ridge.

"The absurdity of this request cannot be understated," said Jerald Rauterkus, an attorney for State Line Liquor in Whiteclay. The tribe "is seeking an order from this court that would actually command retail defendants to refuse the sale of their otherwise publicly available goods to members of the Oglala Sioux Tribe who live on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation based solely on their race and ethnicity."

Alcohol officially is banned on Pine Ridge, a reservation with an estimated 40,000 residents that spans an area about the size of Connecticut. Roughly 5,700 residents live in Pine Ridge village, the reservation's largest town, which sits 2 miles north of Whiteclay.

Whiteclay has a population of 11 people and sold the equivalent of 4.3 million, 12-ounce cans of beer last year. Tribal leaders and activists blame the Whiteclay businesses for chronic alcohol abuse and bootlegging on Pine

One in four children born on the reservation suffer from fetal alcohol syndrome or fetal alcohol spectrum disorder, and the average life expectancy is estimated between 45 and 52 years - the shortest in the Northern Hemisphere except for Haiti, according to the lawsuit. The average American life expectancy is 77.5 years.

The tribe's attorney, Tom White, has said if the lawsuit is allowed to go forward, he also will argue Nebraska officials have failed to enforce their own laws by allowing beer sales that far surpass the amount that can be legally consumed.

Robert Keith, an attorney for the Arrowhead Inn store in Whiteclay, said the lawsuit's claims are "speculative, at best," and argued a ruling in the tribe's favor wouldn't solve its problems.

"How can the plaintiff's alleged injuries be traced specifically to Arrowhead Inn's actions, as opposed to other alcoholic beverage retailers around the Midwest, United States, or members of plaintiff's tribe who potentially produce alcoholic beverages in the privacy of their home?" Keith wrote in court Randall Goyette, an attorney for the Jumping Eagle Inn store in Whiteclay, said the alcohol problems on Pine Ridge "can only be due to personal conduct.

"The alleged harm cannot occur without several intervening acts of independent individuals: leaving the reservation; purchasing beer; illegally smuggling beer onto the reservation; illegally consuming the beer on the reservation or illegally reselling the beer to others on the reservation for consumption," he said.

Goyette said a ruling in the tribe's favor would create a "paradigm shift" in the way alcohol is sold nationwide.

"Manufacturers would be forced to analyze the sales data of each and every one of its distributors and retailers to ensure that it was not selling too much of a product such that it was exposing itself to possible liability for public nuisance," he said.

APACHE

effectively the chairman runs everything," he said. "Everything flows through the chairman's office so it gives the chairman an enormous amount of power. If he starts abusing that power, there's not really a check to stop it."

In the case of the White Mountain Apache council candidates, they all qualified to be on the ballot. They're all over 18, are all tribal members, all filed nominating petitions, and all either live in the district they want to represent or have cattle grazing in that district, Jordan said.

Jordan acknowledged it's not easy to get the federal government involved in deciding such an issue for a sovereign tribe. However, he said at stake are rights granted through the Indian Civil Rights Act of 1968.

"The liberty rights of my clients have been so horribly abused in this situation that I think I can get the federal court to pay attention to what's going on," he said.

White Mountain Apache Tribe has nine council members who are elected to four-year terms.

The tribe has about 15,000 citizens, and its reservation is larger than Delaware and Rhode Island combined, according to its website.

A great looking website provides 24 hour advertising and is a key component to a good first impression! Sites starting at $999.95

Email: gadmin@ganica.net for more info.

www.ganica.net

PEARY L. ROBERTSON

ATTORNEY AT LAW (405) 382-7300

> INDIAN LAW PROBATE ADOPTIONS

RESTRICTED LAND ISSUES

SOCIAL SECURITY DISABILITY

J.D, Oklahoma City University; MBA, Cameron University; B.B.A. (Economics), University of Oklahoma

1700 N. MILT PHILLIPS AVENUE, SEMINOLE, OKLAHOMA VISIT US AT WWW.FACEBOOK.COM/PEARYROBERTSON

Northern Arapaho push federal appeal of taxation

BEN NEARY Associated Press

CHEYENNE, Wyo. (AP) - The Northern Arapaho Tribe continues to press its legal claim that tribal members shouldn't be subject to taxation by the state of Wyoming or Fremont County on privately owned lands around Riverton that lie within the historic boundaries of the Wind River Indian Reservation.

A federal appeals court panel in Denver is set to hear arguments from the Northern Arapaho next week. The tribe is appealing a federal judge's 2009 ruling that dismissed its legal challenge to the state and county's taxation authority.

The Arapahos' claim has implications beyond taxation issues and could affect environmental regulations and the state's authority to prosecute Native Americans for crimes committed in the area. And whatever the outcome, the case also underscores the difficulties that can arise when separate tribes share a common reservation.

"The tribe's immunity from state taxation in Indian Country is a critical part of tribal sovereignty," said Andy Baldwin, attorney for the Northern Arapaho. "The tribe is committed to protecting its sovereignty when the state overreaches."

U.S. District Judge Clarence Brimmer in Cheyenne ruled in 2009 that the Northern Arapaho Tribe's lawsuit couldn't proceed without the involvement of the Eastern Shoshone Tribe and the federal government.

Neither the Shoshone Tribe nor the federal government agreed to participate in the lawsuit. Brimmer ruled that because both have "sovereign immunity," meaning they generally have to consent to being sued, the Northern Arapaho couldn't force them to participate in the case.

The Northern Arapaho and the Eastern Shoshone share the Wind River Indian Reservation. Congress in 1905 opened more than 1.4 million acres there to possible settlement by Ultimately about 245,000 acres in the Riverton area went into private ownership, held by both Indians and non-Indians. The Northern Arapaho maintain that although the land went into private hands, it didn't end the land's legal status as Indian Country. The state disagrees.

Legal disputes over the status of the private lands, and the status of tribal members on those lands, have persisted for years.

For example, the U.S. Supreme Court last year declined to hear a Northern Arapaho man's claim that the state of Wyoming lacked authority to prosecute him for murder in his daughter's death.

Andrew John Yellowbear Jr. is serving a life sentence in state prison in the 2004 beating death of his infant daughter. Both the Wyoming Supreme Court and Brimmer previously rejected his argument that the area of Riverton where the girl was killed was legally still part of the reservation. Yellowbear unsuccessfully argued that he should have been tried in federal court because the state lacked jurisdiction in the case.

The status of the land also is an issue as the tribes seek to take over implementation of federal environmental laws.

The Northern Arapaho claim in their lawsuit that a Wyoming Supreme Court decision on water rights in the 1980s established that the contested area was still legally Indian Country.

If the 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals agrees with the Northern Arapaho, the case still must go back to federal district court for a trial on the taxation question. But, as Brimmer noted in dismissing the suit, the implications of the Northern Arapaho's case go far beyond whether the state can collect sales tax and car registration fees.

"(T)he 1905 Act area encompasses a vast area of nearly 1.5 million acres, and the state has long assumed jurisdiction over the area," Brimmer wrote. "To conclude that this area is in fact Indian country would effect a dramatic shift in jurisdiction. A judgment in the absence of the United States undoubtedly would prejudice its jurisdictional interests."

Martin L. Hardsocg, lawyer with the Wyoming Attorney General's Office, said he agreed the case's effects could be far-reaching.

"That's obviously the concern, is that whatever happens here, the question is whether there's jurisdiction on any count," Hardsocg said. "That's really what hangs in the balance on all of these, is that it could be argued that even though it's a tax case, it's a decision that would affect everything else."

Kimberly Varilek, attorney general of the Eastern Shoshone Tribe, said her office will continue to argue that the Northern Arapaho Tribe's lawsuit cannot proceed without the Eastern Shoshone's involvement. She said the Eastern Shoshone declined to waive its sovereign immunity because it didn't feel it was in the tribe's best interests to subject itself to federal litigation and be bound by a decision on the boundary

"That is the gateway question: Should we be forced to waive our tribal immunity to protect the entire reservation, tribal members on both sides, when the interest of filing federal litigation was primarily started with one tribe?" Varilek said. "That's a question has yet really to be addressed."

VINITA 918-256-5585

LANGLEY 918-782-0011

MONKEY ISLAND 918-257-8869

www.okstatebank.com Equal Housing Lender Native American Owned

tahlequahrecycling.com 918-316-5856 "Changing the culture of waste." TA

ΓIMES recycles with Tahlequah Recycling Incorporated... shouldn't you?

Judge rejects Kialegee's motion to dismiss suit

TULSA, Okla. (AP) – A tribe seeking to build a casino in Broken Arrow can't use sovereign immunity as an nullified "tribal immunity from suits argument to dismiss a lawsuit filed involving gaming activities," the Tulsa by the Oklahoma Attorney General's office, a federal judge has ruled.

sovereign immunity is not a defense because the lawsuit was brought against the tribe's officers and committee members in their official capacities, and also because Kialegee Tribal Town's be sued."

said in his order that Congress had World reported.

Attorneys for Town King Tiger Hobia The state successfully argued that had argued that the tribe was organized separately from its incorporation and that the "sue and be sued" corporate the property to the casino developers. charter clause had failed in other

'We are disappointed in the judge's corporate charter allows it "to sue and ruling on the motions but are confident that we will prevail on the merits,"

U.S. District Judge Gregory Frizzell said Dennis Whittlesey, an attorney suburb oppose the casino. They say it's representing the tribe.

> The state has argued in its lawsuit that the tribe doesn't have needed approvals from federal agencies to open a casino. The proposed facility sits on land allotted to two Muscogee Creek Nation members, who are subleasing Neighborhood Gaming said of Frizzell's Kialegee Tribal Town members also are members of the Creek Nation, but their headquarters are located in Wetumka in southeastern Oklahoma. A group of residents in the Tulsa May 16.

too close to schools and churches.

"It upholds everything we've been arguing so far about whether or not the defendants can legally do what they're doing," Jared Cawley, spokesman for Broken Arrow Citizens Against

The state is seeking a preliminary injunction to halt construction of the facility, which is ongoing. A hearing for the state's injunction request is set for

CUSTOM SEWING & ALTERATIONS

Retired Oklahoma Teacher

918-906-9025 gracie.cox@suddenlink.net

POLLUTION

associated with the nation's federal parks and wilderness areas. In southern Nevada, the Reid Gardner Generation Station bordering the Paiutes' reservation limits visibility at multiple parks and wilderness areas, including the Grand Canyon in Arizona, Zion in Utah and Joshua Tree National Monument in California.

But for the Paiute tribe, who have long lived off the land their ancestors settled hundreds of years ago, the campaign to make national parks more beautiful for tourists is a personal battle. If the coal plant is forced to limit its emissions, perhaps their health woes will also decrease, tribe elders sav.

"My people are dying from that thing," said Eric Lee, a tribe leader who has suffered from regular nose bleeds that he blames on the power plant's toxic emissions. "Especially on cloudy days, it smells, it stinks like rotten eggs."

The Moapa Paiute tribe has 300 members, roughly half of whom live under the shadow of Reid Gardner's four smokestacks. For years, tribe members have complained of skin irritation, lung disease, thyroid problems, aggravated asthma and heart disease. Their insistence that these medical problems can be linked to the foul air pouring from the plant has long been ignored, largely because there is no direct medical evidence to back up their claims.

The tribe pleaded for the EPA's intervention on Thursday, when the federal agency held its first public hearing at the reservation as part of the ongoing visibility campaign. For nearly four hours, dozens of reservation and southern Nevada residents described living with the coal plant: parents no longer letting their children play outside because of health fears, teenagers interrupting school sports games to reach for their inhalers and neighbors dying of heart trouble.

"It's so frustrating to see so many people have this type of illness and nothing is being done about it," William Anderson, the tribe council chairman, said.

The EPA has ordered coal plants to embrace new technologies designed to reduce pollutants that obscure visibility under the 1977 Clean Air Act. In the West, average visibility has dropped from 140 miles to between 35 to 90 miles. The goal is to protect what visibility remains, said Colleen McKaughan, an associate director in the EPA's air division.

"That haze obscures the scenery, especially out here in the West where a lot of people come to see the vistas," she McKaughan said the hearing at the reservation was not intended to address anecdotal health complaints. Still, she said the EPA is interested in valid medical problems caused

"We understand why they would prefer not to breathe this stuff. We totally get it," she

When coal is burned, carbon dioxide, sulfur dioxide, nitrogen oxides and mercury compounds are released into the air, according to the EPA. Research has shown those fine particles can be linked to serious health problems, including premature death. But the Moapa Paiute tribe can only rely on general data to back up their claims. Despite their health concerns, the tribe has been unsuccessful in persuading local, state and federal health officials to investigate their complaints.

The lack of direct evidence has stroked accusations that the tribe's medical problems have been exaggerated by environmental activists who want to see the coal plant shuttered.

ClarkCountyCommissioner Tom Collins, who represents Moapa, said the plant creates much needed jobs and tax dollars for the area.

"They are using those Indians as a vehicle to shut down the plant," Collins said of the environmental groups who want the facility closed. "As long as they are complying with the laws, (the plant) benefits the entire community."

The Reid Gardner facility provides enough electricity to power 335,000 Nevada households, according to NV Energy, the utility company that operates the plant. Under the EPA proposal, NV Energy would have five years to install nitrogen oxide burners, instead of more expensive selective catalytic emissions scrubbers that environmentalists claim do a better job of reducing emissions.

"We will continue our commitment to operate the Reid Gardner station in an environmentally responsible manner, in compliance with all federal and state laws, and in the best interests of its customers," spokesman Mark Severts said.

The Muddy River near the plant feeds into Lake Mead, the massive reservoir that serves Mexico, California, Nevada and Arizona.

"Second-rate pollution control is not good enough here," said Dan Galpern, a lawyer representing the tribe and the Sierra Club in Nevada.

RIBBON SHIRTS • TEAR DRESSES FORMAL WEAR • COSTUMES

Gracie Cox

Metal Roofing & Siding

Professional Construction and Home Repairs

Free Estimates

Charles Snell 918-507-2902

Native American Contractor

Stickball · Drawing · Fancy dancing · Beadwork Big Brothers Big Sisters Traditional language Shooting hoops

Think of the possibilities! Step up and mentor a Native American child. Commit to changing a child's future. Commit to creating an impact in your tribal community.

How it Works

Step One: Fill out an application at www.bbbsok.org Step Two: Submit application. Receive phone call from BBBS to set up an interview.

Step Three: Attend an in-person interview. Bring copy of Drivers License, Proof of Insurance, Three References and complete a criminal background check.

Step Four: Once approved — matched with a child with similar

Step Five: Pat on the back...you're making a difference!!!

All matches are supported by professional staff at local BBBS agencies. BBBS Match Support Specialists regularly consult with volunteers, children, and parents.

Want more information?

Contact Kristy Smithson, BBBSOK Manager of Native American Partnerships, by phone (405) 606-6309 or email kristy.smithson@bbbsok.org | www.bbbsok.org

NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES

Publisher & Editor LISA SNELL editor@nativetimes.com

Contributing Writers Dana Attocknie WESLEY MAHAN KAREN SHADE

Advertising Sales KATHLEEN ROBERTSON LISA SNELL ROB WALTON

> Distribution SHELBY HICKS STEVE LACY WESLEY MAHAN MICHAEL MARRIS KATHLEEN ROBERTSON Brenda Slaughter

advertising@nativetimes.con

The Native American Times, formerly the Oklahoma Indian Times, is published weekly (except the last week of the year) by Lisa Hicks Snell. Mailing address is PO Box 411 Tahleguah, OK 74465. All the contents within the Native American Times are copyrighted material. Any reproduction, redistribution without the written consent of the NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES is strictly

> Each week's issue is available for free download online at: www.nativetimes.com

Subscription rates: $65.00 for fifty-two issues, $32.50 for twenty-six issues, or $16.25 for thirteen issues. A single copy is $1.25 (Rates are for postage and handling) Send check or money order to:

> NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES Attn: Subscriptions P.O. Box 411 Tahlequah, OK 74465-0411

Phone: (918) 708-5838 Fax: (888) 689-4873

Postmaster: Send Change of Address Form 579 to: NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES P.O. Box 411, Tahlequah, OK 74465

WWW.NATIVETIMES.COM - News from the crossroads of Indian Country

UN fact finder on Indigenous rights wraps up visit

SUZANNE GAMBOA Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP)

- A United Nations fact finder surveying the lives of Native Americans and Alaska Natives said May 4 he'll recommend in an upcoming report that some of the tribes' lands be restored, including the Black Hills of South Dakota.

James Anaya, a U.N. special rapporteur, has been meeting with tribal leaders, the administration and Senate members over 12 days to assess U.S. implementation of the Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples. He plans several suggestions in his report, which he said he likely will deliver to the U.N.'s Human Rights Council in September.

Anaya said land restoration would help bring about reconciliation. He named the Black Hills as an example. He said restoring to indigenous people what they have a legitimate claim to can be done in a way that is not divisive "so that the Black Hills, for example, isn't just a reminder of the subordination and domination of indigenous peoples in that country."

The Black Hills, home to Mount Rushmore, are public land but are considered sacred by the Sioux tribes. The Sioux have refused to accept money awarded in a 1980 U.S. Supreme Court decision and have sought return of the land. The Black Hills and other lands were set aside for the Sioux in an 1868 treaty. But Congress passed a law in 1877 taking the land.

President Barack Obama endorsed the Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples in 2010, reversing a previous U.S. vote against it. It is intended to protect the rights of 370 million native peoples worldwide. Anaya is the first U.N. special rapporteur on rights of the indigenous to visit the U.S.

He met with several members of the executive branch and had the chance to brief members of the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs. He lamented he was unable to get individual meetings with members of Congress, noting that he usually meets with members of legislative bodies of countries he is visiting.

Anaya said he heard universal cries from the Native Americans and Alaska Natives for the federal government to protect their tribal sovereignty and for more ability to control their own affairs.

He added provisions in the Violence Against Women Act, recently approved in the Senate, give tribes the ability to prosecute people who commit violent crimes against Native American or Alaska Native women, even if they are not native peoples. That provision has been opposed by some Republicans in Congress. The House is expected to move on the act as soon as next week, with Republicans possibly drafting and pushing their own version.

Anaya said he met with tribes in Arizona, Alaska, Oregon, Washington State, South Dakota and Oklahoma both on reservations and in urban areas.

"In all my consultations with indigenous peoples in the places I visited it was impressed upon me that the sense of loss, alienation and indignity is pervasive throughout Indian Country," Anaya said.

"It is evident that there have still not been adequate measures of reconciliation to overcome the persistent legacies of the history of oppression and that there is still much healing that needs to be done," he said.

Online: USNR James Anaya: http://www.unsr. jamesanaya.org

Native American hiring preference?

Advertise to Native Americans! E-mail your ad for a quote to lisa@nativetimes.com

CONCERNS

Continued from Page

people need a safe environment for learning and mentioned the low numbers of Alaska Natives and American Indians in the nursing field and the obstacles they face getting into school. She also used her grandson's experience in school to demonstrate how an unhealthy learning environment can cause low self-esteem and feelings of inferiority in Indigenous people.

"My commitment is to help shed light on stories and perspectives," Anaya said. "My commitment is to convey an expression of hope."

Anaya first heard from a tribal judicial panel made up of the Hon. Charles Tripp, the Hon. Greg Bigler, and the Hon. Walter Echo-Hawk.

The justices spoke about tribal courts not being viewed as adequate by non-Native Americans, state and federal governments refusing to help tribes when asked, and injustices in federal Indian law.

Echo-Hawk examined the potential impact of the declaration on the future of federal Indian law and compared standards in the declaration against current U.S. federal law and policy to identify areas that need improvement or could benefit from reform.

"I think the potential impact of this declaration ... would result in eradicating the dark side, the bad side of federal Indian law and provide a stronger foundation for Indigenous rights in the United States ... (and) build equality and not discrimination, and democracy and good faith," Echo-Hawk said. "It becomes clear that U.S. law and policy does fail to comport or meet the U.N. standards in many important areas."

He identified nine key areas where U.S. policy fails Indigenous peoples including self-determination. He said the declaration views selfdetermination as an inherent right whereas U.S. law views it under the Plenary Power Doctrine where Congress can terminate that right at will. Echo-Hawk touched on a wide-range of injustices including the failure to making public mainstream media accountable. "We are invisible and ignored by the press," he Anaya then heard statements from leaders representing the Muscogee (Creek) Nation, Sac and Fox Nation, United Keetoowah Band of Cherokees, Kaw Nation, Euchee (Yuchi) Kickapoo Tribe, Tribe, Chickasaw Nation, Isle de Jean Charles Tribe, Pointe au Chien Tribe, Cherokee Nation of Oklahoma, Osage Headright Accounting, Alabama Ceremonial Grounds, Hickory Ceremonial Grounds, National Indian Youth Council, Wetlands Preservation Organization, Haskell Indian Nations University, Prairie Band of Potawatomi Veterans, American Indian Services in Detroit, Sand Creek Massacre Descendants, International Treaty Council, American Indian Movement (AIM), and Indigenous Environmental Network.

Concerns that have plagued Indigenous people for decades such as broken treaty promises, abuses suffered at boarding schools, veterans illegally taxed, stolen land, lingering litigation, and racial profiling were shown to still be unsettled, ignored and/or still prevalent.

"The oppressed got so used to being oppressed," David Hill, of AIM, said. "They target us because we have long hair, brown skin, and our car is 20 years old."

Hill, Choctaw, and Rodney Factor, Seminole, of the International Treaty Council both spoke about a duel system of justice and how jail and prison sentences are longer for Indigenous people versus other races. They also spoke about tactics used against Indigenous people to make them confess to crimes they didn't commit and not being provided the right to a free attorney.

Tewanna Edwards, spokesperson for Fellowship of American Indians Church in Chickasha, didn't provide oral testimony, but prepared a document for Anaya stating, "The dominant society has viewed us as less than human, both intellectually and other areas, from the days of the 'Doctrine of Discovery' to the present." She asked in the document, "How do you unlearn this mental attitude after generations of reinforcement? ... Does it start with recognizing the minorities being forced by the dominant society to exist with stereotyped, biased attitudes as just a way of life and not realizing to this day it is a violation of the minorities' human rights? As stated by some of our Indian people, 'That's just the way it is?"

Dr. Kay McGowen, Mississippi Choctaw, of the National Indian Youth Council spoke about the Civilization Fund Act of 1819 and the long lasting damage generations have suffered because their identity was lost at boarding schools. She said the US government should now fund extensive language programs since children lost their native language at boarding schools, and she also wants a full disclosure of what happened in boarding schools.

"I want names named," she proclaimed. "How many children died, (how many) pregnant girls were killed ... rectify the wrongs ... it's our declaration, let's make it work."

New challenges were also mentioned such as the Keystone Pipeline slated to barrel right through some tribal lands, tribes being asked to waive their sovereign immunity in order to receive grants, human trafficking, and coastal erosion. Some tribes continue to feel the damage caused by the BP oil spill and Hurricanes Katrina and Rita as well. Coastal tribes maintain their livelihood by fishing and those prospects are declining because of the erosion.

Recurring issues were federal recognition and protection of natural land and resources, improvements with Indian Child Welfare, domestic violence against women, arresting and prosecuting non-Native Americans on tribal land, and self-governance.

"We continue to struggle with self-determination," Muscogee (Creek) Nation Principal Chief George Tiger said. "We still are under dictation of how our tribal resources are utilized."

Tiger spoke about being forced to sign a tobacco compact with the State of Oklahoma, and also questioned "Why should businesses that operate in Indian Country not follow our laws?"

Other concerns were specific to tribes, such as the Sac and Fox Nation attempting to have the remains of tribal member Jim Thorpe repatriated, Osage headrights transferred to non-Native Americans with no accounting, Kickapoo tribal citizens who live in Mexico have difficulty returning to the states to participate in cultural ceremonies plus their burial practices being disrespected by the State Medical Examiner's Office when autopsies are performed on some of their citizens, and the IRS making an inquiry to the Chickasaw Nation about taxing citizens who receive general welfare assistance; where no cash is received from them, such as education and health care aid.

Also on the minds of leaders was how to protect the culture and heritage of their people. Bobby Yargee of the Alabama Ceremonial Grounds said they only have a handful of their elders left and some of their young citizens don't bother to ask what some of their ceremonial songs mean.

"We want to continue to exist," he said. "We want to continue to teach our young ones the way of our ancestors."

Millicent Pepion, a Blackfeet student from Haskell Indian Nations University, began speaking to Anaya in her Native tongue as other leaders did throughout the session. She spoke about the importance of teaching the next generation, "how to build positive relationships with the environment through language revitalization, traditional storytelling, and ceremonial and traditional cultural practices ... "

She spoke about the Trail of Broken Promises, a journey that will take Haskell students from the Wakarusa Wetlands in Lawrence, Kan. on May 13 to Washington DC on July 9. The journey aims to bring awareness to the protection of sacred places.

"In Kansas, most of the wetlands have been drained or lost at a rate that parallels the decline of population of Native peoples indigenous to Kansas," Pepion said. "The Trail of Broken Promises is asking for help from local, state, tribal, and federal agencies in the hope that they will endorse policies that protect our land and cultures. Our children are counting on us."

In a statement at the conclusion of his US visit, Anaya mentioned how sacred sites like the San Francisco Peaks in Arizona and the Black Hills in South Dakota have a "profound religious and cultural significance to tribes."

"It is important to note, in this regard, that securing the rights of indigenous peoples to their lands is of central importance to indigenous peoples' socioeconomic development, self-determination, and cultural integrity," Anaya stated. "Continued efforts to resolve, clarify, and strengthen the protection of indigenous lands, resources, and sacred sites should be made."

Anaya said Indigenous people can still submit a report of their concerns to Anaya by sending them via e-mail to: indigenous@ohchr.org, or fax to: +41 – 22 917 90 06, or mail to: Special Rapporteur on the rights of indigenous peoples, c/o OHCHR-UNOG, Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights, Palais Wilson, 1211 Geneva 10, Switzerland. Specific information on how to submit information can be found at unsr.jamesanaya. org/.

Anaya will provide a public report documenting situation Indigenous people face in the United States in an upcoming session of the UN Human Rights Council. He will note the "good practices and needed reforms" the U.S. has or needs in regard to complying with the U.N. Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples. His concluding statement about his U.S. visit mentions he also met with state and executive federal branch officials: however his attempts to meet with U.S. Congress members were unsuccessful.

Anaya is a Regents professor and the James J. Lenoir professor of Human Rights Law and Policy at the University of Arizona. He was appointed as the special rapporteur on the rights of Indigenous peoples in March 2008 by the UN Human Rights Council.

NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES

Name:
Address:
City:	_ State: Zip:
Phone:
<ul><li>□ $65.00 for 52 issues</li><li>□ $16.25 for 13 issues</li><li>□ $1.25 single copy</li></ul>

Mail this form with a check or money order to: Native American Times • P.O. Box 411 Tahlequah, OK 74465 • 918-708-5838

We proudly offer an array of services, from general dentistry to sedation, dental implants, and cosmetic dentistry - all designed expressly to meet our patient's changing needs. With four general dentists and four hygienists, we can maintain your oral health for a lifetime all at one location.

We Accept Contract Health & Sooner Care

We serve patients in the Drumright, Cushing, Stillwater, Stroud, Ponca City, and surrounding areas with personalized service and exemplary care. Call for your appointment today.

918-352-3312 or Toll Free 877-RH Melton drumrightdentalcenter.com

COMMENTARY

lacksquare

lacktriangle

"Drill baby drill" is coming to Indian country

TIM GIAGO
(Nanwica Kciji)
Notes from Indian Country
© 2012 Unity South Dakota

The oil boom is coming to South Dakota, "Not if, but when," according to those in the know, including Governor Dennis Daugaard.

The apprehension for the coming explosion is ambivalent. South Dakotans, including those Native Americans living on the Indian reservations that may be caught in the middle of the oil development companies and the protestors that are sure to come, are looking at what is happening in the Bakken oil boom in North Dakota.

According to an article by Talli Nauman, the Health and Environment Editor for Native Sun News, a Native American weekly newspaper based in Rapid City, "The volume of drilling applications in the Bakken shale formation ballooned 500percent during the past five years, half of it on American Indian mineral estates. Since 2007 applications to drill on Fort Berthold, the home of the Three Affiliated Tribes, in the heart of the Bakken, have gone from 0 to 175. More than $3 million in drilling permit fees were collected in fiscal 2011."

Tribal Chairman Tex Hall made a recent trip to Washington, D. C. in order to point out to the Congress the good and the bad of this sudden boom. The oil impact promptedHalltoaskCongress for housing to support a new health facility, funds to address the severe damage that oil and gas development has caused to the roads on the reservation. Hall said, "One of the problems is a total lack of available housing within 100 miles of our reservation.

Even when housing does open up, two and three bedroom homes are now renting for in excess of $2,500 per month."

Hall said that none of the roads on the reservation were built to handle the types of heavy equipment and heavy trucks used by the oil and gas companies. "Those roads have been almost totally destroyed by the oil and gas related traffic," he said.

Several traffic accidents, including one that took the lives of five family members, were caused by the damage to the roads and to the heavy equipment using the roads. "I feel every day that I will get a call telling me that a school bus full of children had tipped over killing a number of students," Hall said.

These are the things now under study by the State of South Dakota and the Indian reservations.

There was speculation that the area around the Badlands on the Pine Ridge Reservation would be a rich source of crude oil because it was a part of an inland sea millions of years ago and was the home to thousands of dinosaurs. But oil doesn't come from dead dinosaurs, but from the remains of single celled creatures known as diatoms.

The USA uses 17 million barrels of oil every day. Petroleum accounts for nearly 40 percent of this Nation's energy. It takes the equivalent of 7 gallons of gasoline per day for every man, woman and child to keep this country running at its current pace. And finally, according to the Department of Energy, the United States is home to 5 percent of the world's population, yet consumes 26 percent of the world's energy.

These are all frightening and appalling statistics. Oil is not a renewable resource and it is being used up faster than anyone could have foreseen 50 years ago.

South Dakota can expect to see many scientists and engineers conducting explorations for oil in the coming years. According to the DOE, "Crude oil is a smelly, yellow-to-black liquid and is usually found in underground areas called reservoirs. Scientists and engineers explore a chosen area by studying rock samples from the earth. Measurements are taken and if the site seems promising, drilling begins."

There have been reports of drilling near one of the most sacred sites of the Lakota and other Indian tribes at Bear Butte. So far there have only been cursory protests from the Lakota.

"Drill baby drill" may be the mantra of both political parties as we draw closer to the 2012 presidential elections.

Department of the Interior Secretary Ken Salazar unveiled accountability measures to aid oil and gas development on public and Indian trust lands in North and South Dakota and in other states. He said, "Interior is committed to expanding safe and responsible oil and gas development on public and Indian trust lands."

Those Native Americans with long memories will recall the debacle brought to the Indians of Oklahoma when oil was king in that state. There is sure to be a battle between the traditionalists and the progressives when it comes to drilling for oil and natural gas on Indian reservation lands because there are still those Native Americans who value Mother Earth more than the almighty dollar.

A final warning from Chairman Hall, "If the federal government truly wants to see oil and gas development within the boundaries of the Unites States, it has to take responsibility for the damage that this type of production causes to its own federal roads and small communities like Mandan/Hidatsa/Arikara."

Greed is a mighty motivator so Indian nations with oil beneath the surface of their lands: Beware, because "drill baby drill" is coming your way.

Tim Giago, an Oglala Lakota, is President of Unity South Dakota. He was a Nieman Fellow at Harvard with the Class of 1990. His weekly column won the H. L. Mencken Award in 1985. He was the founder of The Lakota Times, Indian Country Today, Lakota Journal and Native Sun News. He can be reached at UnitySoDak1@knology.net

A solid record of achievements for Indian Country

KIMBERLY TEEHEE

Some people may be surprised to learn that this blog is my last from the White House. Earlier this year, I decided to move on to new endeavors, but I am heartened that I leave my position in good hands as my successor will continue to fulfill President Obama's commitment to address the many important issues facing Indian Country.

Words cannot fully capture the joy and privilege of working for President Obama and his administration as the first Senior Policy Advisor for Native American Affairs in the White House Domestic Policy Council. There are actually several firsts in this administration. Hilary Tompkins (Navajo Nation) is the first Native American solicitor of the Department of the Interior. Brad Carson (Cherokee Nation) is the first Native American general counsel of the Department of Army. Dr. Yvette Roubideaux (Rosebud Sioux Tribe) is the first woman director of the Indian Health Service. Tracie Stevens (Tulalip Tribes) is the first chairwoman of the National Indian Gaming President Commission. Obama's commitment to addressing the many issues facing Indian Country put in motion a widespread standard of action that is reflected in his administration's record of Native American accomplishments, and these appointments ensuring greater representation of Native Americans in his administration provide just one example. I've had the great honor of working with every Cabinet agency to develop and implement our policy initiatives and legislative proposals. And working together, we have achieved much, though we know more remains to be Having held this position since 2009, I will cherish my memories pertaining to the three White House Tribal Nations Conferences, the administration's consultation with Indian Country on education, health, economic growth and public safety policies, and its support for legislation that promotes tribal self-determination. In my time here I was also able to witness the resolution of several significant and longstanding disputes that had for too long clouded the shared history of the United States and Indian tribes. And I am deeply grateful for the opportunity to work towards the administration's support of proposed legislation that will bring justice to Native American victims of domestic violence. I was pleased to witness the Senate passage of the bipartisan Violence Against Women Reauthorization Act, which included tribal-jurisdiction provisions supported by the administration. These are important items indeed and are examples of the Obama administration's efforts to strengthen the relationship with tribal governments. However, my most precious moments involve the policy discussions between my dedicated and talented colleagues and wise tribal leaders. Through these important interactions improved emerged an relationship and better policies.

President Obama's deep and abiding belief that tribal leaders should and must have a voice in the development of a policy agenda for Indian Country is truly extraordinary. Since my first day of service in the White House, I have been a part of a team much larger than the constituency I serve. This White House honors and respects its relationship with Indian tribes and includes Indian Country in its broader policy initiatives. administration is informed about Indian Country's needs and because of that, we can make informed decisions. I am excited for the future of Indian Country. I could not feel more blessed than I do right now knowing that I played a small part in improving the lives of Native Americans.

I look forward to my life post service spending more time with my family. I hope our paths cross again. As we say in Cherokee, wa-do, doda-da-go-hv-i. Thank you. Until we meet again.

Kimberly Teehee is a former senior policy advisor for Native American Affairs in the White House Domestic Policy Council and a Cherokee Nation citizen.

The viewpoints expressed in columns and letters are the opinions of the writers and not necessarily the opinion or viewpoint of the Native American Times publisher or staff. Send letters to editor@nativetimes.com. Please keep letters to 350 words or less. Sign your name, tribal affiliation and city of residence for verification purposes.

Reeves Renovations

Professional Construction, Remodeling & Repairs

Bathrooms • Kitchens • Paint • Tile • Trim
Plumbing • Electrical • Solar Panels
Windmills • Winterizing
Quality Work • Free Estimates

Serving Mayes & Cherokee Counties –

918-637-6736

johnwilliamreeves@juno.com

SUPERNAW'S OKLAHOMA INDIAN SUPPLY

Wholesale items for Pow Wow Vendors

Bone chokers $20 per dozen

Handmade lamp worked glass bead bracelets $1.00 each Glass bead stretch bracelets 5 for $2.50

12 Necklaces: Chain w/ pendant and display pad $13.50 36 inch gemstone chip strands Reg. 3.95 now $2.00 36 inch turquoise chip strands Reg. 7.95 now $4.00

Always our regular stock of seed beads from 16/0 to 8/0, findings, leather, hackles, fluffs and thousands of other supply items.

Remember we've moved around the corner 109 North Broadway, Skiatook, OK 74070

New Dealers Cash or Credit Card Only.

Open Noon-6pm Mon. thru Fri. • 10am-5m Sat. • Closed Sun. Local: 396-1713-Countrywide Toll Free 1-888-720-1967

Website: www.supernaw.com • Email: Supernaw@flash.net

CLASSIFIEDS

GWY9 D8P HEROKEE $\mathbf{N}$ ATION $^\circ$

Cherokee Nation whose headquarters are located in beautiful Tahlequah, Oklahoma is a national leader in Indian tribal governments and economic development in Oklahoma, We are a dynamic, progressive organization, which owns several business enterprises and administers a variety of services for the Cherokee people in Northeastern Oklahoma. Cherokee Nation offers an exceptional employee benefits plan with Comprehensive Health, Life, 401 (k), Holiday Pay, Sick Leave and Annual Leave.

CURRENT OPPORTUNITIES

#6217 RPT Cook I (Family Assistance), Nowata - Close 5/07/12 #5868 RFT Inpatient Registered Nurse (Hastings Hospital), Tahlequah - Close 5/08/12

#4713 TPT Inpatient Registered Nurse/PRN (Hastings Hospital), Tahlequah - Close 5/08/12 #6184 RFT Para-Professional Case Aide (Indian Child Welfare), Catoosa - Close 5/10/12 Interested applicants please apply at www.cherokee.org

> Cherokee Nation Human Resources Department PO Box 948 Tahlequah, OK 74465 (918) 453-5292 or 453-5050

MORE JOBS, MORE NEWS, MORE EVENTS EVERY DAY. VISIT ONLINE AT

The Iowa Tribe of Oklahoma, located South of Stillwater, is accepting applications for the following positions in the Perkins, OK area:

> HR Director Tribal PREP Educator Family Practice Physician Realty Manager • Realty Specialist Surveillance Officer I CHS Coordinator

Nurse Practitioner • Patient Registration

View job descriptions under Government/Human Resources/Job Postings at www.iowanation.org

Great Benefits! Health, Dental, Vision, Group Life, Flex, 401(k) with 6% match, sick, vacation, holidays, STD, LTD, Voluntary Life, Accident & Cancer plans.

Apply online at http://www.iowanation.org/hireme

Equal Employment Opportunity Employer Native American preference

Tule River Indian Tribe of CA

Chief Financial Officer Tribal Administrator Education Director Public Works Director Assistant Controller Store Manager

Closing Date: Until Filled

Applicants must submit to a preemployment drug screen and background investigation.

Applications are available at 340 N. Reservation Rd, for more info contact Eilene, HR Recruiter at hrclerk@ tulerivertribe-nsn.gov

OKLAHOMA INDIGENT DEFENSE SYSTEM INVESTIGATOR

OIDS has an Investigator opening in the Capital Post Conviction Division of its Norman office.

Applicants should be highly motivated; well-organized; willing to travel; able to write clearly and concisely; trustworthy with confidential information and have excellent peopleskills. Experience in law enforcement, criminal investigation, and/or social work is preferred.

Send résumé and writing sample no later than May 14, 2012, to Angie L. Cole, AA-EEO Officer, OIDS, P.O. Box 926, Norman, OK 73070-0926 EOE

Okla. Native Caucus supports Indian center

OKLAHOMA CITY -The 18-member House Native American Caucus has announced support of a planned American Indian Cultural Center along the banks of the Oklahoma River near downtown.

Rep. Seneca Scott, of Tulsa and a member of the caucus, said on April 26 that it's the first time in recent years that the caucus, which includes Republicans Democrats, unanimously endorsed a project.

The state agency overseeing the center said it has secured $40 million in private funds to complete the project and is looking for an additional $40 million from the state. However, some legislators have criticized the museum's estimated $171 million costs and House Speaker Kris Steele said there is little support for a state bond issue to help fund its completion.

J. Blake Wade, executive director of the Native American Cultural and Educational Authority, which is developing the cultural center, said the center's economic impact for the state is projected to be $3.8 billion during the first 20 years. It is also projected that the center will provide $150 million in state tax revenues.

Tourism is the thirdindustry largest Oklahoma with a $6.1 billion economic impact.

"We have learned through years of studies that Oklahoma's cultural tourism industry has great potential for economic development and job creation," Wade said. "Those studies revealed that in order to be successful in cultural tourism, we have to focus on two of the things that make Oklahoma unique: the prevailing presence of cowboy and Western heritage and American Indian cultures."

Wade added that the caucus' message to the Oklahoma Legislature is to work on capturing more of the tourist market and begin realizing the state's investment.

"It's more than just another tourist attraction. This will position Oklahoma as an epicenter for cultural tourism," he said. "European and Asian travelers are fascinated with Western heritage American Indian cultures. Now is the time to invest in the American Indian Cultural Center and Museum, Oklahoma's newest international attraction."

NATIVETIMES.COM

EVENTS

EVERY THURSDAY The Otoe-Missouria Substance Abuse and Behavioral Health Programs sponsor an open group for families touched by addiction from noon to 1 p.m. at the Otoe-Missouria Health Building. This is a confidential group. Call 580-723-4466 x252 or x262 for more information.

SECOND TUESDAY Cherokee Artists Association meeting at 202 E. 5th Street Tahleguah, Okla. Info: (918) 458-0008 or www.

FOURTH THURSDAY Each month the American Indian Chamber of Commerce of Oklahoma - Eastern Chapter hosts a monthly luncheon at Bacone College, Muskogee, Okla. 11:30 a.m. at Benjamin Wacoche Hall. Please RSVP one week ahead 580-530-9117 of time. Phone: (918) 230-3759

EVERY 2ND SATURDAY Indian Taco Sales - from 11-2:30pm at OK Choctaw Tribal Alliance, 5320 S. Youngs Blvd, Oklahoma City www. okchoctaws.org

MON/WED AND THURS The Marble City Nutrition Center serves hot meals at the Marble City Community Center at 11:30 a.m. Meals are free to anyone over 50, but a small donation is suggested to help with the expense of the program. Marble City Nutrition Center, 711 N. Main, Marble City, Okla. Phone: (918) 775-2158

YOUTH COUNCIL The Native Nations Youth Council (NNYC) bimonthly

8:30pm @ the Youth Services of Tulsa Activity Center (311 S. Madison - on 3rd just west of Peoria). Call to confirm location. Info Call: Chad Gilley (918) 382-2204 or nnyc@ihcrc.org

MAY 12

Pawnee Nation College Graduation Exercises 10 a.m. in the Roam Chief Event Center located at 810 Morris Road in Pawnee, Okla.

Boots and BBQ at Will Rogers Downs, Claremore. Competitors compete for $12,000 in cash prizes. Taster kits cost $6. Proceeds will cherokeeartistsassociation.org go to the Claremore Reveille Rotary Club. For more information, visit www. claremorereveille.com.

> Stumbling Bear's Descendants Powwow 2pm -11pm, Red Buffalo Hall, Kiowa Complex, Carnegie, Okla. Call Jon for more info

Gray Horse War Mothers Annual Soldier Dance at Gray Horse Indian Village, east of Fairfax, Okla., turn east on Harrison off HWY 18. Supper at 5:30. Raffle tickets sold for 3 drawings. Info call Margie Burkhart 918-816-2014 or Mary Elsberry 918-396-3314.

Okmulgee Indian Community/Activies Commitee Bingo and Food Sale starting @ 6 PM at Okmulgee Indian Community Center. Info call Amber Burgess 918-752-8420 or amber.burgess@okstate.edu

MAY 17 Pawnee Community Gathering 6pm at Albin Leading Fox Hall located at 861 Little Dee Road in Pawnee, Okla. Info call PNC 918-762-3343.

MAY 18

Walk MS Team Hope For A Cure Silent Auction fundraiser. A great night filled with tons of great services and products from local businesses. All auction proceeds will go toward the National MS Society toward finding a cure for MS. Silent auction at 6:00 PM at the Ardmore Santa Fe Depot located at 251 E. Main St Ardmore, OK.

MAY 18 & 19 Indian Taco Sale 11am to 4pm at Tulsa Indian UMC, 1901 N College. Info call 918-834-1956 or 918-798-2845.

MAY 20 We Are The Aboriginal Pioneers rally at Okla. State Capitol, 1pm - 6pm. All Drum Groups, Singers, Stompers, Dancers, Speakers, Storytellers are invited as time permits. Contact spiritwomenrawk@yahoo.

com or 405-471-7610 for more information.

MAY 25

Native American Student Association at OSUIT/ CMN Indian Taco Sale, 11am-2pm at Okmulgee Indian Community Center. $6 including drink and a dessert. Free delivery for orders of three or more otherwise a $.50 delivery fee per taco. Accepting pre-orders. Contact rsourjohn21@ymail.com or (918) 304-7802

MAY 26

The Sac and Fox Nation Veteran's Organization 6th annual Memorial Day Gourd Dance & Powwow. Gourd Dancing Starts at 2pm. Traditional Dinner for all participants from 5pm until 6pm. Grand Entry at 7pm. We put a flag on every deceased vets' grave in 10 tribal cemeteries.

Art Class: Slate Rock Art Paintings by Bill McCulley at Council House Museum, 106 W. 6th Okmulgee, Okla. Class is limited to 20 people. Reserve your spot call 918-756-2324 or csago71@ sbcglobal.net 10 a.m.-2 pm. Free.

JUNE 1

Indian Taco Sale 11:00 AM - 2:00 PM at Norman First American UMC, 1950 East Beaumont Drive, Norman, Okla. Call Ahead for Speedy Service. Free Delivery on Orders of 10 or More (405) 321-5640

JUNE 2 Tinker Intertribal Powwow in Joe B. Barnes Regional Park in Midwest City, Okla. from 1:00 p.m. to 11:00 p.m. Interested vendors or participants should contact Corene Chakenatho at (405) 734-7366.

JUNE 8

Chilocco Powwow in the Event Center of the First Council Casino, seven miles north of Newkirk, OK. Gourd dance begins at 2:00 p.m. with grand entry at 6:30. Featured will be the Apache Fire Dance. Contact Garland Kent, Sr at 580- 352-2670.

JUNE 8-10 Red Earth Festival, Cox Convention Center, Oklahoma City

JUNE 10-16 Jim Thorpe Native American Games at Remington Park, Oklahoma City. Proceeds benefit the Jim Thorpe Bright Path Youth Programs and Awakening The Spirit Diabetes Prevention and Control program. Contact Annetta Abbott: 405-208-

www.jimthorpegames.com

IUNF 14 Iowa Tribe of Oklahoma 4th Annual Golf Tournament kicking off Iowa Tribal Powwow - 8am at Cimarron Trails in Perkins, Okla. Registration begins at 7am. Info call Linda Andre 405-547-5352 Ext 23

JUNE 16

The 17th Annual Oklahoma Indian All-State Basketball Games at the sports center on the Oklahoma Wesleyan University campus in Bartlesville. Games will start at 6:00 P.M. For more info: contact us 918-642-3162, paradox@valornet.com

JUNE 23 Creek Council House Museum's Indian Art Festival 106 W. 6th, Okmulgee, OK; 10:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. For Free Booth Space or Register into $1000 Art Competition Contact:

JUNE 28 - JULY 1 Pawnee Indian veterans Powwow held at the Memorial Stadium. For more info call Toni Hill (918) 762-3621 Ext. 25

csago71@sbcglobal.net; 918-

756-2324

JUNE 30 47th Annual Coker Reunion, Masonic Building, 1729 HWY 9 West, Seminole, Okla. All descendants of London Coker and wife Mary Washburn are invited. Potluck meal at Noon. For more info call 405-382-3044. Indian Taco Sale 11:00 AM - 2:00 PM at Norman First American UMC, 1950 East Beaumont Drive,

JULY 6

Norman, Okla. Call Ahead for Speedy Service. Free Delivery on Orders of 10 or More (405) 321-5640

JULY 9 - SEPT 28 The Potter & The Painter: Works by Lisa Rutherford and Jim Van Deman at Red Earth Museum & Gallery, Oklahoma City

AUGUST 3 Indian Taco Sale 11:00 AM - 2:00 PM at Norman First American UMC, 1950 East Beaumont Drive, Norman, Okla. Call Ahead for Speedy Service. Free Delivery on Orders of 10 or

More (405) 321-5640

SEPTEMBER 7 Indian Taco Sale 11:00 AM - 2:00 PM at Norman First American UMC, 1950 East Beaumont Drive, Norman, Okla. Call Ahead for Speedy Service. Free Delivery on Orders of 10 or More (405) 321-5640

SEPTEMBER 15 Timothy LittleVoice Honor Dance at WhiteEagle, OK. Gourd Dancing @ 2:00pm Hosted by Ponca Gourd dance society. Supper @ 5:30pm. War Dance Hosted by Osage clan. Info tlittlevoice@rocketmail.com

OCTOBER 5 Indian Taco Sale 11:00 AM - 2:00 PM at Norman First American UMC, 1950 East Beaumont Drive, Norman, Okla. Call Ahead for Speedy Service. Free Delivery on Orders of 10 or More (405) 321-5640

BCBSOK weaves Okla. state history, Native culture into corporate culture

■ In the group, Native employees come together in a professional environment to share activities and discussion of identity within the company.

KAREN SHADE Native American Times

TULSA, Okla. - Today's continually changing corporate culture can sometimes seem worlds away from Native American culture, focused on the preservation of traditions and tongues of distant ancestors. But as more Native Americans secure their place in a corporate atmosphere while maintaining their tribes' values, a meeting between the worlds was inevitable.

Companies like BlueCross BlueShield of Oklahoma are stepping forward to meet those changes and add to the company's sense of Native American identity for all employees and clients.

"This is the Oklahoma head quarters (of BCBSOK) so we really wanted it to have an Oklahoma personality, and that meant capturing elements from all the histories," said Mercedes Millberry, communications consultant for BCBSOK.

Throughout the building, pieces of the state's and region's past are exhibited in displays on par with those you might find in museums. There's the Route 66 display in the break room. There's also art reflecting Oklahoma's oil story on display throughout their downtown Tulsa headquarters located at 1400 S. Boston Avenue. In the ground floor lobby, where visitors wait to be met by a representative and employees must pass to enter the company credit union office, a multi-panel display joins the stories of three important aspects of Native culture: the Creek Nation Council Oak Tree in Tulsa, the Comanche code talkers of World War II and Oklahoma City's annual Red Earth Native American Festival.

Images surround the informational panels sharing a piece of history and the present with everyone who stops to view them.

The overall art planning for the headquarters building was coordinated by the company's facilities planning division, which worked with Art Dallas to acquire the art. But the planning had input by a local renovation team.

"We wanted people to be able to walk into the building and get a sense of who Oklahoma is based on what they saw," Millberry said.

BCBSOK is a division of Health Care Service Company (which covers Oklahoma, Texas, New Mexico and Illinois) and an independent licensee of the Blue Cross and Blue Shield Association. The company has operated in the state for 72 years, making it Oklahoma's oldest and largest private health care insurance provider. Today more than 600,000 residents are insured through the company. Across the state, BCBSOK employs about 1,000 people. Among that population are employees who identify themselves as part of an American Indian tribe. Other employees also claim to have some Native heritage in their background. For this reason, the Oklahoma office of the insurance conglomerate created a Native American resource group. It's but one of the employee resource groups across BCBS, but it is the first to be Oklahomabased and the first with a Native association.

In the group, Native employees together in a professional environment to share activities and discussion of identity within the company, said Haley BCBSOK Downing, also a communications consultant.

Bert Marshall, president of BCBSOK, is Cherokee and the executive sponsor of the group, Downing said. He has helped to drive initiatives expressing cultural identities.

One of those initiatives is an art contest recently held for employees, who submitted original pieces of art inspired by their heritage or something personal to them.

Danielle Ward, an outcomes reporting analyst for the company for five years, won with a portrait she drew in colored pencil of Sitting Bull, the Lakota Sioux chief who resisted the U.S. Indian removal policies and defeated troops at the Battle of Little Big Horn. Ward and her family began piecing together their history after discovering her late grandmother was adopted and a full-blood Creek.

KAREN SHADE | NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES

BlueCross BlueShield of Oklahoma communications consultants Haley Downing, left, and Mercedes Millberry stand before the multi-panel display of native culture in the company's state headquarters building in Tulsa. The exhibit is part of an overall initiative to include Native American identity into corporate culture.

To Ward, the image of Sitting Bull has always been a powerful and influential image in her life. Her portrait will be framed and displayed in the building for visitors to ponder along with the main display on the ground floor. She says she is beyond pleased of the display and her company.

"It says so much," Ward added. "I mean, we have such a huge support group for Native Americans."

Why do Native employees or any other group of employees need to have the ear of their company? Happy workers, as the saying goes, are productive workers.

"I think anytime a workplace really is a true reflection of its employees, that comes across. Employees really feel included as part of the overall company, and know that 'It's not just a place I go every day from 8 to 5. It's a place that cares for me and my history," Millberry said.

Of course, it's also good for the clients and visitors.

"We are a local company and we want people to know that and remember we're not some faceless corporation coming in from out of state. These are your neighbors and we're working for your health and for ours." Millberry.

BCBSOK continues with such programs as the Care Van program, in which it partners with recognized tribal governments to send vans into communities to immunize children at no cost to patients, but it's also looking within the company to reach out to the Native American population.

Immersion school incorporates gardening into lessons

■ Although there is no gardening curriculum, the garden provides cultural and educational experiences.

JAMI CUSTER Cherokee Phoenix

TAHLEQUAH, Okla. - In years past, Cherokee Language Immersion School officials have wanted to create a garden to teach students how their Cherokee ancestors grew food. In April, that lesson began.

Cultural curriculum specialist Ryan Mackey, who is also a parent of an immersion school student, helped create a community garden on April 18 for students, parents and officials to tend.

He said he wanted students involved because elders believe younger generations should know "that the world was different when" they were young.

"And that these kids that we have today don't have the same understanding of the way that our elders grew up. And part of what it means to be Cherokee is to carry on those traditions that our elders did," Mackey said. "And one of the things that the elders thought was very important for the kids to understand, if possible, would be the concept of gardening and being able to provide your own food."

Cherokee Nation's Natural Resources department tilled the ground and provided heirloom seeds for planting, Mackey said.

"It's white eagle seed corn, and we're going to do beans and pumpkins as the month goes by, but we're starting with corn," he said.

Mackey said he's trying to get the entire school involved with the garden's planting, maintenance and harvesting. He added that students are not old enough to hunt, but they can gather wild foods such as polk and wild onions as well as garden.

Although there is no gardening curriculum, Mackey said the garden provides cultural and educational experiences.

"I'm trying to work with the teachers and incorporate this into their lessons as well...and when I have time with the kids, I'm responsible for teaching them what I can, too," he said.

JAMI CUSTER | COURTESY CHEROKEE PHOENIX

Cultural curriculum specialist Ryan Mackey hands white eagle seed corn to students on April 18 at the Cherokee Language Immersion

Mackey said he would teach gardening until school lets out for summer on May 18. If children are not present during the summer, he would maintain the garden and by fall the students could help harvest.

School in Tahlequah, Okla. The seeds were planted in the school's community garden.

"So they'll hopefully be able to participate in all aspects of the growing cycle," he said. "I would like to use this as an experiment this year and see how it works out and take what I've learned this year and do something again next year.

"Hopefully, as long as I'm here at the school we'll have a garden, and if I move on and go somewhere else then someone else can do it," Mackey added. "I've been trying to gather information about different planting practices and how our ancestors used to do it, so that our kids can try to carry on those traditions."

Mackey said he would appreciate help from interested parents and that they call him at 918-207-8543.

"Yeah I would like for them to...I know that parents are busy and I don't want to ask too much of them, but if they have the interest and desire then I would love for them to be out here

Reprinted with permission of the Cherokee Phoenix, www.cherokeephoenix.org

JAMI CUSTER | COURTESY CHEROKEE PHOENIX

Emilee Chavez, left, plants white eagle seed corn on April 18 with cultural curriculum specialist Ryan Mackey at the Cherokee Language Immersion School in Tahlequah, Okla. The seeds were planted in the school's community garden.

Comanche National Museum wins prestigious MUSE museum award

International Media Technology Standing Professional Committee of the American Association of Museums (AAM) has presented a 2012 MUSE Honorable Mention Award to the Comanche National Museum and Cultural Center (CNMCC) for its innovated video interactive exhibit, Buffalo Kill Using a Weapon. This esteemed, national award was presented to CNMCC this week at AAM's 2012 Annual Phyllis Meeting and Museum Expo in Minneapolis, Minnesota.

Award Muse competition, now in its 23rd year, recognizes excellence in media produced for or by museums. This year's competition consisted of submissions from museums all over the world. With 14 different categories, the array projects demonstrated creativity and innovation using a variety of media platforms, including audio and video tours, games, interactive kiosks, interpretive and multimedia installations, podcasts, websites and video. museum media professionals integrating from around the globe. "This language, from around the world, such as Denmark's Copenhagen Museum, Taiwan's National Palace Museum and several metropolitan museums in the United States, including the Field Museum in Chicago and the Smithsonian in Washington DC, were also recognized," said CNMCC Executive Director, Phyllis Wahahrockah-Tasi. says a lot about our work. We are on par with some of the largest and finest museums in the world," Wahahrockah-Tasi said.

CNMCC Wahahrockah-Tasi, Executive Director

CNMCC developed A total of 47 winning projects Buffalo Kill Using a Weapon effects had to be authentic were chosen by a group of as a touchscreen interactive to our Comanche culture," history and is a major milestone for the culture. The video game effects include stampeding Comanche National Museum provides a unique experience buffalo hooves and "war

Comanche band through the winter. "Throughout the interactive, players are immersed in our tribal culture as they hear and see Max Tahahwah provided the language," Wahahrockah-Tasi explains. "We've also included historical references to educate players as to why the buffalo was so important to our people. We believe there isn't another interactive of this kind anywhere in the world." The game is currently on display in the CNMCC gallery. It's free to play and educational for both children and adults.

The game took nine months to develop, and it was not an easy task. CMNCC staff conceptualized the entire project before turning to Bean Creative, an interactive design and development firm based in Alexandria, Virginia, to take the game concept from idea to reality. "It was a bit of a challenge to reproduce historic images in a graphic and realistic format. Everything from the landscape visuals to the native language and sound Comanche Wahahrockah-Tasi said. The youth museums, as well as game's background sound and Cultural Center. Museums by simulating a Comanche cries," a unique sound of technology centers.

buffalo hunt. Players have five encouragement made by arrows to help sustain their Comanche warriors while they were in the midst of a hunt. Tribal members Anthony Monoessy, Glen Heminokeky, Charles Pocowatchit and the sound for this effect. "Their audio was recorded at KSWO's studio. The station employees thought they were under attack," Wahahrockah-Tasi said.

> CNMCC is no stranger to awards. The museum has won ten local, regional and state awards since it opened in 2007. "We are extremely honored each time we receive recognition for our work, but this award is truly humbling. Our museum, the one our Comanches dreamed about for well over 20 years, is now nationally renowned. That's something all our people can be proud of," Wahahrockah-

> The American Association of Museums represents more than 18,000 individual museum professionals and volunteers, almost 3,000 institutions, and 250 corporate members. Every type of museum is represented including art, history, science, military and maritime, and aquariums, zoos, botanical gardens, arboretums, historic and science sites,

Quapaw Tribe helping Picher, Cardin cleanup

JERRY J. HERRMANN Miami News-Record

PICHER, Okla. (AP) -The Quapaw Tribe's pilot garbage collection program and Ottawa County's Reward Fund appear to be helping reduce the amount of garbage and trash dumped in the Picher and Cardin area.

James Luedecke, environmental engineer for the Quapaw Tribe, said the tribe's pilot garbage collection program is going great.

"We've had the dumpsters out for eight weeks. Allied Waste is collecting the garbage left in our dumpsters every week. I estimate we've collected 10 tons of illegal dumping so far," he said.

He said the pilot program is funded through Oct. 1 by an Environmental Protection Agency Clean Water Grant.

The Quapaw Tribe dumpsters are located at the old Cardin Post Office site, old Picher Fire Station and on South 592 Road, north of A Street. There are two 4-cubic-yard containers at each location.

The containers on South 592 Road are at a spot where there has been a lot of illegal dumping in the past. "Now, the garbage is going into our dumpsters instead of all over the road," he said.

Luedecke said the tribe and county crews are still cleaning up trash illegally dumped along roads to get a cleaner looking community.

Also, the tribe has barricaded off access to tribal lands in Picher, which has deprived illegal dumpers of many of their favorite sites, Luedecke said.

If the program continues to be as successful as it has been for the first two months, Luedecke said, they will look for other grants or funding sources to keep it going.

John Clarke, Ottawa County Board of Commission chairman, said with the Reward Fund the commission approved people know others are looking for illegal dumpers.

He said the illegal dumping problem increased as the Picher-Cardin area became less inhabited. "It became a prime target for dumpers," he said.

Clarke said the Quapaw Tribe has helped cut down on household garbage being dumped in the area. He would like to see the tribe's program expanded to include trash and other items.

Tires, old mattresses and household items are still being dumped in the area.

He said anyone seeing anyone illegally dumping any items in the Picher-Cardin area should contact the reward program to help alleviate the problem.

Chickasaw Nation inducts 4 into Hall of Fame

■ More than 650 people were on-hand for the 2012 induction ceremonies of a Native American preservationist, an honorable state and tribal judge, a tribal peacemaker and historic governor into the Chickasaw Hall of Fame.

DANA LANCE Chickasaw Nation

NORMAN, Okla. - Oklahoma House of Representatives Speaker Designate T.W. Shannon, a Chickasaw, served as master of ceremonies for the May 3 banquet conducted at Riverwind Showcase Theatre in Norman, Okla.

Chickasaw Nation Governor Bill Anoatubby took part in the induction of Towana Spivey, Charles Tate, Levi Colbert and Cyrus Harris. Mr. Colbert and Mr. Harris were inducted posthumously.

"Each inductee, past and present, is an inspiration to future generations of Chickasaws. It is our privilege to honor these individuals for their amazing accomplishment and significant contributions toward developing greater understanding and unity between the people of the Chickasaw Nation, other tribal nations and the United States," said Gov. Anoatubby.

"Their commitment to preserving peace, protecting sovereignty, safeguarding our heritage and history and serving others epitomizes the spirit and dedication of the Chickasaw people. They are an inspiration to all of us."

Bill Duckwork, a descendant of Levi Colbert, accepted on behalf of the early tribal leader known as Itawambe Miko (Bench Chief).

Mr. Duckworth said that Levi Colbert was a "patient, thoughtful and planning man" who met with the U.S. president and government officials regarding treaties and removal.

"It is indeed my honor to accept such a prestigious honor for a man who is so well deserving of this award. Thank you for all who gave a vote of confidence to elect this man to the Hall of Fame."

Born in 1759 east of the Tennessee River, Mr. Colbert was a prominent Chickasaw negotiator and bargained shrewdly for as much compensation as possible for the Chickasaw homelands.

Throughout his life, Mr. Colbert strived to maintain peace with the U.S. government while also maintaining the integrity of the Chickasaw people and culture.

Mr. Duckworth expressed his gratitude to the Chickasaw Nation for establishing the Chickasaw Hall

"What a great thing that Gov. Anoatubby and the Chickasaw Nation have done to provide a place to honor these great men and women who have given a portion of their lives helping the Chickasaw people overcome horrendous hardships and obstacles. We should be thankful for men like Gov. Anoatubby for providing great leadership for the success of the Chickasaw people."

Mr. Colbert died June 2, 1834 at Buzzard Roost, Colbert County, Ala. at the age of 74.

Mrs. Janey Polk-Dutnell, greatgreat granddaughter of Cyrus Harris, accepted the honor on his behalf.

"My family always took great pride in Cyrus Harris being the first elected governor of the Chickasaw Nation. He left such a wonderful legacy of being an honorable and trustworthy governor."

The first elected governor of the Chickasaw Nation after the 1856 adoption of the Chickasaw constitution, Mr. Harris was subsequently elected Governor for five different two-year terms.

During his time as governor, Mr. Harris was a strong advocate for education and signed numerous pieces of legislation leading to the establishment and maintenance of boarding schools in the Nation.

"Even as a young man he always had shown an interest in the political affairs of his people. He had the desire make the Chickasaw a strong selfsufficient tribe," said Mrs. Dutnell.

Fluent in both Chickasaw and English, a young Mr. Harris served as an interpreter at councils conducted to arrange the Chickasaw's removal to the West.

He died in 1888 in Mill Creek, Indian Territory. He is buried in Drake Cemetery in Murray County,

After receiving a standing ovation, historian Towana Spivey, Madill, reminded the crowd to remember and learn from the past.

"Our past is always there, our past is broader and more in-depth than we

LARISSA COPELAND | COURTESY CHICKASAW NATION

Native American preservationist Towana Spivey, state and tribal judge Charles Tate, tribal peacemaker Levi Colbert and historic governor Cyrus Harris were inducted into the Chickasaw Hall of Fame Thursday, May 3 by Chickasaw Nation Governor Bill Anoatubby. Mr. Spivey and Charles Tate attended the ceremony while Levi Colbert and Cyrus Harris were inducted posthumously. Bill Duckworth accepted the honor on behalf of Levi Colert, while Janey Polk-Dutnell accepted on behalf of Cyrus Harris. Left to right are Gov. Anoatubby, Mr. Duckworth, Mr. Spivey, Mrs. Polk-Dutnell, Judge Tate and Chickasaw Nation Lt. Gov. Jefferson Keel. Photo by Mike McKee and Marcy Gray.

realize. We have only to seek it, look at it and think about it in ways we are not used to thinking about it."

Throughout his life and career,Mr. Spivey has been involved in preserving the history, language and culture of many Oklahoma tribes, including his own.

He said his pride in his Chickasaw heritage led him to his life-long mission of preserving tribal history.

"The Chickasaw people lost almost everything, but the Chickasaw spirit and tenacity was never conquered."

"I have always been proud of my Chickasaw ancestry; it has had a major impact on my life, from my earliest childhood until the present

Mr. Spivey served ascurator for the Chickasaw White House, Emet, working to restore the home and the preservation consultant for the 1855 Chickasaw Council House, Tishomingo. He has also conducted archaeological investigations at military posts and historic sites.

He served as director/curator of Fort Sill National Historic Landmark and Museum in Lawton, Okla. and as senior curator for the U.S. Army Museum System.

A foremost authority on frontier history, Mr. Spivey has served on numerous boards and has authored several books about the subject. He has been featured in many documentaries and worked as a historical consultant to movie productions, such as "Windtalkers" and "Dances with Wolves".

Mr. Spivey is a graduate of Southeastern Oklahoma State University. He earned his Master's degree from the University of Oklahoma in Anthropology/ Archeology and Museum Studies.

He was born in Madill, Okla., and still lives on the original 140acre Chickasaw allotment of his grandparents.

He said he was honored to be inducted into the Chickasaw Hall of

"To say I am greatly honored seems like understatement."

Hall of Fame inductee Charles Tate, Ardmore, reminded the crowd of the importance of family, something his late mother Juanita Keel-Tate, also stressed when she was inducted into the Hall of Fame in 2008.

"Family is the core, it is the thing that is central, we should hold on to

A life-long protector of Native American rights and a prominent defender of Indian law, Tate said he was grateful to be inducted into the Chickasaw Hall of Fame.

"I accept this award based on the fact it implies I am worthy and I will cherish it from now until the day I

He reflected on the past 100 years and how the Chickasaw Nation had thrived.

In the early 1970s, Mr. Tate, began his service to tribal nations soon after he earned his Juris Doctorate from the University of Oklahoma. He worked for the Legal Aid Society and the All Indian Pueblo Council. He later worked as a staff attorney for Oklahomans in Indian Opportunity, a nonprofit organization.

He joined his father, Ernest, in a law partnership in Ardmore in 1974.

Mr. Tate was elected as a tribal judge for the Chickasaw Nation and contracted with the Chickasaw Legislature to provide legal counsel.

Mr. Tate also served on the Court of Indian Offenses and in various positions in the tribal court for several Oklahoma tribes. He was appointed as a visiting judge to cases in the Winnebago Tribe in Nebraska and in 2011, he was appointed as Supreme Court Justice for the Kickapoo Tribe of Oklahoma.

He was appointed in 1995 as Special District Judge for Carter County, Okla., and served in that position until his 2009.

Mr. Tate now works with the Chickasaw Nation to locate, identify and retrieve historical materials that will be archived at the Holisso Research Center, at the Chickasaw Cultural Center in Sulphur.

Born February 9, 1940 in Ardmore, Okla., Mr. Tate is a descendant of Edmund Pickens, first elected Chickasaw chief in Indian Territory, and Cyrus Harris.

Inside this issue:

- Seminole chief seeks to build a modern tribe
- Ponca Princess turns state contender
- Howe earns Lifetime Achievement Award

TODAY'S INDEPENDENT INDIAN NEWS

- A FREE PUBLICATION -

WWW.NATIVETIMES.COM

VOLUME 18 + ISSUE 20

PUBLISHED WEEKLY

MAY 18, 2012

Nonfederally recognized tribes net millions in federal funds

ANDREW KNITTLE

The Oklahoman

OKLAHOMA CITY (MCT) -A study released last week by the Government Accountability Office reveals that nonfederally recognized Indian tribes netted more than $103 million in federal funding over a four-year period, including one in Oklahoma.

The study was requested by U.S. Rep. Dan Boren, Oklahoma's lone congressional Democrat and ranking member of the Subcommittee on Indian and Alaska Native Affairs.

Boren, of Muskogee, wasn't available to comment on why he requested the study, but the report issued by a Government Accountability Office analyst states that it was completed "to address ... the key means by which nonfederally recognized tribes have been eligible for federal funding and the amount of federal funding awarded to nonfederally recognized tribes for fiscal years 2007 through 2010."

One of the tribes in question hails from Oklahoma, which like most other states doesn't officially recognize Indian tribes.

Sapulpa-based Euchee (Yuchi) Tribe of Indians, which is an incorporated nonprofit, received about $775,000 in federal funding during the study period. A search of USASpending.gov shows the Euchees have received an additional $1 million in federal funding since 2000, all of it from the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services.

That total was not included in the report's findings, which was limited to a four-year period.

To put that in perspective, the Cherokee Nation of Oklahoma has received more than $1.1 billion since 2000, and that's just in Oklahoma.

According to the study's findings, most of the $103,588,000 in question went to the Lumbee Tribe of North Carolina through the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development.

The tribe, which is officially recognized by the state of North Carolina and claims a membership of more than 50,000, received

See FUNDS Continued on Page 4

U.S. Rep. Dan Boren

The Choctaw Nation Color Guard leads the way over the hills of Tushka Homma during the last commemorative walk held at the

Choctaw Nation holds 20th annual Trail of Tears Commemorative Walk

LISA REED Choctaw Nation

DURANT, Okla. - This year marks the 20th annual Trail of Tears Commemorative Walk for the Choctaw Nation of Oklahoma. The tribe has honored its ancestors at several sites where they crossed into Indian Territory.

"I remember the first walk we held began in Horatio, Ark., and ended at Gardner Mansion near Broken Bow," said Chief Gregory E. Pyle. "Since that first 22-mile walk in 1992, we have alternated sites in our 10 ½ counties where Choctaws initially began communities. It's a humbling experience knowing the Choctaws were the first to be removed from their homeland, the first to walk the Trail of Tears."

Walks have been held at Eagletown and on the grounds of Wheelock Academy in McCurtain County, Skullyville in northern LeFlore County, and Tushka Homma in Pushmataha County.

The Capitol grounds at Tushka Homma are the site of this year's event to be held May 19. The walk begins at 10 a.m. Participants will need to come early so they can leave their vehicles parked on the grounds and catch a shuttle bus to the beginning of the walk. A small ceremony opens the walk as everyone is welcomed to the gathering and hundreds fall into place behind the Color Guard.

There is a range of emotions radiating through the long line of people. Many faces reflect solemn, serious thoughts as they remember what the Choctaws endured as they left Mississippi for an unknown area, traveling through bitter winter conditions

See WALK Continued on Page 3

Tribe's accounts to remain frozen

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) - Cheyenne and Arapaho Tribes officials are disappointed with a federal judge's decision to keep the tribe's accounts at an Oklahoma bank frozen until an internal leadership dispute is resolved, a spokeswoman said.

The tribe had asked U.S. District Judge David Russell to lift the freeze on about $6.4 million by Clintonbased First Bank and Trust Co., but Russell allowed the freeze to remain in place. He cited the ongoing dispute between the tribe's governor, Janice Prairie Chief-Boswell, and its one-time lieutenant governor, Leslie Wandrie-Harjo, over who is the tribe's leader.

A hearing on the leadership and banking issues is set for June 8 in Custer County District Court, where the bank filed for the administrative freeze.

Boswell's spokeswoman LisaLiebltoldTheOklahoman that the workweek for about 500 tribal employees has been reduced to 32 hours because of the frozen funds, and checks written by the tribe to workers, contractors and vendors have been returned because of insufficient funds.

"Now, we'll just wait for our court date on June 8. ... That's all we can do at this point," she said. "We're still locked out of those accounts, those frozen funds, so we have no idea what's happening with all of that."

The judge's order, issued May 9, noted that depending on which side wins the governance dispute, "the bank faces potential liability for the payment of money at the request of an unauthorized signatory. ... In light of the ongoing governance issues, about which Plaintiffs have presented no evidence, the Court cannot conclude that Plaintiffs will ultimately prevail in their quest to have the administrative freeze lifted."

Scott Meacham, represents the bank, has said bank officials initially asked the courts to freeze the accounts because of uncertainty authorized signatory. Meacham was out of the office at press time and didn't immediately return a request for comment.

Tribal leader opposes proposed fracking rule

■ The rule was amended to require the fracking chemical disclosure after completion of a well rather than before, in response to industry concerns.

TOWN, (AP) - A former president of the National Congress of American Indians says his tribe opposes proposed federal rules to require companies drilling for oil and gas on public and Indian lands to disclose chemicals used in hydraulic fracturing.

Three Affiliated Tribes Chairman Tex Hall stated his position May 8 during an energy expo on the Fort Berthold Indian Reservation, which lies in western North Dakota's booming patch. Hall believes federal red tape and redundant regulations threaten to slow oil development on the reservation, The Forum newspaper reported last week.

The process commonly known as fracking uses pressurized fluid chemicals to break open oilbearingrock. It is controversial because some people fear it will harm the environment. The Obama administration on Friday issued its proposal for disclosure on public and Indian lands. The proposed rules also set standards for proper construction of wells and wastewater disposal. Secretary Salazar said the rules will allow continued expansion of drilling while protecting public health and safety. Hall said he is not opposed to disclosure of fracking chemicals but feels the proposed federal rules go too

Tex Hall

"We shouldn't be held up by federal obstacles or federal red tape," he said. "These rules are severely impacting the bigger economy at Fort Berthold."

Terry Kovacevich, an asset manager for Marathon Oil in Dickinson, echoed Hall's comments, saying the proposed federal fracking rules duplicate what the state already has in place and will slow oil production.

"All of this will drive development away from the reservation," Kovacevich said.

Rick Hotaling, acting North Dakota field manager for the federal Bureau of Land Management, said the rule was amended to require the fracking chemical disclosure after completion of a well rather than before, in response to industry concerns.

The proposed rules are subject to a 60-day public comment period. A final order is expected by the end of the year.

Southwind Energy completes renewable Energy Project

Businesses interested in lowering energy costs, reducing their carbon footprint and pollution find hybrid lighting products as a viable economical option.

PONCA CITY, Okla. -In the first joint project of its kind in north central Oklahoma, Southwind Energy, an enterprise of the Kaw Nation partnered with Pioneer Technology Center, and Ponca City Energy to assemble and install a wind and solar lighting unit in Ponca City.

Career tech students and instructors received hands experience assembling and wiring the turbine and solar panels. Students were enthusiastic about the experience of participating in a green energy project.

City Energy supervisors and crews assisted with technical and foundation advice, raising and setting the hybrid unit.

Southwind Energy spokesperson Ken Luttrell said "the Kaw Enterprise Development Authority has been excited to work with these students from career tech and with Ponca City Energy to bring innovative alternative energy technology to the area. The Kaw Nation, known as The Wind People has a long heritage and relationship with the south wind and a commitment to renewable green energy.

Southwind Energy is a distributor and installer of wind and solar hybrid lighting. Cost effective and easy to install the devices provide strong, bright lighting for large parking lots such as shopping, medical and corporate centers. Streets, sidewalks, bike paths, security, farm and ranch lighting are all perfectly suited for their application.

Southwind Energy, an enterprise of the Kaw Nation, is a distributor and installer of wind

and solar hybrid lighting.

Businesses interested in lowering energy costs, reducing their carbon footprint and pollution find hybrid lighting products as a viable economical option.

Designed to operate with no line voltage, trenching or metering the units offer significant benefits traditional grid based electrical lighting reducing pollution, power consumption and carbon dioxide emissions. The LED lighting should last 100,000 hours compared to conventionallights 10,000 hour life with substantial energy savings. Turbines and solar panels have a life expectancy of 20-25 years with virtually no maintenance. There is a substantial cost savings over five years compared to usual systems..

Southwind's upcoming projects include career tech involvement in a vertical axis wind turbine generator assembly and the installation of a lighting unit at the Kaw Nation tribal complex in Kaw City illuminating the Warrior and Horse statue.

David Myers, Ponca City Development Executive wrote about the project in his weekly update. "Our friends at the Kaw Enterprise Development Authority have themselves a wind and solar dual energy generator for their newest public lighting project. The Sepstar Hybrid system is a customized stand alone, selfsufficient clean energy power source that can generate electricity through both solar and wind resources and store it off the utility grid in high performance batteries." "The unit installed by KEDA uses a 400 watt wind turbine and two 75 watt solar panels to power the lighting and store the excess energy. The light created by the high efficiency low voltage LED unit is impressive. Congratulations on their sustainability efforts."

Former Pawnee program director faces embezzlement charges

DAVID HARPER Tulsa World

PAWNEE, Okla. (MCT)-A former Pawnee Nation of Oklahoma tribal program coordinator was arrested and arraigned May 10 on federal charges of embezzling tribal Frances L. Roughface, 47, of Pawnee was indicted in Tulsa federal court on charges alleging the embezzlement and theft of more than $33,000 from various tribal programs from October 2005 through December 2009.

Roughface was employed as the Pawnee Nation's Indian Child Welfare and Child Care Center coordinator during that time, the indictment says.

A grand jury alleges that she embezzled Center funds by reporting that she was collecting and depositing the money into a tribal bank account while she was actually putting the funds in a personal account.

Roughface is accused of leading the tribe to believe that she spent at least $7,220 of tribal funds on Walmart gift cards for the benefit of families and children in crisis situations when she allegedly used the cards to purchase beer, iPods, cosmetics, clothing and other items for herself.

The charges are the product of an investigation by the U.S. Department of the Interior's Office of the Inspector General.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Trent Shores said Roughface was arrested Thursday in the Pawnee area and was brought to Tulsa for her arraignment. She was released on bond.

Both Shores and Charles Lone Chief, vicepresident of the Pawnee Nation Business Council, said the tribe has improved its financial oversight procedures.

A press release from the U.S. Attorney's more than $26,000 of the tribe's Child Care Office says Roughface could be sentenced to as much as 10 years imprisonment and a fine of $250,000. However, Shores said that under sentencing guidelines that appear to apply, she would probably face about two years in prison if convicted.

Collective effort brings back bones to California tribe

SAN LUIS OBISPO, Calif. - More than a century after they were stolen from the San Luis Obispo area by a grave robber, a collection of Native American bones was reburied May 11 in their homeland.

The Salinan Tribe of Monterey and San Luis Obispo counties said repatriating seven Native American skulls and several jawbones from a museum in England and reinterring them at an undisclosed Central Coast location was an unprecedented move.

"This process has never been accomplished by any tribe, let alone a non-federally recognized tribe," said tribe spokesman Chris Molina. "Because of all the laws and procedures necessary, this became a government-to-government exchange between the Salinans and the UK, necessitating sensitive and timely treatment."

The details of the bones' odyssey are sketchy. They were scavenged from the San Luis Obispo area in the late 1800s by a man named R.W. Summers who sold them, Molina said.

Eventually, they wound up at the University of Birmingham in England, where they were on display at a medical museum. A year ago, the tribe got word that the bones were available for repatriation.

In cooperation with June Jones of Birmingham University, Sen. Dianne Feinstein, federal customs officials and the Chumash Tribe, the Salinans were able to get permission to bring the remains to the United States.

On Wednesday, the Salinans received the bones from Jones at Los Angeles International Airport. They were brought to San Luis Obispo, where an anthropologist at the county Sheriff-Coroner's Office positively identified them as Native American, Molina

Chumash or Salinan, the two tribes that lived in what is now San Luis Obispo County. A DNA test could determine this, but the tribe did not want to go to the expense, Molina

It is unknown whether the remains are

The remains were returned to their native soil Friday in a solemn ceremony. The Salinans hope that other tribes will be able to use their experience as an example of how stolen remains can be returned.

"The process brought the Salinans back full circle as the only interested tribe willing to maneuver through all the red tape within the federal, state and local governments necessary to have human remains shipped back to the United States," Molina said.

Judge blocks transfer of Yellowstone bison

MATTHEW BROWN Associated Press

BILLINGS, Mont. (AP) - A Montana judge on Wednesday halted further transfers of Yellowstone National Park bison, dealing a significant blow to a governmentconservation sponsored effort struggling to overcome livestock industry opposition.

The order from Judge John McKeon in Blaine County has the immediate effect of blocking the pending move of several dozen Yellowstone bison to the Fort Belknap Indian Reservation. McKeon said the animals must remain on the Fort Peck Reservation, where about 60 bison were transferred in March by state and tribal officials.

More broadly, the order blocks state wildlife officials from arranging future transfers of Yellowstone bison while a lawsuit against the program from ranchers and property rights groups is

The relocations are part of an attempt to curb the periodic slaughter of bison leaving the park. But many ranchers fear the bison could spread disease and compete with cattle for grazing.

In his order for a preliminary injunction, McKeon said the potential injury to the plaintiffs in the case outweighed whatever damage the state might suffer if the bison program is put on hold.

Plaintiffs' attorney Cory Swanson said the ruling protects his clients from possible losses to their livestock operations caused by bison.

"We're happy about it and feel it protects our clients from what we felt sure were future conflicts we weren't going to be compensated for. This eliminates that danger until we can get the whole case decided," Swanson said. The plaintiffs previously dropped a request that the bison at Fort Peck be returned to the park.

Mark Azure with the Fort Belknap Fish and Wildlife Department said tribal officials still hoped to get Yellowstone bison onto their reservation but were not going to make any move until further consultation with attorneys.

The Belknap Fort Reservation is located in north-central Montana and is home to the Assiniboine and Gros Ventre Indians. Although the tribes were not named as defendants in the case, Azure said he did not want to risk compromising the state's long-term goal of moving bison onto more public and tribal lands.

"From the get-go, it's really never been about just Fort Belknap and Fort Peck," he said. "This is another bump in the road, but I wouldn't say it's the end. I don't know that we're going to stop just because of this."

Sarah Elliot, aspokeswoman for Gov. Brian Schweitzer, said in a statement that the administration disagreed with the judge's characterization of bison as a large predator, a term defined in Montana law as bears, mountain lions and wolves.

Bison once numbered in the millions on the Great Plains and played a central role in American Indian life, providing meat for food, and pelts for clothing and shelter. The animals also feature prominently in many Native American religious ceremonies.

Tim Preso, a Bozeman lawyer who intervened in the case on behalf of environmentalists, said his clients were considering an appeal to the Montana Supreme Court to get the injunction lifted.

The March 19 shipment of bison to Fort Peck came without prior public notice and during a snowstorm - a maneuver by the Schweitzer administration and tribes that was meant to get the bison to Fort Peck ahead of a possible court injunction.

Retired professor accused of defrauding tribe

RICHARD WINTON

LOS ANGELES (MCT) An attorney for the Twentynine Palms Band of Mission Indians and a retired Claremont McKenna College professor are among four people who have been indicted on federal bribery and money laundering charges, the U.S. attorney's office said May 10.

Prosecutors allege that

IRS investigation.

Those named are Gary Edward Kovall, 66, a Minnesota-based attorney who acted as legal counsel for the tribe; David Alan Heslop, 74, of Templeton, Calif.; Paul Phillip Bardos, 57, of Rancho Cucamonga, and suffering hunger and

Some are on their first memorial walk, often pushed in strollers by their parents.

Several others begin the trek with the aid of a cane or walker, determined to get as far as they can because they

a general contractor; and Peggy Anne Shambaugh, 56, of Ely, Minnesota, who is Kovall's wife.

According to indictment, Kovall advised the tribe to create a limited liability company purchase real estate, and then convinced them to hire Heslop as the company's manager.

Heslop is the former director of the Rose Institute and was a Claremont McKenna professor, according Asst. U.S. Atty. Joseph N. Akrotirianakis. Heslop was appointed in the 1980s to the National Council on Education Research by President Reagan.

Kovall and Heslop recommended that the tribe hire Bardos to act as the tribe's "owner's representative" in

After he was hired by the

The indictment alleges that in 2007 Bardos paid Heslop more than $186,577, most of which was then funneled to Shambaugh.

"The United States attorney's office is committed to the prosecution of corruption and fraud in all of their guises," said U.S. Atty. Andre Birotte Jr. "This demonstrates that case our commitment extends vigorously pursuing cases against unscrupulous individuals who abuse their positions to take advantage of Native American tribes."

The indictment charges all four defendants with conspiracy. Kovall, Bardos and Shambaugh are also charged with multiple counts of bribery and money laundering.

If convicted of all charges, Kovall faces up to 75 years in federal prison and a $2-million fine; Heslop faces 225 years in federal prison and a $5.75-million fine; Bardos faces 155 years in federal prison and a $4-million fine; and Shambaugh faces 105 years in federal prison and a fine of $2.75-million.

VINITA 918-256-5585

LANGLEY 918-782-0011

MONKEY ISLAND 918-257-8869

www.okstatebank.com Equal Housing Lender Native American Owned

tahlequahrecycling.com 918-316-5856 "Changing the culture of waste." TA

Native TIMES

recycles with Tahlequah Recycling Incorporated... shouldn't you?

NATIVE AMERICAN

Publisher & Editor LISA SNELL editor@nativetimes.com

TIMES

Contributing Writers Dana Attocknie WESLEY MAHAN

KAREN SHADE Advertising Sales KATHLEEN ROBERTSON

LISA SNELL ROB WALTON advertising@nativetimes.con Distribution

SHELBY HICKS STEVE LACY WESLEY MAHAN MICHAEL MARRIS KATHLEEN ROBERTSON BRENDA SLAUGHTER

The Native American Times, formerly the Oklahoma Indian Times, is published weekly (except the last week of the year) by Lisa Hicks Snell. Mailing address is PO Box 411 Tahleguah, OK 74465. All the contents within the Native American Times are copyrighted material. Any reproduction, redistribution without the written consent of the NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES is strictly

> Each week's issue is available for free download online at: www.nativetimes.com

Subscription rates: $65.00 for fifty-two issues, $32.50 for twenty-six issues, or $16.25 for thirteen issues. A single copy is $1.25 (Rates are for postage and handling) Send check or money order to:

> NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES Attn: Subscriptions P.O. Box 411 Tahlequah, OK 74465-0411

Phone: (918) 708-5838 Fax: (888) 689-4873

Postmaster: Send Change of Address Form 579 to: NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES P.O. Box 411, Tahlequah, OK 74465

WWW.NATIVETIMES.COM - News from the crossroads of Indian Country

Los Angeles Times

the defendants deprived the tribe of honest leadership and took advantage of their positions of trust by lining their own pockets with the tribe's money, including government funding designated for necessary services.

The 48-count indictment, handed down Wednesday, is the result of a joint FBI and sickness.

Continued from Page 1

several construction projects at the Spotlight 29 Casino, according to the indictment.

tribe, he paid kickbacks to Heslop who, in turn, paid kickbacks to Kovall, prosecutors allege.

want to show their respect and gratitude.

All who have given their Saturday for this special event will also be able to enjoy singing by the Johnsons gospel group and cultural displays and activities such as basketweaving, pottery and stickball.

"We honor our ancestors' perseverance by coming together each year to walk in unity," said Assistant Chief Gary Batton. "We also celebrate the success of our tribe since 1831."

The first Choctaws to live in what is now Oklahoma built homes, schools, churches, businesses and continued to grow as a nation. With 200,000 citizens, the Choctaw Nation is the third largest tribe in the United States.

AICCOK OKC CHAPTER SCHOLARSHIP

Help a deserving Native American student reach for their dreams.

OVERVIEW

The OKC Chapter has historically provided scholarships for many years. Typically one acholarship is awarded to the top male and female entrants, as decided by the OKC Chapter Board of Directors. In 2012, we plan to notify the recipient student(s) by May 10 to allow them to list their scholarship in their graduation materials. We will present the actual scholarship award at the August luncheon.

SPONSORSHIPS

There are 2 ways that your organization can help:

- 1. Sponsor a branded, stand-alone scholarship. (Minimum award $250). Special emphasis can be requested (e.g. math or science, healthcare, etc).
- 2. Contribute to the AICCOK-OKC Chapter General Scholarship Fund.

CONTACTS

To sponsor a scholarship, contact: James Lambertus, OKC Chapter Chair, aiccokc@earthlink.net, 405-650-5996 or Fran Smith, Treasurer, fran.smith@bank2online.com 405-946-2265.

To make a contribution to the Fund online, please click: http://tiny.cc/aiccokc_scholarshipfund

Metal Roofing & Siding Professional Construction and Home Repairs

Free Estimates

Charles Snell 918-507-2902

Native American Contractor

Stickball · Drawing · Fancy dancing · Beadwork Shooting hoops

Think of the possibilities! Step up and mentor a Native American child. Commit to changing a child's future. Commit to creating an impact in your tribal community.

How it Works

Step One: Fill out an application at www.bbbsok.org Step Two: Submit application. Receive phone call from BBBS to set up an interview.

Step Three: Attend an in-person interview. Bring copy of Drivers License, Proof of Insurance, Three References and complete a criminal background check.

Step Four: Once approved – matched with a child with similar interests!

Step Five: Pat on the back...you're making a difference!!!

All matches are supported by professional staff at local BBBS agencies. BBBS Match Support Specialists regularly consult with volunteers, children, and parents.

Want more information?

Contact Kristy Smithson, BBBSOK Manager of Native American Partnerships, by phone (405) 606-6309 or email kristy.smithson@bbbsok.org | www.bbbsok.org

Comanche Election Board announces polling details

LAWTON, Okla. – The Comanche Nation Election Board announces the official candidates and voter information for the Comanche Nation 2012 election season.

The Nation's primary election will be Saturday, May 26, 2012. All eligible Comanche Nation voters will receive an official ballot in the mail. The ballot provides the opportunity for Comanche citizens to vote for candidates in the following positions: Chairman, Vice-Chairman, Committeeman No. 1 and Committeeman No. 2. (Official nominees are listed below). The ballot also provides the opportunity to vote on each Comanche Nation budget line item.

In addition to receiving an official ballot in the mail, eligible Comanche Nation voters will be able to vote at a polling site from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. on May 26, 2012 in the following districts: Anadarko, Apache, Cache, Lawton, Oklahoma City, and Walters. Specific locations are listed below.

Eligible Comanche Nation voters can also vote during early absentee (in-person) voting, from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Friday, May 25, 2012 at the Comanche Nation headquarters in the new conference room.

All eligible Comanche Nation voters must present their driver's license or tribal I.D. when voting in person. Voters who choose to submit their ballot via the U.S. Postal Service must remember to sign the affidavit on the back of the mailing envelope, affix the correct amount of postage, and have it received by the Lawton Post Office by noon, May 26, 2012. Voters cannot vote both in-person and absentee.

Another general council meeting will be called at a later date in order to take nominations for the remaining vacancies in the Comanche Business Committee and Election Board.

If you have any questions or concerns, please contact the Comanche Nation Election Board at (580) 492-3274.

Listed below are the official candidates for the 2012 primary election ballot. (Note: previous lists published in some outlets have been incorrect)

Chairman

1) Wallace Coffey

2) William Nelson, Sr.

3) Eleanor McDaniel

4) David Yeagley5) Calvin Kosechata

6) Jacquetta McClung

Vice-Chairman

1) William Owens

2) James Nelson

3) Mack Mike Mahsetky Jr.

Committeeman No. 1

1) Charles Ikner

2) Charles Wells3) Anita Daukai Committeeman No. 2 1) Dan Bigbee, Jr.

2) Vernon Tehauno, Jr.3) Sonya Nevaquaya

Listed below are the official polling locations for the 2012 primary election:

Anadarko

Bureau of Indian Affairs Agency courtroom located at Hwy 281 N. Parker and McKenzie Road, Anadarko.

Apache

Comanche Community Center located at Julia Mahseet Road and Hwy 281, Apache.

Cache

Cahoma Building located at 752 NW Quanah Road, Cache (pending confirmation).

Lawton

Comanche Nation Headquarters, new conference room, located at 584 NW Bingo Road, Lawton.

Oklahoma City

Comanche Nation Outreach Office located at 7390 S. Walker, Suite G, Oklahoma City.

Walters

Comanche Community Center located at 905 E. Missouri Street, Walters.

Eastern Shawnee plan hotel, casino opening

The casino includes a smoke filtering system, a gigantic TV wall, a specially designed bar with chandeliers, and a 36 stall RV park.

MELINDA STOTTS Miami News-Record

MIAMI, Okla. (AP) – The Eastern Shawnee Tribe's vision for the members of their tribe and their community now stands solidly on the top of a hill that is rich in tribal connection. The tribe's goal was to create a destination to enjoy gaming, good food, and relaxation amongst the beautiful natural setting and that goal is now almost completed.

A VIP media event and tour was held Thursday at the new Eastern Shawnee Tribe's approximately 375,000 square feet casino and hotel located on Highway 60 which is now under the completion stages by Red Stone Construction Services.

"We're ready to get it up and get it open," Eastern Shawnee's First Council Member Larry Kropp said.

"The Eastern Shawnees have been extremely fortunate in the opportunity they've had at the old casino. It's actually located within the flood plain and we could not build onto it anymore than what we have, so, we 're looking forward to getting up out of the flood plain and operating the business up here," he said.

According to Kropp a soft opening is scheduled for September 5th and the casino should be open to the public by October of this year.

When asked about the possibilities for the use of the old Bordertown Casino, "We're looking for a viable business to move into it. We're open for all possibilities, and we're going to incorporate part of it for office space," Kropp said.

The Eastern Shawnee Tribe has big plans for the new casino and the 170 acres of surrounding tribal land."This will be a plus for the tribal members and sustain them for the next twenty to forty years. We designed this in three phases. If everything goes well on this, we're looking at putting a truck plaza out on the road, adding a second hotel tower with more meeting rooms, and potentially a nine hole golf course,"Kropp said.

"It's a beautiful facility. I think we're going to be very pleased at the end of the day. We spent so much in landscaping to make it beautiful. We hope to make it an investment, long term, "Jerry West the new casino's general manager said.

"We have a couple of things that will be unique to this area. It's something new, and the cultural aspects that will tie in ,I think it will be really nice," West said.

West praised and thanked Red Stone's work and professionalism on the project. "This project has been on pace, on task and everyone can see from the outside in just how beautiful it is and there is a lot of the pieces that don't go noticed," he said.

As the opening date nears West said, "I've been waiting for a long time. Sometimes it feels like it's never going to get here and other days it feels like it's breathing down my neck."

Red Stone Construction Services continues to work toward its completion doing the finer finish and detailing to make the casino a spectacular experience for its patrons."I think it's important to understand that the Eastern Shawnee Tribe stressed to Red Stone, being a Tulsa based company, that they wanted local participation of neighboring communities. They were adamant about that and the use of Native labor was also stressed. They wanted to employ their tribal citizens and we were able to do that and some local contractors," Chris Samples president of Red Stone stressed.

"I keep hearing Red Stone stressed, and that's fine, but the Eastern Shawnee Tribe worked hard....They did a great job," he said.

Samples said it took hours of meetings and planning to make the project successful. The Eastern Shawnees's Business Committee and Red Stone staff were introduced and thanked for their cooperative efforts. "This was Red Stone's first large project and we've been very successful to this point. We're here today to promote the economy for the nearest states, our tribal community of the Eastern Shawnees and this project should be wonderful for the local community," Samples said.

Lance Gopffarth, Red Stone's vice president, cited some interesting facts regarding the construction of the casino/hotel project. According to Gopffarth, Red Stone excavated 65,500 cubic yards of hard rock on the site which was mostly crushed and used as base rock under the building and paving. Twenty feet was cut from the hill top the casino/ hotel sits on.

There was enough rebar used to reinforce the concrete that if laid end to end would stretch more than 20 miles. The three diesel generators dedicated to the casino can power approximately 100 homes and there are 100 miles of low voltage wiring and 150 miles of high voltage wiring in the building. The landscaping used approximately 1,200 trees and 11,000 shrubs.

Economically the projects impact is that 90 percent of the workforce overall either lives in Oklahoma or Missouri with 150 to 250 employees working on the project on any given day.

"When this facility is up and running there is going to be another 300 to 350 people employed," Gopffarth said.

The media tour, minus cameras, inside the hotel and casino areas included the nearly completed bingo hall, casino and bar areas, office areas kitchen and employee break room. The casino includes a smoke filtering system, a gigantic TV wall, a specially designed bar with chandeliers, and a 36 stall RV park.

The media toured the behind the scenes working areas of the casino including the synthetic natural gas unit, water tanks, internet technology and security rooms. The casino floors are raised 18 inches and the wiring runs under it for more flexibility and efficiency.

Tour guide, Red Sto

Tour guide, Red Stone's ead superintendent, Jason Dunnam said the casino and hotel are designed to allow the employees to conduct most functions behind the scenes and be kept separate from the hotel and casino floor for security and high quality service.

The tour of the 117 room hotel included a grand entryway with a 360 degree fireplace, glass balcony, seventh floor suites of luxurious rooms with spectacular views and a pool.

Architect for the project Charles "Chief" Boyd with Thalden, Boyd, Emery Architects designed the project. He said, "What excites me about this project is what it does for the Tribe. This is going to be huge for them and I'm not even sure they're fully aware of how much benefit it's going to be to the tribe."

"This kind of stuff is a hoot for architects," he said of working on the design of the casino/hotel, "and so it's a a lot of fun." Boyd said this casino/hotel project made for the 86th tribe he has worked for.

The design includes tribal colors and artifacts. "It's also a very, very, fun environment for the people who come and game here. But the tribal people will come and recognize this so they'll have ownership as their facility and then the gamers will enjoy it," he said.

"This will blow your mind, I'm not even a gamer, but I love doing these casinos and I love what it does for the tribe." Boyd said.

FUNUS

Continued from Page 1

roughly $78 million during the four-year span. A search of USASpending.gov reveals the Lumbees netted an additional $100 million in federal funding since 2000. The report also shows the Department of Health and Human Services funded two ineligible Indian tribes during the four-year span, although the amounts awarded in those cases totaled just $244,000.

The Nanticoke Lenni-

The Nanticoke Lenni-Lenape Indians of New Jersey and the Powhatan Renape Nation both received funds despite not being recognized by their home state.

The Department of Health and Human Services, which disbursed the funds to the two tribes, reported that the tribes' "state-recognized" status would have been traced back roughly 30 years, when the New Jersey Legislature passed concurrent resolutions recognizing the tribes.

Those resolutions, however, were not signed by the governor and aren't considered the letter of the law, the report shows.

"Agency officials told us they did not take any additional steps to verify that the entity was in fact state recognized," the GAO analyst wrote.

"They also said they have had regular contact with state officials about the awards, and those state officials never told them that the tribe was not state recognized."

Overall, the study found that almost all of the funds sent to nonfederally recognized tribes were disbursed appropriately, and any questionable findings were being dealt with by the agencies involved.

NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES

Name:
Address:
City:	State:	Zip:
Phone:
☐ $65.00 for 52 issues ☐ $32.50 for 26 issues
☐ $16.25 for 13 issue	s 🖵 $1.2	25 single copy
Mail this form with a c	heck or mo	oney order to:

Native American Times • P.O. Box 411

Tahlequah, OK 74465 • 918-708-5838

We proudly offer an array of services, from general dentistry to sedation, dental implants, and cosmetic dentistry - all designed expressly to meet our patient's changing needs. With four general dentists and four hygienists, we can maintain your oral health for a lifetime all at one location.

We Accept Contract Health & Sooner Care

We serve patients in the Drumright, Cushing, Stillwater, Stroud, Ponca City, and surrounding areas with personalized service and exemplary care. Call for your appointment today.

918-352-3312 or Toll Free 877-RH Melton drumrightdentalcenter.com

COMMENTARY

'Beer sniffing' reporters invade Pine Ridge

TIM GIAGO (Nanwica Kciji) Notes from Indian Country © 2012 Unity South Dakota

The "beer sniffing" reporters from across the country, particularly those of the New York Times, descended upon South Dakota.

ABC Kristoff from the New York fence mending between Mrs. of Pine Ridge? Times and Arthur Sulzberger, Ziolkowski and I probably the New York Times Bureau went by the wayside with that the fact that "Nicolas Kristof Chief for Kansas City, and misquote." then Tony Newman, listed as for the Drug Policy Alliance.

he was staying. It was a pleasant I cautioned him about in our financially Indians in general.

He promised to send me did. a copy of his article when he say, that is exactly what he promise he never kept. He centerpiece of his story. then went on to misquote me. When Ms. Sawyer asked the I told him I had misgivings Pine Ridge police chief, Rich about the carving of Crazy Greenwald, about crime on Horse in the beginning, but the reservation, he replied that Ruth Ziolkowski, the that 80 percent of the people wife of the deceased sculptor, his officers arrested for traffic Korzak, had proven to be a violations or other crimes dedicated and determined were alcohol related. How inheritor of the project and did Ms. Sawyer report this she had done much to allay my comment? She said that 80 early misgivings. Sulzberger's percent of the people living the Pine Ridge Reservation in one line quote of our dinner on the Pine Ridge Reservation meeting, "Tim Giago, Lakota were alcoholics. Say what? First came Dianne Sawyer journalist said he had never Didn't she hear what he really Television met a Native American that said or was she seeking some immediately followed by a had anything good to say sort of sensationalism at the Tim Williams and Nicholas about the project." A lot of expense of the Lakota people to evening and he picked my initial phone conversation was alcoholism, a community with brain for various and sundry not to make the beer selling an extension of Oglala Lakota the right place, but he didn't information about Pine Ridge, stores in Whiteclay, Neb., the College in each district, a Boys look far enough. Instead Crazy Horse Memorial and focus of his visit. Needless to and Girls Clubactively working of focusing on one school, against crime, alcoholism and Red Cloud Indian School, Like Ms. Sawyer, he made and also a community with have sought out the views got back to Kansas City, a his visit to Whiteclay the four high schools such as from tribal leaders like Tom Little Wound, Crazy Horse, Pine Ridge High School, and Lakota College or A. Gay Red Cloud High School, that Kingman, Executive Director are working long and hard to of the Northern Plains Tribal stop the very problems caused by alcohol and poverty that "Chic" Big Crow, founder and the savvy reporters from New director of the York failed to seek out.

> Newman built his column on are painted a heartbreaking When Tim Williams of the picture" of the Pine Ridge

is not the answer to curing High School. alcoholism because it was tried nationally and only led to the birth and growth of changed its cultural stifling organized crime. It also did image to become a progressive not stop alcohol consumers school that is now so popular from drinking.

Poverty, joblessness and hopelessness running to get away. It is a probably the contributors consumption of alcohol on reservation, but the difference the Pine Ridge Reservation. is that it is an independent Director of Media Relations New York Times called me Reservation. Yes he did, but he Perhaps some of the reporters school while the others are prior to his sojourn to Pine madePineRidgeandWhiteclay invading Pine Ridge should run by the Bureau of Indian Sulzberger was out in South Ridge he asked if we could synonymous with alcoholism. make a trip to Gallup, New Education or other branches Reservation. He was the founder Dakota to do an article on the meet. I assured that we could. One is a community whose Mexicowheremany of the federal government. Crazy Horse Memorial situated He told me when he would be sole existence is selling problems exist. The people of in the Sacred Black Hills of the out here and gave me a phone beer and cheap wine to the Navajo Nation face many reporters from back East, and Native Sun News. He can Great Sioux Nation. He called number, but when I called residents of Pine Ridge and of the problems encountered I got a call from a Mr. be reached at UnitySoDak1@ combat a sedative to their problems.

Nick Kristof's heart was in the depravations of poverty, as Ms. Sawyer did, he could Shortbull, President of Oglala Chairmen's Association, or

SuAnne Big Crow Boys and Tony Newman was right Girls Club or Bryan Brewer, when he wrote that prohibition former principal of Pine Ridge

> Red Cloud Indian School is a prime example of a school that that Lakota youngsters are homelessness, running to get in instead of main school that can be an example the for all of the schools on the Ridge that cannot be ignored.

me and we had dinner at the it he never answered and so the other is a community with by the Lakota and oftentimes Washington of the Associated knology.net restaurant in the hotel where we never met. The first thing active programs struggling resort to consuming alcohol as Press regarding the status of senatorial candidate Elizabeth Warren. It is too bad that the national media chose this revelation to poke fun at Native Americans. The Native American Journalists Association pointed out this childish display of word usage by the press in mocking Warren. I fully support Warren and if she is proud of her Cherokee heritage, so be it, but she has never used this blood quantum to move her career forward as so many others have, including Ward Churchill as he did at the University of Colorado.

> As I write this there is a reporter from the Huffington Post sniffing around Pine Ridge for a story on poverty. I hope and pray that his nose doesn't catch the whiff of beer and lead him across the border to Whiteclay. There are too many good stories on Pine

Tim Giago, an Oglala Lakota, was born and educated on the Pine Ridge Indian of The Lakota Times, Indian While on the topic of Country Today, Lakota Journal

Has one-drop rule on race identification been overruled?

CLARENCE PAGE Chicago Tribune Writer

So what if Elizabeth Warren claims to be part Native American? She's entitled, according to historical Besides, documents. Americans never have been all that clear or consistent about what distinguishes one race from another.

Republican Sen. Scott Brown, of Massachusetts, is calling on his Democratic challenger Warren to clear the air over questions raised by the Boston Herald as to whether she used her ancient and diluted Indian heritage to give herself an unfair employment advantage.

At least she's not lying about her background. Historical records appear to confirm that she has Cherokee ancestors. But is her background Indian enough?

That question looms after researcher Christopher Child at the New England Historic Genealogical Society turned up evidence of her Indian blood. A transcript of an 1894 marriage application shows Warren's great-great-greatgrandmother listed herself as Cherokee.

That would make Warren 1/32nd Native American, although it is possible that more recent Indian ancestors could be turned up in further research. Child also found that Warren's greatgrandfather, John Houston Crawford, lived in Native American territory but identified himself as white in the 1900 census.

However, Warren's family is not included in the official Dawes Commission rolls, a census of major tribes completed in the early 20th century that Cherokees use to determine tribal citizenship.

Such a tenuous tie to her

Indian past has led critics at the Boston Herald, which broke the story, to label her "Fauxcahontas," among other nicknames. Yet, I would ask, how much Indian blood do you need these days to claim Indian heritage?

In other words, whatever happened to the one-drop

That's the rule in America's past, you may recall, that declared anyone who had at least "one drop" of "black blood" to be black. The irony of this rule, invented by slave masters who wanted to have more slaves, is how it has been encouraged in modern times, particularly by black leaders who want to have more blacks in our ranks.

But like other rules of race, this one is not applied uniformly or consistently. George Zimmerman, the man accused of killing Trayvon Martin in Florida, had an Afro-Peruvian greatgrandfather on his mother's side, according to his family. That would make him at least one-eighth black, which is a lot more than Warren is Indian. Yet Zimmerman was reported first as "white," then a "white Hispanic." If the old one-drop rule applies, he also could be called a white-Hispanic black.

If taken literally, that would make the killing of Martin, about whose blackness there is no confusion, a black-onblack crime -- which, sad to say, attracts a lot less national attention than similar violence that crosses racial lines.

Zimmerman is not likely to be seen as black by many people. But, like the Warren controversy, he illustrates how quickly our old racial narratives are failing to keep up with changing times.

The Herald reported that

Warren used to list herself as Native American in law school directories while teaching at several law schools across the country in the 1980s and

She dropped the reference from her biography after she was hired at Harvard Law School in the 1990s at a time when protesting students and faculty had been pressuring the school to hire more minority female faculty. The law school says it has one faculty member of Native American heritage, according to reports, but won't say which one.

If Warren was claiming Indian ancestry when it worked to her benefit, she was following another American tradition. writes David Treur, an Ojibwe Indian from northern Minnesota and author of "Rez Life: An Indian's Journey Through Reservation Life."

"An Indian identity has become a commodity," he recently wrote in The Washington Post, "though not one that is openly traded. It has real value in only a few places; the academy is one of them. And like most commodities, it is largely controlled by the elite.

Race is no longer as simple as black and white, but then it never really was. The real issue of what Warren, Zimmerman and the rest of us want to call ourselves has two sides: how we see ourselves and how we are seen by others.

If anything, Treur is right about elites. The Warren controversy illustrates how rapidly the one-drop rule and other old rules of race are fading at a time when race is becoming less of a problem than privilege -- who has it and who doesn't -- regardless of race.

The viewpoints expressed in columns and letters are the opinions of the writers and not necessarily the opinion or viewpoint of the Native American Times publisher or staff. Send letters to editor@nativetimes.com. Please keep letters to 350 words or less. Sign your name, tribal affiliation and city of residence for verification purposes.

Reeves Renovations

Professional Construction, Remodeling & Repairs

Bathrooms • Kitchens • Paint • Tile • Trim Plumbing • Electrical • Solar Panels Windmills • Winterizing Quality Work • Free Estimates

Serving Mayes & Cherokee Counties –

918-637-6736

johnwilliamreeves@juno.com

SUPERNAW'S OKLAHOMA INDIAN SUPPLY

Wholesale items for Pow Wow Vendors

Bone chokers $20 per dozen

Handmade lamp worked glass bead bracelets $1.00 each Glass bead stretch bracelets 5 for $2.50

12 Necklaces: Chain w/ pendant and display pad $13.50 36 inch gemstone chip strands Reg. 3.95 now $2.00 36 inch turquoise chip strands Reg. 7.95 now $4.00

Always our regular stock of seed beads from 16/0 to 8/0, findings, leather, hackles, fluffs and thousands of other supply items.

Remember we've moved around the corner 109 North Broadway, Skiatook, OK 74070

New Dealers Cash or Credit Card Only.

Open Noon-6pm Mon. thru Fri. • 10am-5m Sat. • Closed Sun. Local: 396-1713-Countrywide Toll Free 1-888-720-1967

Website: www.supernaw.com • Email: Supernaw@flash.net

Seminole Nation chief Leonard Harjo seeks to build modern tribe

M. SCOTT CARTER
Journal Record

WEWOKA, Okla. (AP) – Leonard Harjo sees his job as a builder.

Actually, he considers himself a rebuilder

Harjo, who was elected principal chief of the Seminole Nation in 2009, says his goal as chief is to rebuild his tribe into a modern, economically diverse Native American nation. After watching the tribe struggle through the 1990s, he said, he wants to make the modern Seminole Nation an economically strong, diverse group.

Based in Wewoka and primarily in Seminole County, the nation has a total tribal enrollment of about 18,800, records show. Of that figure, about 13,500 Seminoles make their home in Oklahoma. It also includes about 2,000 Seminole freedman, descendants of black Americans brought into the tribe in the late 1800s.

And though deeply engrained in state history – the nation is one of the state's five civilized tribes because of its written language – over the past decades it has not had the rapid economic growth of its neighbors, the Chickasaws and Choctaws.

Harjo's goal, he said, is to change that.

"With the advent of self-governance, we could see there was a lot more that could be done in Indian Country," he said. "It was easy to see parallels with international development and where we were."

Seminole County, he said, was trying to transfer from agriculture, to oil and gas and manufacturing.

"Seminole County, and of course the Seminole Nation, were experiencing the same thing," Harjo said. "I want to bring some of the understanding of how to grow and develop an economy here."

To spur that growth, Harjo said he wants to develop programs that keep Seminoles in Oklahoma.

"We have spent a fair amount of money educating our people," he said. "And what happens is we're in a really big brain-drain situation. The vast majority of our members who are educated can't live and work here. There's nothing here."

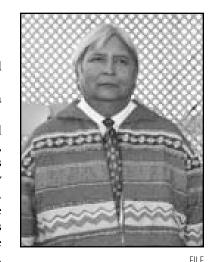

Those who have completed their education, he said, can't stay in Seminole County and make a living.

"In order for us to be able to ask you to make a sacrifice to work for the nation and still be able to offer you a standard of living, something that is within range of the norm, we have to do something," he said.

That approach doesn't surprise others from the area.

Stu Phillips, publisher of the Seminole Producer, said Harjo has a definite vision for his tribe.

"I know he has a real set of ideas about where he wants to go," Phillips said. "But sometimes it's hard to figure out what Chief Harjo is thinking. He can be very quiet and stoic and very traditional."

Leonard Harjo

Because the Seminoles haven't seen the same economic growth as other nations, Phillips said, Harjo will be forced to diversity and expand.

"They haven't progressed as fast as others," he said. "But they are doing other things beyond just gaming. They are in retail and they have convenience stores. And there's a need for that type of employment in the county."

Harjo said he is simply working to bring different ideas together.

He's also not above luring executives from other tribes to reinvigorate the nation's economic development efforts.

"There are people in other tribal business organizations who have topped out," Harjo said. "Their careers aren't going to grow much more; the turnover at the levels above them is low."

Harjo said tribal executives who are looking for new opportunities have started considering his nation.

"When we went looking for a CFO of gaming, we were able to find just such an individual working for the Chickasaws," he said.

The result, he said, was a well-trained executive who could bring a wealth of experience to the tribe.

"We got people who were very well-trained, and much better equipped to help us catapult those organizations light-years ahead of where we were," he said.

With an emphasis in gaming, retail and real estate development, Harjo said, his tribe has worked to slowly expand, diversify and rebuild his tribe's business interests.

"We have expanded in other areas; it's a small revenue base, but it is something that has a lot of potential and gives us a lot of opportunity," he said. "We can leverage that in a manner which I don't think we've ever thought about."

Still, Harjo isn't just focused on tribal business. Education, culture and even politics are all issues, he says, that he and the tribe continue to address. The son of a former Seminole chief, Harjo doesn't run from politics. He embraces it.

"I usually tell people that tribal politics is the family business," he said. "I tell the story when we were meeting with the tribal council, my father created his own advisory group. I have an older sister who has a law degree and a degree in accounting. I have another sister who is a private practice CPA. And there's me: I have economic development, planning and business management experience."

Harjo said his father would bring issues home to him and his two sisters for examination and input.

"We were his kitchen cabinet for years," he said. "That's how he used us. He'd asked us questions and we'd go around and around and have different arguments and discussions."

His father, Floyd, served as chief in the early 1970s and led a successful campaign for a new tribal constitution to restore the rights of the Seminoles to elect their own chief. Harjo's father also served as general council representative for the Tusekia Harjo Band, assistant chief and principal chief.

His great-grandfather was a member of the Seminole Light Horse, the tribe's mounted police force

Leonard Harjo has continued that Elected principal chief in 2009, Harjo was born near Sasakwa. Raised on his grandfather's allotment near Wolf, Harjo said his family raised livestock, grew corn and other crops and spent a great deal of time at church.

He attended Bowlegs High School until his sophomore year. Later he applied for and received a scholarship to the Northfield Mount Hermon School, a private preparatory school in Northfield, Mass.

After graduating from Northfield Mount Hermon, Harjo entered Harvard University. In 1979 he received a bachelor of arts degree in economics with an emphasis in economic development. Six years later, he received a First Nations Fellowship to attend the Yale School of Organization and Management in New Haven, Conn.

In 1988, he graduated with a master's degree in public and private management.

That education, away from his family and hundreds of miles away from his tribal home, helped Harjo understand and embrace his Native American roots.

"You don't think that in other parts of the country it's different," he said. "That experience really helped me begin to understand what it meant to be Seminole as opposed to what it meant to be someone from Seminole County."

It was only after he was away from Oklahoma, he said, that he discovered his heritage.

"Otherwise you're just another one from the area," he said. "It was a different world."

Harjo returned to Oklahoma in 1980. He worked for the Oklahoma Indian Affairs Commission, the United Tribes of Western Oklahoma and Kansas and for what is now the Oklahoma Department of Commerce.

At DOC, Harjo said he helped coordinate planning activities for the state's weatherization and antipoverty programs and create a business development program for Community Action Agencies.

In 1988, he began working for the Seminole Nation and, over the next decade, served in a variety of positions, including tribal planner, director of economic development, and the first director of the Seminole Nation Development Authority.

"I've been involved on many levels," he said.

And today, as chief, Harjo has set a single goal: rebuild the Seminoles and bring them into a new era of prosperity.

"We can rebuild and we can thrive," he said. "That's my direction for the Seminole Nation and the Seminole people."

For the Seminole Nation's principal chief, education is the key.

Raised in rural Oklahoma, Leonard Harjo knew that it would take more than a diploma from Bowlegs High School to get him where he wanted to go.

"I wanted to go to Harvard, and I knew I would need a path to get there," he said. "I told my family I wanted to go, they found me a way to do it and I did it."

At Bowlegs, he said, classes were filled with too many students.

"The majority of time we spent in what we called homeroom classes, the teachers did nothing but try to maintain control of the classroom for eight hours," he said.

To get to Harvard, he said, he knew he would have to leave Oklahoma.

During his sophomore year at Bowlegs, he applied for and received a scholarship to the Northfield Mount Hermon School, a private preparatory school in Northfield, Mass.

"At that time, it wasn't an option," he said. "Academics was what I was good at and I felt that I needed to be somewhere where I could take advantage of that."

After graduating from Northfield Mount Hermon, Harjo entered Harvard University. In 1979 he received a bachelor of arts degree in economics with an emphasis in economic development. Six years later, he received a First Nations Fellowship to attend the Yale School of Organization and Management in New Haven, Conn.

In 1988, he graduated with a master's degree in public and private management.

And while Harjo said he might reconsider leaving Oklahoma today, the experience away from his native land changed him for the better.

"It helped me understand my Seminole heritage," he said. "Coming from Oklahoma, it never really occurred to me that people in other parts of the country are different, how they acted and with the things they do. It helped me begin to understand what it meant to be Seminole as opposed to what it meant to be someone from Seminole County."

Contestants sought to compete for Miss Cherokee title

TAHLEQUAH, Okla. — The Cherokee Nation is currently accepting Miss Cherokee Leadership Competition entries from young women interested in representing their tribe and earning money for their education. For more than 50 years, Miss Cherokee has served as a cultural icon and a goodwill ambassador on behalf of the Cherokee Nation. The competition is held in conjunction with the 60th Cherokee National Holiday to be held in Tahlequah over Labor Day weekend.

"We have a long history of selecting strong, capable women to represent our nation as Miss Cherokee," said Deputy Principal Chief S. Joe Crittenden. "As a traditionally matrilinear tribe, it is fitting that we have a young woman as an ambassador and role model and it is my hope that every eligible Cherokee citizen will be up for the challenge to participate."

Eligible contestants must be between the ages of 17 and 22 as of Aug. 25, 2012. To be eligible, a candidate must be a citizen of the Cherokee Nation who resides within the tribe's jurisdictional area. Additionally candidates must be a high school graduate or have a GED.

Miss Cherokee Leadership Competition is held in Tahlequah during the final week of August. Contestants are judged on their platform, their usage of the Cherokee language and their interviewing skills. Higher education scholarships will be awarded to the top three contestants. Miss Cherokee will be officially crowned during the State of the Nation ceremony held at Cherokee National Holiday on Sept. 5, 2012, and the new Miss Cherokee's duties will begin immediately with appearances throughout the remainder of the festival and continuing over the next 12

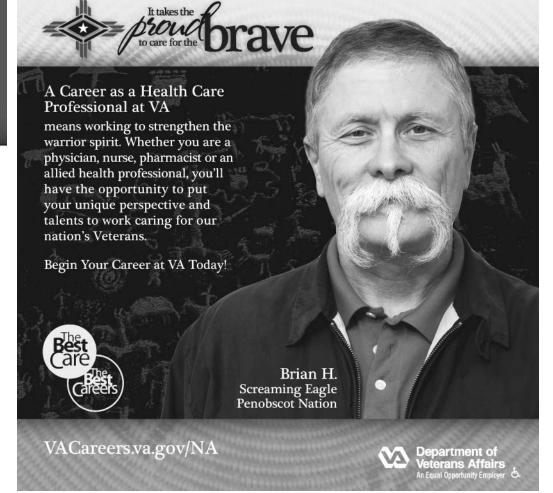

Miss Cherokee entries must be postmarked by July 27, 2012. For more information including an entry form with a full list of eligibility requirements, please call 918-207-3577

Miss Cherokee Sidney Kimble

WWW.GANICA.NET

Bacone College to host American Indian Summer Bridge Program 2012

MUSKOGEE, OK - Bacone College through its Mission Statement maintains its commitment to serving American Indians by hosting its Fourth Annual American Indian Summer Bridge Program 2012 (Summer Bridge 2012) scheduled for July 9, 2012 through August 3, 2012 on the Bacone campus. Summer Bridge 2012 provides American Indian students (students) opportunities to improve their reading, writing, and math skills before they enter college; to live on a college campus; and to get involved in cultural and academic presentations, discussions, and field experiences. Most importantly, Summer Bridge 2012 helps students transition to college life!

Whether students plan to attend Bacone College or another college or university, students are invited to participate in Summer Bridge 2012. It further provides students the opportunity to attend Bacone College and opportunities to get involved in the college experience before college begins by earning six college credit hours and a scholarship opportunity to attend Bacone. Bacone offers Summer Bridge 2012 to students free of charge and further provides books, tuition, room and board, and an opportunity to participate in field experiences.

Please contact Dr. Pete G. Coser, Director of Summer Bridge 2012 at (918) 781-7301 or by e-mail at coserp@bacone.edu for further information, clarification, or a Summer Bridge 2012 application. A cohort of twentyfive students will be selected for Summer Bridge 2012.

Native students honored by OCIE

NORMAN, Okla. - The Oklahoma Council for Indian Education honored 773 Native American high school and college students on April 26 at the organization's annual Oklahoma Indian Student Honor Society induction/dinner.

More than 100 schools in Oklahoma nominated students. To qualify, students need a cumulative 3.9 grade point average and "demonstrate moral character, leadership skills, participate in cultural activities as well as service and involvement to the tribe and community," a press release states.

Those honored at the event received certificates, eagle pins and T-shirts. Three $500 scholarships were also given to outstanding students. Cherokee Nation citizen Christy Joy Kingfisher, a Tahlequah High School senior, received the John Sam Memorial scholarship.

"(To apply) I had to be a member of OISHS, apply for it and write an essay," she said.

The essay included her intended college major and her plans for after graduating college.

"I want to go to medical school and be a physician's assistant," she said. "I'm going to go to NSU (Northeastern State University) for my basics, and I think I want to go to OSU (Oklahoma State University)."

Kingfisher said she's been an OISHS member for three years and receiving the John Sam Memorial Scholarship was a great achievement.

"It means a lot to me and I'm really honored that they chose me out of all the applicants that they had. I appreciate it a lot,"

Kingfisher's cumulative grade point average is 4.53. She said she also received a scholarship from NSU that equals a full

Other honorees were Ada High School senior and Chickasaw Nation citizen Zachary Star Garcia, who received the Alice Tonemah Memorial Scholarship, and Holdenville High School senior and Muscogee (Creek) Nation citizen Brittany Elizabeth George, who received the Marlene LeClair/Helen Wright

To apply for one of these scholarships, the student must be a member of the Oklahoma Indian Student Honor Society (OISHS) and must complete an OCIE Scholarship Application form. Scholarship recipients are recognized at the annual OISHS banquet held each spring. The banquet is held in Oklahoma City area in odd calendar years and the Tulsa area during even calendar

OCIE has honored students since 1990. According to the press release, each year membership increases, with this year's inductees bringing the total membership to more than 10,000 students.

For more information on OISHS, call 405-366-5809 or email lharjo2@norman.k12. ok.us.

From Princess to State Champion

CEDRIC SUNRAY

Savannah Waters (Ponca/Kiowa/ Choctaw/Creek/Chickasaw) has been more recently known for her beautiful smile and accompanying tribal regalia, as well as involvement with the Owasso Lady Rams 6A high school basketball team, than for what occurred this past Saturday at the Oklahoma High School Track & Field State Championships.

As an average event participant in both the shot put and discus events as a sophomore the preceding season, Savannah has developed in to a legitimate state title contender in her favorite event, the discus. After besting her opponents in regional competition she entered the state championships with a positive frame of mind and calmness indicative of one who excels academically in school (3.7 GPA) and exudes grace during her many responsibilities at community and ceremonial events for the Ponca

In the first round of the state championships she threw well enough to make it into the field of eight that would comprise the finals. She sat in the middle of the pack after two throws and then I witnessed her look over at her dad. Savannah mentioned something to the effect of, "This is the one." On her third and final attempt the discus soared higher and farther than it had all day. Ten minutes later she found herself standing on the podium in the host stadium clutching on her silver medal amid the "lulus" of her female family members and applause of the men and many others gathered to view her accomplishment.

In a few months she will hand over her title as Ponca Princess as her family gives away

Savannah Waters has developed into a legitimate state title contender in her favorite track and field event, the discus throw.

gifts to the many gathered in appreciation for the support and fellowship they have provided to her over this past year. The announcer will speak of her accomplishments in the cultural, academic, and athletic realm to those in attendance. And at that time she will be preparing for one more run at a state championship during her senior year and dealing with the pressures of being an early favorite for gold, while no longer content with dreaming of silver.

MODERN AMERICAN INDIAN LEADERS

By Dean Chavers, Ph. D.

Stories of 87 Indian leaders of the modern age. Tribal leaders, war heroes, literary heroes, education heroes, sports heroes, movement heroes, religious heroes, and others. A MUST for every school library and Indian Studies program. Hardback, two volumes, 792 pages, 40 pictures.

Available at www.mellenpress.com

Order yours today! Great textbook!

EVENTS

*Email your powwow or other event info to: Lisa@ nativetimes.com. Name, date, time, place and contact information is free.

EVERY THURSDAY The Otoe-Missouria Substance Abuse and Behavioral Health Programs sponsor an open group for families touched by addiction from noon to 1 p.m. at the Otoe-Missouria Health Building. This is a confidential group. Call 580-723-4466 x252 or x262 for more information.

SECOND TUESDAY Cherokee Artists Association meeting at 202 E. 5th Street Tahlequah, Okla. Info: (918) 458-0008 or www.

FOURTH THURSDAY Each month the American Indian Chamber of Commerce of Oklahoma – Eastern Chapter hosts a monthly luncheon at Bacone College, Muskogee, Okla. 11:30 a.m. at Benjamin Wacoche Hall. Please RSVP one week ahead of time. Phone: (918) 230-

EVERY 2ND SATURDAY Modoc Tribal Citizens Meeting at Wyandotte Community Center 1pm-3pm. Info call 918-961-0439 or 832-350-4530.

Indian Taco Sales - from 11-2:30pm at OK Choctaw Tribal Alliance, 5320 S. Youngs Blvd, Oklahoma City www. okchoctaws.org

MON/WED AND THURS The Marble City Nutrition Center serves hot meals at the Marble City Community Center at 11:30 a.m. Meals are free to anyone over 50, but a small donation is suggested to help with the expense of the program. Marble City Nutrition Center, 711 N. Main, Marble City, Okla. Phone: (918) 775-2158

YOUTH COUNCIL The Native Nations Youth Council (NNYC) bimonthly meetings from 6:30pm cherokeeartistsassociation.org 8:30pm @ the Youth Services of Tulsa Activity Center (311 S. Madison - on 3rd just west of Peoria). Call to confirm location. Info Call: Chad Gilley (918) 382-2204 or nnyc@ihcrc.org

> MAY 17 Pawnee Community Gathering 6pm at Albin Leading Fox Hall located at 861 Little Dee Road in Pawnee, Okla. Info call PNC 918-762-3343.

MAY 18 Walk MS Team Hope For A Cure Silent Auction fundraiser. A great night filled with tons of great services and products from local businesses. All auction proceeds will go toward the National MS Society toward finding a cure for MS. Silent auction at 6:00 PM at the Ardmore Santa Fe Depot located at 251 E. Main St Ardmore, OK.

MAY 18 & 19 Indian Taco Sale 11am to 4pm at Tulsa Indian UMC, 1901 N College. Info call 918-834-1956 or 918-798-2845.

MAY 19 Kiowa Tia-Piah Society of Carnegie, OK, benefit dance at the Red Buffalo Hall, in Carnegie, OK. Begins at 1:00PM with Scalp Dancing, followed by Gourd Dancing. 5:30PM Supper. Black Leggings Society Color Guard after supper, followed by Round Dancing and Veteran's songs, followed by Gourd Dancing. The flag of Cpl. Joshua Ware will be honored. A special invitation to all Veterans.

MAY 20 We Are The Aboriginal Pioneers rally at Okla. State Capitol, 1pm - 6pm. All Drum Groups, Singers, Stompers, Dancers, Speakers, Storytellers are invited as time permits. Contact spiritwomenrawk@yahoo. com or 405-471-7610 for more information.

MAY 25 Native American Student Association at OSUIT/ CMN Indian Taco Sale, 11am-2pm at Okmulgee Indian Community Center. $6 including drink and a dessert. Free delivery for orders of three or more otherwise a $.50 delivery fee per taco. Accepting pre-orders. Contact rsourjohn21@ymail.com or (918) 304-7802

MAY 26 The Sac and Fox Nation Veteran's Organization 6th annual Memorial Day Gourd Dance & Powwow. Gourd Dancing Starts at 2pm. Traditional Dinner for all participants from 5pm until 6pm. Grand Entry at 7pm. We put a flag on every deceased vets' grave in 10 tribal cemeteries.

Art Class: Slate Rock Art Paintings by Bill McCulley at Council House Museum, 106 W. 6th Okmulgee, Okla. Class is limited to 20 people. Reserve your spot call 918-756-2324 or csago71@ sbcglobal.net 10 a.m.-2 pm. Free.

JUNE 1 Indian Taco Sale 11:00 AM - 2:00 PM at Norman First American UMC, 1950 East

Beaumont Drive, Norman, Okla. Call Ahead for Speedy Service. Free Delivery on Orders of 10 or More (405) 321-5640

JUNE 2 Tinker Intertribal Powwow in Joe B. Barnes Regional Park in Midwest City, Okla. from 1:00 p.m. to 11:00 p.m. Interested vendors or participants should contact Corene Chakenatho at (405) 734-7366.

JUNE 8 Chilocco Powwow in the Event Center of the First Council Casino, seven miles north of Newkirk, OK. Gourd dance begins at 2:00 p.m. with grand entry at 6:30. Featured will be the Apache Fire Dance. Contact Garland Kent, Sr at 580- 352-2670.

JUNE 8-10 Red Earth Festival, Cox Convention Center, Oklahoma City

JUNE 10-16 Jim Thorpe Native American Games at Remington Park, Oklahoma City. Proceeds benefit the Jim Thorpe Bright Path Youth Programs and Awakening The Spirit Diabetes Prevention and Control program. Contact Annetta Abbott: 405-208www.jimthorpegames.com

JUNE 14 Iowa Tribe of Oklahoma 4th Annual Golf Tournament kicking off Iowa Tribal Powwow - 8am at Cimarron Trails in Perkins, Okla. Registration begins at 7am. Info call Linda Andre 405-547-5352 Ext 23

JUNE 15-17 Iowa Tribe of Oklahoma 27th Annual Pow Wow, Bah-Kho-Je PowWow Grounds, Hwy #177, 4 miles south of Perkins, Okla Free admission, camping, contests in all divisions, arts & crafts, rations. Contact Robert Murray 580-304-6731 or Bernadette Huber 405-240-2600.

JUNE 16 The 17th Annual Oklahoma Indian All-State Basketball Games at the sports center on the Oklahoma Wesleyan University campus in Bartlesville. Games will start at 6:00 P.M. For more info: contact us 918-642-3162, paradox@valornet.com

JUNE 23 Creek Council House Museum's Indian Art Festival 106 W. 6th, Okmulgee, OK; 10:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. For Free Booth Space or Register into $1000 Art Competition Contact: csago71@sbcglobal.net; 918-756-2324

Mississippian culture comes to life in 'Spring'

BECCA AYRES
Chickasaw Nation

Symbols of rebirth, fresh beginnings, good luck and prosperity seem more than appropriate for the first blanket in the Pendleton Woolen Mills' "Legendary" series featuring Mississippian designs.

Chickasaw artist Dustin Mater said that the design on the "Spring" blanket is based on the ancient culture that brought new life and a creative spark to his artwork.

"I've been drawing since I could hold a pencil, but I spent years trying to find my inspiration," said Mater. "I was drawing monsters and doing abstract art painting and stuff that didn't really have a basis or meaning. I was just kind of finding what I could do. I never thought my art had anything to offer my family or my tribe."

Then he was asked to create artwork for a traditional Chickasaw story "Spider Brings Fire," and

Chickasaw artist Dustin Mater

"Lowak Shoppala" (Fire and Light), a theatrical production based on Chickasaw history and culture. As part of the projects, he delved into research of Mississippian culture, symbols and designs.

"These Mississippian patterns just kind of spoke to me. It just kind of started growing and growing and growing," he explained, the intensity in his voice rising with every word. "I just started having ideas blossom in my own head and in my own research that I was doing. It was just continuing the bloom of different ideas."

While he was excited about the new direction of his artwork, one of his first showings drew a less than enthusiastic response.

"The first time I showed my artwork based on Chickasaw culture was at Red Earth in 2010 and most of the time I just got questions of 'what is it?' People were just not really getting what I was doing as an artist," he said.

Undeterred, he approached Pendleton with this simple question – "How do I get my artwork on one of your blankets?"

In a relatively short time, he was asked to send in some of his designs for consideration. He submitted 10 of his designs in 2011 and "Spring" was selected to become part of the Legendary series.

"To have Pendleton see it and respond so positively to it kind of made me feel validated as an artist – that what I'm doing is on the right path," he said.

His philosophy has always been to "study everything, absorb everything. Be a sponge. You never know where inspiration is going to hit you."

His artistic influences run the gamut from Japanese illustrators to Monet to comic books.

Mater attended Santa Monica College and the Multimedia Institute in North Hollywood, but said that he has continued to develop his skill set through different kinds of artistic

COURTESY CHICKASAW NATIO

Symbols of rebirth, fresh beginnings, good luck and prosperity are woven into Pendleton Woolen Mills' "Legendary" series featuring Mississippian designs.

 $adventures\ in\ different\ mediums.$

Now, whether he is engraving traditional shell gorgets, etching designs in glass, or creating graphic designs for poster art, his work bears the mark of his ancient Mississippian culture.

"My inspiration is the Mississippian mound builders in the old territories where the Muskogean people – where we all come from - Chickasaw and Choctaw people come from," Mater said. "I don't feel that any of this artwork belongs to me or to anyone else. This is our birthright. We all dip from the same well artistically. From (Classical music composer) Jerod Impichchaachaaha' Tate to (textile artist) Margaret Roach Wheeler to (painter) Brent Greenwood."

Chickasaw Nation Governor Bill Anoatubby said that it "means a great deal" to have Chickasaw culture represented on a Pendleton blanket.

A Pendleton blanket based on the original design of a Chickasaw artist is a very meaningful way to share a part of our culture with the world," said Gov. Anoatubby. "Dustin Mater is very deserving of this honor. He is using his talent in a way which pays tribute to the many generations of Chickasawartists who have embraced our culture and tradition."

Mater says he thinks the blanket designs signifying rebirth and fresh beginnings are especially appropriate because of what is happening with artwork based southeastern American Indian culture.

"Right nowit's actually a really good time to be a Mississippian modern artist, because it is in a renaissance," he said. "We are rediscovering, and enabling the world to discover, this artwork. It's just a really exciting time to do this. I would recommend any aspiring artists or someone who just wants to know more about the culture to go beyond the trail, to go beyond the first contact and just keep on digging.

"There is such a wealth of story and mythology and legend that it inspires me every day.

Looking at the mounds from Moundville to the area near the Chickasaw Bluffs in Tennessee and all the surrounding areas. There is just so much that is unexplored."

He said that he feels fortunate his work at the Chickasaw Nation offers a unique avenue to pursue his passion.

"This is really the first job I've ever had where I'm looking forward to what I'm going to do next," he said. "I've never had a job where I've been able to do the things that I'm interested in doing, the things that I am passionate about.

"My work here enables me to do what a lot of other Mississippian descendants are doing, which is keeping my culture alive and keeping the artwork alive. I feel like I'm part of something larger. I hope what I'm doing will inspire others."

Choctaw writer Howe earns Lifetime Achievement Award

The Native Writers' Circle of the Americas recognizes LeAnne Howe with the 2012 Lifetime
Achievement Award

NORMAN, Okla. - LeAnne (Choctaw Nation of Oklahoma), author of fiction, poetry, screenplays, creative nonfiction, plays, and scholarly articles, is the winner of the 2012 Lifetime Achievement Award from the Native Writers' Circle of the Americas. A well respected and honored author, LeAnne Howe's books include Shell Shaker (2001), winner of an American Book Award in 2002 from the Before Columbus Foundation; Equinoxes Rouge, the French translation of Shell Shaker, a 2004 finalist for Prix Medici Estranger, (one of France's top literary awards); Evidence of Red (2005), winner of an Oklahoma Book Award in Poetry and Wordcraft Circle Award in 2006; and Howe's most recent novel, the acclaimed Miko Kings: An Indian Baseball Story (2007) was the 2009-2010 Read-In Selection at Hampton University in Hampton Virginia.

Howe is screenwriter and oncamera narrator for the 90-minute PBS documentary Indian Country Diaries: Spiral of Fire (2006); she is also writer/co-producer of Playing Pastime: American Indian Fast-Pitch Softball and Survival, both documentaries with James Fortier (a three-time Emmy award winner filmmaker). Her scholarly work has appeared in Clearing a Path: Theorizing the Past in Native American Studies (2001), Preremoval Choctaw History: Exploring New Paths (2008) and Reasoning Together: Native Critics Collective (2008), for which Howe is listed as a co-author. Reasoning Together was named one of the most influential Native texts of the first decade of the 21st century.

In2010-11, Howe was a J. William Fulbright Scholar at the University of Jordan, Amman, where she taught in the graduate program as well as conductedresearch for a new novel. In March 2011, she was awarded the Tulsa Library Trust's "American Indian Author Award" in Tulsa, Oklahoma; and the Maynard Institute for Journalism Education named Howe one of 30 American Indians authors to celebrate during Native American Heritage Month, November 2011. Additionally, Howe's multi-genre autobiographical and scholarly prose essay, "My Mothers, My Uncles, Myself" appears in Here First: Autobiographical Essays by Native American Writers (2001), and her scholarly work on Tribalography (a term she coined) has found traction with other literary critics in the field such as professors Dean Rader, Jill Doerfler, Joseph Bauerkemper, among others.

Born in Edmond, raised in Oklahoma City, she maintains an ancestral home in Ada. Howe's roots run deep into the red dirt of Okla Humma. As she writes, "I am part Cherokee, ...although I am wholly Choctaw," Howe's work speaks to the larger Choctawan experience and interaction with not only Indian Country, and the U.S., but also with the world. She's traveled extensively to Japan, Jordan, Israel, Romania, and Spain. These experiences act as both research for her work and experiences by which she negotiates the ways in which Indigenous people broadly and Choctaws specifically maneuver, negotiate, and impact the world around them. Howe has been honored to serve as writer-in residence at several universities throughout the United States before joining the faculty at the University of Illinois, Urbana-Champaign. She is a professor in the American Indian Studies, and English. LeAnne is working on her third novel, Memoir of a Choctaw Indian in the Arab Revolts, 1917 -2011. Her latest collection of short stories, Choctalking, is forthcoming from Aunt Lute Books in Spring 2013. She is a daughter, mother, grandmother, culture bearer, and educator of the next generation. A ceremony honoring LeAnne Howe will take place during the Returning the Gift Native Writers gathering at the Menominee Reservation in Wisconsin later in the year.

LeAnne Howe

Brandon Little Axe; National athletic success story

CEDRIC SUNRAY

Oklahoma's top high school athlete didn't make spectacular catches in the end zone on Friday nights this past fall. He didn't hit game winning three pointers with a second or two left on the clock. It wasn't huge home run shots in the final inning propelling him to this deserved status.

Brandon Little Axe, a high school senior and enrolled member of the Absentee Shawnee Tribe, simply dominated a game that is only in more recent times gaining an interest amongst the youth of Indian Country. On Saturday night he lead his Norman North soccer program on to the field to play for a 6A state championship against perennial athletic powerhouse Tulsa Union. His team, sporting a 16-0 record and having outscored their opponents 59-7 to this point in the season, was ranked #3 in the nation and #2 in the state. Oddly, Tulsa Union held a #1 state ranking and #10 national ranking. Brandon entered the game having scored 23 of his team's goals as well as a handful of assists. This tally had made him one of the most prolific offensive weapons in the country. Unfortunately for Tulsa Union and their offensive "Redskin" moniker, an actual Indian carrying a 3.8 GPA, 25 ACT, and a humble character to boot, was about to add two more goals to his season leading campaign and assist his team in taking home a 2-1 victory. This accomplishment would propel Norman North to a #1 state and national ranking.

When the whistle sounded and the Norman North student body rushed out of their stadium seats to mob those who just added a state and national championship to their trophy case, all one could hear in every side conversation was his name. The same chorus had been heard throughout the season. In true Brandon Little Axe style after being surrounded by news reporters and television cameras asking about his performance, he made the following statement. "We have no egos on the team. We're all together."

Brandon will be deciding his collegiate future this week between offers from schools including the University of Tulsa, Southern Nazarene University, William & Mary College (Virginia), Oklahoma Christian University, Mid-America, and few others. Kiowa tribal member and former NCAA D-II player Chris "Wonder Wondo" Wondolowski has already blazed a trail for the young Absentee Shawnee through college and the professional ranks of Major League Soccer winning the pro league's prestigious goal scoring title only two seasons ago and leading the league in goals so far this season for his San Jose Earthquakes squad. Hopefully, five or six years from now Indian Country will have a repeat of his performances from a young man with "Little Axe" scrolled along the back of his team jersey. Never minding the small number of American Indians inhabiting the soccer sports culture, I still like those odds.

Cedric Sunray is a former head college soccer coach and NCAA/NAIA soccer player.

Inside this issue:

- Immersion school graduates first class
- Miss Indian Oklahoma chosen
- Red Earth Festival has new parade route

TODAY'S INDEPENDENT INDIAN NEWS

- A FREE PUBLICATION -

WWW.NATIVETIMES.COM

AMERICAN

VOLUME 18 + ISSUE 21

PUBLISHED WEEKLY

MAY 25, 2012

Judge tells Kialegee tribe to stop building casino

■ The tribe plans to take its case to the U.S. 10th Circuit Court of Appeals.

JUSTIN JUOZAPAVICIUS Associated Press

TULSA, Okla. (AP) -A federal judge issued an injunction May 18 to prevent a small Oklahoma Indian tribe from building a casino in a Tulsa suburb, siding with thousands of residents, church leaders and local lawmakers who rallied for months against the project.

U.S. District Judge Gregory K. Frizzell ruled that the Kialegee Tribal Town does not have jurisdiction over the 20acre parcel in Broken Arrow, where it is building the Red Clay Casino. The judge issued his opinion stopping the casino construction after a three-day court hearing in Tulsa.

"It's the right outcome; we're excited," said Attorney General Scott Pruitt, whose office sued the Kialegee in February, accusing the 350-member tribe of moving ahead with construction without first getting approval from the National Indian Gaming Commission. Pruitt also argued that the land is owned by two Muscogee Creek Nation tribal members, not Kialegee, and that they have jurisdiction over the property.

Attorneys for the Kialegee disagreed, saying the land could be jointly held by both the Kialegee and Muscogee. They said the Kialegee already established a satellite tribal office at a house on the property, where the tribal flag flies above a garage door. This is in addition to the tribe's headquarters in Wetumpka in southeastern Oklahoma.

Frizzell's ruling stunned some casino backers, particularly developers who took a big gamble late last year when they broke ground on the project and in recent weeks when they truckedinseveralpre-fabricated buildings to temporarily house slot machines. The casino was scheduled to open around Labor Day in the conservative community of nearly 100,000.

"I am surprised. Very said Kialegee surprised," attorney Dennis Whittlesey, minutes after Frizzell's ruling.

"It's like they were treating us as second-class citizens," said another attorney for the tribe, Vicki Sousa, outside the courthouse.

The lawyers said the tribe plans to take its case to the U.S. 10th Circuit Court of Appeals.

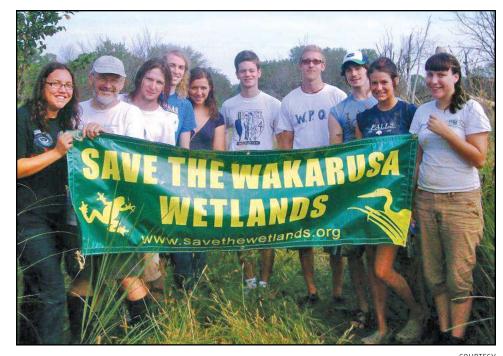

Opponents of the project, who collected more than 10,000 signatures from residents and business owners to keep the casino out, welcomed Friday's ruling and said they would be prepared to mount another campaign if the Kialegee appeal.

"This is exactly what we've been saying all along: These are not Indian lands," said Rob Martinek, co-founder of Broken Arrow Citizens Against Neighborhood Gaming. "The burden of proof for them (in an appeal) will be higher than it was today."

Broken Arrow resident De EttaHughes, whose house is about a mile from the construction site, said it was "absolutely so exciting to know that the law isn't being overridden" by a group of developers.

"Even if they come back to

See CASINO Continued on Page 4

Students from Haskell Indian Nations University are embarking on 1,000 plus mile trip to bring awareness to the protection of Native American sacred places and present a copy of the Protection of Native American Sacred Places Act to Congress.

Students walk to protect Native sacred places

DANA ATTOCKNIE Native American Times

LAWRENCE, Kan. - Not everyone agrees progress is a step forward; especially if development means destruction.

A dozen students from Haskell Indian Nations University are walking to the save the Wakarusa remaining native wetland prairie in Lawrence, Kan., from being destroyed in order to become the South Lawrence Trafficway (SLT). Their walk through seven states is named the Trail of Broken Promises, and their first steps were taken on May 13, 2012 from Lawrence, Kan. Their journey will go through 50 communities, cover 1,100 to 1,300 miles, and end July 9 in Washington, D.C. where the students will present the Protection of Native American Sacred Places Act to Congress. The bill amends the American Indian Religious Freedom

See WALK Continued on Page 6

KAREN SHADE | NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES

Kristy Smithson, Choctaw, left, and her 'little' Shoshanna, Choctaw/ Muskogee-Creek/Seminole, take a rest from a rough and tumble game of stickball.

BBBSOK seeks Native American 'bigs'

KAREN SHADE

Native American Times

When playing stickball, Kristy Smithson keeps her eye on the ball. Her other eye is on her little sister, Shoshanna, who is getting into the rough and tumble game for the first

At 15, Shoshanna had but a brief introduction to the game before this round, but she's already keeping pace with the seasoned players.

In stickball, men often play the women, but usually only the men and boys use the specially-made sticks designed to maneuver the small hidewrought ball away from opponents and toward the goal - in this case, a wooden fish painted bright orange and mounted on top of a pole about 25 feet in height.

The sisters each make plays, rushing for the ball, grabbing it with their hands and catapulting it through the air to hit the orange fish. Shoshanna impresses Smithson.

"She's good at it," Smithson, out of breath, says. "She's just trying to get a feel for it. I told her 'It's real rough, you got to be careful."

Shoshanna found that out for herself.

"It's pretty fun," she says, wearing a T-shirt several sizes too large for her. "I already got stepped on."

Although they are not related, they have been sisters for five years. In other words, Smithson is Shoshanna's mentor, and they were matched together through Big Brothers Big Sisters of Oklahoma, the nonprofit organization that

See BBBSOK Continued on Page 2

Tribes name Okla. judge in suit over frozen funds

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) - The Cheyenne and Arapaho Tribes in Concho, Okla. have amended a complaint against a Clinton bank that froze its accounts because of an internal dispute to include a Custer County judge.

The tribes named District Judge Doug Haught in the petition filed in federal court earlier this week, accusing him of depriving the tribes of their constitutional rights by failing to dismiss First Bank and Trust Co.'s administrative freeze on about $6.4 million in the tribe's funds. The tribes argue that actions by the bank and Haught have "detrimentally" affected all tribal members.

An attempt to contact Haught at the courthouse was unsuccessful and a home telephone number couldn't found at press

Bank officials have said they were concerned about turmoil within the tribe and were uncertain about who the authorized signatory is.

Oregon bans Native American mascots

JONATHAN J. COOPER Associated Press

SALEM, Ore. (AP) - Eight Oregon high schools will have to retire their Native American mascots after the Board of Education voted Thursday to prohibit them, giving the state some of the nation's toughest restrictions on Native American mascots, nicknames and logos. The 5-1 vote followed months of passionate and emotional debate about tolerance and tradition.

The schools have five years to comply with the order or risk losing their state funding. Another high seven schools identified as the Warriors will be allowed to keep their nickname but will have to change mascots or graphics that depict Native Americans. An unknown

See MASCOTS Continued on Page 4

(Back row, left to right) Cambria Bird, Emilee Chavez, Alayna Harkreader, Cheyenne DrowningBear and Lauren Hummingbird. (Front row, left to right) Maggie Sourjohn, Cree DrowningBear and Sean Sikora. (Not pictured) Lauren Grayson. The students are the original charter members of the revolutionary immersion school Cherokee Nation started in 2002 and the first to graduate the program.

Students make history as first to graduate from Cherokee Nation's Immersion School

■ The graduates completed prekindergarten through sixth grade at the Immersion School and will now be able to transition to seventh grade at Sequoyah.

TAHLEQUAH, Okla. The first 11 students to attend Cherokee Nation's Immersion School made history May 14 when they graduated from the program during a commencement ceremony held at Sequoyah Schools' Place Where They Play.

"In the history of the tribe, this is the first graduation for Cherokee speaking students from a Cherokee school," said Dr. Neil Morton, Cherokee Nation's executive director of education.

Sean Sikora, Alayna Harkreader, Cambria Bird, Hummingbird, Maggie Sourjohn, Cheyenne DrowningBear, Cree DrowningBear, Lauren Grayson and Emilee Chavez are the original charter students in the revolutionary language program the tribe started in 2002 and are the first to complete the school's curriculum.

Cherokee Nation Principal

Chief Bill John Baker addressed the graduates during the ceremony. "I'm here to congratulate you on the first commencement ceremonies of the Immersion School.

You are the hope of the survival of the Cherokee language and its evolution," said Baker. "I hope that you will use this gift to carry on the tradition, language and culture that you've learned forever."

Tsalagi tsunade loquasdi ("Cherokee school" in the Cherokee language) began in classrooms at Cherokee Nation's Head Start as a way to educate children in a cultural environment while revitalizing and promoting of the Cherokee language. Since opening, the Immersion School has grown, adding a higher grade almost every year to accommodate the students who grew with the program.

Last week's graduates completed pre-kindergarten through sixth grade at the Immersion School and will now be able to transition to Sequoyah Schools' existing seventh grade classroom, where they will have the opportunity to take more Cherokee language classes and continue their

Census: Hispanics remain largest Oklahoma minority

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) - U.S. Census Bureau estimates show Hispanics remain the largest minority group in Oklahoma, but Native American population has made gains after dropping from the largest minority in last year's report.

The census estimates show that Hispanics made up 9.1 percent of Oklahoma's estimated 3.79 million residents in 2011 and that the Native American Alaskan Native group made up 8.9 percent. Native Americans and Alaskan Natives are counted as one group by the bureau.

Blacks were the third largest minority group with an estimated 7.6 percent of the 2011 population followed by those identified as from two or more races with 5.1 percent.

Hispanics, with 9 percent of the state population, surpassed American Indians, with 8.5 percent, as Oklahoma's largest minority group in 2010, three years after legislation targeting illegal immigrants became law.

"Maybe the illegal immigrant issue wasn't as big a problem as it was thought to be," University of Oklahoma political science professor Keith Gaddie said Monday. "In the long term, it reflects a trend going on across the United States. You're going have a different looking workforce and a different looking electorate that is less white."

The Census Bureau estimated the white population in Oklahoma at 75.7 percent.

BBBSOK

Continued from Page 1

children works to help and youth reach their full potential through matching them with adult volunteers. Smithson was in college when she decided to sign up. Now at 27, she is BBBSOK manager of Native American partnerships, actively recruiting Native youth (littles) and adults (bigs)

"When we match based on ethnicity, we find that they (pairs) have a closer bond, and that we're able to learn from one another," Smithson said. "With my 'little,' we do a lot of cultural events together, and I encourage that in her."

Smithson and Shoshanna (her last name is withheld due to BBBSOK policy) are both Choctaw. Shoshanna Muskogee-Creek also and Seminole, but the duo's shared heritage adds another dimension to their friendship.

Initiative

The organization has roots that go back to the early 20th century. In the 1970s, two volunteer mentor groups came together to form the Big Brothers Big Sisters of America that we know today. It operates in every state as well as in several countries.

According the organization's website, independent studies have shown a measurable impact BBBS has made in the lives of children. Participants are more likely to develop more confidence in school, relate better to others, avoid alcohol and illegal drug use and stay

Special mentoring programs help to match children of African-American and Hispanic heritage to mentors of the same ethnicity. Other programs have also been created to help kids cope with a parent in incarceration as well as those who have a parent actively serving in the military.

volunteer mentors of the same ethnicity or shared experience helps give them an early sense of trust and relationship building. It can increase their progress to the benefits of mentoring, said Anne Lisko, BBBSOK director of program evaluation.

"They start thinking of their future in ways they never have before," Lisko added.

The Native American mentoring initiative was made possible through funding from the Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention under the U.S. Department of Justice. Currently the program has a little more than 100 Native children enrolled across BBBSOK's eight service areas covering Oklahoma. More than half of the children are matched to a mentor. The rest are on a waiting list for volunteers.

In recruiting, Smithson said she approaches individuals and schools. Shoshanna's mother found out about the organization at her daughter's school. Smithson also goes to the tribal governments. Some tribes, such as the Chickasaw Nation in Ada, have created formal partnerships with BBBSOK to recruit volunteers and youth from tribe-owned businesses, including casinos.

There is still a need for more, especially male volunteers. The state organization, which works with more than 2,000 children total, sees a deficit across the board in men to mentor boys. There is rarely a shortage of big sisters to pair with girls.

"We'll have a hundred boys and no men to match them with," Lisko said. "We really feel like we'd be doing a disservice to the boys if we match them with a woman, because the reason they're coming to us is because they don't have a father figure."

organization goes Further research shows through a thorough check that matching children to of all mentor volunteer applicants. But Lisko said that shouldn't discourage genuinely interested people from applying.

> "We aren't looking or people that are perfect," Lisko said.

Past lessons learned can help mentors relate to their 'littles' when they need guidance.

Volunteers are asked to spend an hour or two a week with their 'littles,' but that time is often spent playing games, watching movies, eating pizza, helping with homework, hiking and sharing other fun activities.

Smithson and Shoshanna spend a lot of their time going out for ice cream or heading for powwows.

"These kids are amazing. teach volunteers things every day, but it is a commitment," Lisko said.

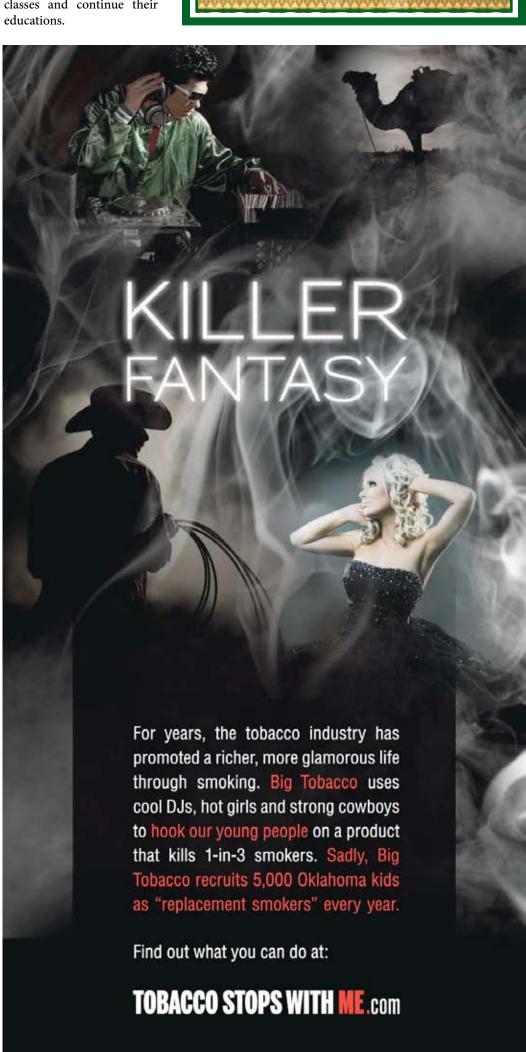

BBBSOK asks mentors to commit to at least one year. Many find it rewarding, like Smithson, who is eager to see more Native children and youth empowered.

"When you see someone of your own ethnicity being successful and doing good things like going to college or having a job, it's inspiring to them," she said.

Shoshanna has gained respect for herself and others through friendship with her big sister. Although there are some subjects at school that she would rather avoid, she works at those studies as if they were her favorite subject:

"I probably wouldn't have gotten where I am now," she said.

To find out more about BBBSOK and its Native mentoring American program, go online to www. bbbsok.org or call Smithson in the Oklahoma City offices at (405) 606-6309.

Senators renew opposition to museum bonds

TIM TALLEY Associated Press

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) -Two Oklahoma state senators criticized managers of the unfinished American Indian Cultural Center and Museum May 17 and said there are not enough votes in the Senate to pass a bill that would authorize another $40 million in bonds to complete it.

Republican Sens. Cliff Aldridge of Midwest City and Patrick Anderson of Enid said 14 GOP senators have signed a pledge to oppose additional bonds for the Oklahoma City museum, which they said has seen its construction costs swell from an initial estimate of $99 million to around $171 million.

Aldridge said the 16 Democrats in the 48-member Senate also have said they will not support the bill as long as Republicans keep pushing for tax cuts, but he said Republicans remain committed to income tax cuts in future years. With a majority of the Senate against the measure, it has no chance of passing.

"I don't know how we're going to get it out of the Senate," Aldridge said.

Anderson said Legislature has already issued $63.4 million in bonds for the project and that annual bond payments total $5.5 million. Another $40 million bond issue would increase the annual bond payments to $9 million, he said.

"We think that is totally irresponsible," Anderson said. "This would certainly increase spending."

The two senators said they are not opposed to the cultural center, located east of downtown Oklahoma City at the junction of Interstates 35 and 40, and believe it could be an economic boon to the region.

But they said the state has other capital needs including repairs to the State Capitol and the Medical Examiner's Office, where a storage cooler of bodies malfunctioned last Wednesday. Workers were forced to move the bodies to refrigeration trucks.

Budget negotiators have said they have a tentative agreement on a $200 million bond issue that would fund repairs to the state's crumbling Capitol and other nearby buildings.

 $Aldridge\,said\,the\,Senate\,had$ agreed to consider additional funding for the museum under certain conditions, including development of a completion plan for the structure and an audit of money already spent. He criticized the completion plan as inadequate and said the audit will not be finished before lawmakers are required to adjourn next week.

A final condition was the merger of the Native Cultural American Educational Authority, a state agency created in 1994 to oversee the project, with the state Tourism and Recreation Department. Legislation that would authorize the merger is pending.

"We think the management of the construction by this agency has been poor at best," Aldridge said. "We're just saying at some point you have to draw the line."

Aldridge said according to the completion plan, the structure needs another $50 million to finish, plus $30 million for exhibits. But $40 million in private donations has already been collected to complete the structure and many of the exhibits will come from the Smithsonian Institution and Oklahomabased Indian tribes at little or no cost, he said.

Blake Wade, CEO of the Native American Cultural and Educational Authority, said work on the project began in 2005 and was slowed by expensive remedial work on property donated by Oklahoma City that was formerly part of an extensive oil field.

"The land environmental disaster and also in a flood zone," Wade said. "It took three years just to do that."

He said the $40 million in donations from private citizens, businesses and tribes will have to be returned if the Legislature does not approve additional funding.

"We're hoping the state will finally match those dollars so we can get it finished," Wade

Gov. Mary Fallin supports the bond issue, according to spokesman Alex Weintz.

"The taxpayers of Oklahoma have made a significant investment in the Native American Cultural Center and the governor thinks it is important they see a return on that investment," Weintz said. "If there is not support in the Senate for such a bond issue, she hopes that senators will bring forward constructive ideas on how to finish the project."

VINITA 918-256-5585

LANGLEY 918-782-0011

MONKEY ISLAND 918-257-8869

www.okstatebank.com Equal Housing Lender Native American Owned

tahlequahrecycling.com 918-316-5856 "Changing the culture of waste." TA

TIMES

Tahlequah Recycling

recycles with Incorporated... shouldn't you?

NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES

Publisher & Editor LISA SNELL editor@nativetimes.com

Contributing Writers Dana Attocknie

WESLEY MAHAN

KAREN SHADE Advertising Sales KATHLEEN ROBERTSON

LISA SNELL ROB WALTON advertising@nativetimes.con

Distribution SHELBY HICKS STEVE LACY WESLEY MAHAN MICHAEL MARRIS KATHLEEN ROBERTSON BRENDA SLAUGHTER

The Native American Times, formerly the Oklahoma Indian Times, is published weekly (except the last week of the year) by Lisa Hicks Snell. Mailing address is PO Box 411 Tahleguah, OK 74465. All the contents within the Native American Times are copyrighted material. Any reproduction, redistribution without the written consent of the NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES is strictly

> Each week's issue is available for free download online at: www.nativetimes.com

Subscription rates: $65.00 for fifty-two issues, $32.50 for twenty-six issues, or $16.25 for thirteen issues. A single copy is $1.25 (Rates are for postage and handling) Send check or money order to:

> NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES Attn: Subscriptions P.O. Box 411 Tahlequah, OK 74465-0411

Phone: (918) 708-5838 Fax: (888) 689-4873

Postmaster: Send Change of Address Form 579 to: NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES P.O. Box 411, Tahlequah, OK 74465

WWW.NATIVETIMES.COM - News from the crossroads of Indian Country

VA/DOL program launches to retrain unemployed vets

veterans between the ages of 35 and Hire Heroes Act of 2011, the Veteran · Be 35-60 years old, unemployed on the 60 can now apply for new benefits to Retraining Assistance Program (VRAP) day of application, and not dishonorably cover education costs for up to one allows qualifying Veterans to receive up discharged; year through a joint Department of to 12 months of assistance equal to the · Start education or training after July retraining 99,000 Veterans for highdemand jobs.

education and training they need to March 31, 2014. find meaningful employment in a and the economy grow."

As part of a provision of the Veterans demand occupation.

WASHINGTON - Unemployed Opportunity to Work (VOW) to To qualify Veterans must:

who served our country receive the under this benefit program ends on as defined by the DOL;

of Veterans Affairs Eric K. Shinseki. direct deposit information (bank Rehabilitation and Employment); play a vital role in helping businesses school, the program the Veteran wishes days; to pursue, and the applicable high-

Veterans Affairs and Department of full-time Montgomery GI Bill - Active 1, 2012, in a VA-approved program Labor (DOL) program that focuses on Duty rate, currently $1,473 per month. of education offered by a community Veterans can apply on a first-come, college or technical school leading to an first-serve basis for programs that begin associate degree, non-college degree or a "This important tool will help those on or after July 1, 2012. Assistance certificate for a high-demand occupation · Not be eligible for any other VA To complete an application, a education benefit program (e.g. Post-9/11 high-demand field," said Secretary Veteran will need to know his or her GI Bill, Montgomery GI Bill, Vocational

"Veterans are disciplined, hardworking, routing number and account number), · Not be enrolled in a federal or state job goal-oriented team members who can the name and location of his or her training program within the last 180

> Not receive VA compensation at the 100% rate due to individual www.dol.gov/vets/unemployability (IU).

Upon completion, the Labor Department will engage with participants within 30 days after their training to help them find good jobs that utilize their newly learned skills.

For more information Veterans may go to the website at www.benefits. va.gov/VOW, or call VA's Call Centers toll free at 1-800-827-1000. Veterans may also access the VRAP application online at https://www.ebenefits.va.gov. Veterans are also encouraged to visit the nearly 3,000 One-Stop Career Centers across the nation for assistance. To find the center near you visit www. servicelocator.org.

For more information, go to http://

Reeves Renovations

Professional Construction, Remodeling & Repairs

Bathrooms • Kitchens • Paint • Tile • Trim • Plumbing Electrical • Solar Panels • Windmills • Winterizing Quality Work • Free Estimates

918-637-6736

johnwilliamreeves@juno.com

Serving Mayes & Cherokee Counties

Metal Roofing & Siding

Professional Construction and Home Repairs

Free Estimates

Charles Snell 918-507-2902

Native American Contractor

Stickball · Drawing · Fancy dancing · Beadwork Shooting hoops

Think of the possibilities! Step up and mentor a Native American child. Commit to changing a child's future. Commit to creating an impact in your tribal community.

How it Works

Step One: Fill out an application at www.bbbsok.org Step Two: Submit application. Receive phone call from BBBS to set up an interview.

Step Three: Attend an in-person interview. Bring copy of Drivers License, Proof of Insurance, Three References and complete a criminal background check.

Step Four: Once approved – matched with a child with similar interests!

Step Five: Pat on the back...you're making a difference!!!

All matches are supported by professional staff at local BBBS agencies. BBBS Match Support Specialists regularly consult with volunteers, children, and parents.

Want more information?

Contact Kristy Smithson, BBBSOK Manager of Native American Partnerships, by phone (405) 606-6309 or email kristy.smithson@bbbsok.org | www.bbbsok.org

AICCOK OKC CHAPTER SCHOLARSHIP

Help a deserving Native American student reach for their dreams.

OVERVIEW

The OKC Chapter has historically provided scholarships for many years. Typically one acholarship is awarded to the top male and female entrants, as decided by the OKC Chapter Board of Directors. In 2012, we plan to notify the recipient student(s) by May 10 to allow them to list their scholarship in their graduation materials. We will present the actual scholarship award at the August luncheon.

SPONSORSHIPS

There are 2 ways that your organization can help:

- 1. Sponsor a branded, stand-alone scholarship. (Minimum award $250). Special emphasis can be requested (e.g. math or science, healthcare, etc).
- 2. Contribute to the AICCOK-OKC Chapter General Scholarship Fund.

CONTACTS

To sponsor a scholarship, contact: James Lambertus, OKC Chapter Chair, aiccokc@earthlink.net, 405-650-5996 or Fran Smith, Treasurer, fran.smith@bank2online.com 405-946-2265.

To make a contribution to the Fund online, please click: http://tiny.cc/aiccokc_scholarshipfund

Oglala Sioux tribe testing sentencing circles

KRISTI EATON
Associated Press

PINE RIDGE, S.D. (AP) – A South Dakota tribe has been testing a form of restorative justice called sentencing circles in hopes it will make community members more accountable to each other and reduce the number of people who commit more crimes.

Sentencing circles provide an alternative to prison, with a group discussing the case and recommending a punishment that tailored to the offender. The circle can include prosecutors, police, the offender, victims, relatives of the offender and victims and anyone else in the community who has a stake in the situation.

The Oglala Sioux tribe currently has one sentencing circle in operation, and the tribe's attorney general said she hopes the method could be extended to all cases.

"It has a more healing affect because you're mending broken relationships and broken people," Attorney General Rae Ann Red Owl told The Associated Press. "I think if you compare that with a penal system, you're locking them up, you may or may not see the light from the incarceration. A lot of times, those in the penal system, it's such a different culture of its own, and it's based on a kind of survival mentality so you don't really know what you're going to get when you're done."

Red Owl declined to provide details on the case being handled by the sentencing circle but said it originated in Family and Child Court, which handles custody issues, juvenile crimes and child abuse cases. The tribe has been working with the Rapid City-based Center for Restorative Justice to develop the sentencing circle. A new one would be formed for each case.

"It's a lot like a talking circle," Red

Owl said, referring to a traditional Native American process in which each member of the circle is allowed time to speak without interruption. "Everybody gets a chance to talk without interruption. It's done in a respectful way. It's confidential."

Red Owl, who is also a proponent of peace making practices, acknowledged that sentencing circles take time – the offender and victim have yet to be brought together in the case that started in February – but she said the result will be worth it.

"I think if we really want to better our communities, we have a responsibility of helping them. I think our penal system kind of falls short, especially in our court system where we don't have services. It's kind of a hit or miss," she said, noting that the tribal court does not have probation services. "With the sentencing circle, that's something that would help alleviate that because it would put that juvenile back in the community and the community would give them direction."

Police Sgt. John Mousseau, of the Medicine Roots district of the Oglala Sioux Department of Public Safety, said sentencing circles could be beneficial but would need to be properly managed.

"I think it's going to have to be watched because it could trigger horrific memories," said Mousseau, who is not involved in the current sentencing circle. "As long as its managed properly, it could be positive, but you have to have a support system – like counselors – in place."

The Center for Restorative Justice is a non-profit organization established in 1997. Trained volunteers act as mediators to facilitate the circles. A representative from the organization could not be reached for comment by press time.

CASINO

Continued from Paae 1

fight, that's OK, this is a step in the right direction," Hughes said.

U.S. Rep. John Sullivan, R-Okla., whose district includes the casino site, called the ruling "a big win for the Broken Arrow community."

"This decision reaffirms what I have said all along – opening a casino without approval is a violation of federal law," Sullivan said in a statement.

Area homeowners, pastors and politicians had accused the tribe of sneaking the project through without any community input – a claim Whittlesey rejected.

"We've done everything by the book," Whittlesey argued Friday. "We went to the city of Broken Arrow a long time ago. It was no secret."

Chris Buskirk, pastor at the nearby Abiding Harvest United Methodist Church, testified May 17 that his parish holds Celebrate Recovery meetings each week for people struggling with gambling and other addictions. He said building a casino so close to his church could be an "Achilles' heel" for some addicts.

"This has primarily been a safe haven for folks coming to get well," Buskirk testified. "I've seen – within our own church – homes lost, marriages wrecked (due to gambling)."

But the town king, Tiger Hobia, maintains that his tribe is exempt from a federal review. He has said the casino would give the tribe its only chance to provide programs for its impoverished members. Sixty-five percent of tribal members are unemployed, he said, and more than 90 percent of those who are employed only earn minimum wage.

"The Red Clay Casino project provides our tribe with its only viable opportunity to provide programs for our elders, our school-age children and our infants and to develop a strategy to achieve long-term security for our tribe and finally a way to escape from the crippling effects of poverty," Hobia wrote in a letter to the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

DC court: Tribal faction can't block land payments

KEN RITTER
Associated Press

LAS VEGAS (AP) – A federal appeals court is telling an Indian tribal faction it can't block the long-fought distribution of money that Congress allocated to settle land claims in a vast area that includes California's Death Valley and most of what is now Nevada.

The U.S. District Court of Appeals in Washington, D.C., issued an order May 15 recognizing the April 2011 election of a Timbisha Shoshone tribal council that favors accepting money set aside by a federal Indian claims commission in 1977 and the Western Shoshone Claims Distribution Act of 2004.

The election "constituted the resolution of an internal tribal dispute in a valid tribal forum," the appeals court said, quoting a letter from a federal Bureau of Indian Affairs official to tribal leader George Gholson.

A rival tribal faction, headed by Joe Kennedy, doesn't have legal standing to challenge the payments, the court said.

Kennedy's group "is unhappy with how the election was run, who voted, and the results," the court conceded. "But ours is not the forum for that debate."

Gholson, of Bishop, Calif., said May 17 he was satisfied that accepting payments of about $37,000 to extinguish 19th century land rights offered a practical solution to a decades-old fight that could have gone unresolved indefinitely.

Shoshone tribes say the 1863 Treaty of Ruby Valley gave tribes, not the federal government, final say over water, mineral and property rights over lands from the east side of the San Bernardino Mountains in Southern California north across the Great Basin of Nevada to the Snake River Valley in Idaho.

The commission ruling and congressional act cite more than 100 years of what the government termed "gradual encroachment" over an area covering 93,750 square miles, or roughly the size of Maine. The region is now dotted with American cities, highways, bridges, dams and other improvements.

"We look at it practically," Gholson said. "It wouldn't be realistic to believe we would ever get the land back."

An update posted last week on a Bureau of Indian Affairs website says the program has distributed payments of about $22,000 to just under 3,200 recipients in nine tribes. The program has more than 9,600 applicants.

Final payments are expected in September, Gholson said.

"They're paying us off," the tribal chairman said.

"But the people who should have received the money should have been my grandparents."

Gholson said his mother, age 79, is receiving the federal money. So is Gholson, who at age 48 heads a tribe that he said has 380 remaining members.

Kennedy, 44, who lives in Nevada's Fish Lake Valley, said he intends to keep fighting.

He said he and his family members have rejected the payments, and he maintained that the vote that installed Gholson was tainted by allowing nonmembers to vote. He said payments are supposed to go to tribes, not individuals.

Kennedy counted just 265 valid tribe members, and alleged the Interior Department "hand-picked the council that would accept the money."

The appeals court acknowledged that Kennedy has a lawsuit pending in federal court in California challenging federal recognition of Gholson as tribal chairman.

Robert Coulter, head of the Indian Law Resource Center in Helena, Mont., and a supporter of the Kennedy group, said their attorneys may ask the court to reconsider the ruling or ask the U.S. Supreme Court to take the case.

Coulter accused the government of taking tribal property without compensation and due process.

Federal Bureau of Indian Affairs and Interior Department officials did not immediately respond to messages.

MASCOTS

Continued from Page 1

number of elementary and middle schools also will be affected.

The ban doesn't apply to colleges, but none in Oregon have Native American mascots after Southern Oregon University and Chemeketa Community College dropped them. Since the 1970s, more than 600 high school and college teams across the country have done away with their Native American nicknames, including 20 in Oregon.

Critics say Indian mascots are racist, contending they reinforce stereotypes and promote bullying of Native students. Supporters say the mascots are a way to honor Native American history, evoking values of strength and bravery.

"It is racist. It is harmful. It is shaming. It is dehumanizing," Se-ah-dom Edmo, vice president of the Oregon Indian Education Association, told the board.

In 2006, the Oregon Board of Education adopted a nonbinding recommendation that schools stop using Native mascots. A handful did, but some small communities have resisted the trend, saying the nicknames are a source of pride.

"It's a chance for us to talk about family and tradition and loyalty," said Jim Smith, principal of Banks High School – home of the Braves – who grew up on the Fort Peck Reservation in Montana.

Banks, west of Portland, has a logo depicting an Indian head on the gymnasium floor and walls, and even on the hurdles used by the track team. When the Star Spangled Banner is played at the beginning of every game, the crowd joins in and tweaks the last stanza: "and the home of the Braves."

Some critics of the ban said they were concerned about the costs of changing sports uniforms and equipment, school letterhead and street signs.

In some areas, schools have worked with nearby tribes to change their practices without changing their nickname. Roseburg High School, home of the Indians, switched a logo depicting a Native American to a simple feather. Molalla High School changed sports jerseys to say "Molalla" instead of "Indians" and stopped using a mascot dressed like a Native American to lead cheers.

Students and teachers from schools with Native American nicknames packed two public hearings on the topic. Some suggested they be allowed to keep their Indian nicknames if nearby tribes consent.

The board rejected that idea, with board member Artemio Paz describing it as a "search for acceptable levels of racism."

Native American mascots are a form of oppression that contributes to isolation among Native Americans and its social consequences, said Tom Ball, assistant vice president of equity and diversity at the University of Oregon. Those include high rates of suicide, incarceration and school dropout.

Oregon Department of Education officialssayWisconsinistheonlyother state to enact restrictions on Native American mascots. Wisconsin's law, approved by the Legislature in 2010, requires school boards to prove that their Indian mascots don't promote discrimination, harassment or stereotyping if someone complains. Dozens of Wisconsin schools still have Native American mascots.

The NCAA limits the use of imagery and names considered hostile and abusive, and a debate still rages over the University of North Dakota's "Fighting Sioux" nickname and a logo with the profile of an American Indian warrior.

The Oregon Legislature voted in 2001 to eliminate the word "squaw" from geographic names because many Native Americans consider it offensive.

Associated Press writer Steven Dubois contributed from Banks, Ore.

NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES

Name:
Address:
City:	_ State:	_ Zip:
Phone:
☐ $65.00 for 52 issues	3 $32.50	for 26 issues

Mail this form with a check or money order to: Native American Times • P.O. Box 411 Tahlequah, OK 74465 • 918-708-5838

■ $1.25 single copy

■ $16.25 for 13 issues

SUPERNAW'S OKLAHOMA INDIAN SUPPLY

Wholesale items for Pow Wow Vendors

Bone chokers $20 per dozen

Handmade lamp worked glass bead bracelets $1.00 each Glass bead stretch bracelets 5 for $2.50

12 Necklaces: Chain w/ pendant and display pad $13.50 36 inch gemstone chip strands Reg. 3.95 now $2.00 36 inch turquoise chip strands Reg. 7.95 now $4.00

Always our regular stock of seed beads from 16/0 to 8/0, findings, leather, hackles, fluffs and thousands of other supply items.

Remember we've moved around the corner 109 North Broadway, Skiatook, OK 74070

New Dealers Cash or Credit Card Only.

Open Noon-6pm Mon. thru Fri. • 10am-5m Sat. • Closed Sun. Local: 396-1713-Countrywide Toll Free 1-888-720-1967

Website: www.supernaw.com • Email: Supernaw@flash.net

COMMENTARY

Editorial paints deceptive picture of Okla.

S.E. RUCKMAN

Speaking of collusion, a recent editorial in the largest paper in Oklahoma served up a jolting piece the other day. In an editorial posted on May 6, a writer pointed to the traveling and collecting of one James Anaya, an indigenous rights observer for the United Nations. He was in the Sooner State, presumably because a state with 38 federally recognized tribes has its fair share dealing with indigenous

Anaya was on hand in Tulsa

Indian tribes and take notes on country; native, in essence. the position of its Native people some level, etc.

places like Suriname, Chile guessing. and Guatemala. It was likewise pointed out that the tribes here relationship with the State of in Oklahoma could not possibly Oklahoma was made possible be compared to indigenous by the generous hearts of peoples in other parts of the state voters who approved world. Seriously?

indigenous club card wasn't state-to-tribal compacts based Indians in Oklahoma had $3.23 billion, that's a right cozy of our assertions. forsaken their indigenous relationship.

This eye-opening editorial in regards to the Declaration allowed that living in Oklahoma on the Rights of Indigenous was a lot better than it used to Peoples. As such, he was be. A side step over the past curious to see what our input fifty years of history, to be sure. was, to inquire if any issues Through our gaming funds we were of interest to us, did we now "enjoyed access to the halls find a place for improvement at of power through lobbying efforts and personal ties." This It was pointed out that is a loaded statement, implying Anaya had done similar work much more than makes any for indigenous people in tribal leader comfortable I'm

This new and improved State Question 714 in 2004, Besides wondering why our laying the groundwork for originating in and characteristic Country. More members of state representatives get is a foundation of mainstream in Oklahoma.

acknowledged their tribal to sovereign negotiations affiliations, pumping up the questioned/examined/ membership in the Native exposed. The editorial thinkers American Caucus to 17. Many assume mixing in other of those members felt free to entities like treaty monitoring come out of the Native closet, bodies or commissions that so to speak, and acknowledge safeguard human rights would their Indian heritage.

It was noted that if or when This is telling. a dispute arose among tribes and states (think water here), "tribal governments are hardly being run over." But that in Oklahoma. He's getting the part where the tribes got a feedback from us, because fair shake--either historically, regardless of how the tribes socially or economically. here bought respectability in state politics (is there any other the times that tribes were taken way?), a platform for bettering their stance may be next. It is the intent of a position report mailed out yet, I read on. The on gaming tribes' Class III Anaya will file with The United Indians in Oklahoma (as graduated from the University implication was that somehow revenues. In a market worth Nations to make a public note standing unlike the rest of To be fair, after gaming wind comes sweeping down officials regarding sovereign a special contributor to the the world. So I looked it up. compacts arrived, things the Plains, the state's slip is issues? No, the reason given is Native American Times. She is The meaning of indigenous is did change for us in Indian showing. For some reason, that "American Indian culture a freelance writer who is based complicate the status quo here.

We are informed, if you read editorials, that the state admits Indians "got the short end of the stick at times in our nation's is not what Anaya is doing history." I must have missed Oklahoma's belt is notched for advantage of on a parked car date. It goes on:

Things have changed for to meet with leaders of various of a particular region or the Oklahoma state legislature nervous having their approach Oklahoma culture." Reading between the lines, we vibe that they are us and we are them.

> Furthermore, letting international "busybodies" tinker with the strong relationship between "neighbors," is admonished. In an almost too obvious fashion, this editorial pantomime is clear: Indigenous rights belong to the rest of the world, but not to Oklahoma. Please, Mr. Anaya, make note that Oklahoma's indigenous voice belongs at the United Nations Human Rights Council table.

S.E. Ruckman is a citizen of the Wichita and Affiliated Tribes in Anadarko, Okla. She per the editorial). Could it of Oklahoma's School of be improved negotiations Journalism and has written for In this case, where the between state and tribal the Tulsa World and is currently

The casualties of war

DR. DEAN CHAVERS

Around the Campfire © 2012

I'll never forget the first time I thought I was going south again. The target was in the second cell. Mu Gia Pass on the border of North Vietnamese ("Charlies") were bringing supplies from Hanoi to the South every day through this pass. It had high mountains on either side, with a small narrow road through around with us?

drop bombs on either side of the mountains, collapsing the rocks, which would then fall down and cover the road. Like a lot of the ideas from on high, this one was quite a bit shaky. But if you're a grunt, as I was, you can't argue with the generals. All you can do is salute and say "Yes, sir."

The coolies from the North had the road open less than two days later. But we kept bombing it and they kept opening it again—for the next six years.

I was on Dale Christian's crew. Dale was a Major. The bomb aimer was Tom Johnson, a Captain and one of the best of all time. We were headed almost straight north on the bomb run, 350 degrees. As soon as we finished releasing the bombs, we made a 180 degree turn and headed south heading 170. As soon as we rolled out, Bill Grissom, the tail gunner, called out, "Pilot, we have a fighter on our tail."

"How far back is he, Gun?" Dale asked.

"He's about 75 yards back, sir," Bill replied. "Hang on, crew," Dale said. He put the throttles to the firewall and made a violent left hand diving turn. For the next few minutes he jinked, if you can call it that with a huge B-52. The airplane was 186 feet wide and 152 feet long. You couldn't get two of them nose-to-nose on a football field. Then Dale called out, "Where is he now, Gun?"

"He's still in the same position, sir," Bill answered.

"Fire a warning burst at him, Gun," Dale said. So Bill aimed his four fifty calibers all the way up and fired a three-and we lost him. But he pulled airplane. to die. We had just flown the back in behind the leader of the first sortie into North Viet third cell and started harassing shot 12 SAMs at us that day. Nam by B-52s and had turned him. We were the lead aircraft But they never hit anything.

North Vietnam and Laos. The waiting for him to fire at us. To and round their scopes. If they this day we don't know what got a target, they could switch happened. Did his guns jam? to the tracking function, which Was it a North Vietnamese meant they had us in their Mig? Or was it one of our cross hairs. guys in an F-105 just messing with a court martial. He got they went to guidance, we had an attorney to fight it, and red lights all over the airplane. did not get the court martial. If that red light ever came on, it But he had to take a letter of meant get out and fast. The five reprimand that went into his people up front had ejection permanent file. Our sin: on the seats, which meant you would bottom of page 12, it said only the last aircraft in a cell could The gun had to pull a handle fire the guns. Do you think any and dump the tail end, and of us remembered that with a literally roll out. fighter on our tail? No.

CAP (Combat Air Patrol) every aiming their SAMs like a rifle, day. They were running up to they shot them like shotguns. Hanoi and Haiphong knocking Unbelievably, they were zero for out enemy targets every day. They had been assigned to fly of years ago that my cousin cover for us, we had been told. But to them, the flight we made Beck from Petersburg, VA was was a piece of cake.

close calls. When we went in save his life. He was in an Army low we knew we were in danger. unit that was trying to help the in the same time every night. The NV had supplied farmers Marines stay alive. with shotguns with slugs, which could knock an airplane out of the sky if it hit an engine or a fuel tank. At 500 feet we knew we were vulnerable. Luckily for us, we usually took off at 10 bomber and a KC-135 tanker o'clock at night, which meant ran together north of the we were dropping bombs at Philippines. They were at the 3:00 a. m., when most people are asleep—even communists.

The other close call we had was in support of the Marines at different altitudes. at Khe Sanh, just south of the DMZ. The NV had put SAM-3s on the low mountain there, south of Saigon. They were which meant theoretically they being guided by a ground could hit us at 35,000 feet.

One day we were going across the target area at 270 degrees at noon, an unusual time for three aircraft had to fly 15 feet us. As soon as we dropped the bombs, the copilot said, "What below the lead aircraft in a cell. was that telephone pole that just went by the right wing?"

Only three of the six crew members could see outside.

It turned out that the NV had They had a search function on We, of course, had been their radar, which went round they could switch to guidance, slept. But instead of being which meant they could steer be out in less than a second.

The VC obviously knew about The 105s were flying Mig the red lights, too. So instead of 12 that day. I learned a couple Cindy Godwin's husband Jack on the ground there that day. We had another couple of He thanked me for helping to

> We lost a total of 15 B-52s in Viet Nam. At least five of them were accidents that should not have happened. On the very first mission in 1965, a same altitude, which was the fault of someone at HQ. After that, bombers and tankers went

The other mistake happened when two B-52s ran together controller. The formation they were in scared the bejesus out of us. Number two and down, 15 feet back, and 15 feet The airplane was so big that a mistake of a few feet meant That scared the whole crew. two airplanes are going to run together.

And that's what happened. CTD4DeanChavers@aol.com.

second burst. It was 3:00 o'clock The pilot, copilot, and gun The wing commander at Guam, on Easter Sunday, 1966. The could see out, but the bomb a two-star named Crum, was fifties would light up the sky. aimer, navigator (me) and the on the lead aircraft. As the The fighter immediately dived EWO could not see out of the third pilot, he had no ejection seat, and went down with the aircraft. The G forces would not let him get downstairs to bail out. My friend Toki Endo, the EW on the lead, fractured his right elbow punching out. But he healed in a few weeks.

> I have hated the two crashes ever since. After Gen. Crumm went down, we stopped flying tight formations. You can't Once they launched a missile, imagine how much better I

The other accidental loss The idea was that we would rewarded, Dale was threatened the SAM into us. But when happened when a BUF lost hydraulics one night and had to land at Da Nang. Someone forgot to tell him that there was a mine field at the end of the runway, put there to slow down the VC. He had no brakes, the engine reverse was not enough to stop them on the runway, and they ran off the end.

When the mines exploded, it blew the airplane apart, and five of the six crew members were killed. The only one who got out was the gunner, who was saved by a heroic ground pounder.

The big loss was during the Christmas bombing of 1972. The four-star, Gen. John Meyer, who was a fighter pilot, sent the BUFs in from the northwest at 35,000 feet. They also went After a few evenings of this, the SAM operators got much better. They knocked down 10 of these beautiful planes. It was a waste of life, time, talent, and equipment.

They should have gone in at different times, different directions, and at 200 feet. Believe it or not, that airplane worked beautifully at 200 feet.

I knew several of those guys. In fact, Columbus AFB, my last base, was one of the two bases that lost a lot of airplanes. Marshall L. Michel III wrote the definitive book about the campaign, which was called Operation Linebacker II.

Dr. Dean Chavers is Director of Catching the Dream in Albuquerque. CTD is dedicated to providing scholarships to Native college students and helping Indian schools to improve. Contact him at

Letters to the Editor

UN visit to Oklahoma

We Native people in Oklahoma were gratified that Mr. Anaya and the U.N. considered a visit to Oklahoma, the state with the most (39) Native nations, as necessary and while I don't believe many Native representatives present thought that significant change would come soon as a result of this consultation, but rather considered it a singular opportunity to be on record with the prestigious international entity the UN represents as important. The real value in making the statements may be in reminding local establishment that tribal nations have valid issues and are making them heard outside Oklahoma. We feel that a U.N. rep's visit to listen to Native concerns lends credibility, and here in the reddest (republican) of red states, we need all the help we can get.

And then .....The Daily Oklahoman outdid itself by running this blatantly biased editorial 5/9/12 titled "In Oklahoma, much has changed for the better for American Indians." Point after jaundiced point the writer brags about "our states tribal nations are stronger then ever" like 39 separate tribal entities belong to Oklahoma so that makes us grow stronger? We have become stronger but it's because we fought for every remnant of sovereignty we still enjoy. "Tribal governments enjoy access to the halls of power through lobbying efforts and personal ties." Like native people are lucky to even have any "access" to Oklahoma's "halls of power." Instead of noting the multitude of assets Native nations give to Oklahoma, not the least being one of the states largest employers (18,000 and mostly non-Native) and adding a staggering 15 BILLION dollars to the local economy, the whole tone of the Daily Oklahoman article is condescension instead of congratulatory because the U.N. visited with Native leaders. "There's no denying American Indians got the short end of the stick at times in our nation's history" is such a monumental understatement it puts the whole article into the realm of patronizing denial. The Native nations suffered centuries of the worst kind of atrocities including having their homeland taken, forcibly being put on reservations, repeated attempts at genocide and you think maybe we sort of got, "the short end of the stick"?? You think?

Dwain Camp, Ponca Elder Ponca City, Okla.

Hat off to Tim Giago

The commentary of Tim Giago which ran in this newspaper edition April 27, 2012 is exactly correct. Larry Echo Hawk served as an ineffective Asst. Secretary of the Interior as my experience and documents confirm. Mr. Echo Hawk was a law professor at Bringham Young University prior to appointment of Asst. Secretary and yet Mr. EchoHawk seemed to have no knowledge of Federal Law 25 USC 1901, the Federal Indian Child Welfare Act or any Indian Law for that matter.

Apparently Mr. Echo Hawk's Association with the Mormon Church was more important than the laws of the United States. Mr. Giago explains this point very well in his commentary published by this newspaper. When Mr. Echo Hawk was appointed by the president in less than thirty days the United States Senate provided advice and consent. My experience with the federal government thirty days is required to read a letter sent to these politicians.

The Bureau of Indian Affairs is a broken bureaucracy from the region office to Washington D.C., and reform of this federal agency will only be accomplished when Native peoples stand together and demand reform.

My hat is off to Tim Giago for having the guts to speak the truth of "We the People" government. "We the People" government has never existed for Native peoples and does not exist in the year 2012.

Larry Shelton, Choctaw Citizen Idabel, Okla.

The viewpoints expressed in columns and letters are the opinions of the writers and not necessarily the opinion or viewpoint of the Native American Times publisher or staff. Send letters to editor@nativetimes.com. Please keep letters to 350 words or less. Sign your name, tribal affiliation and city of residence for verification purposes.

WALK

Continued from Page 1

Act, "to ensure that federal laws protecting the free exercise of religion include protection of traditional Native American Sacred Places where ceremonies, commemorations, observances or worship are conducted or occur, and to provide a right of action to protect Native American Sacred Places."

"This is a spiritual issue. We believe that Congress needs to address specific legislation to protect sacred places in an inclusive manner for all people whom those places affect ... By walking the Trail of Broken Promises we call attention to the spiritual interconnectedness that we as human beings have with our environment and all elements within it," Millicent Pepion, of the Navajo and Blackfeet Nations, said to United Nations Special Rapporteur on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples James Anaya, on May 3 in Tulsa. "We declare that a mutual respect and dignity be given to Native American people in concerns that affect our home communities. We respectfully request that the U.S. government adhere to our cultural, social, medical, environmental, and spiritual interests that the Trail of Broken Promises members seek to protect."

Pepion is active in the Wetlands Preservation Organization and the Indigenous and American Indian Studies Club at Haskell. Her quest to bring awareness to the wetlands is part of her Commitment to Action that was accepted into the Clinton Global Initiative University. In her commitment letter she quotes Dr. Daniel Wildcat, her advisor, as reminding her, "It is not our right to protect Mother Earth, it is our responsibility."

"It could be these wetlands or the San Francisco Peaks. If we allow desecration of these sacred places in the name of 'progress,' what chance does any place in this world have? Or animals and people?" she stated.

The Federal Highway
Administration and the Kansas Department of Transportation have been fighting to pave through the wetlands, located behind the Haskell campus, for years. The issue remains in court, however, a U.S. 10th Circuit Court of Appeals decision is due this month, according to Kansas transportation officials. The Sierra Club and other environmental groups have also voiced opposition to the $174 million project that would steer traffic from the southeast side to the northwest side of Lawrence.

"This is not just another 'Indian problem.' Forced relocation of these plants and animals is both an environmental and social threat. As one of the country's remaining natural wetlands, this ground is home to a multitude of indigenous medicinal plants from Evening Primrose to Eastern Red Cedar. It is also a common stop for some 260 migratory birds. This delicate ecosystem is of sentimental significance as well," Pepion, a Haskell Indigenous and American Indian Studies junior, stated. "When Haskell was first founded as an Indian boarding school in 1884, the wetlands were a sanctuary for its earliest students. Current Haskell students use the wetlands as a place to study, relax, and perform ceremonies."

Students on The Trail of Broken Promises harvested a 2,000 lb. buffalo days before they left Lawrence in order to obtain the energy needed to fulfill their journey. They will trek through Kansas, Missouri, Illinois, Ohio, Pennsylvania and Maryland. They are divided into four teams: land, animal, people and drivers. Among other duties, the land team will pick up trash along the freeway; the animal team will coordinate meals; the people team will meet with local people along the route, and the driver's team will help everyone and set up tents. All teams help to haul water. Each team has their own starting and stopping point, but they camp together each night.

The first resting stop for the group was 2 miles east of DeSoto, Kan. on the Shawnee Reserve Number 206.

"They had a great time while here. We provided the facilities they needed, got some great pictures. (It was a) beautiful night for them. Great students, very smart. (We) had a great bonfire for them. We wish them a safe trip; (we) talked about how to be safe," United Tribe of Shawnee Indians Principal Chief Jim Oyler said. "Great people; sure glad they had time to spend the night here on our Indian Country."

The teams are traveling approximately 30 miles each day for four days then they rest. The group connected onto the Potawatomi Trail of Death while in Buckner, Mo., and they will disconnect from the trail on June 6 in Lafayette, Ind. From September to November 1838 Potawatomi Indians were forcibly removed by the U.S. government from their homelands in Indiana to Kansas, and 42 people died; making it The Trail of Death.

The group has already visited the Shawnee Indian Mission while passing through Shawnee, Kan., and they plan on ending up at Carlisle Indian Boarding School on July 4. Anyone interested in hosting the group or making a donation for trip expenses/ supplies can contact Pepion at (480) 258-2930.

"We have a choice to either work with or against our environments. I am against the desecration of sacred places. I am against people who choose to ignore certain members of their community. Most of all, I am against organizations who are unwilling to keep their promises. The history of my people has taught me that the decisions made in the past have not always been in the majority's best interest. I refuse to sit on the outskirts of an irresponsible society and let them decide what they think is best for me and my generation, and future generations!" Pepion stated. "Lastly, let it be known the Wakarusa Wetlands is but one piece of land that is asking for help. All of this land, all over the world, is calling for representatives. The Trail of Broken Promises is committed to addressing their cries as well."

The Trail of Broken Promises can be followed on Face book at: http://www.facebook.com/pages/Trail-Of-Broken-Promises/300284686671395 and on Twitter at: http://twitter.com/#!/ToBP2012.

Chilocco Class of '62 reunion June 7-9

NEWKIRK, Okla. – The Chilocco Class of 1962 is hosting reunion activities at the First Council Casino, in Newkirk, Okla., June 7-9. Campus activities and evening powwow June 8 are free to attend.

Reunion organizers would like to especially invite all graduates and loved ones to dance with them at the powwow on Friday, June 8. For more information contact Charmain Billy 580-762-7938, Jim Baker 405-612-1099 or Garland Kent 580-762-5112.

Chilocco Class of '62: Alene Auck, Larry Austin, Alene Bailey, Rosie Baker, Olson Begay, Della Botella, Judy Burch, Keith Buffalohead, Charles Burris, Henry Bushyhead, Paul Carpenter, Dominick Cerino, Sylvia Cloud, Dora Culley, Juan Louis Curley, James Deere, Jr., Gena Denson, Joe Dick, Lester Eagle, Wilbur Frazier, Buena Gouladdle, Bill Glass, Dean Hudson, Thurman Hudson, Bernice Hulwa, Malcolm Isaac, Tommy Johnson, Roberta LaBatte, Richard Lasley, Dixon Lewis, Suzanna Lossiah, Doris Marks, Doris McClure, Paige McDonald, Jimmy McGilbra, Ralph McNac, Peggy Lou Nix, Henrietta Osceola, Charmain Pensoneau, Sally Pickering, Margaret Polk, Adrian Seaman, Bobby Lee Smith, Toby Smith, Hattie Smith, Sue Smith, Ina Mae Spencer, Alma Spottedwolf, Thomas Springer, Claude Steve, Joseph Steve, Junior Thompson, Marjorie Tubby, Edna Tucker, Minnie Pearl Wade, Viona Weiser, Stanford Wells, Esther Wesley, Don Wildcat, Alice Wilson, Velma Wolf, Randy Wood.

Classmates no longer with us: Charlotte Bascome, Allen Blalock, Wayne BlueBack, Judson Deere, Clifford Doyeto, Arlene Feathers, Jenny Horsechief, Luke Jimmie, Wilma Sue Kinney, Henry Mann, Jr., Josh Morris, Reginald Nibbs, Paul Peyketewa, Dashne Sandoval, Victor Smith, Harry Tiger, Linda Wahpepah, Albert Wolfe, Tony York.

Foundation establishes $1 million endowment at TU

TULSA, Okla. – Cherokee students planning to pursue higher education at The University of Tulsa are now eligible to obtain additional funding through a newly established $1 million endowment.

Through a 2-to-1 matching program by TU, the Cherokee Nation Foundation's $333,334 gift was amplified to create the endowment.

The scholarship will be awarded to select Cherokee Nation students who show exemplary leadership qualities in their communities and are eager to use their education to serve their tribe. The funds may be used to pay for books, housing expenses, fees, tuition and other academic expenses.

"Education has always been a priority for the Cherokee people," said Bill John Baker, Principal Chief of the Cherokee Nation. "It is the most valuable asset we can give our children, and we are blessed to work with yet another outstanding university that shares our passion for education."

"This step is the latest in a long and proud association between TU and the Cherokee people," said TU President Steadman Upham. "We are especially honored that our alumni are well represented within the tribe's leadership. These leaders provide strong models for the scholars who will benefit from this fund. The step we take today allows new generations to build upon our work and create greater prosperity and achievement that benefit us all."

The funds were part of an estate donation made to the Cherokee Nation Foundation honoring Cherokee citizen Martha Redus. Her generous contributions continue to support the foundation's mission to provide higher education assistance to Cherokee citizens.

"This partnership furthers our commitment to Cherokee students and their dreams of higher education," said Robin Ballenger, Board President of Cherokee Nation Foundation. "With generous support from loyal donors such as Martha, we are able to continue to invest in opportunities for our youth, knowing that their generation's success will become our greatest accomplishment."

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT / HELP WANTED

Chief Financial Officer

Cimarron Casino, located in Perkins, OK is accepting applications for Chief Financial Officer (CFO). The CFO will be responsible for the financial statements and financial activities of Cimarron Casino, its component units, and/or any other entities as assigned.

As a key member of the Executive Management team, the CFO will report to the Cimarron Casino Enterprises (CCE) Board of Directors (aka lowa Tribe of Oklahoma Business Committee) and assume a strategic role in the overall management of the Accounting Department. The CFO will play a critical role in developing and implementing the financial strategy for Cimarron Casino.

The CFO will directly assist the lowa Tribe of Oklahoma Business Committee with all strategic and tactical matters as they relate to budget management, cost benefit analysis, forecasting needs, and securing new funding.

The CFO will establish and maintain Cimarron Casino and the lowa Tribe of Oklahoma's financial policies and procedures and provide operational and administrative direction to the accounting, budgeting, treasury, tax, and investor relations functions. The CFO directly supervises the General Accounting Manager and indirectly supervises the activities of all employees who work in the Accounting Department.

Requirements

Gaming industry experience is required. Bachelor of Science (BS) degree in Accounting or Finance required; MBA preferred. Mature and proactive, with evidence of having worked as a true business partner to the CEO of a multi-divisional organization. Casino experience a must.

Ten-plus (10+) years of broad finance experience, ideally beginning in accounting, followed by experience gathering and evaluating financial information and making actionable recommendations to senior leadership. Must have experience managing the accounting/finance functions (accounting, budgeting, control, and reporting) within a diverse tribal/casino-based entity.

Valid Certified Public Accountant (CPA) designation required.

The lowa Tribe of Oklahoma operates a drug-free workplace. The selected applicant must submit to and pass applicable drug test. Additionally, selected individual must be bondable and able to pass background check in order to obtain a gaming license from the lowa Tribe of Oklahoma Gaming Commission.

General Manager

Cimarron Casino, located in Perkins, OK is accepting applications for General Manager. The General Manager is responsible for the successful overall direction, administration and coordination of all activities at Cimarron Casino Enterprises, in accordance with the policies, procedures and objectives established by the lowa Tribe of Oklahoma, with the ultimate objective to provide the maximum profit and return on investment. The General Manager will ensure a maximum level of guest service and satisfaction throughout the property is achieved and maintained. The General Manager directly supervises all department heads, the Administrative Assistant and the maintenance department and indirectly supervises the activities of all employees who work on the property.

Requirements: Bachelor's degr

Bachelor's degree from a four-year college or university, or four to six years related experience and/or training, or an equivalent combination of education and experience. Ten (10) to fifteen (15) years experience in the gaming industry required. Minimum of five (5) years management experience on an executive level required. Must possess excellent communication skills, and effective public speaking skills.

The lowa Tribe of Oklahoma operates a drug-free workplace. The selected applicant must submit to and pass applicable drug test. Additionally, selected individual must be bondable and able to pass background check in order to obtain a gaming license from the lowa Tribe of Oklahoma Gaming Commission.

Apply online at www. iowanation.org/hireme or in person at 821 W. Freeman, Perkins, Okla.

11, 2012.

Riverside Indian School in Anadarko,
OK is seeking qualified applicants for the following positions:

HS Academic Counselor

NATI

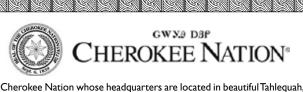

AMERIC

HS Academic Counselor
HS Math Teacher
HS Science Teacher
HS English/Reading Teacher
Special Education Teacher

For information about these vacancies you may visit the school website www. ris.bie.edu or call 405-247-6670.

NATIVE AMERICAN HIRING PREFERENCE?

Advertise to Native Americans! E-mail your ad for a quote to: lisa@nativetimes.com

Oklahoma is a national leader in Indian tribal governments and economic development in Oklahoma, We are a dynamic, progressive organization, which owns several business enterprises and administers a variety of services for the Cherokee people in Northeastern Oklahoma. Cherokee Nation offers an exceptional employee benefits plan with Comprehensive Health, Life, 401 (k), Holiday Pay, Sick Leave and Annual Leave.

CURRENT OPPORTUNITIES

#6543 INPATIENT RN/R/FT/ER,
WW HASTINGS HOSPITAL CLOSE 5/22/12

#4713 INPATIENT RN/RPN/T/PT/OR, WW HASTINGS HOSPITAL CLOSE 5/23/12

#6537 MEDICAL TECHNOLOGIST/R/FT,

WW HASTINGS HOSPITAL, CLOSE 5/25/12

Interested applicants please apply at www.cherokee.org

Cherokee Nation
Human Resources Department
PO Box 948
Tahlequah, OK 74465
(918) 453-5292 or 453-5050
Employment will be contingent upon drug test results. Indian preference is considered.

REQUEST FOR QUALIFICATIONS

The Pawnee Nation of Oklahoma is advertising for Architectural/Engineering Services for the design and construction of an Elder Center which will contain the elderly nutrition center. This new facility will be located on the Pawnee Nation Tribal Reserve which is east of Pawnee, Oklahoma. The complete Request for Qualifications including the criteria that will be used to select the most qualified firm is available upon written request.

Submit your request for the full RFQ by fax at 918-762-6446 or by email (mrobedeaux@pawneenation.org) and please include your email address and/or your fax number.

Qualifications documents must be received no later than 4:30 pm on Monday, June

Point of Contact for Information: Muriel Robedeaux, ICDBG Coordinator

Contact: Marshall R. Gover, President, Pawnee Nation of Oklahoma, (918) 762-3621, Fax: (918) 762-6446. Attn: ICDBG Pawnee Tribal Elder Center Project

Brittany Morgan Hill wins Miss Indian Oklahoma

READER SUBMISSION

OKLAHOMA CITY The Miss and Ir. Miss Indian Oklahoma pageant was held May 12, 2012, in Oklahoma City.

The pageant is hosted by the Oklahoma Federation of Indian Women. The theme of the pageant this year was: "Remembering our Native Mothers: Their Spirit, Strength, and Beauty". Each candidate competed in the categories of: essay writing, personal interview, description of tribal dress, tribal greeting/ traditional introduction, talent, contemporary wear, presentation of platform and impromptu question. The age division for Miss Indian Oklahoma is 18-24 years old. Brittany Morgan Hill was awarded Best Tribal Greeting and the title of 2012 Miss Indian Oklahoma. The title of Jr. Miss Indian Oklahoma was awarded to Jasa Lightfoot of Apache, OK.

Brittany Morgan Hill belongs to Yankton Sioux tribe of Marty, SD and the Muscogee (Creek) tribe of Oklahoma. Her Indian name is "Maka Duta Win", which translates to "Red Earth Woman". She is the 21 year old daughter of Levi Hill, originally of Eufaula, Ok, and Deborah Hill, originally of Marty, SD. Brittany currently resides with her family in Broken Arrow, OK. She has two sisters, Jennifer Niyah and Breana Hill, along with two nephews Joseph and Brandon Niyah. Brittany has relatives from California to West Virginia. Including South Dakota, New Mexico, North Carolina, Florida and of course here in Oklahoma. Brittany is a former 2008-2009 Tulsa Powwow Princess 2009-2010 Eufaula Indian Community Powwow Princess. Brittany believes that she is a summation of her parents, grandparents, ancestors and her community.

She is very proud of her Native culture and heritage which is embedded into her daily life. Brittany and her family love to travel throughout Indian country to various powwows and events. Brittany currently attends the College of Muscogee Nation and OSUIT in Okmulgee, OK where she is majoring in Sociology/Criminology with a minor in Native American Studies. Brittany has set her sights and goals high for her future. Her plan is to become an advocate for our native youth and the challenges they face in Indian Country. Her platform for the pageant was raising awareness regarding the issue of suicide among our Native youth. Brittany is dedicated to joining and working with others in their commitments to improving the overall well-being of our Native American families and communities all across Indian country. She not only wants to be an advocate, but a voice for our Native youth.

Brittany would like to thank her family and friends for all their love and support. She looks forward to an exciting reign representing her family, tribes, community, the Oklahoma Federation of Indian Women as well as all Indian people throughout Oklahoma as the 2012 Miss Indian Oklahoma.

Master of Ceremonies  $\Diamond$  Frank Carson 2011 Tribal Princess

Alexis Tanyan

2012 Tribal Princess \( \text{Danelle Springer} \) Head Gourd Dance Singer \( \rangle \) Leonard Cozad Jr.

Head War Dance Singer \( \rightarrow John Arkeketa \)

Head Man Dancer  $\Diamond$  George Alexander

Head Lady Dancer \( \rightarrow \) Michelle Garcia-Holiday

Head Gourd Dancer ◊ John Shotten

Northern Drum

Blackbird

Arena Directors  $\Diamond$  Pat Moore & Bear Murray

Co-Host ◊ Red Rock Creek

Water Boys \( \rightarrow Josh & Jordan Murray \)

Pow Wow Committee O Robert Murray Jr. 580-304-6731 John "Kandie" Des Jarlait

Lori Murray

Bernadette Huber 405-240-2600

nformation: Robert Murray Jr. 580-304-6731

FRIDAY

5:00 PM LOWER FLAG 6:30 PM GOURD DANCE 7:00 PM REGISTRATION OPENS

7:30 PM GRAND ENTRY 10:30 PM SPECIAL "49" CONTEST

SATURDAY 2:00 PM GOURD DANCE 5:00 PM LOWER FLAG EVENING MEAL BREAK 5:30 PM

6:30 PM GOURD DANCE REGISTRATION OPENS 7:00 PM 7:30 PM GRAND ENTRY

11:00 PM SPECIAL GEORGE GIBSON MEMORIAL STOMP DANCE CONTEST

SUNDAY GOURD DANCE 2:00 PM LOWER FLAG GRAND ENTRY

American Indian Arts & Crafts/ Food Vendors

Coordinated by Iowa Tribe Enterprises Linda Big Soldier, CEO Must complete application Reservations & information: 405-547-4239 or lbigsoldier@iowanation.org

27th Annual Iowa Tribe of Oklahoma POWWOW

June 15-16-17, 2012

Bah-Kho-Je Pow Wow Grounds

Hwy #177, 4 miles south of Perkins, Oklahoma

Contests

Rules: Must register and be in parade in on night of contest Must be in full regalia to receive prize Committee reserves right to combine or separate divisions

Tiny Tots (0-6) - Combined boys & girls, combined divisions Jr. Girls (7-12) - Combined divisions Jr. Boys (7-12) - Combined divisions Teen Girls (13-17) - Combined cloth/buckskin; fancy shawl/jingle Teen Boys (13-17) - Combined grass & traditional; straight; fancy Women (18-54) - Cloth; buckskin; combined fancy shawl/jingle Men (18-54) - Straight; fancy; combined traditional/grass

Golden Age Men (55+) - Combined divisions Gold Age Women (55+) - Combined divisions

EVENTS

*Email your powwow or other event info to: Lisa@ nativetimes.com. Name, date, time, place and contact information is free.

EVERY THURSDAY The Otoe-Missouria Substance Abuse and Behavioral Health Programs sponsor an open group for families touched by addiction from noon to 1 p.m. at the Otoe-Missouria Health Building. This is a confidential group. Call 580-723-4466 x252 or x262 for more information.

SECOND TUESDAY Cherokee Artists Association meeting at 202 E. 5th Street Tahlequah, Okla. Info: (918) 458-0008 or www.

FOURTH THURSDAY Each month the American Indian Chamber of Commerce of Oklahoma - Eastern Chapter hosts a monthly luncheon at Bacone College, Muskogee, Okla. 11:30 a.m. at Benjamin Wacoche Hall. Please RSVP one week ahead of time. Phone: (918) 230-3759

EVERY 2ND SATURDAY Modoc Tribal Citizens Meeting at Wyandotte Community Center 1pm-3pm. Info call 918-961-0439 or 832-350-4530.

Indian Taco Sales - from 11-2:30pm at OK Choctaw Tribal Veteran's Organization

Alliance, 5320 S. Youngs Blvd, Oklahoma City www. okchoctaws.org

MON/WED AND THURS The Marble City Nutrition Center serves hot meals at the Marble City Community Center at 11:30 a.m. Meals are free to anyone over 50, but a small donation is suggested to help with the expense of the program. Marble City Nutrition Center, 711 N. Main, Marble City, Okla. Phone: (918) 775-2158

YOUTH COUNCIL The Native Nations Youth Council (NNYC) bimonthly meetings from 6:30pm -8:30pm @ the Youth Services Indian Taco Sale 11:00 AM of Tulsa Activity Center (311 S. Madison - on 3rd just west cherokeeartistsassociation.org of Peoria). Call to confirm location. Info Call: Chad Gilley (918) 382-2204 or nnyc@ihcrc.org

> MAY 25 Native American Student Association at OSUIT/ CMN Indian Taco Sale, 11am-2pm at Okmulgee Indian Community Center. $6 including drink and a dessert. Free delivery for orders of three or more otherwise a $.50 delivery fee per taco. Accepting pre-orders. Contact rsourjohn21@ymail.com or (918) 304-7802

MAY 26 The Sac and Fox Nation

6th annual Memorial Day Gourd Dance & Powwow. Gourd Dancing Starts at 2pm. Traditional Dinner for all participants from 5pm until 6pm. Grand Entry at 7pm. We put a flag on every deceased vets' grave in 10 tribal cemeteries.

Art Class: Slate Rock Art Paintings by Bill McCulley at Council House Museum, 106 W. 6th Okmulgee, Okla. Class is limited to 20 people. Reserve your spot call 918-756-2324 or csago71@ sbcglobal.net 10 a.m.-2 pm. Free.

JUNE 1

- 2:00 PM at Norman First American UMC, 1950 East Beaumont Drive, Norman, Okla. Call Ahead for Speedy Service. Free Delivery on Orders of 10 or More (405) 321-5640

JUNE 2

Tinker Intertribal Powwow in Joe B. Barnes Regional Park in Midwest City, Okla. from 1:00 p.m. to 11:00 p.m. Interested vendors or participants should contact Corene Chakenatho at (405) 734-7366.

JUNE 4 Osage Election Day Dance at Osage Campus Lawn, Grandview Avenue, Pawhuska. Gourd Dance at 2pm and 6pm. 7:00 processional, war mothers songs, social dancing until too dark to see, work in the morning!

JUNE 8 Chilocco Powwow in the Event Center of the First Council Casino, seven miles north of Newkirk, OK. Gourd dance begins at 2:00 p.m. with grand entry at 6:30. Featured will be the Apache Fire Dance. Contact Garland Kent, Sr at 580-352-2670.

JUNE 8-10 Red Earth Festival, Cox Convention Center, Oklahoma City

JUNE 10-16 Jim Thorpe Native American Games at Remington Park, Oklahoma City. Proceeds benefit the Jim Thorpe Bright Path Youth Programs and Awakening The Spirit Diabetes Prevention and Control program. Contact Annetta Abbott: 405-208-9253

www.jimthorpegames.com Iowa Tribe of Oklahoma 4th Annual Golf Tournament kicking off Iowa Tribal Powwow - 8am at Cimarron Trails in Perkins, Okla. Registration begins at 7am. Info call Linda Andre 405-

JUNE 15-17 Iowa Tribe of Oklahoma 27th Annual Pow Wow, Bah-Kho-Je PowWow Grounds, Hwy #177, 4 miles south of Perkins, Okla Free admission, camping, contests in all divisions, arts & crafts, rations. Contact Robert Murray 580-304-6731 or Bernadette Huber 405-240-2600.

547-5352 Ext 23

JUNE 16 The 17th Annual Oklahoma Indian All-State Basketball Games at the sports center on the Oklahoma Wesleyan University campus in Bartlesville. Games will start at 6:00 P.M. For more info: contact us 918-642-3162, paradox@valornet.com

JUNE 23 Creek Council House Museum's Indian Art Festival 106 W. 6th, Okmulgee, OK; 10:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. For Free Booth Space or Register into $1000 Art Competition Contact: csago71@sbcglobal.net; 918-756-2324

JUNE 28 – JULY 1 Pawnee Indian veterans Powwow held at the Memorial Stadium. For more info call Toni Hill (918) 762-3621 Ext. 25

JUNE 30 47th Annual Coker Reunion, Masonic Building, 1729 HWY 9 West, Seminole, Okla. All descendants of London Coker and wife Mary Washburn are invited. Potluck meal at Noon. For more info call 405-382-3044. Indian Taco Sale 11:00 AM

- 2:00 PM at Norman First American UMC, 1950 East Beaumont Drive, Norman, Okla. Call Ahead for Speedy Service. Free Delivery on Orders of 10 or More (405) 321-5640

JUNE 30 Murrow Indian Children's Home Benefit Powwow. 3pm-11pm at Bacone College, Muskogee.

JULY 9 - SEPT 28 The Potter & The Painter: Works by Lisa Rutherford and Jim Van Deman at Red Earth Museum & Gallery, Oklahoma City

AUGUST 3 Indian Taco Sale 11:00 AM - 2:00 PM at Norman First American UMC, 1950 East Beaumont Drive, Norman, Okla. Call Ahead for Speedy Service. Free Delivery on Orders of 10 or More (405) 321-5640

SEPTEMBER 7 Indian Taco Sale 11:00 AM - 2:00 PM at Norman First American UMC, 1950 East Beaumont Drive, Norman, Okla. Call Ahead for Speedy Service. Free Delivery on Orders of 10 or More (405) 321-5640

Choctaw Casino Resort unveiling Gilley's venue June 1

Grand opening celebration includes a special performance by iconic country star Mickey Gilley, autograph signings from professional bull riders and rodeo champions, live music, food and drink specials, prize giveaways and more.

CLAIRE BLOXOM

DURANT, Okla. – A major milestone will be reached on Friday, June 1, 2012, at Choctaw Casino Resort in Durant, Oklahoma, with the unveiling of Gilley's, the iconic Texas entertainment venue made famous in the 1980 blockbuster, Urban Cowboy.

The Gilley's at Choctaw unveiling will kick off at 6 p.m. with a ribbon-cutting ceremony, followed by a special performance by Mickey Gilley and the original Gilley's band, Chris Rivers Band. Additional festivities include:

Autograph signings by multiple professional bull riders and rodeo champions, including Professional Bull Riders' (PBR) World Champion Justin McBride, legendary PBR bull riders Tuff Hedeman and Mark Cain, and more.

Live concerts from Somebody's Darling, John David Kent, In10City, Jamie Richards, Arkbuckle Xpress, and more.

Performances from the "Gilley Girls" dressed in cowgirl-attire from head to toe.

Food and drink specials and tasting events, including Bud and Sissy-sized beer, cocktail and shot specialsOne-of-a-kind, custom Gilley's merchandise giveaways.

Free mechanical bull rides.

Gilley's at Choctaw, which is located on the north side of Choctaw Casino Resort in the space previously home to the Diamondback Lounge, encompasses a full-service restaurant and bar/nightclub with 176 seats, a dance floor, an iconic mechanical bull like the one made famous from Urban Cowboy, and two bars with a dedicated draught beer system offering up to eight beers on tap, 32-ounce man-sized draft beers called "Bud," 16-ounce, regular-sized draft beers called "Sissy," and Gilley's specialty drinks served by the Gilley Girls dressed in cowgirl-attire from head to toe.

The new Gilley's Durant at Choctaw also features a 500-square-foot performance stage, which is positioned in the center of the venue and offers 360-degree views, including from the gaming floor. Live entertainment will take place each weekend from local, regional and national artists, with several shows already confirmed from musicians such as Two Tons of Steel, Chris Zalez & The Pistoleros, Jason Eady Band, TJ McFarland, and more.

"The addition of Gilley's Durant at Choctaw adds a unique southern charm to Choctaw Casino Resort and certainly makes our customer's overall experience a lot more fun," said Janie Dillard, executive director of gaming for the Choctaw Nation.

The Cheyenne Chiefs are a regular at the Red Earth parade. This year the parade route will circle the Myriad Botanical Gardens in downtown Oklahoma City.

EU E

Red Earth announces new parade route to open 26th annual festival

ERIC OESCH

CITY OKLAHOMA - A new parade route that circles the Myriad Botanical Gardens following $43 million makeover in downtown Oklahoma City will signal the opening of the 26th annual Red Earth Festival on Friday, June 8. The Red Earth parade has been referred to as America's most unique parade and features hundreds of participants in authentic tribal regalia, drum groups, tribal princesses, floats, bands and other participants.

The streets will vibrate with Native American Spirit as the Red Earth Festival celebrates its 26th year of being Oklahoma's premiere cultural experience. The parade starts at 10 am with line-up in the 500 block of West California. The route will proceed south on Walker Avenue to Reno Avenue and will continue east to Robinson. The parade then traves north on Robinson to Sheridan and continues west one block to Hudson where it will conclude.

The parade is expected to last approximately one hour signaling the opening of the Red Earth Art Market at 11 am followed by the Grand Entry of Dancers scheduled for noon inside the Cox Convention Center Arena directly across from the Myriad Gardens.

Last year the Red Earth Parade featured had nearly 100 entries with 10,000 spectators along the streets to experience the colorful event. The parade is free to the public and free for participants.

Participants may include but are not limited to Tribal programs, officials & princesses, color guards, dancers, musicgroups, school groups, drum groups and community organizations.

Tickets to attend the Red Earth Festival are $10 for adults, $7.50 for seniors and youth and free for children under five. Three day passes and group rates are available. Tickets can be purchased online at www.ticketmaster. com or in person at the Cox Convention Center Box Office.

For Red Earth parade applications or additional information visit www. redearth.org or call (405) 427-5228.

Bacone hosting benefit powwow for Murrow Indian Children's Home

MUSKOGEE, Okla. -Bacone College through its mission to serve American Indians is hosting a Benefit Pow Wow for the Murrow Indian Children's Home (Murrow). The Benefit Pow Wow is to assist Murrow with its ability to sustain efforts to meet the needs of the Murrow residents. The Benefit Pow Wow is scheduled for Saturday, June 2012 and is to be held in the Warrior Gym on the Bacone College Campus, 2299 Old Bacone Road in Muskogee, OK. The Benefit Pow Wow is sponsored by the Murrow Indian

Children's Home and hosted by the Center for American Indians at Bacone College. The schedule includes gourd dancing at 3:00 PM, supper at 5:00 PM, gourd dancing at 6:00 PM, evening program at 7:00 PM, and closing song at 11:00 PM. The head staff includes; Choogie Kingfisher of Tahlequah, OK serving as the Master of Ceremonies; Joel Deerinwater of Tahlequah, OK serving as the head singer; Savannah Waters of Owasso, OK and the reigning Ponca Tribal Princess serving as the head lady dancer; Eric Hicks of Okemah, OK serving as the head man dancer; Eli Crowels of Tulsa, OK serving as the head gourd dancer; and Robbie Anquoe, of Tulsa, OK and President of the Tulsa Pow Wow Club, serving as the arena director. Arts & Crafts vendors are welcome, please contact Sharla at (918) 230-2174. Please bring your own chairs for seating.

Contact Pete Coser, Sr. at (918) 360-6471 or by email at coserp@bacone.edu or Betty R. Martin at (918) 682-2586 for further information or clarification. Everyone welcome.

Raquel O. Grant, a citizen of the Muscogee Creek tribe and a graduate of Wewoka High School, has signed a letter of intent to play college basketball at Southwestern College in Winfield, Kansas. Raquel maintained a 4.0 GPA her senior year and made First Team for Indian All State and picked up MVP awards from her coaches and All Tourney from 4 Love of the Game. Raquel is the daughter of Lori Proctor and Mandrill Grant, and the granddaughter of Lydia and Lumber Proctor, Dianne and Gheral Payne. Congratulations Raquel!

We proudly offer an array of services, from general dentistry to sedation, dental implants, and cosmetic dentistry - all designed expressly to meet our patient's changing needs. With four general dentists and four hygienists, we can maintain your oral health for a lifetime all at one location.

We Accept Contract Health & Sooner Care

We serve patients in the Drumright, Cushing, Stillwater, Stroud, Ponca City, and surrounding areas with personalized service and exemplary care. Call for your appointment today.

918-352-3312 or Toll Free 877-RH Melton drumrightdentalcenter.com

PEARY L. ROBERTSON

ATTORNEY AT LAW (405) 382-7300

INDIAN LAW
PROBATE
ADOPTIONS

RESTRICTED LAND ISSUES

SOCIAL SECURITY DISABILITY

J.D, Oklahoma City University; MBA, Cameron University; B.B.A. (Economics), University of Oklahoma

1700 N. MILT PHILLIPS AVENUE, SEMINOLE, OKLAHOMA
VISIT US AT WWW.FACEBOOK.COM/PEARYROBERTSON

Inside this issue:

- Surgical scars provoke protest
- LaDonna Harris 'adopts' actor Johnny Depp
- Nixon, Self Determination, subject of talk

TODAY'S INDEPENDENT INDIAN NEWS

- A FREE PUBLICATION

WWW.NATIVETIMES.COM

AMERICAN

VOLUME 18 + ISSUE 22

PUBLISHED WEEKLY

JUNE 1, 2012

US court upholds $3.4B Indian royalty settlement

The settlement is the result of a class-action lawsuit filed in 1996 by Blackfeet tribal member Elouise Cobell, pictured here, who died of cancer in October.

■ While the settlement may not be as much as some wished, the deal provides a way out of a legal morass and provides some certainty for the beneficiaries.

MATT VOLZ Associated Press

HELENA, Montana (AP) -A panel of appellate judges on May 22 upheld a $3.4 billion settlement between the U.S. government and hundreds of thousands of Native American plaintiffs whose land trust royalties were mismanaged by the Interior Department.

The ruling means that settlement checks could be mailed to members of the classaction lawsuit within weeks, said plaintiffs' attorney Dennis Gingold. Further appeals would delay that disbursement, and the attorney for the challenger, Kimberly Craven of Boulder, Colorado, said they are considering their options.

The three-judge panel from the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia dismissed the challenge by Craven, who had objected that the settlement did not include an actual accounting for how much money the government lost and said that the deal would overcompensate a select few beneficiaries.

But the judges said in their ruling that the government would be unable to perform an accurate accounting, the deal is fair and it is the best that can be hoped for to avoid years of additional litigation.

Craven's characterization of the settlement as taking shortcuts "is to ignore the history of this hard-fought litigation and the obstacles to producing an historical accounting," the judges said in their ruling.

The settlement is the result of a class-action lawsuit filed in 1996 by Blackfeet tribal member Elouise Cobell, who died of cancer in October. The lawsuit had originally sought to find out how much money had been mismanaged, squandered or lost by the Department of the Interior, which held the trust

See ROYALTY Continued on Page 3

OKLAHOMA CITY THEATRE COMPANY | COURTESY

Actors Jeremy Tanequodle, left, and Tiffany Tuggle play the characters Wolf and Memela in Salvage, the mainstage production of the annual Native American New Play Festival, June 1-10, in Oklahoma City

Play festival debuts Native works

KAREN SHADE

Native American Times

OKLAHOMA CITY -Family turmoil on Montana's Blackfeet Reservation plays out on the Oklahoma City Civic Center Music Hall stage when the 3rd Annual Native American New Play Festival begins this weekend.

Diane Glancy's drama titled Salvage is the featured production of the festival, presented by Oklahoma City Theatre Company. The play, about a struggling family caught up in a feud with another following a fatal car accident, will be shown June 1-10 in OKC Civic Center Music Hall's versatile CitySpace Theatre.

The festival started as a way to set OKC Theatre Co. apart from other groups.

"This is something not offered anywhere else in the country but for the state of California," said Rachel Irick, company artistic director. "It made sense for Oklahoma to be home for that kind of work where playwrights establish and emerge as leaders in this art form."

The Autry National Center is home to the Native Voices at the Autry program, created to develop and produce new works for live theater by Native Americans as well as Alaska Native and First Nations playwrights. The Native American Play Festival wasn't patterned after the Autry program, but the results are similar.

When Salvage opens Friday, June 1, audiences will see a contemporary piece of storytelling told by Native Americans and reflecting the lives they live today. Set in an auto salvage yard, a young man named Wolf has hit another car accidentally, and his father, Wolfert, is badly injured. When a passenger in the other vehicle dies, old clan rivalries reemerge to make them and Wolf's wife, Memela, targets. Internal tensions among the characters surface as the pressure builds outside of the salvage yard, and themes

See FESTIVAL Continued on Page 4

Judge allows Shoshone tribe into eagle permit case

■ The Fish and Wildlife Service stated it had conferred with the Eastern Shoshone and learned that the tribe was opposed to eagles being killed on the reservation, which the two tribes share.

BEN NEARY Associated Press

CHEYENNE, Wyo. (AP) - A federal judge is allowing the Eastern Shoshone Tribe to challenge the Northern Arapaho's plan to kill bald eagles on the reservation they share in Wyoming.

U.S. District Judge Alan B. Johnson on May 18 agreed to allow the Eastern Shoshone Tribe to participate as a "friend of the court" in the lawsuit the Northern Arapaho Tribe filed last year against the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.

The federal agency in March issued the Northern Arapaho Tribe the nation's first permit allowing the killing of bald eagles for religious purposes. The permit would allow the Northern Arapaho to kill two bald eagles, but only outside the Wind River Indian Reservation.

Other tribes and individual Indians in the Southwest have secured federal permits allowing them to kill golden eagles.

In specifying that the Northern Arapaho could only kill eagles off the reservation, the Fish and Wildlife Service stated it had conferred with the Eastern Shoshone and learned that the tribe was opposed to eagles being killed on the reservation, which the two tribes share.

The Fish and Wildlife Service stated in March that the Northern Arapaho wouldn't need permission from the State of Wyoming to kill eagles off the reservation with a federal permit. However, Johnson appeared to have a different view of that in his order allowing the Shoshone to intervene.

permitted "(T)he area expressly excludes lands within the Wind River Indian

See EAGLE Continued on Page 3

The Northern Arapaho have maintained in their lawsuit that they have a right under the U.S. Constitution to kill eagles for their religious ceremonies.

Tribes criticize govt. over proposed pipeline

LAS VEGAS (AP) - Tribes from four states say the federal government is ignoring them in talks over the potential approval of a 300-mile pipeline aimed at pumping billions of gallons of water from rural areas along the Nevada-Utah border.

Southern Nevada Water Authority won approval in March from Nevada's state engineer to pump up to 84,000 acre-feet of water from rural areas to quench the thirst of the Las Vegas Valley.

Officials are now waiting on required permits from the U.S. Bureau of Land Management to build the $3.5 billion pipeline.

In a statement May 23, tribal leaders from Nevada, Utah, California and Arizona say their input is being ignored as talks continue about the pipeline, which they claim will involve digging on Indian ancestral land in areas where ancient remains and artifacts are located.

Surgical scars some see as racist provoke protest

Many in the Native American community believe there are different standards of justice for them and for other races.

KRISTI EATON Associated Press

RAPID CITY, S.D. (AP) -Hundreds of people marched Monday in support of a man who says the letters KKK were carved into his stomach by a surgeon at a South Dakota hospital.

A YouTube video featuring 69-year-old Vern Traversie, a Lakota man who lives on the Cheyenne River Reservation, has gone viral in Native American communities. In it, Traversie shows a photo of his abdomen. Though he himself is blind, Traversie says he was told by others that the scars left after his heart surgery make out the hateful letters, and he is outraged.

The problem is, not everyone sees it. Like those spotting the Madonna in a water stain, Traversie's advocates are staunch believers. Those who aren't include police who investigated his allegations and hospital officials.

Rapid City police say they conducted an investigation but found no evidence of a crime. Craig Saunders, a cardiologist at Barnabas Hospital in Newark, N.J., said incision marks can take many different shapes, depending on where the doctor needs to get into the body.

Saunders, who did not operate on Traversie, said surgical tape also can leave scarring lesions depending on the make-up of the person's body.

The lack clear letters hasn't deterred Traversie, supporters or those who see the scars as just evidence more continued mistreatment Native American people.

"Rapid City ... we understand you have been carving our people. is going end today," American Indian Movement founder Dennis Banks said to a roaring crowd before leading the supporters on a more than two-mile long march from a and incarceration rates among Rapid City plaza to the hospital

Native Americans as their reasons where the surgery happened.

While Traversie's story spurred the protest, many in attendance referred to broken treaties, unsolved murders

KARIN EAGLE | COURTESY NATIVE SUN NEWS

Dennis Banks, American Indian Movement co-founder, prepares to lead a protest march on Rapid City Regional Hospital May 21. The march was held in support of Cheyenne River elder Vernon Traversie, who alleges surgery performed at the hospital last August left him with racist for showing up.

"We're classified as second class citizens," said Hap Marshall, 69, a resident of the Cheyenne River reservation. "But when they want our votes, we're their brother."

The protest was relatively peaceful. Officers from the Rapid City Police Department blocked off traffic as the supporters, many dressed in red shirts and waving American Indian Movement flags, marched to the beat of a drummer riding in a truck leading the way. Passing cars occasionally honked.

A group of about 15 people including Banks and Oglala Sioux Vice President Tom Poor Bear - met with officials at the hospital, while police prevented other supporters from entering the building.

The march was largely organized by Cody Hall, who lives on the Cheyenne River Reservation, and Chase Iron Eyes, who lives on the Standing Rock Indian Reservation that straddles the North Dakota-South Dakota border, in an effort to bring attention to what they say is continued mistreatment of Native American people.

Many in the Native American community believe there are different standards of justice for them and for other races, said Stew Magnuson, who writes a column for a Native American newspaper and wrote a book about issues on South Dakota's

Pine Ridge Reservation.

Prior to the 1970s and the American Indian Movement, Native Americans felt powerless without representation on juries. AIM changed that by marching into towns and demanding justice, which no one had ever seen before, Magnuson said, adding: "So, I think some of these feelings live on, rightly or wrongly."

As long as the marches and rallies remain peaceful, Magnuson said he believes the demonstrations are an appropriate way for Native Americans to get their voice heard. On the other hand, he said, people can't let rumor and speculation be the narrative of the story.

Some Pine Ridge reservation residents - Native American and non-Native - mentioned a March protest as an example of an instance when demonstrators didn't check their facts beforehand.

In that incident, a group of residents began protesting what they said was a truck carrying materials for TransCanada's Keystone XL project. The Oglala Sioux and Rosebud Sioux tribes have been vocal in their disapproval of the proposed pipeline that would bring oil from Canada's tar sands region in Alberta to refineries along the Texas Gulf Coast.

But the trucks they were attempting to block were not a part of the pipeline, which has been stalled by rejection of a federal permit.

Navajo Nation faces hurdles in recovering funds

The tribe has no jurisdiction over a non-American Indian, even if that person is on tribal land.

FARMINGTON, N.M. (AP) - The Navajo Nation may have little recourse in seeking money from a Colorado man who is accused of spending millions of the nation's funds for personal use.

Hak Ghun, of Durango, Colo., accused of using corporate funds the Navajo Nation invested into his Shiprock Biochemical company, Systems Decontamination Manufacturing Inc.

Authorities allege Ghun spent more than $1 million between 2005 and 2007 and concealed his actions by filing false tax returns in the company's name.

He pleaded not guilty on last week to three federal counts of income tax evasion totaling $368,000 between 2005 and 2007.

LoRenzo Bates, chairman of the Navajo Nation Council's budget and finance committee, said in the Farmington Daily Time that the Navajo Nation may have little legal standing to bring its own charges against Ghun.

"The federal government is going to take its money first," Bates told the Farmington Daily Times. "If Hak has any money left over after that, then the Nation can go after

The Navajo Nation still faces jurisdictional hurdles, Bates said. The tribe has no jurisdiction over a non-American Indian, even if that person is on tribal land.

"The issue with that is not just getting Ghun back on the Navajo Nation," Bates said. "He doesn't have to comply with warrants issued from the nation."

Ghun would have to be physically on the nation to face civil or criminal charges, but even if Navajo officers arrested him, they don't have the authority to hold him.

Navajo is cooperating with the federal government in the investigation.

Navajo President Ben Shelly said the nation will do whatever it can to pursue charges against Ghun and get its investment back.

"We are exploring every option to our disposal right now," Shelly said. "We are making every effort to ensure the Navajo people's money is returned."

Ghun is the former chief executive of the failed Biochemical Decontamination Systems Manufacturing Inc. Shiprock.

The maximum penalty for conviction on each count is five years in prison and a $100,000 fine.

eat better. move more. be tobacco free.

Interested in making Oklahoma a healthier place to live, work, learn and play? Consider joining a coalition in your area.

ATOKA AND COAL COUNTIES

Atoka/Coal Partnership for Change 580.380.0463

BECKHAM AND

Oklahoma Unified Resources (OUR) Turning Point Coalition 580.225.6247

BRYAN COUNTY

Bryan County Turning Point 580.924.4285 ext 254

CARTER COUNTY

Carter County Turning Point 580.223.7075 ext 314

CLEVELAND COUNTY

Cleveland County Turning Point 405.307.6602

COMANCHE COUNTY Fit Kids of Southwest

Oklahoma 580.585.6686

JACKSON COUNTY

Jackson County Community Health Action Team 580.482.7308

KIOWA AND CADDO COUNTIES

Kiowa Coalition and Caddo County Interagency Coalition 580.726.3383

LOGAN COUNTY

Logan County Partnership 918.282.3485

LOVE AND JOHNSTON COUNTIES

Fit Communities - Love and Johnston Consortium 580.371.2470

McCURTAIN, CHOCTAW COUNTIES

Tri-County Consortium 580.298.6624

MUSKOGEE COUNTY

Muskogee County Turning Point 405.683.0321

OKLAHOMA COUNTY Wellness Now Coalition

405.425.4315 OKMULGEE COUNTY

Okmulgee County

Wellness Coalition 918.633.3202

TULSA COUNTY Family Health Coalition

918.595.4039

No coalitions in your area? Find your local Turning Point Partnership and learn more at

ShapeYourFutureOK.com.

Ag Secretary names Council for Native Farming and Ranching

WASHINGTON - Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack announced May 24 the appointment of members to the Council for Native American Farming and Ranching, a committee created to advise him on ways to eliminate barriers to participation for Native American farmers and ranchers. The Council is being appointed as part of the Keepseagle settlement.

"The Council for Native American Farming and Ranching will help Native governments, businesses, farmers and ranchers and tribal governments partner with USDA to create jobs, drive economic growth and strengthen tribal communities," Vilsack said. Keepseagle v. Vilsack was a lawsuit alleging that USDA discriminated against Native American farmers and ranchers in the way it operated its farm loan program. The Obama Administration worked to settle the lawsuit in 2010 and the settlement was subsequently approved by the court.

The Council will suggest changes to Farm Service Agency (FSA) regulations and also provide internal guidance or propose measures that would promote the participation of Native American farmers and ranchers in all other USDA programs and support government-togovernment relations between USDA and tribal governments. The Council is a discretionary advisory committee established under the authority of the Secretary of Agriculture, in furtherance of the settlement agreement.

Members of the Council are appointed for two-vear terms by the Secretary. The appointees include: Native American (American Indian and Alaska Native) farmers or ranchers; representatives of nonprofit organizations that work with Native farmers and ranchers; civil rights professionals; educators; tribal elected leaders; senior USDA officials; and other persons the Secretary deems appropriate.

The Council will hold its first meeting this summer. It will work with the Office of Tribal Relations, the FSA, and other USDA agencies to improve the success of Native farmers and ranchers who access USDA's entire portfolio of programs to build and achieve profitability in their businesses. The USDA is addressing civil rights concerns that go back decades, and the appointment of the Council for Native American Farming and Ranching is another step toward achieving that effort.

The Council for Native American Farming and Ranching will provide guidance that will ensure that all Native American eligible applicants for USDA programs are served in an equal and fair manner. It will enable USDA to enhance business opportunities for Native American farmers and ranchers, tribal governments and the tribal communities they serve, and those interested in improving tribal economies through food and agriculture production.

Professional & Affordable Web Design

ୁ 376-3428

VINITA

918-256-5585

LANGLEY

918-782-0011

MONKEY ISLAND

918-257-8869

www.okstatebank.com

Equal Housing Lender

Native American Owned

2 Oregon tribes disappointed in school mascot ban

on Native American mascots in public high schools means a charter school on tribal land may have to change its Warriors logo, a chief in a headdress.

The new rules have drawn objections from two of the nine tribal groups in Oregon recognized by the federal government, including the Confederated Tribes of Siletz

The rules adopted by the State Board of Education allow the nickname "warriors," but not if it's accompanied by imagery such as the chief in the Siletz Warriors' logo, the Eugene Register-Guard reported last week.

"We will be forced once again to succumb to the misguided intentions of people who have no knowledge of Indian communities," the Siletz tribes said in a statement.

Other Native Americans have objected to the mascots, including Brenda Frank, chairwoman of the body that made the rules, the state Board of Education, and also a member of the Klamath Tribes.

She said she understood objections from the portrayal of Native culture. Siletz and the Confederated Tribes of Grande Ronde, but disagreed.

Oregonian. "The Oregon State Board of in Oregon.

EUGENE, Ore. (AP) - Oregon's new ban Education speaks for all students in the state of Oregon."

> Schools that don't follow the ban could lose state money. Fifteen schools are affected. They face a 2017 deadline.

Federal law recognizes tribal sovereignty for tribal institutions on Indian land. But the state describes the Siletz schools as public, and all charter schools in Oregon get state aid, said Oregon Department of Education spokeswoman Christine Miles.

Principal and Superintendent Sam Tupou said that, despite disappointment, Siletz will comply with the state board's decision, hasn't decided on the future of the logo, but will follow widespread community support for maintaining the Warriors nickname.

"If there's anything good that came out of the ruling, it's that we get to keep the name,"

The Siletz and Grande Ronde tribal groups had backed an alternate proposal to allow tribes to work with local schools on their

Siobhan Taylor, a spokeswoman for the Confederated Tribes of Grande Ronde, said "With all due respect ... their responsibility the board's decision "tramples our sovereignty" is only to their membership and not to the and ignores calls for curriculum changes that community as a whole," Frank told The accurately describe Native American history

Vilsack announces appointment of USDA Tribal Relations Director

WASHINGTON

Secretary of Agriculture Tom Vilsack announced last week that that Joanna Mounce Stancil has been selected to serve as the Director of the USDA Office of Tribal Relations.

"Joanna's background is a mix of corporate, Tribal, and federal experience. She has been a successful small business owner, contractor, and consultant to numerous Tribal governments, said Vilsack.

director, Stancil provide permanent leadership to the efforts of USDA to improve tribal government consultation policies and practice and improve the ability of USDA agencies to work effectively with Tribal governments, communities and individuals. She will work closely with Janie Simms Hipp, who will continue to serve as Senior Advisor to the Secretary for Tribal Relations.

Stancil is Shawnee/ Cherokee from Oklahoma and has been an advisor to the Federal government in their responsibilities to Tribal governments and to Tribal governments in helping them in building infrastructure and economic development. Before joining USDA, she was the senior marketing specialist for the U.S. Small Business Administration. She also served as the American Indian and Alaska Native program manager for the U.S. Census Bureau.

A former journalist, she is the founder of the National Tribal Conservation Areas project and has worked with the National Wildlife Federation, the National Congress of American Indians, numerous environmental organizations and Tribal governments to create tribally managed conservation parks similar to the National Park System.

Feds want new study of Makah whaling impact

PORT ANGELES, Wash. (AP) - Federal agencies want a new study of gray whales on the Washington coast before the Makah tribe is permitted to exercise its treaty right to whaling.

The National Marine Fisheries Service Department of Commerce issued a notice Monday to terminate a 7-year-old draft environmental impact statement.

A new study would consider whether there is a resident population of about 200 gray whales that should be managed differently than the 20,000 gray whales that migrate past Washington each year on their way between Alaskan and Mexican waters.

Tribal Chairman Micah McCarty told the Peninsula Daily News the tribe may prepare a statement on the development.

Makah whalers harpooned and killed a whale in 1999. Courts say the tribe needs a federal waiver from the Marine Mammal Protection Act.

Andrew Baldwin, lawyer for

EAGLE

Continued from Page 1

Reservation, which is the only place in the State where Wyoming law criminalizing the taking of eagles does not apply," Johnson wrote. "The permit thus confoundingly allows the Northern Arapaho Tribe to take eagles only on lands where doing so is a criminal offense...."

Johnson pointed that the federal permit also specified that the Northern Arapaho Tribe would have to follow state laws. Accordingly, he wrote, the federal permit "offers no real permission to take eagles at all."

In asking for permission to intervene in the case, the Eastern Arapaho Tribe noted that it has an indivisible, onehalf interest in all the wildlife on the reservation. It states that killing eagles would violate its cultural beliefs and also says that it would be against the joint Shoshone and Arapaho Law and Order Code.

The Northern Arapaho filed papers recently opposing the Shoshone's move to enter the lawsuit. The Northern Arapaho have maintained in their lawsuit seeking the permits that they have a right under the U.S. Constitution to kill eagles for their religious ceremonies.

declined comment Monday on Johnson's order allowing the Eastern Shoshone to participate in the lawsuit. Attempts to reach Kimberly D. Varilek, attorney general of the Eastern Shoshone Tribe, were not successful on Monday. She didn't respond immediately to phone calls seeking comment. The Northern Arapaho Tribe has a history of conflict with the federal government over the eagle issue. The tribe filed papers in court supporting Winslow Friday, a young tribal member who shot a bald eagle without a permit in 2005 on the reservation for use in his tribe's Sun Dance.

Former U.S. District Judge William Downes dismissed the charge against Friday in 2006 saying it would have been pointless for him to apply for a permit. "Although the government professes respect and accommodation of the religious practices of Native Americans, its own actions show callous indifference to such practices," Downes

A federal appeals court in Denver later reinstated the criminal charge against Friday. The U.S. Supreme Court ultimately refused to hear his case and he wound up pleading guilty in tribal court and was ordered to pay a fine.

the Northern Arapaho Tribe, ahleguah ecycling tahlequahrecycling.com 918-316-5856

TIMES

"Changing the culture of waste." TA

recycles with Tahlequah Recycling Incorporated... shouldn't you?

NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES

Publisher & Editor LISA SNELL editor@nativetimes.com

Contributing Writers Dana Attocknie WESLEY MAHAN KAREN SHADE

Advertising Sales KATHLEEN ROBERTSON LISA SNELL ROB WALTON advertising@nativetimes.com

Distribution SHELBY HICKS STEVE LACY WESLEY MAHAN MICHAEL MARRIS KATHLEEN ROBERTSON BRENDA SLAUGHTER

The Native American Times, formerly the Oklahoma Indian Times, is published weekly (except the last week of the year) by Lisa Hicks Snell. Mailing address is PO Box 411 Tahleguah, OK 74465. All the contents within the Native American Times are copyrighted material. Any reproduction, redistribution without the written consent of the NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES is strictly prohibited.

> Each week's issue is available for free download online at: www.nativetimes.com

Subscription rates: $65.00 for fifty-two issues, $32.50 for twenty-six issues, or $16.25 for thirteen issues. A single copy is $1.25 (Rates are for postage and handling) Send check or money order to:

> NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES Attn: Subscriptions P.O. Box 411 Tahlequah, OK 74465-0411

Phone: (918) 708-5838 Fax: (888) 689-4873

Postmaster: Send Change of Address Form 579 to: NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES P.O. Box 411, Tahlequah, OK 74465

WWW.NATIVETIMES.COM News from the crossroads of Indian Country

ROYAITY

Continued from Page 1

money for land allotted to Native Americans under the Dawes Act of 1887.

"Our deepest regret is that Ms Cobell did not live long enough to see this victory," Gingold said in a statement

The lack of records created a problem in creating an accurate accounting of who was owed what, and the cost of creating such a record for each beneficiary would have cost more than what they were actually owed. After more than 13 years of litigation, the government and Cobell made a deal.

The agreement would pay out $1.5 billion to two classes of beneficiaries whose numbers have been estimated to be between 300,000 and 500,000. Each member of the first class would be paid $1,000. Each member of the second class would be paid $800 plus a share of the balance of the settlement funds as calculated by a formula.

Another $1.9 billion would be used by the government to purchase fractionated land allotments from willing individuals and turn those consolidated allotments over to the tribe. An education scholarship for young Indians also would be established under the agreement.

Congress approved the deal in December 2010 and U.S. District Judge Thomas Hogan approved it after a June 2011 hearing. Hogan said that while the settlement may not be as much as some wished, the deal provides a way out of a legal morass and provides some certainty for the beneficiaries.

As part of the deal, Cobell was awarded $2 million and the three other named plaintiffs were awarded between $150,000 $200,000.

Craven and others objected and appealed the settlement, claiming the deal creates a conflict between the beneficiaries as some would be overpaid while others would be undercompensated for their claims. Creating a lump-sum award without an accounting creates an arbitrary payout system without knowing who is said he believes they correctly actually owed what, she argued. The appellate panel quoted

Hogan in saying, "It is hard to see how there could be a better result" than this settlement. Few beneficiaries are likely to have substantial claims, Craven did not provide evidence that some beneficiaries would be underpaid and Congress' authorization of the deal "carries significant weight and sets this case apart from others," the appellate court argued the shortcomings of the settlement. Frank is considering his options, which could include a request for the full appellate court to review the decision.

TedFrank, Craven's attorney,

"So we're certainly disappointed, because we believed we were correct on the law, though we understood that we had an uphill battle given the exhaustion factor of a case that had already generated 22 (now 23) published opinions," Frank said in an email to The Associated Press.

True American Indian

www.flyingeagletradingpost.com

CUSTOM SEWING & ALTERATIONS RIBBON SHIRTS • TEAR DRESSES FORMAL WEAR • COSTUMES

Gracie Cox

Retired Oklahoma Teacher

918-906-9025 gracie.cox@suddenlink.net

Metal Roofing & Siding

Professional Construction and Home Repairs

Free Estimates

Charles Snell 918-507-2902

Native American Contractor

DRUMRIGHT DENTAL CENTER Advanced Dental Technology

We proudly offer an array of services, from general dentistry to sedation, dental implants, and cosmetic dentistry - all designed expressly to meet our patient's changing needs. With four general dentists and four hygienists, we can maintain your oral health for a lifetime all at one location.

We Accept Contract Health & Sooner Care

We serve patients in the Drumright, Cushing, Stillwater, Stroud, Ponca City, and surrounding areas with personalized service and exemplary care. Call for your appointment today.

918-352-3312 or Toll Free 877-RH Melton drumrightdentalcenter.com

Play sheds light on 'Bearer of the Dawn' FESTIVAL

DANA LANCE Chickasaw Nation

OKLAHOMA CITY - Dressed in authentic Native regalia, Mary Frances "Te Ata" Thompson Fisher enlightened the world about Native

Mary Thompson "Te Ata" Fisher is a famous Chickasaw storyteller and actress. In 1987, Te Ata (1895–1995) became the first person to be declared an "Oklahoma Treasure."

American history and culture by sharing the stories of her Chickasaw tribe and other indigenous people.

The Chickasaw Nation and Oklahoma City University are collaborating to present a play inspired by the life and legacy of Te Ata this

> "Te Ata" will be presented June 14-17 and 21-24, 2012 at Oklahoma City > University. The play will be presented at 8 p.m. June 14-16 and 21-23 and 2 p.m. June 16-17 and 23-24. One of America's most beloved > Native storytellers, Te-Ata achieved national and international acclaim with her one-person performances of American Indian folklore and enchanted a wide variety of audiences including, presidents, European royalty, heads of state and many more.

> "Te Ata brought the beauty and wisdom of American Indian culture to the world in a way that helped develop greater appreciation for core values such as basic human kindness and respect for the natural world," said Chickasaw Nation Governor Bill Anoatubby. "Her life's work helped bring diverse cultures closer together. She is a shining example of how artistic expression can change hearts and minds."

> Te Ata, which means "bearer of the dawn," was named the first Oklahoma Treasure 25 years ago and is also a member of the Oklahoma Hall of Fame and the Chickasaw

The production will be brought to life by awardwinning Chickasaw playwright, JudyLee Oliva. Ms. Oliva holds a Master of Fine Arts in directing from the University of Oklahoma and a Ph.D. in theater and drama from Northwestern University. Her work has been seen by audiences from coast to coast including New York City, Chicago and Los Angeles. She was named the 2006 Dynamic Chickasaw Woman of the Year for her work on "Te Ata." She has published two text books and has contributed to more than 20 other books and journals.

"Te Ata" will be directed by noted Native American scholar and director Dr. Christy Stanlake. An associate professor of English and the director of the Navy Theatre program at the United States Naval Academy in Annapolis, Md. Dr. Stanlake earned a Ph.D. in theatre history, literature and criticism from Ohio State University, where she specialized in Native American dramaturgy. She earned a Master of Arts in theatre from the University of Oklahoma.

The production includes music composed by Jan Seiden.

Tickets are now available by contacting the Oklahoma City University Theatre Department at 405-208-5227 or visit the OCU website for more information at www.okcu.edu/theatre. Tickets range from $12 to $15. Students, senior citizens, Allied Art members and groups purchase for $10

The Oklahoma performances will be followed by a touring production July 5-8, 2012 at the National Museum of the American Indian Rasmuson Theatre in Washington, D.C. For more information about the Washington, D.C. performance, visit http://nmai.si.edu/calendar/.

of identity and dignity are realized in the actions and words.

Salvage premiered in 2008 at the Autry National Center in Los Angeles and its Native Voices at the Autry. The play has also been presented during the Origins Festival in London in 2009. The work is Glancy's third piece for theater, and she has specific memories about creating it.

"I had actually been in Montana, working on my second play, Stone Heart. ... I was driving, and the characters got in the backseat and rode with me for many miles. I finally realized another play was on its way," Glancy said.

The play's director Sarah d'Angelo said Salvage is uniquely Native American in its story mode as opposed to the European-American model.

"I see a hearkening to Native intellectual tradition, like the ideal of place - it plays an important role, almost as if it were another character," said d'Angelo, Mohawk. "... It's a very contemporary story, and the language is really quite beautiful. Diane is a novelist, poet and playwright. Her voice is something very unique."

The play was chosen for fullstaging treatment after it was read at last year's festival. OKCTC accepts script submissions before a March deadline. Submissions are selected for staged readings at the festival based on solidity of the script. Two or three are then presented at the festival for the general public, which gets to add input. From those scripts, festival organizers choose one to produce the following year's festival.

They are chosen on their strength and also for their application to the festival's parameters. Works for a large cast or requiring an elaborate, complicated set are not considered for production at this time because of OKCTC's available resources. For this reason, there are no winners and

In time, the theater company hopes to present at least two new play productions each festival week, Irick said. The most important point is to continue collaboration between the company and local Native American writers, directors, actors and artists.

Salvage will be performed throughout the festival week. Other events include a discussion panel with the playwrights, authors luncheon and staged readings of three more new plays, one of which will be produced Glancy said she plans to attend the June 8 showing of her play. The author will also be in OKC for the screening of The Dome of Heaven, a 2011 feature film starring Oklahoma actor Wes Studi, Cherokee, during the deadCENTER Film Festival. Glancy wrote the screenplay and directed. The film will be shown at 11:15 a.m. June 9 at Harkins Theatre, 150 E. Reno Ave., Oklahoma City.

IF YOU GO

The 3rd Annual Native American New Play Festival will be June 1-10 at Oklahoma City Civic Center Music Hall's CitySpace Theatre, 201 N. Walker Ave., Oklahoma City.

Festival schedule:

2 p.m. June 3

Salvage show times: 8 p.m. May 31 (preview performance) 8 p.m. June 1-2, 7-9

Other festival activities: Saturday, June 9

2 p.m.: Free staged reading of Chalk in the Rain by Bret Jones

8 p.m.: Final performance of Salvage

Sunday, June 10 11:30 a.m.: Meet and Greet with playwrights and authors over light 1 p.m.: Free staged reading of Broken Heart Land by Vicki Lynn Mooney 3 p.m.: Coffee and snack break 3:30 p.m.: Free staged reading of

Waaxe's Law by Kathryn Nagle 5 p.m.: Q&A panel discussion with the playwrights

Tickets to see Salvage are $10-$20. To purchase, call the Oklahoma City Theatre Co. box office at (405) 297-2264 or go to www.okctheatrecompany.org. To RSVP for the June 10 luncheon, call (405) 812-7737 by June 5.

For more about the deadCENTER Film Festival, go to www. deadcenterfilm.org.

Comanche leader makes Johnny Depp honorary member

ALBUQUERQUE, New Mexico (AP) -Johnny Depp has been made an honorary member of the Comanche tribe.

Depp is in New Mexico, shooting the film adaptation of "The Lone Ranger." He plays "Ranger" sidekick Tonto in the film.

Comanche Nation tribal citizen LaDonna Harris said last week that the tribal chairman presented Depp with a proclamation at her Albuquerque home May 16. She said the Comanche adoption tradition means she now considers Depp her son.

Harris said Depp seemed humbled.

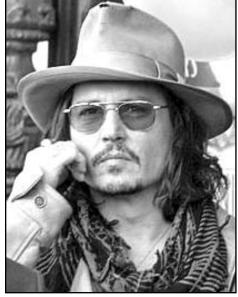

His spokeswoman, Jayne Ngo, confirmed the actor participated in a ceremony, but she declined to provide details.

Harris said she had read in interviews that Depp identified himself as being part Native American, so she thought it would be fun to adopt him – a tradition she says is common in Comanche culture. She ran the idea past her adult children, and they agreed.

Harris said she reached out to the "Dark Shadows" star through a friend who is working as a cultural adviser on the "Lone Ranger" set.

The Comanche Nation is based in Lawton, Oklahoma. About half of its 15,000 members live in southwestern Oklahoma.

Depp has been the topic of much discussion in Indian Country and online since he was cast as Tonto, with comments about his costume, ranging to the selection of a non-Native for the part, to how the role  $itself has historically epitomized \ Hollywood \hbox{'s}$ misrepresentation of Native culture.

Johnny Depp has been the topic of much discussion in Indian Country and online since he was cast as Tonto.

The members of North Bear, in front, won the Gathering of Nations 2012 Hand Drum contest. Their winning performance can be found on

Drum group wins national contest

MARTIN REED

The Riverton Ranger

RIVERTON, Wyo. (AP) - The four Northern Arapaho members of North Bear rhythmically hit the drum each of them held as they began to sing in the center of the University of New Mexico Arena known as The Pit.

Their style of round dance singing started in the traditional chant before they hit an unheard of four-part harmony, concluding with the lyrics "She's my world. She's my everything. She's my Daddy's Girl."

Cheers, whistling and screams from spectators in The Pit erupted at the sounds of singers Jermaine Bell, Luke Bell, Herb Augustine Jr. and Abe Thomas at the Gathering of Nations Powwow in Albuquerque, N.M., on April 28.

"North Bear in the house!" the announcer could be heard saying in the arena. "...That's Indian harmony, man!"

The response was tremendous for the North Bear singers from the Wind River Indian Reservation, who walked away with the title of world hand drum singing champions at the annual powwow.

"I still can't believe it," Augustine said in an interview with The Riverton Ranger.

"I can't get over it," Thomas said. "People are blowing it up all over Facebook I don't even Jermaine Bell, who wrote the winning song "Daddy's Girl" performed by North Bear, said the unique singing style has been called a game-changer by some top performers in the Indian Country music.

"It's so big because we changed up everything," the 31-year-old Arapahoe man said. "We made a traditional song into a four-part harmony and nobody has ever done that before."

Video of North Bear's winning performance, found on You Tube under "GON 2012 Hand Drum 1st Place Champs," is making the rounds on the Internet and causing a stir on the reservation and elsewhere. "We've gotten compliments already from all the big name singers," Bell said. "They told us, 'You've changed the game right there. Nobody is going to look at round dance singing the same."

More importantly for the group that regularly performs around the region, the winning song is historic for the Wind River Indian Reservation.

"The good thing about it is no other drum group accomplished something like that from our reservation," Bell said. "It makes us feel proud to represent the Northern Arapaho people."

Augustine added: "We really want to thank the people."

The inspiration for the four performers came from their family and children. "It's kind of cool because we all have little girls," Bell said.

The song itself was one Bell wrote in December when he couldn't visit his 3-yearold daughter, Olowan Win Josephine Bell, in Montana over Christmastime due to poor

After writing the song, "I sang it to her over the phone," Bell said. "It's a song I sing to her as Bell talked about changing the song's style to make it unique for the group's performance at the powwow.

"The traditional singing, it's one tune. It's one beat. What we did was basically something that no one has ever done with a fourpart harmony," he said.

"We were toying with the idea" to incorporate harmony, Augustine, 32, of Ethete, said. "We didn't know it was going to be this big until we actually sang it," Bell said.

The four winning members of North Bear who have been singing at times together since high school and consider themselves brothers competed against 25 other groups for the hand drum contest at the powwow.

"It's considered the world championship of all powwows. There's like 50,000 people there," Bell said. "There's the top singers from all over the world."

The pressure was on for the

"It was surreal. It was really surreal. It was scary," Bell said. "We just happened to be different than every other drum group out there. Every other drum group out there does the same thing."

Thomas said thinking of everyone's children helped the group's performance. "It was just a very exciting feeling, a very happy feeling because when we sang it, we sang it to our full emotion. We had a reason behind it, especially Jermaine," he said.

As the North Bear members prepare to record a new CD, they still can look forward to smaller

"We sing a lot of karaoke," Augustine said.

"We like to do a lot of karaoke," Bell added.

"It helps keep our voice in shape," Augustine chimed in, saying they sing "country or whatever."

"They call round dance music the Indian country version," Bell said.

Arizona tribes talk about significance of solar eclipse

FELICIA FONSECA Associated Press

FLAGSTAFF, Ariz. (AP) -Seven years old and lounging in a tree listening to the radio, Baje Whitethorne Sr. wasn't aware of the lesson he was about to learn.

His grandfather called him down from the tree, saying it was time to go inside their home on the Navajo reservation and wait while the sun died and was reborn. There was going to be a solar eclipse.

Whitethorne wanted nothing more than to eat, but he did what he was told. That day, he learned patience and a cultural teaching that he has passed on through a children's book he wrote about why Navajos shouldn't gawk at an eclipse like the one that was recently visible in parts of the western United States.

"It was just the respect and honor you give to what nature does," Whitethorne said. "The sun is reborn, and in acknowledging what nature does, you take a minute to acknowledge yourself."

Many American Indian tribes view the sun and moon as cultural deities but the beliefs among northern Arizona's tribes and individual members don't all signal a need to stay clear of the ring eclipse, or annular solar eclipse, that hadn't been seen in the U.S. since 1994. Whitethorne says he used the opportunity to read the first book he authored and illustrated 20 years ago, "Sunpainters: Eclipse of the Navajo Sun," to his grandchildren.

Carletta Tilousi of the Havasupai Tribe had no plans to go out of her way to watch it. Even if she did, it would be nothing more than a glance,

"In our tradition they tell us as children not to look at the moon because it's such a powerful energy that if you gaze upon it too long, it can bring bad dreams," she said.

In the Hualapai culture, blocking out the sun could be interpreted as a bad omen, said tribal member Wilfred Whatoname Sr.

"We may have done something wrong to make that happen," he said. "That doesn't happen often, so people are led to believe that maybe we should take care of our lives a

Staring at the eclipsed sun can indeed cause a serious eye injury, and some Navajos have linked exposure to it to birth defects, or other physical and mental ailments. Whitethorne's grandfather covered the food and water outside their hogan decades ago to keep anything the livestock could eat or drink from being exposed to the eclipse as well, he said.

Navajos living in Canyon de Chelly National Monument on the reservation or people visiting there were at one of six prime viewing spots for the May 20 eclipse, where the moon covered about 95 percent of the sun's diameter.

An eclipse is a phenomenon that the Hopi Tribe refers to as one piggybacking off the other. It is acknowledged in the tribe's history, but the director of the tribe's cultural preservation office said it isn't known to be taboo to look at

"Over time we've been exposed to eclipses on and off, but we don't have anything bad about it through our traditions," said Leigh Kuwanwisiwma. "It's just an amazement."

Sitting on a blue chair inside his grandfather's hogan, Whitethorne imagined small children with paintbrushes restoring color to the landscape once the eclipse was over. He followed his grandfather's lead in blessing each direction in recognition of the renewal that had taken place.

And when they were done, he got to eat.

Ocmulgee to Okmulgee: Muscogee (Creek) Nation Trail of Tears Bicycle Tour set for June 2-23, 2012

MEDIA RELEASE MCN Museum, Cultural Center & Archives

OKMULGEE, Okla. -"Ocmulgee Three words, to Okmulgee" pack an encyclopedia of history for the Muscogee people and make an appropriate name for the commemorative bicycle tour taking place in June.

The staff members of the Muscogee (Creek) Nation Museum, Cultural Center, & Archives, Program Manager/ Museum Director and Curator John Beaver and Asst. Director Justin Bruce Giles are spearheading the event through collaboration with many agencies including: the National Park Service; the Alabama Historical Commission: the Historic Chattahoochee Commission; Fort Gibson Historic Site; Let's Move!; Americans for Indian Opportunity; and the National Museum of the American Indian.

Beaver will be the lead rider in the Ocmulgee to Okmulgee: Muscogee (Creek) Nation Trail of Tears Bicycle Tour as he visits sites from the well known to those off the beaten path to present the history and stories of Muscogee culture in the Southeast.

Giles will be manning the mobile support vehicle and documenting the ride as they traverse the Trail of Tears. Together, they will present a "living classroom" experience that will be shared in online blogs, a website that will host information about all of the sites visited during the project, and later in the

The tour will commence June 2 at the Ocmulgee Mounds in Macon, Ga., and will conclude the weekend of June 23 at the 2012 Muscogee Festival in Okmulgee, Okla.

Some of the sites to be visited, such as the Ocmulgee Mounds near Macon, Ga., tie into ancient Mvskoke history.

The project team will also visit original tvlwv (town) sites and battle sites. One goal is to pay homage to and recognize our ancestors who made the difficult journey of removal. Fort Mitchell is on the tour as a beginning point of the forced removals to Indian Territory.

Muscogee (Creek) Nation citizens and the public are invited to join in the bicycle tour or to make the journey by automobile, following the itinerary and maps. For those who may be interested in riding during various parts of the tour, please be advised that most riding days will consist of a minimum of 50 mile distances in summer heat and humidity. Some days, the rides and distances covered may be longer in duration in order to meet travel itineraries. All participants are responsible for their own travel and lodging. All participants waive, release, and hold harmless the Muscogee (Creek) Nation, employees and volunteers, and all other sponsors, their representatives and successors from all claims and liabilities that may arise from this event.

From the Ocmulgee Mounds, the tour will progress from Georgia to Alabama, heading west to Fort Mitchell across portions of the Old Federal Road, before continuing west to Montgomery, Fort Toulouse and Horseshoe Bend. The route will then move into Tennessee and take old military routes through Arkansas, arriving at Fort Gibson as the western terminal of the forced march.

Event planning built many inter-agency relationship bridges that Beaver and Giles believe will lead to a Muscogee presence and perspective previously lacking in the history and surrounding commentary our ancestral homelands, the removal process, and the continuity of our ancient Muscogee culture within our current day environment. This can benefit our own people as well as the general public.

"Telling our stories" has already been identified as one of the primary goals of the Muscogee (Creek) Nation Museum, so it seems very appropriate for the museum staff to be making this journey.

"Stories can be shared in many ways," explains Beaver, "but we want to show our people and others that a museum can be about learning history through activity."

The project team has included Muscogee (Creek) Nation Tourism Recreation to assist with community involvement, Veterans Affairs, and the Division of Health, which is promoting the healthy eating and fitness aspect of the bike

The tour project will be part of Let's Move! In Indian Country and Let's Move! Museums as a fitness initiative and is meant to heighten awareness and promote a lifestyle that can help reduce the number of new cases of heart disease, diabetes, and childhood obesity within the Native American community.

Anyone wanting to follow the tour as it progresses can do so on the Muscogee (Creek) Nation website, the Museum website, http://www. muscogeenationmuseum. org/ and the Facebook page for the Museum.

Additional information will be added at these sites post-ride.

Confirmed Tour Stops: June 2 - Ocmulgee Mounds, Macon, Ga.

June 3 - Fort Mitchell, Alabama

June 9 - Fort Toulouse,

Alabama June 11 - Horseshoe Bend,

Alabama June 22 – Fort Gibson Historic Site, Oklahoma

June 23 - Okmulgee, Oklahoma A send-off for the riders is set for May 31, 2012 at 10 a.m., at the Muscogee (Creek) Nation Capitol Complex in Okmlugee.

For more information contact John Beaver at 918-549-2428 or email: jbeaver@ muscogeenation-nsn.gov or Justin Bruce Giles at 918-549-2429 or email: jgiles@ muscogeenation-nsn.gov

In this May 17, 2012 photo, Baje Whitethorne Sr. displays a book at his home in Flagstaff, Ariz., that he wrote about his experience as a Navajo boy with a solar eclipse.

SUPERNAW'S OKLAHOMA INDIAN SUPPLY

Wholesale items for Pow Wow Vendors

Bone chokers $20 per dozen

Handmade lamp worked glass bead bracelets $1.00 each Glass bead stretch bracelets 5 for $2.50

12 Necklaces: Chain w/ pendant and display pad $13.50 36 inch gemstone chip strands Reg. 3.95 now $2.00 36 inch turquoise chip strands Reg. 7.95 now $4.00

Always our regular stock of seed beads from 16/0 to 8/0, findings, leather, hackles, fluffs and thousands of other supply items.

Remember we've moved around the corner 109 North Broadway, Skiatook, OK 74070

New Dealers Cash or Credit Card Only.

Open Noon-6pm Mon. thru Fri. • 10am-5m Sat. • Closed Sun. Local: 396-1713-Countrywide Toll Free 1-888-720-1967

Website: www.supernaw.com • Email: Supernaw@flash.net

More Jobs. More News. More Features. Every Day.

www.nativetimes.com

NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES

Name:
Address:
City: State: Zip:
Phone:
☐ $65.00 for 52 issues ☐ $32.50 for 26 issues

Mail this form with a check or money order to: Native American Times • P.O. Box 411 Tahlequah, OK 74465 • 918-708-5838

■ $1.25 single copy

■ $16.25 for 13 issues

Tlingit man becomes resident centenarian

Ketchikan Daily News

KETCHIKAN, Alaska (AP) -Henry Neligan turned 100 recently, but he's not acting the centenarian.

You might see him out walking Tongass Avenue, riding the bus or shopping at Tatsuda's IGA.

If you're at the Ketchikan Public Library, you might have to race him to get a Robert B. Parker mystery novel from the audio book section.

And if you are fortunate enough to cross paths with him, do stop and say hello.

Carpenter, carver, fisherman, musician, world traveler and gentleman, Henry Neligan is someone to know.

He was born May 6, 1912, in Craig to Edna Coombs Neligan, a Tlingit of the Raven Clan, and Henry Neligan, an immigrant from Liverpool, England, who passed his name on to his son.

"I think my mother was pretty smart, even though she wasn't educated," said Neligan, who remembers his mother fondly. "She knew a lot - I think she was where I got my smarts. ... What I have, of Neligan seasons his conversation with a dash of self-deprecating humor now and again. He knows humor is helpful when meeting new people.

"I found out long ago (that) all strangers are a little cautious, but if you can turn something into some kind of a little joke, then that breaks the ice and gets people laughing," Neligan said. "And that gets you kind of home."

"Home" during Neligan's early childhood was Klawock until 1919, when he was sent to Kent, Wash., to attend the Briscoe Boarding School run by the Catholic Church.

Briscoe's curriculum included music. The young Henry started playing the baritone horn, but he was really interested in trumpet.

"I wanted to play the trumpet and they finally let me do it," Neligan recalls. "I have an ear for music."

Neligan credits his mom for that, too.

HALL ANDERSON I KETCHIKAN DAILY NEWS

In this May 3, 2012 photo, Henry Nelligan speaks to the Ketchikan Daily News in Ketchikan, Alaska. Henry Neligan turned 100 but he's not acting the centenarian.

"My mother was where I got my music," Neligan smiles. "You should have heard my dad try to sing. It sure sounded funny."

When he turned 16, Neligan went to stay with a family who had a dairy farm at Sumas, Wash., up near the Canadian border.

"They had extra room, and he had a herd of cows - 30 cows - and that meant a lot of work," Neligan said. "And, I went to school. So you see I got no pay. I had to get up in the morning, get dressed in my work clothes to milk the cows and feed the cows and shovel the, you know, and haul it and put it in a pile. It was work. Then I came in and changed clothes and went out to catch the school bus."

Neligan would stay there for three years until the onset of the Great Depression began to take its toll.

Unable to make ends meet from milk production, the dairy farmers began to sell their cows.

"Every month the price paid for the milk kept going down," Neligan said. "This was in 1929. ... Everything was going downhill."

So Neligan went up north. He Alaska Steamship Co. steamer Alameda to Craig, where he caught a ride aboard a boat to Klawock.

"I remember when I landed in Klawock, I knew I would be welcomed," Neligan said.

His grandfather was still alive, and made arrangements for Neligan to stay with a relative who had a house with extra space in Klawock.

Neligan recalls that the area's abundance of natural foods helped blunt the Depression's impact.

"It didn't bother us up here, because the people in Klawock did a lot more living off the land than they do now, because it was there," Neligan said. "So much stuff grows. The beaches in this country ... are alive with so much food, all kinds of stuff down there. And there are several kinds of edible bottom fish, ... and, of course, salmon."

He began learning carpentry, carving and fishing.

He began his fishing career by crewing on seine boats. After a while, he had his own rowboat, then a power boat with a small heavy-duty engine.

Neligan began building boats, too. "In my career, I built something like 52 boats, most of them small boats," Neligan said. "But I built one 44-footer. I built three power boats with engines. But lots of rowboats. ... People ordered them. In fact most of my boats were built for people that ordered one. Summertime, I fished."

Neligan built the 44-footer in 1950 at Crescent City, Calif., borrowing $4,000 from a bank in Grants Pass, Ore., and renting a boat shop that came with a boat shed, steam box and everything else he needed for $50 a month.

Once the boat was complete, Neligan brought it back to Southeast

"I went seining with it, but decided I didn't want to go seining anymore, recalls sailing aboard the so I sold it for $32,000," Neligan said.

> He continued trolling, though, just like he had continued to play the trumpet after he returned to Southeast Alaska from Washington

Neligan played in a band that included Paul Davis on trombone, Arthur Demmert on saxophone, and Neligan's cousin, Bobby Armour, who "played bass drum with a foot pedal, played the guitar, and sang, when his turn come," said Neligan.

"In Klawock, we used to play for dances," he continued, noting that people enjoyed the big-band sound of band leaders like Les Brown and Harry James back then. "People used to dance. ... We'd make a few dollars."

Neligan moved from POW to Ketchikan in 1963. He continued commercial trolling for salmon, operating mostly in the far outside water off Southeast Alaska.

"Outside," Neligan said when asked where he would go fishing. "There were several of us. But the way we fished, if you ever went straight west, you'd come to China. There was no more islands outside of us."

So, did he ever just head straight west? Well, no.

"I just decided that China could get along without me," Neligan said.

In Ketchikan, Neligan continued working in carpentry. He helped build the Veterans of Foreign Wars post on Tongass Avenue, and did some of the remodeling work on the Moose Lodge (Neligan is a life member of the Legion of the Moose).

Neligan finally obtained a driver's license when he was 70. He hadn't needed a car in the Craig-Klawock area because it didn't have roads when he lived there. He didn't get around to buying a car in Ketchikan until several years after moving here.

"Finally, I got an old Chevy," he said. "It was easy to drive, and Ketchikan is easy to drive in."

But he didn't drive for very long before the Department of Motor Vehicles ended his motoring days.

"When I went to renew my driver's license, they gave me a vision test," Neligan said. "But I failed it. I didn't really fail, but at 75, they didn't think I should be driving, and maybe they were right."

Neligan's 75th year was filled with other milestone events. He met his second wife, Susie, when he was 75, and sold his troll boat and permit.

Neligan and Susie took a roundthe-world trip that included a cross-Russia excursion on the Trans-Siberian Railway. Greece was a favorite part of the trip, and he quite enjoyed traveling by train.

But of all the places he's seen, none has bested his home state.

"They don't compare worth a darn," Neligan said.

He's kept busy in more recent years. He's carved numerous halibut hooks over time, and is currently carving an adze.

His eyesight has dimmed to the point where he can work large-print crossword puzzles, but otherwise can no longer read or write. As such, he enjoys listening to the audio books from the library.

In addition to the library, Neligan spends time at the Rendezvous Senior Day Services. And while riding the bus here and there, he occasionally finds himself in conversation with inquisitive tourists.

"You'd be surprised how many different questions a bunch of tourists can ask," he said, laughing. "Nice people."

It sounds as though Neligan has known a lot of nice folks in his 100 years. Neligan said his friends from his early days are gone, but even now, "I have to say I have a lot of friends."

He also has six children and many grandchildren and greatgrandchildren, according to the Ketchikan Indian Community.

Asked to what he attributes his longevity, Neligan smiled his smile that spreads quickly through every line in his time-creased face.

"I'll tell you," Neligan said. "If you want to live long, pick long-lived parents.

"My dad lived to be 104," he said.

EMPLOYMENT / HELP WANTED

GWY9 D36 HEROKEE NATION®

Cherokee Nation whose headquarters are located in beautiful Tahlequah, Oklahoma is a national leader in Indian tribal governments and economic development in Oklahoma, We are a dynamic, progressive organization, which owns several business enterprises and administers a variety of services for the Cherokee people in Northeastern Oklahoma. Cherokee Nation offers an exceptional employee benefits plan with Comprehensive Health, Life, 401 (k), Holiday Pay, Sick Leave and Annual Leave.

CURRENT OPPORTUNITIES WW HASTINGS HOSPITAL, TAHLEQUAH POSITIONS CLOSE 6/1/2012

#6470 Medical Technologist/T/PT #5745 Medical Technologist/R/FT #6493 Medical Technologist II/R/FT #5998 Medical Technologist/T/PT

#5768 Medical Technologist/R/PT Interested applicants please apply at www.cherokee.org

> Cherokee Nation Human Resources Department PO Box 948 Tahlequah, OK 74465 (918) 453-5292 or 453-5050

Employment will be contingent upon drug test results. Indian preference is considered.

Economic Development Planner

Taos Pueblo Enterprises is seeking to fill the position of Economic Development Planner to facilitate economic development planning and initiatives; identify and foster economic development opportunities; secure funding for economic development and promoting in order to expand economic development opportunities for Taos Pueblo. For detailed job description or to submit an application

Bernadette Lujan, Administration Taos Pueblo Enterprises, Inc. 515 Gusdorf Rd. - Suite 5 Taos, New Mexico 87571 (575)758-7100 Office (575)741-1702 Cell Closing Date: 6/8/12

OKLAHOMA INDIGENT DEFENSE SYSTEM DEFENSE COUNSEL

ATTORNEY

The Oklahoma Indigent Defense System (OIDS) has an attorney position opening in our Non-Capital Trial Division, Clinton office.

Salary for these positions are commensurate with qualifications and within agency salary schedule range. Excellent benefits.

Any interested applicant should submit a letter of interest and resume by June 5, 2012 to:

Angie L. Cole, Personnel Officer Oklahoma Indigent Defense System P.O. Box 926 Norman, OK 73070

OIDS is an Equal Opportunity Employer

General Manager

Cimarron Casino, located in Perkins, OK is accepting applications for General Manager. The General Manager is responsible for the successful overall direction, administration and coordination of all activities at Cimarron Casino Enterprises, in accordance with the policies, procedures and objectives established by the Iowa Tribe of Oklahoma, with the ultimate objective to provide the maximum profit and return on investment. The General Manager will ensure a maximum level of guest service and satisfaction throughout the property is achieved and maintained. The General Manager directly supervises all department heads, the Administrative Assistant and the maintenance department and indirectly supervises the activities of all employees who work on the property.

Requirements:

Bachelor's degree from a four-year college or university, or four to six years related experience and/or training, or an equivalent combination of education and experience. Ten (10) to fifteen (15) years experience in the gaming industry required. Minimum of five (5) years management experience on an executive level required. Must possess excellent communication skills, and effective public speaking skills.

The lowa Tribe of Oklahoma operates a drug-free workplace. The selected applicant must submit to and pass applicable drug test. Additionally, selected individual must be bondable and able to pass background check in order to obtain a gaming license from the Iowa Tribe of Oklahoma Gaming Commission.

Apply online at www. iowanation.org/hireme or in person at 821 W. Freeman, Perkins, Okla.

Check nativetimes.com for more jobs! -New jobs posted throughout the week-

Riverside Indian School in Anadarko, OK is seeking qualified applicants for the following positions:

> HS Academic Counselor HS Math Teacher HS Science Teacher HS English/Reading Teacher Special Education Teacher

For information about these vacancies you may visit the school website www. ris.bie.edu or call 405-247-6670.

AMERICAN HIRING PREFERENCE?

NATIVE

Advertise to Native Americans! E-mail your ad for a quote to: lisa@nativetimes.com

Cimarron Casino, located in Perkins, OK is accepting applications for Chief Financial Officer (CFO). The CFO will be responsible for the financial statements and financial activities of Cimarron Casino, its component units, and/or any other entities as

Chief Financial Officer

As a key member of the Executive Management team, the CFO will report to the Cimarron Casino Enterprises (CCE) Board of Directors (aka lowa Tribe of Oklahoma Business Committee) and assume a strategic role in the overall management of the Accounting Department. The CFO will play a critical role in developing and implementing the financial strategy for Cimarron Casino.

The CFO will directly assist the Iowa Tribe of Oklahoma Business Committee with all strategic and tactical matters as they relate to budget management, cost benefit analysis, forecasting needs, and securing new funding.

The CFO will establish and maintain Cimarron Casino and the Iowa Tribe of Oklahoma's financial policies and procedures and provide operational and administrative direction to the accounting, budgeting, treasury, tax, and investor relations functions. The CFO directly supervises the General Accounting Manager and indirectly supervises the activities of all employees who work in the Accounting Department.

Gaming industry experience is required. Bachelor of Science (BS) degree in Accounting or Finance required; MBA preferred. Mature and proactive, with evidence of having worked as a true business partner to the CEO of a multi-divisional organization.

Ten-plus (10+) years of broad finance experience, ideally beginning in accounting, followed by experience gathering and evaluating financial information and making actionable recommendations to senior leadership. Must have experience managing the accounting/finance functions (accounting, budgeting, control, and reporting) within a diverse tribal/casino-based entity.

Valid Certified Public Accountant (CPA) designation required.

The Iowa Tribe of Oklahoma operates a drug-free workplace. The selected applicant must submit to and pass applicable drug test. Additionally, selected individual must be bondable and able to pass background check in order to obtain a gaming license from the Iowa Tribe of Oklahoma Gaming Commission.

Apply online at www. iowanation.org/hireme or in person at 821 W. Freeman, Perkins, Okla.

Check nativetimes.com for more jobs! -New jobs posted throughout the week-

COMING SOON!

Crystal Gayle

Saturday, August 25 • 7 pm Tickets are $25

Visit the Osage Box Office in Tulsa or call (918) 699-7667. Cash and all major credit cards accepted. Must be 18 to attend. No refunds or exchanges.

End of Tisdale Parkway near Downtown Tulsa.

osagecasinos.com

(918) 699-7777

Find us on Facebook!

Tulsa Bartlesville Sand Springs Ponca City Skiatook Hominy Pawhuska

©2012 Osage Casino. Management reserves all rights.

EVENTS

*Email your powwow or other event info to: Lisa@ nativetimes.com. Name, date, time, place and contact information is free.

EVERY THURSDAY The Otoe-Missouria Substance Abuse and Behavioral Health Programs sponsor an open group for families touched by addiction from noon to 1 p.m. at the Otoe-Missouria Health Building. This is a confidential group. Call 580-723-4466 x252 or x262 for more information.

SECOND TUESDAY Cherokee Artists Association meeting at 202 E. 5th Street Tahlequah, Okla. Info: (918) 458-0008 or www.

FOURTH THURSDAY Each month the American Indian Chamber of Commerce of Oklahoma - Eastern Chapter hosts a monthly luncheon at Bacone College, Muskogee, Okla. 11:30 a.m. at Benjamin Wacoche Hall. Please RSVP one week ahead of time. Phone: (918) 230-3759

EVERY 2ND SATURDAY Modoc Tribal Citizens Meeting at Wyandotte Community Center 1pm-3pm. Info call 918-961-0439 or 832-350-4530.

Indian Taco Sales - from 11-2:30pm at OK Choctaw Tribal Alliance, 5320 S. Youngs Blvd, Oklahoma City www. okchoctaws.org

MON/WED AND THURS The Marble City Nutrition Center serves hot meals at the Marble City Community Center at 11:30 a.m. Meals are free to anyone over 50, but a small donation is suggested to help with the expense of the program. Marble City Nutrition Center, 711 N. Main, Marble City, Okla. Phone: (918) 775-2158

YOUTH COUNCIL The Native Nations Youth Council (NNYC) bimonthly meetings from 6:30pm -8:30pm @ the Youth Services of Tulsa Activity Center (311 S. Madison - on 3rd just west cherokeeartistsassociation.org of Peoria). Call to confirm location. Info Call: Chad Gilley (918) 382-2204 or nnyc@ihcrc.org

Indian Taco Sale 11:00 AM - 2:00 PM at Norman First American UMC, 1950 East Beaumont Drive, Norman, Okla. Call Ahead for Speedy Service. Free Delivery on Orders of 10 or More (405) 321-5640

JUNE 2

Tinker Intertribal Powwow in Joe B. Barnes Regional Park in Midwest City, Okla. from 1:00 p.m. to 11:00 p.m. Interested vendors or participants should contact Corene Chakenatho at (405)

734-7366.

JUNE 1-2 Miami Nation Tribal Powwow, NEO College Arena, Miami. The Miami Nation Tribal Powwow. one of nine annual Native American celebrations in the Miami and Ottawa County area, is a festival of American Indian dance. Call 918-542-1445.

JUNE 4 Osage Election Day Dance at Osage Campus Lawn, Grandview Avenue, Pawhuska. Gourd Dance at 2pm and 6pm. 7:00 processional, war mothers songs, social dancing until too dark to see, work in the morning!

JUNE 8 Chilocco Powwow in the Event Center of the First Council Casino, seven miles north of Newkirk, OK. Gourd dance begins at 2:00 p.m. with grand entry at 6:30. Featured will be the Apache Fire Dance. Contact Garland Kent, Sr at 580- 352-2670.

JUNE 8-10 Red Earth Festival, Cox Convention Center, Oklahoma City

JUNE 9 Inter-Tribal Children's Powwow & Funfest: June 9, 11400 S. 613 Road, Miami. Grand entry at 7pm. A stomp dance will follow the day's festivities, beginning at contact us 918-642-3162, 11:30pm. Call 918-542-2441.

JUNE 10-16 Jim Thorpe Native American Games at Remington Park, Oklahoma City. Proceeds benefit the Jim Thorpe Bright Path Youth Programs and Awakening The Spirit Diabetes Prevention and Control program. Contact Annetta Abbott: 405-208www.jimthorpegames.com

JUNE 14 Iowa Tribe of Oklahoma 4th Annual Golf Tournament kicking off Iowa Tribal Powwow - 8am at Cimarron Trails in Perkins, Okla. Registration begins at 7am. Info call Linda Andre 405-547-5352 Ext 23

JUNE 15-17 Iowa Tribe of Oklahoma 27th Annual Pow Wow, Bah-Kho-Je PowWow Grounds, Hwy #177, 4 miles south of Perkins, Okla Free admission, camping, contests in all divisions, arts & crafts, rations. Contact Robert Murray 580-304-6731 or Bernadette Huber 405-240-2600.

JUNE 16 The 17th Annual Oklahoma Indian All-State Basketball Games at the sports center on the Oklahoma Wesleyan University campus in Bartlesville. Games will start 756-2324

at 6:00 P.M. For more info:

paradox@valornet.com

JUNE 21-24 Muscogee Nation Festival at Claude Cox Omniplex in Okmulgee. For more information on the Festival, contact MCN Tourism & Recreation at (918) 732-7992 by e-mail at tourism@ muscogeenation-nsn. gov or online at www. muscogeenation-nsn.gov.

JUNE 22-23 Peoria Powwow, 60610 E. 90 Road, Miami. Features a wide range of contest dancing, including gourd dancing and straight dancing, as well as grass, traditional and fancy dancing. Call 918-540-2535.

JUNE 22-24 Tonkawa Tribal Powwow at Fort Oakland, Tonkawa. Come out and experience the Tonkawa Tribal Powwow, an annual tribal celebration featuring Native American dancing, contests, crafts, artwork and food. Call 580-628-2561.

JUNE 23 Creek Council House Museum's Indian Art Festival 106 W. 6th, Okmulgee, OK; 10:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. For Free Booth Space or Register into $1000 Art Competition Contact: csago71@sbcglobal.net; 918JUNE 28 – JULY 1 Pawnee Indian veterans Powwow held at the Memorial Stadium. For more info call Toni Hill (918) 762-3621 Ext. 25

JUNE 30 47th Annual Coker Reunion, Masonic Building, 1729 HWY 9 West, Seminole, Okla. All descendants of London Coker and wife Mary Washburn are invited. Potluck meal at Noon. For more info call 405-382-3044.

JULY 2-4 Kiowa Gourd Clan Celebration, Carnegie City Park, Carnegie. This event will feature the tribe's Sun Dance, held in the middle of summer during the longest and hottest days of the year. Call 580-654-2300.

JULY 4-7 Quapaw Tribal Powwow at Quapaw Tribal Grounds, 5681 S. 630 Road, Quapaw. An annual celebration over the 4th of July weekend that includes dancing, contests, vendors and plenty of family fun. Call 918-542-1853.

JULY 6 Indian Taco Sale 11:00 AM - 2:00 PM at Norman First American UMC, 1950 East Beaumont Drive, Norman, Okla. Call Ahead for Speedy Service. Free Delivery on Orders of 10 or More (405) 321-5640

Nixon's role in Self Determination focus of talk

S.E. RUCKMAN Native American Times Special Contributor

TULSA, Okla. - Most of former U.S. President Richard Nixon's historical legacy hung on his political chicanery rather than his Indian policy. To help offset the perception, the Richard Nixon Foundation cohosted a seminar May 23 at the Gilcrease Museum to discuss the impact of a 1970s federal tribal policy that its proponents say altered the course of Indian history.

The day-long seminar, "Restoring the Rights for Native Americans," highlighted the contributions of Nixon's 1970 Self Determination policy. The legislation, developed during the Nixon administration in 1969 -71, had the job of building new governmentto-government relations with the tribes - a tough task, one panelist said.

Phillip Deloria, director of the American Indian Graduate Center, told the nearly 60 attendees that Nixon's Self-Determination Act was the "gold standard," of federal Indian policy.

"Not because it's perfect," he said. "Surpassing it could mean making promises that it (Department of Interior) can't fulfill. No other president is going to top it because they can't."

Deloria noted that one of the strengths of Nixon's policy started in putting Indian administrators in charge of Indian affairs. Indians trying to get help from Congress to change the limping federal policy of the early 20th Century was a nogo, he recalled.

"Congress, which is supposed to set policy, has no clue," he said. " You could tell them about federal Indian policy and they'd have no clue."

The new Nixon version of Indian policy meant to abandon decades of broken treaties, forced assimilation and other federal misinterpretations of Indian rights. The often betrayed tribes had no choice but to hope that a new day had dawned for them, proponents said.

Panelists revisited the era of Termination, Self-Determination's federal policy predecessor. That policy stripped tribes of their federal recognition and reduced the U.S. Government's trustee status with those it was designed to protect. Moderator Reid Chambers, former BIA associate solicitor, said the restoring of the Taos Pueblos' traditional Blue Lake was the symbolic doorway to Nixon's new Indian policy.

It was the first time in tribal-federal relations that an aboriginal claim to land had been upheld in court and one that restored the Taos Pueblos' Blue Lake property to them in 1970 after it had been taken by the government in 1906 to establish a park.

"This was a time when most of the Bureau (of Indian Affairs) were non-Indian," Reid said.

Before Nixon, controlling Indian lands with no tribal input was a standard practice by the government. They sidestepped tribes because lawmakers and Indian affairs officials questioned the ability of tribes to handle their own affairs, Reid said.

In light of the favorable comments across both sessions for Self-Determination, no currently elected tribal officials were in attendance although Nixon Foundation officials said tribal leaders Oklahoma extended were invitations.

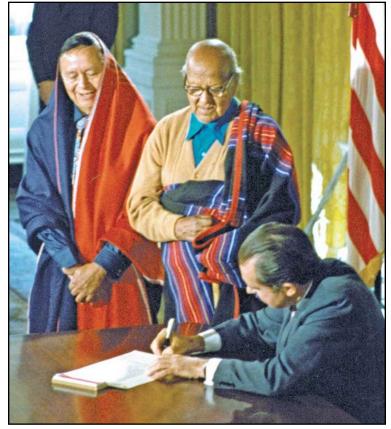

Meanwhile, Nixon Foundation officials said the 37th president favored renewing the way the federal government interacted with the tribes. Coupled with a rising tide tribal among people that the long paternalistic relationship with the U.S. Government represented outdated thinking, a vehicle for new legislation was born. He called his new Indian policy, "a break with the past."

Because tribes had long dealt with the threat of having their federal monies cut off if they alienated federal officials, they alternated with exaggerated dependence on the same entity, Nixon Foundation officials said.

Other tenets of Nixon's policy included improving Indian education, restoring tribal lands, helping urban Indians and economic development legislation.

Since that time, Self-Determination has been evolving in other ways, other panelistssaid. The outgrowths of Nixon's enduring policy other spawned interfacing of Indian tribes with the federal government, including the Indian Gaming and Regulatory Act of 1988 and more recently, Obama's Tribal Law and Order Act.

RICHARD NIXON FOUNDATION | COURTESY

President Richard Nixon signs the Self Determination policy in 1970.

Walter Echo-Hawk, who introduced panelists for the day, emphasized a willingness on behalf of Nixon to come to the bargaining table with more than promises to tribes, he said.

"This (act) demonstrates that Nixon got it right," he

The sessions were cosponsored by the Californiabased Richard Nixon Foundation and Gilcrease Museum and the National Archives.

Other panelists were: Robert Anderson, Director of the Native American Law Center at the University Washington; Kent Frizzell, former solicitor and Undersecretary of the U.S. Department of Interior (DOI); LaDonna Harris, Americans for Indian Opportunity founder; Wallace Johnson, former assistant attorney general for Land and Natural Resources of the Department of Justice (DOJ); Bobbie Kilberg, former Nixon staff assistant; Bradley Patterson, executive assistant to special counsel Leonard Garment; Robert Pickering, director of academic affairs at the University of Tulsa, Gilcrease Museum; Geoffrey Shepard, former Nixon staff assistant and Hilary Tompkins, current DOI Solicitor.

Powwow of Champions moves to Mabee Center

Experience the beauty and richness of Native American culture when the Intertribal Indian Club of Tulsa (IICOT) hosts the 35th Annual Pow Wow of Champions August 17-19, 2012. The dance is located at the Oral Roberts University, Mabee Center, 7777 South Lewis, Tulsa,

The Mabee Center will come alive in a colorful expression of dance, drum music and song as members of tribal nations throughout the country gather together to honor, strengthen and share traditions and with each other and the general public. The dance, spectator area, will be held in air conditioned comfort. Over 300 dancers will participate throughout the weekend in ceremonies and dances, including Grand Entries, intertribal dances and dance competitions.

The Pow wow of champions will also feature an Arts and Crafts Mart with an excellent selection of traditional and contemporary jewelry, artwork, beadwork, paintings, quality handcrafted items, rarely seen in one location.

Traditional foods will be a prominent part of this annual pow wow. Fry bread, corn soup, Indian tacos will be available as well as many other tempting and tasty items.

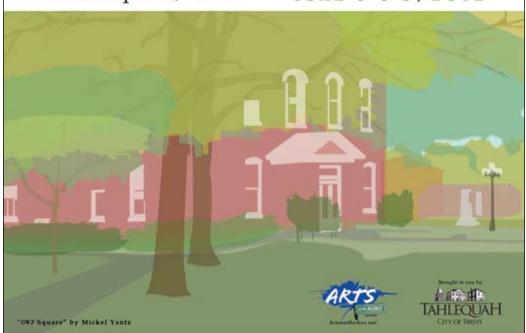

The doors will open at 5:00 pm on Friday, August 13th with dancing beginning at 6:00 pm. Saturday, August 14 and Sunday, August 15, the doors will open at 10:00 a.m. with dancing beginning at noon.

The Pow wow of Champions is a family event and is an alcohol and drug free event.

For further information, please contact (918) 378-4494 or 918-838-8276

ARTS ON THE AVENUE

JUNE 0 & 9. 2012 • Tahlequah, OK •

Art Stroll & Artist Demonstrations • Oklahoma Wine Tasting
• Music & Entertainment • Food

For a complete list of activities, visit ArtsontheAve.net or on facebook at facebook.com/ArtsontheAve

BEADING & CRAFT SUPPLIES CLOTHING & ACCESSORIES JEWELRY & NOVELTIES ORIGINAL ARTWORK COLLECTIBLES & BOOKS

2850 S. Wood Drive Okmulgee, Okla.

918-752-0040 http://oicgiftshop.com Master of Ceremonies  $\Diamond$  Frank Carson 2011 Tribal Princess

Alexis Tanyan

2012 Tribal Princess \( \rightarrow \text{Danelle Springer} \)

Head Gourd Dance Singer \( \rangle \) Leonard Cozad Jr. Head War Dance Singer ◊ John Arkeketa

Head Man Dancer \quad George Alexander

Head Lady Dancer \( \rightarrow \text{Michelle Garcia-Holiday} \) Head Gourd Dancer  $\Diamond$  John Shotten

Co-Host \quad Red Rock Creek

Northern Drum \( \rightarrow \text{Blackbird} \)

Arena Directors \( \rangle \) Pat Moore & Bear Murray

Water Boys \( \rightarrow Josh & Jordan Murray \)

Pow Wow Committee ◊ Robert Murray Jr. 580-304-6731 John "Kandie" Des Jarlait

Lori Murray

Bernadette Huber 405-240-2600

nformation: Robert Murray Jr. 580-304-6731

FRIDAY

5:00 PM LOWER FLAG

6:30 PM GOURD DANCE

7:00 PM REGISTRATION OPENS 7:30 PM GRAND ENTRY

10:30 PM SPECIAL "49" CONTEST

SATURDAY 2:00 PM

GOURD DANCE 5:00 PM LOWER FLAG

5:30 PM EVENING MEAL BREAK

GOURD DANCE 6:30 PM 7:00 PM REGISTRATION OPENS

7:30 PM GRAND ENTRY 11:00 PM

SPECIAL GEORGE GIBSON MEMORIAL STOMP DANCE CONTEST

SUNDAY GOURD DANCE 2:00 PM

LOWER FLAG 5:00 PM

GRAND ENTRY

American Indian Arts & Crafts/ Food Vendors

Coordinated by Iowa Tribe Enterprises Linda Big Soldier, CEO Must complete application Reservations & information: 405-547-4239 or lbigsoldier@iowanation.org

27th Annual Iowa Tribe of Oklahoma POWWOW

June 15-16-17, 2012

Bah-Kho-Je Pow Wow Grounds

Hwy #177, 4 miles south of Perkins, Oklahoma

Contests

Committee reserves right to combine or separate divisions

Rules: Must register and be in parade in on night of contest Must be in full regalia to receive prize

Tiny Tots (0-6) - Combined boys & girls, combined divisions

Jr. Girls (7-12) - Combined divisions

Jr. Boys (7-12) - Combined divisions

Teen Girls (13-17) - Combined cloth/buckskin; fancy shawl/jingle Teen Boys (13-17) - Combined grass & traditional; straight; fancy Women (18-54) - Cloth; buckskin; combined fancy shawl/jingle Men (18-54) - Straight; fancy; combined traditional/grass

Golden Age Men (55+) - Combined divisions Gold Age Women (55+) - Combined divisions

Inside this issue:

- Senate candidate told schools about heritage
- Tribal group appeals Fighting Sioux ruling
- MCN Festival features music, end of bike ride

TODAY'S INDEPENDENT INDIAN NEWS

- A FREE PUBLICATION -

WWW.NATIVETIMES.COM

NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES

VOLUME 18 + ISSUE 23

PUBLISHED WEEKLY

JUNE 8, 2012

Court upholds conviction in 1975 AIM Aquash slaying

CHET BROKAW
Associated Press

PIERRE, S.D. (AP) – The South Dakota Supreme Court upheld a Canadian man's murder conviction and life sentence in the 1975 slaying of a fellow American Indian Movement activist, ruling that the state had jurisdiction to prosecute him

John Graham was convicted in December

2010 of taking part in the killing of Annie Mae Aquash. Prosecutors said Graham and two other AIMactivists, Arlo Looking Cloud and Theda Clarke, killed Aquash because they suspected she was a government informant.

Graham, a member of the Southern Tutchone tribe in Canada's Yukon Territory, argued that the government should not have been allowed to move his case from federal to state court after his extradition to the U.S.

However, the state's highest court ruled unanimously that the state had jurisdiction to prosecute Graham and that prosecutors presented sufficient evidence to convict him. Graham's sentence of life in prison without parole also is not

See AQUASH Continued on Page 4

ASSOCIATED PRESS | FILE

John Graham was convicted in December 2010 of taking part in the killing of Annie Mae Aquash.

Tribes spar over proposal to kill eagles

BEN NEARY
Associated Press

CHEYENNE, Wyo. (AP) – The Northern Arapaho Tribe maintains neither the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service nor the Eastern Shoshone Tribe has the right to prevent its members from killing bald eagles for religious purposes on the central Wyoming reservation the

The Northern Arapaho Tribe filed court papers May 31 saying a permit the Fish and Wildlife Service granted it this spring to kill two bald eagles for use in the tribe's Sun Dance was meaningless because it didn't specify a place where the birds could be legally killed. The tribe has asked U.S. District Judge Alan B. Johnson of Cheyenne to rule that it has a religious own reservation.

But the Eastern Shoshone oppose the killing of eagles on the tribes' shared land.

The dispute between the tribes underscores the difficulty that can arise with two separate tribal governments coexisting on the sprawling Wind River Indian Reservation.

Andrew Baldwin, lawyer for the Northern Arapaho

e Nortnern Arapano

Trihe

The Northern Arapaho Tribe was granted the nation's first permit to kill bald eagles for religious purposes.

Olympic victory, the Jim Thorpe Native American Games honor the man who went on to lead a career in both professional football and baseball.

Jim Thorpe Native American Games
American Games

Jim Thorpe, seen here running track at Carlisle Indian Industrial School, was the first Native American athlete to receive accolades for his many achievements. One hundred years after his

open June 10

KAREN SHADE
Native American Times

OKLAHOMA CITY – Athletes from across the country will gather in Oklahoma City for the first Jim Thorpe Native American Games, June 10-17. Among them are two Tulsa football players, graduates of McLain High School's Class of

When asked about Jim Thorpe, they know one thing about the legendary Oklahoma athlete – he was a "first."

"I heard about him from my brother. He (Thorpe) was the first Native American football player," said 18-year-old Deon Jones, Choctaw. Jones played middle linebacker and running back as a McLain Titan. In the fall, he heads to Bacone College in Muskogee to play there.

Jim Thorpe "means a lot to me," he said. Jones will play in the Jim Thorpe All-Stars Football Game along with his friend Chad Davis, 19, and also a recent McLain grad.

Davis, Mississippi Choctaw, plays running back and linebacker. Although he doesn't know what to expect of this grand new event, he is looking forward to the experience of it.

"I'm really excited to be playing," Davis said.

The pair will join the ranks of other Native American athletes from across the country playing on one of two teams – East and West. The game is a showcase for graduating high school seniors who are citizens of a federally recognized tribe.

recognized tribe.

Held for Oklahoma high school seniors and scheduled for June 15 at Putnam High School, the All-Stars Football Game is a cornerstone of the new Olympic-styled event that includes competitions in at least 10 other fields: baseball, cross country, track & field, softball, golf, wrestling, volleyball, martial arts and stickball.

More than 1,500 athletes from 70-plus tribes are anticipated to participate in the event that commemorates Thorpe and his legacy during this very special year.

Thorpe was the first Native American athlete to receive accolades for his many achievements. A member of the Sac

See GAMES Continued on Page 8

JOHN HARRINGTON | SEMINOLE TRIBE OF FLORIDA

A four-person Color Guard representing the Seminole Tribe of Florida stands before the Amphitheater adjacent to the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier at Arlington National Cemetery. From left to right, the Color Guard members are Tomé Roubideaux of the Rosebud Lakota Sioux Tribe, Stephen Bowers of the Seminole Tribe of Florida, Theodore Scott Nelson of the Seminole Tribe of Florida, and Robert Primeaux of the Standing Rock Lakota Sioux Tribe. All are Vietnam-era military veterans. The photo was taken early on Monday, May 28, before the National Memorial Day Observance at Arlington National Cemetery.

Seminole guard posts colors at Arlington

ARLINGTON, VA – About two dozen service organizations were invited to participate in the National Memorial Day Observance May 28 at Arlington National Cemetery and the Seminole Nation Colorguard was one of them.

According to Stephen Bowers, a founding member of the Seminole Color Guard and a Vietnam War combat veteran, Seminole Tribe participation marked only the fifth time since Arlington National Cemetery was established in 1864 that an American Indian Color Guard posted the colors there. The invitation came from the U.S. Army, which manages Arlington National Cemetery.

"It is a great honor for our Color Guard to post the colors at Arlington National Cemetery," said Bowers. "We are proud to represent our Native American brothers and sisters, especially those who have served with distinction in so many U.S. wars."

Known as the Seminole Tribe Veteran Memorial Initiative Color Guard, the 4-person team is spearheading an effort to add a sculpture of a Native American

See COLORS Continued on Page 4

Tribe asks regulatory agency to reconsider casino

JUSTIN JUOZAPAVICIUS Associated Press

TULSA, Okla. (AP) - A small Oklahoma tribe is asking a regulatory agency to reverse a ruling banning it from building a casino in a Tulsa suburb, even as the tribe also asks a federal judge to permit a sports bar and restaurant on the property instead.

The different tactics of the 350-member Kialegee Tribal Town has opponents of the to skin a cat," Farris said. project accusing the tribe of using a backdoor attempt to bring in a casino on the 20-acre parcel in Broken Arrow.

"It's a bit frustrating and a bit comical at the same time," said Jared Cawley, an attorney and Neighborhood Gaming in Broken Arrow. "We see through the ruse the tribe is trying to play and I think the federal court sees through the ruse."

Joe Farris, an attorney for the tribe, acknowledged the ultimate goal is to operate a casino on the disputed site, but for the time being, the tribe is committed to building some kind of commercial development there.

"There's more than one way

The National Indian Gaming Commission ruled May 25 the Red Clay Casino couldn't be built on the land because the owners were citizens of the tribe's new request. Muscogee Creek Nation. A co-founder of Citizens Against not return a message by press U.S. District Judge Gregory K.

The National Indian Gaming Commission ruled May 25 the Red Clay Casino couldn't be built on the land because the owners were citizens of the Muscogee Creek Nation.

The ruling by the commission spokesman for the agency did mirrored a May 18 decision by time seeking comment on the Frizzell, who found the tribe didn't have jurisdiction to build a casino. Frizzell also issued an injunction halting construction at the site.

claims the Kialegee now have pre-fabricated legal jurisdiction because the to temporarily house slot two owners of the property machines. The casino was were recently enrolled as scheduled to open around members of the tribe. Hobia has Labor Day in the conservative said building a casino would give his impoverished tribe a chance to help its citizens with the revenue from gambling.

The tribe filed a request in Tulsa federal court May 30 asking Frizzell to modify his injunction to allow developers to build a sports bar and music venue. Attorneys for the tribe argued that "additional space can be altered to be used as a venue for music and entertainment, including country western music."

the casino project late last year day and it will change."

The tribe's king, Tiger Hobia, and had trucked in several buildings community of nearly 100,000.

> The project quickly drew opposition thousands of residents, church leaders and local lawmakers. In February, Attorney General Scott Pruitt sued the Kialegee, accusing the southeastern Oklahoma tribe of moving ahead with construction without approval from the

"Nothing's surprising to me in this," Cawley said. "It's like Backers broke ground on the Oklahoma weather: Wait a

WE HAVE YOU COVERED

Arvest Bank provides the financial solutions you need.

Personal & Business Checking Accounts*

All Arvest checking accounts come with the FREE services you need to do your day-to-day banking - Arvest Online Banking, Mobile Banking**, Arvest CheckCard, and 24-Hour Account Information Line.

Mortgage Loans:

Rural Development

FHA, VA or Bond

Section 184 Indian Home Loan

- Lower Monthly Payments
- No Monthly Mortgage Insurance
- Lower Down Payment
- Low Fixed Rate

Mention this ad for a $75 Closing Cost Discount.***

*$100.00 minimum required to open a checking account. **Your wireless carrier may assess a fee for data services.
Please consult your wireless plan or provider for details.
***Some restrictions may apply. See associate for details. (918) 631-1000

arvest.com

Member FDIC TENOR

County protests fees in voting rights case

A judge ruled the county violated the federal Voting Rights Act by diluting the Indian vote.

BEN NEARY Associated Press

CHEYENNE, Wyo. (AP) -Fremont County is balking at paying legal fees for a group of American Indians whose court challenge forced the county to abandon its system of at-large voting for commissioners.

Five members of the Northern Arapaho and Eastern Shoshone tribes won a ruling from U.S. District Judge Alan B. Johnson of Cheyenne in 2010 that at-large voting in the county violated the federal Voting Rights Act by diluting the Indian vote. A federal appeals court early this year rejected Fremont County's appeal.

On appeal, the county didn't contest Johnson's finding that at-large voting violated the law. Instead, it challenged the judge's rejection of its proposals to remediate the violation by creating a single, Indian majority district centered on the Wind River Indian Reservation while continuing with at-large voting in the rest of the county.

In rejecting the county's plans, Johnson wrote that they "appear to be devised solely for the purpose of segregating citizens into separate voting districts on the basis of race without sufficient justification, contrary to the defendants' assertions."

Lawyers for the tribal members this month asked Johnson to award more than $85,000 for their work on the appeal. The plaintiffs' 2010 request for more than $880,000 for legal work through the trial is still pending with the judge.

Fremont County filed papers last week with Johnson arguing the plaintiffs' bills on the appeal are too high and should be reduced.

Laughlin McDonald, an Atlanta lawyer and head of the ACLU's Voting Rights Project, was lead attorney for the plaintiffs. He's billing for more than 134 hours of work on the appeal at a rate of $425 an hour, for a total of more than $57,000. The plaintiffs' three Lander lawyers are billing $250 an hour.

Jodi Darrough, deputy Fremont County attorney, filed a response with Johnson last week saying Fremont County doesn't dispute that the plaintiffs won the case and are entitled to their legal costs and fees. However, she says they should be paid at a rate customarily charged in Wyoming courts, which she said would limit McDonald to $300 an hour while capping the local lawyers at $200.

Attempts to Darrough for comment were unsuccessful.

McDonald said he believes the law is clear that he's entitled to be paid at prevailing rates for lawyers in Atlanta, which are higher than in Wyoming. He said the plaintiffs were justified in hiring out-of-state

"I don't think there's any evidence that any in-state lawyer has ever filed a Section Two vote-dilution challenge on behalf of American Indians," McDonald said. He was referring to the section of the Voting Rights Act that prohibits voting practices or procedures that discriminate on the basis of race or other factors.

Fremont County was represented at trial and on appeal by the Mountain States Legal Foundation, a Colorado law firm that typically represents conservative causes. While the foundation didn't charge the county for its legal work, the county was responsible for witness fees, other legal work and expenses that topped $200,000 for the trial phase.

The Wyoming Government Liability Pool insured Fremont County through the trial and would apparently also be responsible for paying the plaintiffs' $880,000 in trial legal fees. The pool collects money from some 400 governmental entities around the state to handle their collective legal expenses.

Pool Executive Director Mark Pring said this week that the pool refused to cover Fremont County when the county decided to appeal Johnson's decision.

Julie Freese, Fremont County clerk, said this week the county has no intention of appealing to the U.S. Supreme Court. "We're moving on," she said. "We've redone our districts, and we've got our elections gearing up."

Freese said she didn't know how much the county has paid for its own legal fees on the

McDonald said essentially that Fremont County faced a steep learning curve in the

"We file a lot of these Section Two cases," he said. "The problem is that this was the first one filed on behalf of tribal members in Wyoming. But in other states where we filed a lot of them, a lot of these jurisdictions realize that they're probably going to lose."

eat better. move more. be tobacco free.

Interested in making Oklahoma a healthier place to live, work, learn and play? Consider joining a coalition in your area.

ATOKA AND COAL COUNTIES

Atoka/Coal Partnership for Change 580.380.0463

BECKHAM AND ROGER MILLS COUNTIES

Oklahoma Unified Resources (OUR) Turning Point Coalition 580.225.6247

BRYAN COUNTY

Bryan County Turning Point 580.924.4285 ext 254

CARTER COUNTY

Carter County Turning Point 580.223.7075 ext 314

CLEVELAND COUNTY Cleveland County

Turning Point 405.307.6602 COMANCHE COUNTY

Fit Kids of Southwest

Oklahoma 580.585.6686

JACKSON COUNTY Jackson County Community

Health Action Team 580.482.7308

KIOWA AND CADDO COUNTIES

Kiowa Coalition and Caddo County Interagency Coalition 580.726.3383

LOGAN COUNTY

Logan County Partnership 918.282.3485

LOVE AND JOHNSTON COUNTIES

Fit Communities - Love and Johnston Consortium 580.371.2470

McCURTAIN, CHOCTAW AND PUSHMATAHA COUNTIES

Tri-County Consortium 580.298.6624

MUSKOGEE COUNTY

Muskogee County Turning Point 405.683.0321

OKLAHOMA COUNTY Wellness Now Coalition 405.425.4315

OKMULGEE COUNTY Okmulgee County

Wellness Coalition 918.633.3202 TULSA COUNTY

Family Health Coalition

918.595.4039

No coalitions in your area? Find your local Turning Point Partnership and learn more at

ShapeYourFutureOK.com.

We proudly offer an array of services, from general dentistry to sedation, dental implants, and cosmetic dentistry - all designed expressly to meet our patient's changing needs. With four general dentists and four hygienists, we can maintain your oral health for a lifetime all at one location.

We Accept Contract Health & Sooner Care

We serve patients in the Drumright, Cushing, Stillwater, Stroud, Ponca City, and surrounding areas with personalized service and exemplary care. Call for your appointment today.

918-352-3312 or Toll Free 877-RH Melton drumrightdentalcenter.com

Troubled tribal police seek bigger Foxwoods role

MICHAEL MELIA Associated Press

LEDYARD, Conn. (AP) - A Connecticut tribe is moving to give its own police department a larger role inside its Foxwoods Resort Casino, but several former department employees say it can barely manage to patrol the tiny reservation, let alone the Western Hemisphere's largest casino.

Mashantucket Pequot Tribal Nation officers drive cruisers and carry guns, but the former employees say they resemble private security guards more than agents of the law. The department takes orders directly from tribal council members, blocks officers from pursuing investigations and has turned a blind eye to the sale of illegal drugs, ex-officers said in interviews with The Associated Press.

"The chief doesn't want tribal members to be investigated, to be prosecuted in any way, because then it comes back on him," said Steve Saucier, who worked part-time for the department until leaving in November. "If we do arrest somebody and it goes to tribal court, they throw it out. It does absolutely nothing."

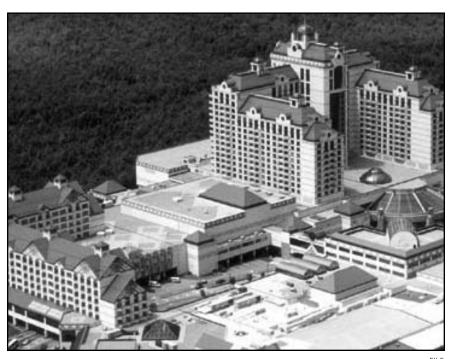

The tribe has been pressing for its own police to replace state troopers in the casino – a change that could bring millions of dollars in savings annually for the Pequots, who have to reimburse the state for security coverage and are struggling with more than $2 billion in debt. The office of Connecticut's governor, which wants to put more troopers on the roads, has already reduced the security bill conditionally as it waits for tribal officers to obtain certifications they would need to be able to arrest non-tribal members.

The tribe's chief of police, Daniel Collins, resigned following inquiries to the tribe by the AP. His departure was announced internally on Thursday, said two tribal government employees who spoke on condition of anonymity because they were not authorized to discuss internal affairs. A spokesman for the tribe did not immediately respond to a message seeking comment about the resignation.

In response to the AP's findings, Mike Lawlor, the governor's liaison on criminal justice policy, said the agreement depends on tribal police agreeing to abide by the state's standards. He said state attorneys are working out how to determine whether and when the tribe is ready.

say the department is stretched so thin that officers can barely cover shifts and emergency calls about fights and domestic disputes at times have to wait. Roughly 900 tribal members live in and around the Pequots' two-

The Mashantucket Pequot Tribal Nation's Foxwoods Casino is the largest in the Western Hemisphere.

"It's definitely in their interest to get them into a position where they would have full-fledged powers," Lawlor said. "If they don't, they won't get them."

The tribal council defended its police force.

"The Mashantucket Pequot Tribal Nation Police force is fully trained and very competent to continue the policing of our gaming enterprise," the council said in a written statement.

One of the most pressing obstacles would be manpower.

The Pequots told the Connecticut governor's office as part of their proposal in July 2011 that they have 15 police officers, according to documents obtained by the AP through a Freedom of Information Act request.

But the tribal police have only nine officers, including the chief and two officers who recently joined from a training academy, according to two tribal government employees who spoke on condition of anonymity to discuss internal affairs. Former officers square-mile reservation. Some tribal officers have American Indian heritage but they are not required to be Pequot members.

"There were calls we couldn't get to right away, calls that had to wait because we didn't have any officers to send," said Robert Standeford, who left the tribal police in 2010 after a decade of service. "I always called for state backup when we needed it, but that wasn't a practice they wanted."

The tribe did not respond to requests to interview Collins, a Marine Corps veteran who required that officers salute him.

Several former officers said the chief took instructions directly from tribal members. They say he did not direct officers not to arrest certain individuals, but would classify sensitive cases as investigations and allow them to languish indefinitely.

In one case, Standeford said, the police chief told officers not to pursue what could have been a major drug bust. The tribe was holding an annual outdoor celebration about five years ago in a part of the reservation known as Stump Mountain when officers stopped a man with a large baggie full of marijuana. The man told officers he got the drugs from a white van that was loaded with marijuana. But Standeford said the chief told officers to release the man, had them dump the drugs on the ground and spoke with the van driver, who then drove off the reservation.

"You don't just dump drugs when you tell everyone in the community we're working to make it better," he Foxwoods, which receives tens of thousands of visitors daily, currently has state troopers stationed around the clock inside the casino, where they made 181 arrests in 2010, mostly for assault or larceny. The Pequots have been required to pay $4 million annually for the services of the state Department of Public Safety including about state 20 troopers, who are backed by tribal police and a large private security force.

In letters to state government officials last summer, tribal Chairman Rodney Butler said the Pequots would no longer pay for troopers to be stationed in the casino, and said the tribe would pursue a lawsuit if an agreement was not reached with the governor's office.

Ultimately, the state agreed to reduce assessments for the Pequots as well as the Mohegan Tribe, which owns the nearby Mohegan Sun casino. Lawlor said the Mohegan police have the certifications needed to assume a larger role as soon as the paperwork is processed, but he said it would take longer for the Pequots' police.

Tom Olsen, a police officer for the neighboring town of Ledyard who worked for Pequot police in the 1990s, said tribal officers have struggled with many of the same issues for years.

"The administration of that police department has to answer in a different way that a town's department would. They are beholden to what the council might say because they hold the purse strings," he said. "The bottom line is there are different rules there."

VINITA 918-256-5585

LANGLEY 918-782-0011

MONKEY ISLAND 918-257-8869

www.okstatebank.com Equal Housing Lender

Native American Owned

tahlequahrecycling.com 918-316-5856 "Changing the culture of waste." TA

TIMES recycles with Tahlequah Recycling Incorporated... shouldn't you?

NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES

Publisher & Editor LISA SNELL editor@nativetimes.com

Contributing Writers DANA ATTOCKNIE WESLEY MAHAN KAREN SHADE

Advertising Sales KATHLEEN ROBERTSON LISA SNELL

advertising@nativetimes.com

SHELBY HICKS STEVE LACY WESLEY MAHAN MICHAEL MARRIS KATHLEEN ROBERTSON BRENDA SLAUGHTER

The Native American Times, formerly the Oklahoma Indian Times, is published weekly (except the last week of the year) by Lisa Hicks Snell. Mailing address is PO Box 411 Tahlequah, OK 74465. All the contents within the Native American Times are copyrighted material. Any reproduction, redistribution without the written consent of the NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES is strictly prohibited.

> Each week's issue is available for free download online at: www.nativetimes.com

Subscription rates: $65.00 for fifty-two issues, $32.50 for twenty-six issues, or $16.25 for thirteen issues. A single copy is $1.25 (Rates are for postage and handling) Send check or money order to:

> NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES Attn: Subscriptions P.O. Box 411 Tahlequah, OK 74465-0411

Phone: (918) 708-5838 Fax: (888) 689-4873

Postmaster: Send Change of Address Form 579 to: NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES P.O. Box 411, Tahlequah, OK 74465

WWW.NATIVETIMES.COM News from the crossroads of Indian Country

EAGLES

Tribe, said Friday other reservations in the country are home to more than one tribe, but those tribes share a unified government. He said the Wind River Indian Reservation is the only one he is aware of where two tribes with separate governments share a single reservation.

The Northern Arapaho sued the Fish and Wildlife Service last year over its delay in granting eagle permits. The federal government in recent years prosecuted a young tribal member who killed a bald eagle for use in the tribe's annual Sun Dance without a permit. Despite the tribe's legal support, the man wound up pleading guilty after his case was transferred to tribal off the reservation. However, permission to take eagles at of eagles by the Northern court, and he was ordered to pay a fine.

The Fish and Wildlife Service in March granted the Northern Arapaho Tribe the nation's first permit to kill bald eagles for religious purposes, but specified that it was only good outside the Wind River Indian Reservation. The agency said it had conferred with the Eastern Shoshone and learned that the Eastern Shoshone opposed killing eagles on the reservation.

In its legal filings, the Northern Arapaho point out that Wyoming law prohibits anyone from killing eagles outside the reservation.

A Fish and Wildlife Service spokesman said in March that the federal agency didn't believe state permission would be required to kill the birds a Wyoming Game and Fish spokesman Department confirmed this week that the state takes the position that a federal permit wouldn't allow the Northern Arapaho to take the birds off the reservation. "Defendants' permit merely invites tribal members to be arrested and prosecuted by the State of Wyoming instead of by the federal government," Baldwin and other lawyers for the Northern Arapaho Tribe wrote to Johnson this week.

Johnson last month granted a request from the Eastern Shoshone to participate in the lawsuit as a "friend of the court." In his order allowing them into the case, Johnson noted state law prohibits killing eagles outside the reservation and said the federal permit offers no "real the Eastern Arapaho Tribe stated it has an indivisible, one-half interest in all wildlife on the reservation. It said killing eagles goes against its cultural beliefs and also would violate the joint Shoshone and Arapaho Law and Order Code.

However, the Northern Arapaho assert in their filing this week that the Eastern Shoshone Tribe has its own tradition of killing eagles.

"The administrative record does not support the conclusion that taking Arapaho Tribe is in fact In its request to intervene, offensive to Eastern Shoshone Tribe or to their religious ceremonies," Baldwin and the other lawyers wrote. They said members of both tribes killed eagles historically for religious purposes before the federal government established a repository that dispenses eagle carcasses and feathers to American Indians.

> Kimberly Varilek, attorney general for the Eastern Shoshone, said Friday she had no immediate response to the Northern Arapaho claims. She said the tribe will file a written response in court.

Stickball · Drawing

· Fancy dancing · Beadwork Big Brothers Big Sisters Traditional language Shooting hoops

Think of the possibilities! Step up and mentor a Native American child. Commit to changing a child's future. Commit to creating an impact in your tribal community.

How it Works

Step One: Fill out an application at www.bbbsok.org Step Two: Submit application. Receive phone call from BBBS to set up an interview.

Step Three: Attend an in-person interview. Bring copy of Drivers License, Proof of Insurance, Three References and complete a criminal background check.

Step Four: Once approved — matched with a child with similar interests!

Step Five: Pat on the back...you're making a difference!!!

All matches are supported by professional staff at local BBBS agencies. BBBS Match Support Specialists regularly consult with volunteers, children, and parents.

Want more information?

Contact Kristy Smithson, BBBSOK Manager of Native American Partnerships, by phone (405) 606-6309 or email kristy.smithson@bbbsok.org | www.bbbsok.org

PEARY L. ROBERTSON

ATTORNEY AT LAW (405) 382-7300

> INDIAN LAW PROBATE ADOPTIONS

RESTRICTED LAND ISSUES

SOCIAL SECURITY DISABILITY

J.D, Oklahoma City University; MBA, Cameron University; B.B.A. (Economics), University of Oklahoma

1700 N. MILT PHILLIPS AVENUE, SEMINOLE, OKLAHOMA VISIT US AT WWW.FACEBOOK.COM/PEARYROBERTSON

Warren says she told schools of Native heritage

The Senate candidate previously has said she was unaware that Harvard had listed her as a minority until she learned of it in a report in the Boston Herald last month.

BOB SALSBERG
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) – Democratic U.S. Senate candidate Elizabeth Warren has acknowledged for the first time that she told officials at Harvard University and the University of Pennsylvania that she had Native American heritage.

The Harvard Law School professor's campaign said in a statement that she gave that information to the schools only after she had had been hired for faculty positions. She had previously confirmed that she had allowed herself to be listed as a minority in a national directory of law school faculty.

"At some point after I was hired by them, I also provided that information to the University of Pennsylvania and Harvard," Warren said. "My Native American heritage is part of who I am, I'm proud of it and I have been open about it."

Warren grew up in Oklahoma and has provided no documentation of the ancestral claims. She has said her heritage is part of family lore.

Warren is running for the Massachusetts Senate seat held by Republican Scott Brown.

The statement was released as The Boston Globe reported Thursday that documents obtained from Harvard's library show its law school first reported a Native American female professor in federal statistics in 1992, when Warren was

ELIZABETHWARREN.CO

Elizabeth Warren grew up in Oklahoma and has provided no documentation of the ancestral claims. She has said her heritage is part of family lore.

a visiting professor.

She returned to Penn before returning to Harvard Law School as a tenured professor in 1995, when the school resumed its listing of a Native American faculty member, the Globe reported.

Warren previously has said she was unaware that Harvard had listed her as a minority until she learned of it in a report in the Boston Herald last month.

The Democratic candidate noted in her statement that people involved in recruiting her for teaching jobs have stated that they were unaware of her claims of Native American heritage, including Harvard Law School professor Charles Fried. Fried served as U.S. Solicitor General in the Reagan administration and has said he voted for Brown for Senate in 2010.

"Documents that reporters have examined also show I did not benefit from my heritage when applying to college or law school," she said.

In a separate statement Thursday, Warren demanded an apology from Brown for what she claimed was an attack on the integrity of her parents, the late Don and Pauline Herring.

During a visit Thursday to Springfield, Brown again called on Warren to release her employment records. Asked about her claim that she learned about her Native American ancestry from her mother, The Republican newspaper quoted Brown as responding: "My mom and dad have told me a lot of things, too, but they're not always true."

Warren said her parents should be left out of the campaign.

"Scott Brown's comments about my parents are totally out of line," she said. "I resent him questioning their honesty. My mother and father are not here to defend themselves and should be off limits."

Pine Ridge Boys & Girls Club celebrates 20 years

KRISTI EATON

Associated Press

SIOUX FALLS, S.D. (AP) – SuAnne Big Crow dreamed of a "Happytown," a safe place where young people could take pride in their accomplishments and support each other, away from the poverty, alcoholism and violence endemic on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation.

In 1992, when the 17-year-old honor student and star athlete was killed in a car accident, SuAnne's mother pledged to honor her vision, batting aside obstacles to launch the first Boys & Girls Club in Indian Country.

"Nothing in Pine Ridge ever lasts that long," Leatrice "Chick" Big Crow told The Associated Press. "It opens with government funding. When the government funding goes away, it closes. We have been there without government funding, without tribal funding, and we have made it."

Members and supporters of the SuAnne Big Crow Boys & Girls Club gathered in Pine Ridge June 2 to celebrate its 20th anniversary with a traditional ceremony and a Lakota lunch. Guest speakers included Leroy "JR" LaPlante, Secretary of Tribal Relations for South Dakota, Bureau of Indian Affairs officials and representatives from nonprofits that have helped with funding and support.

Big Crow, executive director of the club, said SuAnne had hoped for a drug- and alcohol-free sanctuary for youth on the reservation, where they could meet with no fear of racism or judgment. Soon after the teen's death, and with the support of community members and a donated tribal warehouse building, the club opened.

"To experience that coming together was something few people get to experience in Indian Country. It was just working together for one common goal. It was just people who never got along," Big Crow said. "They were working side by side."

In 1999, President Bill Clinton visited Pine Ridge and directed $6 million in federal grants to create a 30,000-square-foot building for the reservation's youths. That opened in 2002.

Today, the club serves about 500 kids aged from 5 to 18 years, and is one of nearly 200 clubs in Indian County that serve a total of 88,000 young people.

The center in Pine Ridge runs a job readiness program that teaches teenagers what to expect when they are looking for work, including how to dress and write a resume, while some kids gain experience working at the club's restaurant. A daily homework hour helps members focus on schoolwork, while a diabetes prevention program educates them on how to maintain a healthy lifestyle. The club also includes a skate park and a sweat lodge.

Former Boys & Girls Club of America senior vice president Robbie Calloway, who helped bring the organization to Pine Ridge, said the club gives kids on the reservation hope for the future.

"What we try to do, the reason we wanted more clubs was so that they could connect and be part of something bigger than their immediate community," he said.

Tribal group appeals ruling on Fighting Sioux suit

GRAND FORKS, N.D. (AP) – A tribal group that's hoping to save the University of North Dakota's Fighting Sioux nickname says it will appeal a judge's decision to throw out its lawsuit against the NCAA.

The suit was filed by members of the Spirit Lake and Standing Rock Sioux tribes in North Dakota. It asked for at least $10 million and a reversal of the NCAA policy banning the use of American Indian imagery. U.S. District Judge Ralph Erickson dismissed the case on May 2. He says the tribal members are not part of the market controlled by the NCAA.

The group on Thursday filed notice for appeal with the 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Voters will decide in the June 12 primary election whether UND must continue using the Fighting Sioux moniker.

AQUASH

Continued from Page 1

grossly disproportionate to his crime, the justices said.

"Indeed, the evidence reflects that Graham was involved in Aquash's initial kidnapping, in ensuring that she was kept in captivity, in transporting her to her place of death, and in the ultimate shooting," Justice Steven Zinter wrote for the court.

Graham's lawyer, John R. Murphy of Rapid City, said he and Graham are disappointed in the ruling but will pursue secondary appeals.

"We are going to continue to pursue relief both in the courts in the United States as well as seeking to address certain matters regarding the propriety of the extradition in Canada," Murphy said.

South Dakota Attorney General Marty Jackley said state, federal and tribal authorities have cooperated for 35 years to bring justice for Aquash and her family.

Asked if authorities are still investigating other suspects for possible involvement in Aquash's murder, Jackley said: "This remains an ongoing, open investigation."

Aquash's body was found in a remote area in southwest South Dakota in February 1976. She was a member of the Mi'kmaq tribe of Novia Scotia. Federal agents investigated the case for years but didn't bring an indictment until March 2003, when Denver police arrested Looking Cloud.

Looking Cloud w

convicted in federal court of first-degree murder in 2004 and sentenced to life in prison. A federal judge signed an order in August reducing Looking Cloud's sentence to 20 years.

Clark, who was never charged, died in October.

Graham was arrested in December 2003 in Vancouver, British Columbia, on federal charges in Aquash's killing. Two courts ruled that the U.S. government lacked jurisdiction to try Graham because he is not an American Indian. The case was eventually moved to state court.

Graham was acquitted of premeditated murder in the state trial, but was convicted of felony murder and sentenced to life in prison without parole. The felony murder charge alleged he was involved in a killing while engaged in another felony, kidnapping.

Graham argued that the state lacked jurisdiction to prosecute him for felony murder because he was extradited from Canada on a different charge, premeditated murder. He contended that his conviction should be overturned and he should be allowed to return to Canada to challenge his extradition.

But the Supreme Court said Canada consented in February 2010 to Graham's prosecution for felony murder.

"Graham has not argued that Canada did or would object to Graham's prosecution for felony murder. On the contrary, the only record evidence reflects Canada's express consent to the prosecution," the court said.

Graham also contended that several witness statements should not have been allowed at his trial, including those made by Looking Cloud about an alleged 2002 telephone conversation between Looking Cloud and Aquash's daughter, Denise Maloney, in which Looking Cloud said Graham shot Aquash with Looking Cloud and Clarke present.

Graham said Looking Cloud changed his story to negotiate a reduced sentence.

The Supreme Court said Looking Cloud's testimony was admissible because it was consistent with his prior statement to Maloney in the telephone call.

The appeal also questioned the inclusion of another person's testimony about a conversation in which Leonard Peltier - who is serving a life sentence after being convicted in 1977 of shooting two FBI agents accused Aquash of being an FBI informant. The Supreme Court said that person's testimony was impermissible hearsay, but that its inclusion in the trial was a harmless error because it would not have affected the verdict.

AIM was founded in the late 1960s to protest the U.S. government's treatment of Indians and to demand the government honor its treaties with Indian tribes. The group grabbed headlines in 1973 when it took over the village of Wounded Knee on South Dakota's Pine Ridge Indian Reservation, leading to a 71-day standoff with federal agents that included the exchange of gunfire.

COLORS

ontinued from Page

Per capita, more American Indian warriors served in Vietnam than any other ethnic group.

soldier to the statues of Three Servicemen at the Vietnam Veterans Memorial in Washington, D.C. Per capita, more American Indian warriors served in Vietnam than any other ethnic group. Supporters of the project say the addition of an American Indian would correct an oversight that has existed since the Vietnam Veterans Memorial opened in 1982 and the Three Servicemen statue was added in 1984. The Vietnam wall will celebrate its 30th Anniversary in November, and has over three million visitors every year.

The first burial at Arlington National Cemetery took place on May 13, 1864, when William Henry Christman of the 67th Pennsylvania Infantry was interred, one month before the property was appropriated as a military cemetery. The 624acre cemetery honors fallen men and women who have served in the U.S. Armed On average, 27 Forces. funerals are conducted each day, and more than four million people visit the cemetery each year.

In Memoriam®

Dorothy Jean Narcomey, 81 year-old, lifelong Seminole County resident passed from this life May 29, 2012 of natural causes at Seminole Care and Rehabilitation Center. She was born November 1, 1930 in Seminole County to Moses and Martha Bean, She attended Pleasant Grove High School graduating in 1947.

Dorothy married Willie Narcomey and he preceded her in death in 1996.

Dorothy lived in the Seminole and Bowlegs area all of her life. She was a full time homemaker for 8 children, working for a few years at a tool factory in Seminole.

Dorothy was a member of the Cedar Creek Indian Baptist Church, and she has also attended the All Nations Baptist Church in Seminole. She was proud of her Seminole heritage and maintained tribal traditions by attending the local Seminole Stomp Dance ceremonies as a participant in the summer time until poor health prevented her from participating.

She will always be known for her caring, giving nature to her family. Always "giving" more of herself and giving to the last.

As the Matriarch of her family, she always did the best for her children and grandchildren.

Funeral services were 1:00 p.m., Friday, June 1, 2012 at Swearingen Funeral Home Chapel in Seminole, Oklahoma. Internment followed at Little Cemetery.

Money challenge to tribes' sentencing authority

FELICIA FONSECA Associated Press

FLAGSTAFF, Ariz. (AP) American Indian tribes authorized to triple the amount of time tribal members can spend in jail say they're challenged by a lack of funding.

The increase in tribal courts' sentencing authority from one year to three years for a single crime came two years ago under the federal Tribal Law and Order Act. But a U.S. Government Accountability Office report released Wednesday showed that none of the 109 tribes who responded to a survey about the sentencing increase were taking advantage of it.

Nearly all of those tribes said they need more money and technical help from the federal government to provide public defenders, establish or update criminal codes, and have sufficiently trained judges as the law requires.

The report shows 36 of the tribes surveyed are working toward the new authority. Another 34 tribes were unsure whether they would go in that direction, while 31 said they had no plans to do so, the report said. The enhanced sentencing isn't mandatory for tribes.

Troy Eid, chairman of the Indian Law and Order Commission born out of the Tribal Law and Order Act, said tribes across the country are exploring the authority but it will take time to get all the elements in place if that's the path they choose.

"My impression is that within the next year, you'll start to see some tribes actually implementing the system," he said. "Tribes are being super careful. No tribe wants to get this issue wrong; it has to be legally

The GAO cautioned the report isn't representative of all tribes. Congressional investigators identified 171 of the 566 federally recognized tribes that received federal funding for tribal courts to include in the survey, but not all of them responded.

Tribal leaders have said a year in jail for any crime under tribal law, including homicide, hasn't served as much of a deterrent on reservations. Members of the Navajo Nation Council have been debating whether the enhanced sentencing provision would help send a message that tribal officials are serious about combatting

"The bad guys are saying they could get away with anything on the rez, which now pretty much is true," said Edmund Yazzie, chairman of the Navajo Nation Council's Law and Order Committee, and a former sheriff's deputy. "But now the committee is trying to take another

Seventy of the tribes surveyed said they had at least half the requirements in place to hand down lengthier sentences, but some are choosing not to because of associated costs, like probation. One unnamed tribe said it has had an effective criminal and civil justice system for 40 years without the requirement of a lawtrained judge, and that hiring one from outside the community would be unreasonable.

The Hopi Tribe in Arizona set aside funds from its own budget to hire law-trained judges and a prosecutor last year to meet the requirements of the tribal law and order act, said tribal Chairman Le Roy Shingoitewa. The tribal council is expected to vote on an updated criminal code next month that Shingoitewa says could help ensure that victims get justice.

"Now we have some teeth in enforcing our laws. Previous to this, all we did is slap the hands of perpetrators," he said.

Tribes receive funding, training and other assistance through the U.S. Bureau of Indian Affairs and the U.S. Department of Justice, but it's not always enough.

The BIA said it has provided more than 60 recording devices to tribes to help them meet another requirement that they maintain a record of criminal proceedings. The agency said it has plans to give 15 more to tribes that request them and also has asked for $1 million more in funding for tribal courts in its 2013 budget justification.

The GAO recommended that the federal government clarify to tribes the funding sources available to help them pursue the enhanced sentencing.

Mato Standing High, attorney general of the Rosebud Sioux Tribe in South Dakota, said the tribe is fortunate in that it has the financial resources to meet many of the requirements under the Tribal Law and Order Act. The only thing missing is an updated tribal code that would reflect a new class of crimes, like rape, arson or homicide, with lengthier sentences, he said.

The tribe hasn't decided officially whether to move forward with the enhanced sentencing authority, he said, but is considering how to classify crimes after comparing them to state and federal crimes and penalties.

"Tribes really need to see it as an opportunity to exercise sovereignty and have more local control," Standing High said. "That's the goal of it, and I understand also that it takes a lot of resources that a lot of tribes don't have."

COMMENTARY

'Divide and rule' was the unwritten goal of the Indian agents

TIM GIAGO (Nanwica Kciji) Notes from Indian Country © 2012 Unity South Dakota

government, ask an Indian."

Last week marked the 88th anniversary when the Administration United States of America declared Native Americans to be citizens of this country. That's right; it was in 1924 that Indians became U. S. citizens and finally gained the right to vote. Ironically, the white the right to vote in August of 1920, four years before Indians were made citizens and gained the same right to vote.

to practice those rights once Constitutions many residents of Pine Ridge IRA forms of government. Corps or CCC.

women of America were given early life, was a clerk at or control the tiospayes the different trading posts on the feds often created hostilities reservation, primarily at Kyle between the different tiospayes and at Wounded Knee.

Politics has never been state of turmoil. My father, Tim, was 30 years far from the minds of most whether he exercised that them at the trading posts. right in any election after 1924 Local politics never really is debatable. Sometimes it became externalized until is very hard for one who has the Indian Re-organization been denied certain civil rights Act was passed in 1934 and mimicking they are given. But I know he those of the United States Delano Roosevelt and like Indian tribes that voted for the programs different districts on the initiated by Roosevelt and he reservation were ruled by life the job opportunities and extended families. Without training provided for Indians formal elections on paper by the Civilian Conservation the headmen were chosen by their good deeds, wisdom My dad, for most of his and courage. In order to rule and tried to keep them in a born and raised on the Pine father, whose first language have been passed down local residents and getting the America do not come first. Ridge Indian Reservation in was Lakota, often engaged through the generations and financial support from the Even a simple idea and place South Dakota, he had never in political discussions with in some communities they tribe that the boys and girls of like a Boys and Girls Club on had the right to vote. Now customers as he waited on are still prevalent. It lends the reservation deserved was an Indian reservation has to credence to the old story of often very iffy. two fishermen, one white and a bucket, but they would still a literal lifesaver. It was a safe manage to climb out of the haven for the kids with nothing spoke very highly of Franklin were drawn up by the different bucket. He noticed that the to do. And although it did so Indian's crabs stayed in the much good for the children, bucket. He finally asked, "How it still had to fight different he leaned toward the politics of In the early days the U.S. come the crabs you catch stay factions on the reservation to make this happen. the Democrats simply because government, with very few in the bucket." The Indian just to survive. of the things he witnessed that people to control the large replied, "Those are Indian But 20 years later there it they were doing for his people. Indian reservations such crabs; every time one tries to stands as a beacon to hard The old saying goes, "If He saw the construction of the as the Pine Ridge, had an climb up, the other reach up work, perseverance and the fraction of the money it sends you think you can trust the roads, schools and bridges unwritten law of "divide and and drag him back down." The tenacity shown by the Big out every year in foreign aid on the reservation under rule." Under the traditional success of the "divide and rule" Crow family to keep it alive to help its own indigenous the WPA or Works Projects form of government the concept still has weight in the in the name of SuAnne, a minds of some.

saw for the first time in his headmen of the tiospayes, or Anniversary of the SuAnne automobile accident when she Big Crow Boys and Girls was just 17 years old. Club celebration at Pine Ridge on Saturday. I recalled reason I mentioned the vividly the struggles endured federal government at the These internal frictions the targets of vicious rumors where else, we often wonder be reached at UnitySoDak1@ basketball champion and hero I was a speaker at the 20th to many who was killed in an

And herein stands the old in 1924 and having been residents of Pine Ridge. My created by the Indian agents and unfounded gossip by some why the indigenous people of knology.net sweat blood just to keep its Without the businesses on doors open. The SuAnne Big one Indian, sitting on a dock. the reservation to provide Crow Boys and Girls Club was The white fisherman would summer jobs for the youth, the first such establishment catch crabs and put them into the Boys and Girls Club was on an Indian reservation and it led the way so that there are now 200 Boys and Girls Clubs on Indian reservations across America. It took a lot of food people and a lot of donations

> If the United States government had used only a people, what would life be like on the Indian reservations today? The answer to that is; ask an Indian.

Tim Giago, an Oglala by the founders and current beginning. When many of Lakota, was born and educated managers of the club, Chick, us from Indian reservations on the Pine Ridge Indian Cee Cee and Pigeon Big see the United States send Reservation. He was the founder Crow, not only financially, billions of dollars in foreign of The Lakota Times, Indian but politically to keep it going aid to Egypt, Israel, Pakistan, Country Today, Lakota Journal these 20 years. They were often Afghanistan and God knows and Native Sun News. He can

The viewpoints expressed in columns and letters are the opinions of the writers and not necessarily the opinion or viewpoint of the Native American Times publisher or staff. Send letters to editor@nativetimes.com. Please keep letters to 350 words or less. Sign your name, tribal affiliation and city of residence for verification purposes.

SUPERNAW'S OKLAHOMA INDIAN SUPPLY Wholesale items for Pow Wow Vendors

Bone chokers $20 per dozen

Handmade lamp worked glass bead bracelets $1.00 each Glass bead stretch bracelets 5 for $2.50

12 Necklaces: Chain w/ pendant and display pad $13.50 36 inch gemstone chip strands Reg. 3.95 now $2.00 36 inch turquoise chip strands Reg. 7.95 now $4.00

Always our regular stock of seed beads from 16/0 to 8/0, findings, leather, hackles, fluffs and thousands of other supply items.

Remember we've moved around the corner 109 North Broadway, Skiatook, OK 74070

New Dealers Cash or Credit Card Only.

Open Noon-6pm Mon. thru Fri. • 10am-5m Sat. • Closed Sun. Local: 396-1713-Countrywide Toll Free 1-888-720-1967

Website: www.supernaw.com • Email: Supernaw@flash.net

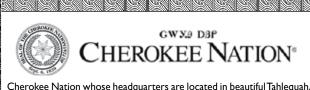

VATIVE	AMFR	ICANI	TIMES

Name:
Address:
City: State: Zip:
Phone:
☐ $65.00 for 52 issues ☐ $32.50 for 26 issues
☐ $16.25 for 13 issues ☐ $1.25 single copy

Mail this form with a check or money order to: Native American Times • P.O. Box 411 Tahleguah, OK 74465 • 918-708-5838

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT / HELP WANTED

Oklahoma is a national leader in Indian tribal governments and economic development in Oklahoma, We are a dynamic, progressive organization, which owns several business enterprises and administers a variety of services for the Cherokee people in Northeastern Oklahoma. Cherokee Nation offers an exceptional employee benefits plan with Comprehensive Health, Life, 401(k), Holiday Pay, Sick Leave and Annual Leave.

> CURRENT OPPORTUNITIES WW HASTINGS HOSPITAL, TAHLEQUAH #6584 Inpatient RN/R/PT/ER #4930 Inpatient RN/PRN/T/FT/ER POSITIONS CLOSE 6/5/2012

#6481 Phlebotomist Technician/R/PT POSITION CLOSES 6/8/2012

Interested applicants please apply at www.cherokee.org

Cherokee Nation Human Resources Department PO Box 948 Tahlequah, OK 74465 (918) 453-5292 or 453-5050

Employment will be contingent upon drug test results. Indian preference is considered

Faculty Chair

Position Summary: Serve as ONLI full-time Faculty Chair; is responsible for carrying out instructional duties, which requires an individual who has the ability to:

• Teach college-level and career and technical educations classes in a culturally diverse and historic setting • Engage in professional activities such as publishing and present conference papers • Ability to represent PNC in various public settings Assist in designing and implementing curriculum, supervise book/textbook orders as required for faculty • Serve on various committees, as assigned • Serve the College and its students in an ethical, enthusiastic, and visionary manner • Ability to lead accreditation process and participate fully on such committee.

Qualifications: Masters Degree required; PhD preferred. Two to four (2-4) years experience in progressively responsible professional position is also required. In addition, full-time faculty must have a proven track record with concern to: providing vision and guidance in helping establish an academic department and or program, carry out instructional responsibilities (including developing syllabi and lesson plans, supervise implementation on MOODLE/CAMS portals), working with both internal and external organizations, developing a professional dossier that clearly demonstrates advancement and activity, teaching life-skills to students, and serving the College by assisting with extracurricular activities, when necessary.

Other Requirements: Full-time faculty must be able to travel to attend meetings, conferences, workshops, seminars, etc. as deemed necessary by the project director's office.

Duties & Responsibilities:

- Ensure the academic integrity and rigor of the classroom,
- Author and submit syllabi to the project director, Chair faculty committee
- Attend regular department meetings, as required by the project director, Assist in fund raising efforts that impact the proposed project,
- Relate to a wide diversity of people, including traditional and nontraditional students, in various cultural settings.
- Work in a professional and collegial manner with other faculty, staff, and students,
- Demonstrate excellent verbal, interpersonal, and written communication skills, Perform other duties as assigned by the project director/supervisor.
- Send resumes to Dr. Joseph Bohanon at jbohanon@pawneenationcollege.org, fax

918-762-3467, or mail to 861 Little Dee Drive, Pawnee, OK 74058.

Admissions Assistant/ Recruiter

Position Summary: Serving the ONLI program; responsible for carrying out a wide variety of duties that allow the Director of Admissions/Project Coordinator to plan, organize, direct, and control organizational functions of the Admissions Office, which requires an individual that has the ability to:

- Multi-task in a vibrant and active environment,
- Compile, compose, and distribute various written documents and correspondence in a timely manner, Operate numerous software programs and learn new (or updated) programs as they become available, including Microsoft Office: Word, MS Excel, and
- · Execute directives in a timely manner,

PowerPoint,

 Act in a professional and courteous manner to students, other staff, and Maintain both official and document files.

Qualifications: An earned associate's degree is required, a bachelor's degree is preferred; experience in a progressively responsible position is required; experience in tribal programs is preferred. In addition, the Admissions Assistant /Recruiter must have a valid driver's license, a clean driving record, and a reliable vehicle for traveling to and from recruiting events; as well a proven track record with concern to: completing assigned tasks in a timely manner, working with office machines such as photocopiers, calculators, recorders, etc., working with both internal and external organizations, and serving the College by expected presence with extracurricular activities, when necessary.

Other Requirements:

The Admissions Assistant /Recruiter must be able to travel to attend meetings, conferences, workshops, seminars, etc. as deemed necessary by the appropriate project office.

Send resumes to Staci Rowton at srowton@pawneenationcollege.org, fax to 918-762-3303, mail to 861 Little Dee Drive, Pawnee, OK 74058

Go online to nativetimes.com for more jobs!

-New jobs posted throughout the week-

NOW HIRING

TransCanada is seeking talented people who have energy for change, can build powerful partnerships and deliver sustainable results. We offer challenging work and industry-leading projects that create diverse opportunities for your

TransCanada is currently recruiting for the following positions nationwide:

- Controls/Measurement Technician- Eaton Rapids, MI
- Mechanic- Yankton, SD
- Electrical Instrumentation & Controls Technician- Brookings, SD
- . Mechanic- Wichita, KS
- Mechanic- St Joseph, MO
- Electrical Instrumentation & Controls Technician- Columbia, MO
- Electrical Instrumentation & Controls Technician- St Joseph, MO

Reporting to the Regional Manager, the successful candidates will apply their skills and aptitude to install, operate and perform planned maintenance and corrective repairs on natural gas pipeline systems. These roles require a motivated individual with related pipeline, facility construction or maintenance experience within the Oil & Gas industry. Previous experience working with high pressure natural gas would be considered an asset. All positions are eligible for domestic relocation.

TransCanada is an equal opportunity employer. For more information and to apply to this position, please visit our website at www.transcanada.com/ careers.

Everything you do at TransCanada contributes to everything we do across North America.

Make more of your career. Help us build long-lasting energy solutions that matter.

NATIVE AMERICAN HIRING PREFERENCE? Advertise your jobs to Native Americans! E-mail your ad for a quote to: lisa@nativetimes.com

EVENTS

*Email your powwow or other event info to: Lisa@ nativetimes.com. Name, date, time, place and contact information is free.

EVERY THURSDAY The Otoe-Missouria Substance Abuse and Behavioral Health Programs sponsor an open group for families touched by addiction from noon to 1 p.m. at the Otoe-Missouria Health Building. This is a confidential group. Call 580-723-4466 x252 or x262 for more information.

SECOND TUESDAY Cherokee Artists Association meeting at 202 E. 5th Street Tahlequah, Okla. Info: (918) 458-0008 or www.

FOURTH THURSDAY Each month the American Indian Chamber of Commerce of Oklahoma - Eastern Chapter hosts a monthly luncheon at Bacone

College, Muskogee, Okla.

11:30 a.m. at Benjamin

Wacoche Hall. Please RSVP one week ahead of time. Phone: (918) 230-3759

EVERY 2ND SATURDAY

Modoc Tribal Citizens

Meeting at Wyandotte Community Center 1pm-3pm. Info call 918-961-0439 or 832-350-4530. Indian Taco Sales - from 11-

2:30pm at OK Choctaw Tribal Alliance, 5320 S. Youngs Blvd, Oklahoma City www. okchoctaws.org

YOUTH COUNCIL The Native Nations Youth Council (NNYC) bimonthly meetings from 6:30pm -8:30pm @ the Youth Services of Tulsa Activity Center (311 S. Madison - on 3rd just west cherokeeartistsassociation.org of Peoria). Call to confirm location. Info Call: Chad Gilley (918) 382-2204 or nnyc@ihcrc.org

> JUNE 8 Chilocco Powwow in the Event Center of the First Council Casino, seven miles north of Newkirk, OK. Gourd dance begins at 2:00 p.m. with grand entry at 6:30. Featured will be the Apache Fire Dance. Contact Garland Kent, Sr at 580- 352-2670.

JUNE 8-10 Red Earth Festival, Cox Convention Center, Oklahoma City

JUNE 9 Inter-Tribal Children's Powwow & Funfest: June 9, 11400 S. 613 Road, Miami. Grand entry at 7pm. A stomp dance will follow the day's festivities, beginning at 11:30pm. Call 918-542-2441.

JUNE 14 Iowa Tribe of Oklahoma 4th Annual Golf Tournament kicking off Iowa Tribal Powwow - 8am at Cimarron Trails in Perkins, Okla. Registration begins at 7am. Info call Linda Andre 405-547-5352 Ext 23

JUNE 15-17 Iowa Tribe of Oklahoma 27th Annual Pow Wow, Bah-Kho-Je PowWow

Grounds, Hwy #177, 4 miles south of Perkins, Okla Free admission, camping, contests in all divisions, arts & crafts, rations. Contact Robert Murray 580-304-6731 or Bernadette Huber 405-240-2600.

JUNE 16 The 17th Annual Oklahoma Indian All-State Basketball Games at the sports center on the Oklahoma Wesleyan University campus in Bartlesville. Games will start at 6:00 P.M. For more info: contact us 918-642-3162, paradox@valornet.com

JUNE 21-24 Muscogee Nation Festival at Claude Cox Omniplex in Okmulgee. For more information on the Festival, contact MCN Tourism & Recreation at (918) 732-7992 by e-mail at tourism@ muscogeenation-nsn. gov or online at www. muscogeenation-nsn.gov.

JUNE 22-23 Peoria Powwow, 60610 E.

90 Road, Miami. Features a wide range of contest dancing, including gourd dancing and straight dancing, JUNE 30 as well as grass, traditional and fancy dancing. Call 918-540-2535.

JUNE 22-24 Tonkawa Tribal Powwow at Fort Oakland, Tonkawa. Come out and experience the Tonkawa Tribal Powwow, an annual tribal celebration featuring Native American dancing, contests, crafts, artwork and food. Call 580-628-2561.

JUNE 23 Creek Council House Museum's Indian Art Festival 106 W. 6th, Okmulgee, OK; 10:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. For Free Booth Space or Register into $1000 Art Competition Contact: csago71@sbcglobal.net; 918-756-2324

JUNE 28 – JULY 1 Pawnee Indian veterans Powwow held at the Memorial Stadium. For more info call Toni Hill (918) 762-3621 Ext. 25

47th Annual Coker Reunion, Masonic Building, 1729 HWY 9 West, Seminole, Okla. All descendants of London Coker and wife Mary Washburn are invited. Potluck meal at Noon. For more info call 405-382-3044.

JULY 2-4 Kiowa Gourd Clan Celebration, Carnegie City Park, Carnegie. This event will feature the tribe's Sun Dance, held in the middle of summer during the longest and hottest days of the year. Call 580-654-2300.

JULY 4-7 Quapaw Tribal Powwow at Quapaw Tribal Grounds, 5681 S. 630 Road, Quapaw. An annual celebration over the 4th of July weekend that includes dancing, contests, vendors and plenty of family fun. Call 918-542-1853.

Children permitted at Washington prison powwows

SARA JEAN GREEN, The Seattle Times

WALLA WALLA, Wash. (AP) - Graysun Sherwood lay sprawled across his grandmother's lap, a red Kool-Aid stain ringing his mouth.

A 3-year-old napping amid the sounds of powwow - the drumming, the singing, the jingling of bells that accompany a dancer's every step or stomp - would be unremarkable anywhere else in Indian Country.

But in the visitors' room at the Washington State Penitentiary, the mere presence of a sleeping toddler, along with a handful of other children, was like a spiritual salve, providing a rare dose of normalcy to the 15 or so maximumsecurity inmates who belong to one of four Native-American "circles" at the prison. Last week's powwow, hosted by an inmates' circle, marked the first time in years children were in attendance.

"Oh, man, forget about it. It was awesome, that feeling, I don't even have words," inmate Herbert Rice - known as "Chief" - said of watching the youngsters, dressed in their dance regalia, step through the thick, metal security doors. "It's inspiring to us that they're dancing and involved inmates and cooked by prison staff. in their culture at such a young age ...

"If I would've paid more attention to that, I wouldn't be here," said Rice, 41, who is serving two life sentences for the slayings of an elderly Yakima County couple during a 1988 robbery when he was 17.

Until recently, such a scene would have been impossible inside the walls of the state's prisons. In Washington, an estimated 750 Native Americans are incarcerated - though Minty LongEarth, a prison program director for the Seattle-based United Indians of All Tribes Foundation, believes the number is much higher, possibly double, given that many inmates don't identify themselves as Native to prison officials. After months of discussions between tribal leaders and the Department of Corrections, Native-American inmates now can request that children be allowed to participate in significant, yearly religious or cultural events such as powwows.

Powwows - usually three-day events held during summer months - generally are loud, joyous social gatherings where song, dance and food reunite family members and old friends. Dancers often compete in various categories, such as traditional or fancy, each with a distinct style and dress. Dancers are accompanied by drum groups, and drummers take turns singing and beating out songs usually handed down through families or clans.

The inclusion of children is vital because they represent the future and are key to transmitting culture and identity through the generations.

During powwow, Rice said, "we let go of our masks that we wear in here."

"People die inside themselves in here," said Rice, who remembers teaching his son, now 20, how to grass dance in a prison visiting room. "These elders here today remind us of who we are, they bring us back to who we are. And the kids, for us, remind us of what we used to be, and they remind us what tomorrow is going to be, especially these young kids here dancing."

Most members of the circle to which Rich belongs are Native American, but the group also includes a handful of Pacific Islanders, who share similar cultural and spiritual beliefs, and Roy Towsend, 41, a Puerto Rican serving a 66year prison term for first-degree murder.

"I was raised around the Native way, and I have family members who are Native," including a younger brother who is also incarcerated, Towsend said as he set up a buffet table that would be laden with grilled salmon, wild rice, buffalo stew and fry bread – food paid for by the

"I've been down (incarcerated) 17 years, and I've been through every circle where I've landed," he said, referring to the usual movement of prisoners to various facilities over the course of their sentences. "Most of these older cats, like Rice, he's like a big brother to me. He runs the circle like a family."

It had been at least five years since some prison superintendents - each one decided individually - last allowed minors to attend correctional facilities. And it's been two years since the Department of Corrections (DOC) contraband the "sacred tobacco" used in Native American ceremonies, authorized hands-on property searches of ceremonial items that were reclassified as "nonsacred," and curtailed sweatlodge ceremonies due to the cost of firewood. As part of the change, barring children from religious or cultural events was codified in DOC

While smoking tobacco was banned in state prisons in 2004, Native Americans still could burn tobacco during sweat-lodge ceremonies until the changes took effect.

"DOC, with basically a sweep of a pen, erased all these religious, tribal, spiritual and ceremonial rights," said Gabe Galanda, a Seattle attorney who worked on behalf of Native inmates.

two tribal leaders met with then-state prisons a table with an inmate and other adults. Director Eldon Vail and other DOC brass in the spring of 2010 to discuss what they saw as cultural rights behind the razor wire.

political position, Director Vail simply said he said. was sorry, the state had screwed up and they were committed to correcting the mistake," recalled Galanda, a member of the Round Valley Indian Tribes of Mendocino County, Calif. Last June, almost everything that had been stripped away was signed back into DOC policy, not only for Native-American inmates, but for those who practice other minority faiths, such as Buddhists and Wiccans.

"It's taken us two years, through a lot of diplomatic effort and patience, to get everything back," Galanda said. The one thing still missing, however, was the inclusion of children - often referred to as "shorties" - at powwows.

Rice started writing and calling Galanda early last year, galvanizing the effort to bring children back to powwow. Originally from the Confederated Tribes of the Colville Reservation, Rice said his exposure to traditional spiritual practices inside prison changed his life.

"It brought the good person out of me," Rice said. In turn, he has become a teacher to other incarcerated young men who, like him, grew up on the reservation amid dysfunction and alcoholism and then lost themselves to drugs, booze and crime. "Our culture changed me; it helped me face my scars in life."

A few weeks ago, the DOC - after months Native American powwows inside the state's 12 of discussions about security and the need to protect children, especially from incarcerated sex offenders - decided to allow children to powwow. His movements weren't as fluid as implemented sweeping changes that deemed as attend the first powwow of the summer season those of the other men, and he leaned forward as at the prison in Walla Walla. As a result of tribal he danced, as though watching his feet. leaders' efforts, other religious groups - be they Catholics or Muslims - now can also request that praying on our ancestors," said Carson, 32, children be allowed to participate in their annual also from the Colville Reservation. "It's a real religious or cultural events, Galanda said.

> Scott Frakes, the deputy director of prisons who oversees six of the men's prisons, including of a 20-year sentence for second-degree murder, the Washington State Penitentiary, said DOC changed its policies to comply with the federal Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act of 2000, which requires U.S. prisons to provide "equal and reasonable religious practices to all prisoners."

> Frakes, who was initially against the idea of allowing children to attend religious events, said my road. I'm on a natural high right now. Creator it is far easier for corrections officers to ensure gives me happiness."

Galanda was expecting a battle when he and the safety of child visitors when they are seated at Powwows, though, are far from static visiting sessions, and require additional security, said violations of Native Americans' religious and Frakes, noting that inmates and community members now pay for the extra staffing. Tuesday's "Before we could basically take a legal or event, for instance, cost the circle about $250, he

> The DOC decision didn't come in time for the inmates of the Zone 2 circle – the prison is divided into four zones - to meet the 45-day clearance requirement to invite their children, nieces and nephews to last week's powwow. But Kalispel elder Francis Cullooyah, a spiritual adviser who has been working in the state's prisons since the early 1990s, brought four of his 18 grandchildren. And Nora Numkena, a Spokane tribal member who has been volunteering at the state penitentiary for the past three years, brought her two grandchildren - Graysun and 9-year-old Amelia Seyler, who spun with her purple-and-pink shawl as she danced across the linoleum.

> Though the smell of wood smoke and burning sage was absent, the powwow inside the Walla Walla prison had all the same energy - the excited greetings, the easy laughter - of a powwow on the outside. Six of the Pacific Islander men performed a warrior dance, stripping off their prison T-shirts and slapping their tattooed chests, thighs and biceps to howls from the crowd of about 70 people.

> After the inmates had served their guests with paper plates piled high with traditional foods, Donald Carson began calling people one by one, handing out gifts that the men had made: hand drums, beadwork, moccasins, leather pouches.

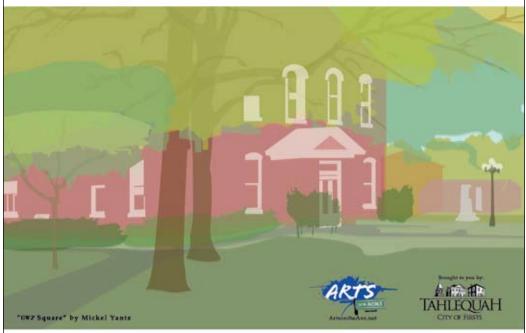

Earlier in the day, Carson had danced his first

"It's real spiritual, you know. I did a lot of humbling feeling, being able to dance."

A former drug user who has served six years Carson is now a follower of Red Road, a spiritual tradition in which practitioners dedicate themselves to keeping their bodies, minds and souls pure through prayer and ceremony.

"I have 14 more years, but that's 14 more years I can learn" about his traditions, Carson said. "I guarantee you I won't be back here, because of

JUNE 0 & 9, 2012 · Tahlequah, OK ·

Art Stroll & Artist Demonstrations . Oklahoma Wine Tasting Music & Entertainment Food

For a complete list of activities, visit ArtsontheAve.net or on facebook at facebook.com/ArtsontheAve

BEADING & CRAFT SUPPLIES CLOTHING & ACCESSORIES JEWELRY & NOVELTIES ORIGINAL ARTWORK COLLECTIBLES & BOOKS

2850 S. Wood Drive Okmulgee, Okla. 918-752-0040 http://oicgiftshop.com

Master of Ceremonies  $\Diamond$  Frank Carson 2011 Tribal Princess

Alexis Tanyan 2012 Tribal Princess \(\frac{1}{2}\) Danelle Springer Head Gourd Dance Singer \( \Quad \) Leonard Cozad Jr.

Head War Dance Singer \( \rightarrow John Arkeketa \) Head Man Dancer ◊ George Alexander

Head Lady Dancer \( \rightarrow \) Michelle Garcia-Holiday

Head Gourd Dancer  $\Diamond$  John Shotten Co-Host ◊ Red Rock Creek

Northern Drum & Blackhird

Arena Directors \( \rangle \) Pat Moore & Bear Murray

Water Boys \( \rightarrow Josh & Jordan Murray \)

Pow Wow Committee ◊ Robert Murray Jr. 580-304-6731

John "Kandie" Des Jarlait

Lori Murray Bernadette Huber 405-240-2600

Information: Robert Murray Jr. 580-304-6731

FRIDAY

5:00 PM LOWER FLAG 6:30 PM GOURD DANCE

REGISTRATION OPENS 7:00 PM

7:30 PM GRAND ENTRY 10:30 PM SPECIAL "49" CONTEST

SATURDAY

2:00 PM GOURD DANCE 5:00 PM LOWER FLAG

EVENING MEAL BREAK 5:30 PM 6:30 PM GOURD DANCE

REGISTRATION OPENS 7:00 PM

7:30 PM GRAND ENTRY 11:00 PM SPECIAL GEORGE GIBSON MEMORIAL

STOMP DANCE CONTEST

SUNDAY 2:00 PM GOURD DANCE

5:00 PM LOWER FLAG

GRAND ENTRY

American Indian Arts & Crafts/ Food Vendors Coordinated by Iowa Tribe Enterprises Linda Big Soldier, CEO

Must complete application Reservations & information: 405-547-4239 or lbigsoldier@iowanation.org

27th Annual Iowa Tribe of Oklahoma POWWOW

June 15-16-17, 2012

Bah-Kho-Je Pow Wow Grounds

Hwy #177, 4 miles south of Perkins, Oklahoma

Contests

Rules: Must register and be in parade in on night of contest Must be in full regalia to receive prize

Committee reserves right to combine or separate divisions

Tiny Tots (0-6) - Combined boys & girls, combined divisions

Jr. Girls (7-12) - Combined divisions

Jr. Boys (7-12) - Combined divisions

Teen Girls (13-17) - Combined cloth/buckskin; fancy shawl/jingle Teen Boys (13-17) - Combined grass & traditional; straight; fancy Women (18-54) - Cloth; buckskin; combined fancy shawl/jingle

Men (18-54) - Straight; fancy; combined traditional/grass Golden Age Men (55+) - Combined divisions

Gold Age Women (55+) - Combined divisions

Former UKB citizens can request reinstatement

M. THOMAS JORDAN UKB Communications Office

TAHLEQUAH, Okla. - The United Keetoowah Band of Cherokee Indians in Oklahoma is giving former tribal members a one-time opportunity to be reinstated into the tribe.

As the UKB Membership Ordinance does not have a provision for relinquished members to come back to the tribe, this is a one-time chance to come back.

Chief Wickliffe said some members were coerced into relinquishing from the tribe to receive medical care or job opportunities that were not available to them while they remained members of the UKB and now they have one chance to return to the tribe.

The idea for reinstatement was discussed in council for at least the last seven years. The council took formal action in the January council meeting by appointing a five-member ad hoc committee to process reinstatement requests for approval by the full council.

Requests can be up to one page handwritten or half a page typed.

The requests should state why the former member relinquished and why they want to be reinstated with the UKB. The former member must provide a good reason for being reinstated and must have a good attitude.

The actual requests must be turned in at the enrollment office in the UKB Community Services Building at the tribal complex or mailed to the enrollment office.

Former members can, also, request that a reinstatement form be mailed to them.

Mail reinstatement requests to C/O UKB Enrollment Department P.O. Box 746 Tahlequah, OK 74465.

For more information, call the enrollment department at 918-453-9375.

MoTown stars to headline MCN Festival, Ocmulgee to Okmulgee bike ride finishes

GARY FIFE Muscogee Nation News

OKMULGEE, Okla. - Stars of MoTown will be headlining the 38th annual Muscogee (Creek) Nation Festival this June. Gladys Knight and The Temptations will be sharing their respective lists of hits for festivalgoers June 23 at the Claude Cox Amphitheater.

Knight has enjoyed a musical career spanning more than 50 years and has eight Grammy Awards to her name. Knight, known for chart-topping hits such as "Midnight Train to Georgia" has produced 38 albums, worked with top musical artists and appeared in a number of movies. She has also won a long list of awards for her humanitarian work. Knight recently completed appearances on the TV program. "Dancing with the Stars."

The Temptations have long been a fixture on the musical scene with chart crossover hits like "My Girl," "Papa was a Rolling Stone," and dozens of others. The five member vocal/dance group has been performing since 1961 and delighting audiences around the world.

Besides the entertainment, this year's festivalgoers will see the completion of the "Ocmulgee to Okmulgee" bike ride that commemorates the tragic journey of the Muscogee people on the Trail of Tears. The tour will commence June 2 and is expect to arrive in Okmulgee on June 23 at the Festival.

MCN Cultural Center Director John Beaver will be serving as the lead rider for the bicycle tour. His aim, he said, was to bring attention to the Muscogee removal and remember those who made the journey, "We want to pay homage to that. Not only do we have a history here in Oklahoma, it extends to both Georgia and Alabama. We have a long proud history there."

The riders will be making stops at historically significant places, presenting 'living classrooms' to educate residents and visitors along the way. The ride will be filmed for a documentary by the staff of the Muscogee (Creek) Nation Museum.

MCN CULTURAL CENTER I COURTESY

MCN Cultural Center Director John Beaver is the lead rider for the Ocmulgee to Okmulgee bicycle ride that commemorates the Muscogee (Creek) Trail of Tears.

SHS seniors named Gates Scholars

CHEROKEE NATION News Release

TAHLEQUAH, Okla. - Four Sequoyah Schools seniors have been named Gates Millennium Scholars by the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation. This honor entitles them to one of the most prestigious scholarships in the country – a scholarship that includes college tuition, books, fees, and room and board for up to eight years' worth of higher education.

"Our scholars this year are four young men who are very deserving of this honor," said Augusta Smith, college prep class teacher. "Each year, it becomes more difficult than the previous year because the pool of applicants increases. It requires hours and hours of writing and collecting data for the application. The preparation actually commences in their freshman year of high school, keeping focus on their goals to attend

Sequoyah's

Millennium Scholars this year include Geoffrey Little, Tyler Stroth, James Wagnon and Dillon Wade.

"These young men could not have attended the college of their choice without the scholarship," Smith said.

The Gates Millennium Scholarship is a scholarship awarded to minority students show outstanding community involvement, academic achievement and leadership abilities. A total of 1,000 scholarships are awarded annually, with 100 scholarships specifically identified for Native American youth. Forty-four students from Sequoyah have been named Gates Millennium Scholars in previous years. The addition of these four brings the school's total to 48 since 1999, a tremendous accomplishment for a small school. Sequoyah was named an outstanding college preparatory academy by the Gates Foundation.

Little, 18, of Tahlequah, is the son of Ellis and Nancy Little. He is a citizen of the Seminole Nation and was an outstanding member of the school's basketball and track teams. He plans to attend Northeastern State University.

Stroth, 18, of Broken Arrow, is the son of Lori Mangels and the grandson of Carol Mangels. He is a citizen of the Cherokee Nation, was active in student council and was on the football and track teams. Stroth has signed a letter of intent to run track at the University of Tulsa.

Wade, 19, of Oaks, is the son of Kim and Kip Wade. He is a citizen of the Cherokee Nation and is active in FCA, student council, football, basketball, track and baseball. He was accepted to the Stanford LEAD program and plans to major in medical engineering at Oklahoma State University.

Wagnon, 18, of Tahlequah, is the son of Tammy and James Wagnon Sr. He is a citizen of the Cherokee Nation and has attended Sequoyah since he was a freshman. He was a member of the football team and plans to attend the University of Oklahoma and major in pre-

Little Ambassadors sought to represent Cherokee Nation

11 at Sequoyah Schools' 4 p.m. The competition is held in conjunction with the 60th Cherokee National Holiday that takes place over Labor Day weekend.

"The event is a great opportunity for young ones to gain confidence and leadership skills," said Mandy Scott who coordinates the Little Cherokee Ambassador event. "It helps our younger generation community."

between the ages of 4 and scott@cherokee.org.

TAHLEQUAH, Okla. 12. Competitors will be - The Cherokee Nation divided into three separate is accepting applications age groups, 4-6, 7-9 and for the Little Cherokee 10-12. A male and female Ambassador Leadership winner will be chosen Competition that will be from each age group to held on Saturday, Aug. represent the tribe as goodwill ambassadors Place Where They Play promoting the values, in Tahlequah starting at culture and heritage of the Cherokee people.

> Complete applications should be submitted by Wednesday, July 11, and should include a copy of the contestant's tribal citizenship card and a brief biography. Those who have previously been chosen as the lead ambassador for their age groups are not eligible to compete.

Everyone is invited to become more involved attend the competition in their culture and gives and cheer on their favorite them a better sense of contender. For more how to represent his/her information or to request an application please Participants must be a contact Mandy Scott at Cherokee Nation citizen 918-207-3841 or mandy-

GAMES

& Fox tribe, Thorpe was born near present-day Prague in Indian Territory in May 1887 or 1888 (no birth certificate exists). He attended Haskell Indian Nations University in Lawrence, Kansas, before moving on to Carlisle Indian Industrial School in Carlisle, Penn. There, he quickly made a name for himself in track and field as well as baseball and lacrosse.

The track star turned his attention to football. In 1912 he led his school to the national collegiate championship with 25 touchdowns and 198 points. That same year, he competed at the Olympics in Stockholm, Sweden, in the pentathlon and decathlon, winning gold for both. As Sweden's King Gustav V presented his decathlon medal, he reportedly told Thorpe, "You, sir, are the greatest athlete in the world." "Thanks, King," Thorpe replied.

"Back when I was in kindergarten, we had plays where we had to find out information about famous athletes or someone we looked up to. I played Jim Thorpe," said Jake Roberts, who is coordinating the stickball competition in the games. "I think it's unique that were are representing, honoring what he did being a Native American and an athlete. I think it's a testament that we're still here and competing at a high level in sports."

One hundred years after his Olympic victory, the Jim Thorpe Native American Games honor the man who went on to lead a career in both professional football and baseball. But these games also honor all Native athletes who have endured the trials of sports, said Annetta Abbott, executive director of the

"That's kind of our mission statement," she said. "We realize that youth sports not only teaches youth to ... make positive choices in life, but by participating in sports, sometimes it provides that mentor kids are needing that they might not be getting in their home life."

Participating in sports tends to keep kids involved in school and in other positive, healthy activities, Abbott added.

"That's one of the really rewarding things for us that we see, these stories from coaches and kids about how they're making changes and positive choices in their lives," she said.

In creating the games, organizers studied other including the U.S. Indigenous Games held every other year in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, (the last games were in 2011). The Jim Thorpe games will also be held biannually, but they differ because they are open to anyone who is a member of an American Indian tribe or band. Athletes will not be required to make a state or regional team in order to register. Some tribes (Choctaws, Florida Seminoles) and groups, however, are creating teams to take, she said.

Native athletic events.

The games have sponsorship from Nike and National Coalition of Native American Athletes. All events are free to the public and will take place in several venues around the Oklahoma City area.

"We're able to offer first class venues," Abbott said. "If you're a 12-year-old softball player, getting to play at ASA Softball Hall of Fame Stadium - the same field where the women's college softball world series play - that's a big deal."

During the games, there will also be a basketball tournament, college career fair, a health fair, U.S. Tennis Association clinic and an obstacle course and rock-climbing wall set up by the National Guard. Special events include the NFL Punt, Pass and Kick and a 5K run, both of which take place June 16 and are free to kids 6-15 years to participate.

Heisman Trophy winner and NFL quarterback Sam Bradford of the St. Louis Rams is scheduled to do the coin-toss at the start of the allstar football game. Bradford is from Oklahoma and played for the University of Oklahoma before being drafted into professional football.

Organizers hope to expand the field of competition with more categories in succeeding years and creating many more "firsts" to come.

Proceeds from the games will go to the Jim Thorpe Association's Bright Path program created to build healthy, positive self-esteem in youth.

The Jim Thorpe Native American Games take place June 10-17 at various locations in Oklahoma City, including Oklahoma City University, the ASA Hall of Fame Stadium and Oklahoma City Tennis Center.

Events begin with the Parade of Nations Opening Ceremony on June 10 at Remington Park, 1 Remington Place, Oklahoma

For a schedule of events and location information, call (405) 208-9253 or go online to www. jimthorpegames.com.

KAREN SHADE | NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES

Friends Deon Jones, Choctaw, left, and Chad Davis, Mississippi Choctaw, have played football together since they were Tulsa Mighty Mites as children. The recent graduates of McLain High School play June 15 during Jim Thorpe Native American Games, scheduled to run June 10-17 in Oklahoma City.

Inside this issue:

- Okla. AG signs enforcement papers on casino
- Choctaw Days festival at DC museum
- Former Miss Indian Okla. to portray storyteller

TODAY'S INDEPENDENT INDIAN NEWS

- A FREE PUBLICATION

WWW.NATIVETIMES.COM

VOLUME 18 + ISSUE 24

PUBLISHED WEEKLY

JUNE 15, 2012

AP PHOTO I SURVIVAL INTERNATIONAL

In this Nov. 2011 photo released in 2012 by Survival International, an Awa Indian girl plays over a river in Maranhao state, Brazil. For generations, the Awa lived far away from the rest of humanity, following the seasons' rhythms in the lush Brazilian Amazon rainforest. Then the rest of the world found the Awa. Two bills now working their way through Brazil's Congress would further open indigenous territory to development and potentially weaken tribes' hold on their land.

Development push puts Brazil's indigenous at risk

MARCO SIBAJA Associated Press

BRASILIA, Brazil (AP) - For generations, the Awa lived far from the rest of humanity, picking fruit, hunting pigs and monkeys and following the seasons' rhythms in their patch of the lush Brazilian Amazon rainforest.

Then the rest of the world found the Awa. Loggers and ranchers came, cutting into the tribe's ancestral lands in search of profits. So did a rail line where trains shuttle tons of iron ore through the forest, from mines in the heart of the Amazon to Atlantic Ocean ports, with much of it headed for Chinese steel mills.

See DEVELOPMENT Continued on Page 4

Tribe argues about $193 million settlement

■ Among the largest recipients so far: the Osage Nation in Oklahoma at $380 million, Montana's Confederated Salish and Kootenai Tribes at $150 million, and the Colville tribe at $193 million.

SHANNON DININNY Associated Press

TOPPENISH, Wash. (AP) -The money hasn't arrived yet, but some citizens of a tribe in Eastern Washington disagree about how best to disburse a $193 million settlement from the federal government over mismanaged land royalties and accounts.

Hundreds of citizens of the Confederated Tribes of the Colville Reservation have signed a petition pushing for tribal citizens to receive 50 percent of the money, but the tribe's business council has proposed giving 20 percent to tribal members. The rest would go toward rehabilitation of timber and other lands, which supporters say would put many tribal citizens back to work following an economic downturn that forced the closure of its timber mills.

The spat is likely to play a role in the June 16 election for seven open seats on the 14-member council – a point made clear at an open session for tribal members living off the reservation to hear from the candidates.

"We're tired of not being heard and the council doing what they want with it. It's not about the money. It's about being heard," said Joanne Sanchez of Moxee, who organized the petition

More than 1,200 people have signed the petition so far, including 370 collected by one supporter who went door-to-door on the reservation, Sanchez said.

The Colvilles were among 114 tribes that filed suit against the federal government to reclaim money lost in mismanaged accounts and from royalties for oil, gas, grazing and timber rights on tribal lands. The government announced in April that it had agreed to pay more than $1 billion to settle some of those cases, but negotiations continue on dozens of other cases.

Among the largest recipients so far: the Osage Nation in Oklahoma at $380 million, Montana's Confederated Salish and Kootenai Tribes at $150 million, and the Colville tribe at $193 million.

Twelve Indian bands comprise the Colville tribe, whose reservation covers 1.4 million acres of northcentral Washington's Okanogan Highlands. The Colvilles have about 9,700 citizens, though as many as half have moved away from the reservation to find work or seek opportunities

About 100 people turned out at

See SETTLEMENT Continued on Page 2

Lawyers sue DSS over Cherokee girl's death

MITCH WEISS Associated Press

15-month-old girl's life was in danger North Carolina county. but failed to take action on complaints in a North Carolina court.

lawyer on behalf of Aubrey Kina-Marie Littlejohn's estate told The Associated Press. "And once we do that, we want immediately returned Wednesday. to hold those people accountable for their actions."

by Wijewickrama in connection with Aubrey's Jan. 10, 2011 death. The earlier one was filed in February with the North Carolina Industrial Commission, which handles wrongful death claims involving state agencies. That case is pending.

county DSS as a defendant along with seven current and former social the agency, Tammy Cagle.

The lawsuit asks for more than $10,000 in damages. It also accuses found that police and social workers was not given proper hydration."

County social workers knew that a has a reservation in the rural western

"The failure to properly investigate Aubrey behind. that could have prevented her death, and act on complaints of abuse and according to a lawsuit filed Wednesday neglect of Aubrey...represents a systemic failure of the Swain County "We're trying to find out who was DSS to fulfill its legal obligations with responsible," David Wijewickrama, a respect to children" who are Cherokee, the lawsuit said.

Calls to Swain County DSS were not

According to the lawsuit, there were three separate reports that This is the second complaint filed Aubrey was being abused by her great aunt, LadyBird Powell, between September and November 2010. One time, a family member reported that Powell had disciplined the toddler by "smacking her in the mouth."

But social workers ignored the complaints and continued to allow The new complaint filed in Swain Aubrey to live with Powell. Aubrey County Superior Court names the died the following January after being taken to a nearby hospital.

Powell was arrested and charged

An Associated Press investigation

Swain County of not doing enough had been aware of reports Aubrey was to protect Native American children. being mistreated while she was staying Aubrey was a member of the Eastern with Powell. Two months before CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) - Swain Band of Cherokee Indians, which Aubrey died, authorities removed a different child from Powell's home because of unsafe conditions, but left

> Two Swain County social service workers have been charged with falsifying records and indicted on obstruction of justice charges in Aubrey's death. They are accused of falsifying records to make it appear as though the department had done a thorough investigation into allegations that Aubrey was being abused.

> Wijewickrama said he doesn't want to do anything to obstruct the criminal cases pending Powell or the social workers.

"But evidence based on the warrants show that some employees have engaged in bad behavior," he said. "And we want to find out how high up the food chain that goes."

According to the lawsuit, Powell "willfully neglected and abused" Aubrey. On the day she died. Powell workers, including the former head of with second-degree murder in January left the toddler in a car seat for 12 2012 – a year after the toddler's death. hours "during which time she was not cared for or monitored, was not fed,

Tribal VP says alcohol-fueled arrest had upside

■ Just weeks after his tribe filed a lawsuit against some of the world's largest beer makers and distributors, Tom Poor Bear was arrested in an alcoholrelated incident.

KRISTI EATON Associated Press

PINE RIDGE, S.D. (AP) - As vice president of the Oglala Sioux Tribe, Tom Poor Bear has been tapped by his people to advocate for their rights, their land and their health. Yet, Poor Bear is also one of his people, not immune to the problems facing the dry Pine Ridge Indian Reservation in southwestern South Dakota.

Just weeks after the tribe filed a lawsuit against some of the world's largest beer makers and distributors, Poor Bear was arrested in an alcoholrelated incident that he believes was, in some ways, a good thing. It showed who really believed in him.

"People came to me and said, 'Tom, we don't care what they write about you. We know who you are. We know where your heart's at and your commitments at," said Poor Bear, speaking candidly about the February arrest for the first time.

"I tell you, it makes a man's heart beat good to hear his people commend me instead of condemn me," he said.

Poor Bear, 57, was arrested Feb. 19 on a charge of obstructing government function while receiving treatment at a hospital. A police report not subject to public records laws but obtained by The Associated Press listed Poor Bear's blood-alcohol content at .306, nearly quadruple the legal limit for driving.

While Poor Bear said the charge has been dropped, tribal law prevents non-tribal members from obtaining information about cases, so the AP could not independently confirm Poor Bear's assertion.

In early February, the Oglala Sioux Tribe filed a high-profile lawsuit alleging that several beer makers are knowingly contributing to the devastating alcohol-related problems on the Pine Ridge Reservation, which has banned alcohol since 1832.

The lawsuit, filed in the U.S. District Court of Nebraska, seeks $500 million in damages for the costs of health care, social services and child rehabilitation caused by chronic alcoholism on the reservation, located in one of the poorest regions in the United States. Approximately 40,000 people live there, half of

See ARREST Continued on Page 2

KRISTI EATON | ASSOCIATED PRESS Oglala Sioux Vice President Tom Poor Bear stands during May 21, 2012 protest in Rapid City, SD.

The United Keetoowah Band opened their casino in 1986 before the federal government determined whether the land was Indian land.

Okla. AG signs enforcement papers on UKB casino

AP and STAFF REPORTS

OKLAHOMA CITY Attorney General Scott Pruitt has signed an enforcement agreement with the United Keetoowah Band of Cherokee Indians over a tribal casino in Tahlequah.

The agreement signed June 8 requires the tribe to pay $2 million in damages and secure federal acceptance of the casino's land into trust by the end of July or cease gaming operations.

The Cherokee Nation, also based in Tahlequah, released a statement that afternoon that expressed disappointment by "what appears to be a deal cut" between the state and the UKB.

The tribe has actively opposed placing land into trust for other tribes within Cherokee Nation jurisdiction.

"Our position remains steadfast and unchanged,"

Cherokee Nation Principal Chief Bill John Baker stated. "I took an oath to protect and defend the sovereignty of the Cherokee Nation and I will never waiver from my oath. This is not a business issue or a gaming issue. This is an issue of sovereignty and our authority to govern our land."

The Keetoowah tribe opened the casino in 1986 before the federal government determined whether the land was Indian land. Under state law, casinos on non-Indian land are illegal.

But state and federal courts issued injunctions to prohibit enforcement of state gaming laws because of questions about whether the Keetoowah's casino was on Indian land.

The National Indian Gaming Commission concluded last year that the casino land was not Indian land and not eligible for gaming.

Fort Sill Apache casino proposal ignites turf wars in New Mexico

JERI CLAUSING Associated Press

AKELA FLATS, N.M. (AP) - It's a 30-acre tract along Interstate 10 with a temporary building where travelers can stop for a burger and beer. It's also the nation's newest Indian reservation, designated as such last year for the Fort Sill Apache.

But as the tribe moves forward with controversial plans to use the reservation to build a casino that could capture truckers and drivers ready for a break halfway between Los Angeles and Dallas, it has reignited old turf wars with the state and with other tribes concerned about competition gamblers.

The tribe recently won a first hurdle in its quest to build the casino with a ruling from the Bureau of Indian Affairs that the 30 acres the tribe has been trying to develop into a gambling operation for years is indeed eligible.

But the roadside reservation is only big enough for a casino and possibly a hotel, raising questions about the tribe's sincerity in seeking the reservation status as part of its quest to return to its New Mexico homelands.

Fort Sill Apache Tribal Chairman Jeff Haozous says it's a bit of chickenand-egg question. The tribe, currently based in southwest Oklahoma, needs the casino to get income to buy more land to help its members return, he said.

"The goal is to repatriate the tribe," Haozous said. "Obviously that would require more than 30 acres. But that would also require more economic resources. With more resources, we can buy more land and develop more businesses."

The Fort Sill Apache Tribe has roughly 685 members.

Gov. Susana Martinez opposes the casino, saying the tribe agreed it would not attempt to build a casino in Akela Flats when the land was put into trust about 10 years ago.

The head of the BIA office in Albuquerque last month sent a letter seeking comment on the proposed casino from the governor and local elected officials in southern New Mexico, as well as the Mescalero Apache tribe and the Isleta Pueblo, which operate the two Indian casinos closest to Akela Flats.

Frank Lujan, governor of the Isleta Pueblo south of Albuquerque, said he is unsure whether his or other New Mexico tribes will support the Fort Sill Apache proposal.

"Everybody has a different take on it," he said. "In a sense yes, in a sense no. It's kind of like one of these things where we want all Native Americans to succeed. At the same time, we are in competition."

Lujan said the casino is far enough south of Albuquerque, about 200 miles, that it's not as big of a concern for his tribe as it likely is for the Mescalero

Jeff Haozous, Fort Sill Apache Tribal Chairman

Apache, who run the Inn of the Mountain Gods hotel and casino in Ruidoso. That casino is the only tribal casino in southern New Mexico, and draws heavily on Texas gamblers.

Mescalero Apache officials did not return calls from The Associated Press, though the tribe has in the past opposed a separate attempt by the Jemez Pueblo to build an off-reservation casino in Anthony, N.M., which is close to El Paso, Texas.

Lujan, however, said he does not dispute the tribe's right to a reservation in Akela Flats, about 20 miles east of Deming.

"That is a good thing for them," Lujan said. "That is their homeland. That's where they came from. Any time you get back what you had, that's primary."

Bob Haozous, a Santa Fe artist who is the Fort Sill Apache chairman's cousin, has held a number of meetings around the state in recent months. He's hoping to get the governor, the other tribes and nearby communities to support the casino. Officials in Deming, which has one of the state's highest unemployment rates, have been supportive. But a spokesman for Martinez this week said her position has not changed.

Still, gaming officials say it's possible for the BIA to grant the reservation permission to operate a casino without Martinez's approval. Likewise, the state could go to court to fight the BIA if it does. That means the dispute, which first erupted when the tribe unsuccessfully tried to put gambling in its roadside trailer in the late '90s, could drag on for years.

Bob Haozous said the casino is overshadowing the real issue for the Fort Sill Apache Tribe, which is the legal successor of the Chiricahua, Warm Springs, Nednais and Bedonke bands of Apache Indians. They lived in southwestern New Mexico and Arizona until they were removed and made prisoners of war when Geronimo surrendered.

They were first taken to Florida, then to Alabama and finally Oklahoma, Bob Haozous said. He refers to the tribe's Oklahoma trust lands as their "prison camp."

"We haven't had a homeland since 1886," Bob Haozous said. "Before that, the whole area West of the Rio Grande was ours. ... My dream is that we get some economic incentive to start purchasing land and bringing people back."

SETTLEMENT

the session last Wednesday at the Yakama Nation's tribal headquarters in Toppenish, 20 miles south of Yakima and 190 miles from the Colvilles' tribal headquarters in Nespelem.

In addition to making the case for more money for individual tribal members, many argued for better educational opportunities and job training, improved services for seniors and veterans and health care coverage.

Most tribal citizens receive health care at Indian Health Service clinics, but those aren't as available for people who leave the reservation, said Larry White, 61, a retired veteran who lives

"It's kind of shameful," he said. "We move and live and travel. This health care issue needs to be addressed."

Two incumbents and two challengers for the seven seats were on hand to share their thoughts. All said they would support a 50 percent share of the settlement for tribal citizens.

Councilman Harvey Moses Jr. acknowledged that he had changed his position after receiving a "whole bunch of calls" from people who need the money, but said the rest of the money would have to go toward rehabilitating the isolated reservation's natural resources.

"We talk about education - we pay for that through our natural resources. Other tribes are closer to the population centers. We're not," he said. "There are ideas out there to diversify our resources. We need to look at those."

The tribes filed suit after Elouise Cobell, a member of the Blackfeet Tribe from Browning, Mont., brought a similar claim on behalf of thousands of individual Indians over the government's mismanagement of their trust

eat better. move more. be tobacco free.

Interested in making Oklahoma a healthier place to live, work, learn and play? Consider joining a coalition in your area.

ATOKA AND COAL COUNTIES

Atoka/Coal Partnership for Change 580.380.0463

BECKHAM AND ROGER MILLS COUNTIES

Oklahoma Unified Resources (OUR) Turning Point Coalition 580.225.6247

BRYAN COUNTY

Bryan County Turning Point 580.924.4285 ext 254

CARTER COUNTY Carter County Turning Point

580.223.7075 ext 314

CLEVELAND COUNTY Cleveland County

Turning Point 405.307.6602

COMANCHE COUNTY Fit Kids of Southwest

Oklahoma 580.585.6686

JACKSON COUNTY Jackson County Community Health Action Team

580.482.7308 KIOWA AND CADDO

COUNTIES

Kiowa Coalition and Caddo County Interagency Coalition 580.726.3383

LOGAN COUNTY Logan County Partnership

918.282.3485

LOVE AND JOHNSTON COUNTIES

Fit Communities - Love and Johnston Consortium 580.371.2470

McCURTAIN, CHOCTAW AND PUSHMATAHA COUNTIES Tri-County Consortium

580.298.6624

MUSKOGEE COUNTY Muskogee County

Turning Point 405.683.0321

OKLAHOMA COUNTY Wellness Now Coalition

405.425.4315 OKMULGEE COUNTY

Okmulgee County Wellness Coalition

918.633.3202 TULSA COUNTY

Family Health Coalition 918.595.4039

Point Partnership

No coalitions in your area? Find your local Turning and learn more at ShapeYourFutureOK.com.

ARREST

Poor Bear knows how his alcohol-fueled arrest looks to those within and outside the reservation.

whom are tribal citizens.

The lawsuit also targets four beer stores in Whiteclay, Neb., a town near the reservation's border. The town has only about a dozen residents but sold nearly 5 million cans of beer in 2010, according to the Poor Bear knows how his alcohol-fueled arrest looks to those within and outside the reservation.

"They think I'm a hypocrite because I filed a lawsuit against the alcohol companies and then I go and have a few myself," he said.

It wasn't, however, his decision to file the lawsuit, but the tribe's Law and Order committee. He does support the lawsuit, and believes alcohol should be legalized on the reservation to help increase revenue, but only if there is a referendum vote and proper laws are in place.

"I don't drink every day. I'll maybe have a beer once or twice a month, if that, especially during the summer, and I'll go to good Indian rodeos," he said.

Poor Bear's battle against Whiteclay is a personal one: The bodies of his brother, Wally Black Elk Jr., and cousin, Ron Hard Heart, were discovered June 8, 1999, near Whiteclay. Their deaths are unresolved.

Each June, Poor Bear organizes a Justice March, a two-mile trek from Pine Ridge to Whiteclay. This year's march is scheduled for Saturday.

Poor Bear said his original intent for the march was to "find justice" for his relatives' deaths, but that the media discussion about Whiteclay seems only to focus on alcohol.

Poor Bear and James Toby Big Boy, chairman of the Judiciary Committee of the tribe, also wrote a letter to U.S. Attorney Brendan Johnson, asking him to re-open and reinvestigate 39 deaths in and around the reservation, dating back to the 1970s. Johnson has said he will re-examine the Poor Bear believes his activism sets him apart from other tribal council members, past and present. He has argued in front of a United Nations special rapporteur that the Black Hills should be returned to the Lakota people, and regularly protests the proposed Keystone XL pipeline.

An Oglala Sioux flag pinned to Poor Bear's trademark black vest bears witness to his leadership lineage - his father, Enos Poor Bear, was president of the tribe in the 1960s and designed the flag.

Tom Poor Bear is unsure if he'll run for re-election in the fall. He's been involved with the American Indian Movement since the 1970s and tribal government since 1998.

"You have to have thick skin to be in tribal government. You get attacked," he said.

His mission, though, remained at the front of his mind: "I want to give my people hope of a better tomorrow."

Standing Rock drug case prosecuted in 2 courts

■ The defendants who are being prosecuted in tribal court face misdemeanor charges, which would likely have to be bumped up to felonies in federal court or dropped altogether.

DAVE KOLPACK Associated Press

FARGO, N.D. (AP) – Authorities say a drug trafficking case on the Standing Rock Indian Reservation in North Dakota and South Dakota is unique because it will be prosecuted in both federal and tribal courts.

Seventeen people were arrested in the case known as Operation Prairie Thunder. Prosecutors say 10 defendants were scheduled to appear in federal court in North Dakota, two in federal court in South Dakota, and five in Standing Rock tribal court.

Timothy Purdon, U.S. attorney for North Dakota, and Brendan Johnson, U.S. attorney for South Dakota, say such cooperative efforts between the two courts are unique but necessary.

"Cooperation like this means better law enforcement, better prosecutions and safer communities," Purdon said.

Said Johnson, "These indictments illustrate the progress that is being made in Standing Rock and throughout Indian country in South Dakota and North Dakota."

The defendants who are being prosecuted in tribal court face misdemeanor charges, which would likely have to be bumped up to felonies in federal court or dropped altogether.

U.S. Magistrate Judge Charles Miller of North Dakota made a rare visit to Standing Rock to handle initial appearances.

"Providing adequate representation for tribal members often involves big challenges of geography for indigent clients," said Neil Fulton, who heads the federal public defender's office in the Dakotas. "Bringing the courthouse to the defendants in certain cases is a creative way to respect tribal sovereignty and facilitate adequate and timely representation for all persons charged with crimes."

He had no specific comment about the case.

The federal court defendants are charged with possession with intent to distribute drugs. At least six people are charged with dealing prescription drugs. The tribal court charges are for criminal sale of drugs, criminal possession of drugs and criminal possession of drug paraphernalia.

Defendants charged in federal court in North Dakota are Casev Dogskin, Donald White Lightning, Francis Lester, Bryan See Walker, Paul Miner, Sage Claymore, James Grant, Muriel Long Feather, Winfield Kills Crow and Allen Siegfried. Chaske Little Bear and Francine Jensen are charged in federal court in South Dakota.

Tribal court defendants are Lance Summers, Chad Yellow Lodge, Odette Elk, Rodney Claymore and Claude Ramsey.

Grant Walker, the Standing Rock chief prosecutor, said it's important for the tribe to participate in the

"By being a partner in this operation, the Standing Rock Tribe is able, through the exercise of its own sovereignty, to make its own important contribution to the safety of its community," Walker

The investigation took 14 months and was conducted by the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the Bureau of Indian Affairs Office of Justice Services on the Standing Rock

Ex-Delaware housing head

TULSA, Okla. (AP) – The former executive director of the Delaware Tribe's housing authority will be formally sentenced

Sept. 6 after pleading guilty to a federal charge of embezzling admits embezzlement

VINITA 918-256-5585

LANGLEY 918-782-0011

MONKEY ISLAND 918-257-8869

www.okstatebank.com Equal Housing Lender Native American Owned

tahlequahrecycling.com 918-316-5856 "Changing the culture of waste." TA

TIMES recycles with Tahlequah Recycling Incorporated... shouldn't you?

NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES

Publisher & Editor LISA SNELL

editor@nativetimes.com Contributing Writers

Dana Attocknie WESLEY MAHAN KAREN SHADE

Advertising Sales KATHLEEN ROBERTSON LISA SNELL advertising@nativetimes.com

SHELBY HICKS STEVE LACY WESLEY MAHAN MICHAEL MARRIS KATHLEEN ROBERTSON

BRENDA SLAUGHTER

The Native American Times, formerly the Oklahoma Indian Times, is published weekly (except the last week of the year) by Lisa Hicks Snell. Mailing address is PO Box 411 Tahlequah, OK 74465. All the contents within the Native American Times are copyrighted material. Any reproduction, redistribution without the written consent of the NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES is strictly

> Each week's issue is available for free download online at: www.nativetimes.com prohibited.

Subscription rates: $65.00 for fifty-two issues, $32.50 for twenty-six issues, or $16.25 for thirteen issues. A single copy is $1.25 (Rates are for postage and handling) Send check or money order to:

> NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES Attn: Subscriptions P.O. Box 411 Tahlequah, OK 74465-0411

Phone: (918) 708-5838 Fax: (888) 689-4873

Postmaster: Send Change of Address Form 579 to: NATIVE AMERICAN TIMES P.O. Box 411, Tahlequah, OK 74465

WWW.NATIVETIMES.COM News from the crossroads of Indian Country

www.twitter.com/nativetimes

NY offers $3M to settle Onondaga protesters' suit

SYRACUSE, N.Y. (AP) -New York state has agreed to pay nearly $3 million to scores of people beaten, arrested or chased away by state police during a protest on the Onondaga Indian Nation 15 years ago, the attorney for dozens of the plaintiffs said.

Terrance Hoffmann told the Post-Standard of Syracuse in a story published Sunday that the state and another lawyer representing others in the lawsuit have agreed to settle the case for just under $3 million. Hoffmann represents about half of the 98 people involved.

The settlement won't be final until all plaintiffs sign it,

their dreams.

Hoffmann said.

State officials wouldn't comment on the settlement. The state would admit no wrongdoing, Hoffmann said.

Troopers and more than 100 protesters, mostly American Indians, clashed on May 18, 1997, on Onondaga land just south of Syracuse. The lawsuit accused troopers of using excessive force in breaking up a peaceful protest.

long after confrontations between state police and Seneca Indians on one of the tribe's western New York reservations south of Buffalo. Seneca demonstrators had shut down the New York

AICCOK OKC CHAPTER SCHOLARSHIP

Help a deserving Native American student reach for

OVERVIEW

The OKC Chapter has historically provided scholarships for many years. Typically one acholarship is awarded to the top male and female entrants, as decided by the OKC Chapter

Board of Directors. In 2012, we plan to notify the recipient student(s) by May 10 to allow them to list their scholarship in their graduation materials. We will present the actual

SPONSORSHIPS

There are 2 ways that your organization can help:

2. Contribute to the AICCOK-OKC Chapter General

1. Sponsor a branded, stand-alone scholarship. (Minimum award $250). Special emphasis can be requested (e.g. math scholarship award at the August luncheon.

or science, healthcare, etc).

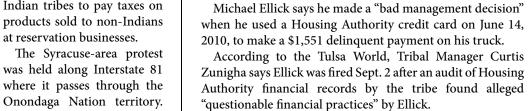

Scholarship Fund.

The protest was held not

Thruway where it passes through reservation land to protest the state's efforts to get Indian tribes to pay taxes on products sold to non-Indians

The Syracuse-area protest was held along Interstate 81 where it passes through the Onondaga Nation territory. State police officials have said the troopers broke up the demonstration out of concern

Under the settlement, payments would range from $8,000 for protesters who were chased away by police to $200,000 to two men who were beaten by baton-wielding troopers, Hoffmann said.

tribal funds.

Ellick pleaded guilty June 7 only to the June 2010 transaction but agreed that he owes an additional $1,373 in restitution. Assistant Federal Public Defender Stephen Greubel said for the public's safety. that amount is for other personal transactions Ellick made using tribal funds.

Metal Roofing & Siding

Professional Construction and Home Repairs

Free Estimates

Charles Snell 918-507-2902

Native American Contractor

Keeves Kenovations

Professional Construction, Remodeling & Repairs

Bathrooms • Kitchens • Paint • Tile • Trim • Plumbing Electrical • Solar Panels • Windmills • Winterizing Quality Work • Free Estimates

918-637-6736

johnwilliamreeves@juno.com Serving Mayes & Cherokee Counties

Big Brothers Big Sisters Traditional language of Oklahoma

 $\cdot$  Fancy dancing  $\cdot$ Beadwork Shooting hoops

Stickball · Drawing

Think of the possibilities! Step up and mentor a Native American child. Commit to changing a child's future. Commit to creating an impact in your tribal community.

How it Works

Step One: Fill out an application at www.bbbsok.org Step Two: Submit application. Receive phone call from BBBS to set up an interview.

Step Three: Attend an in-person interview. Bring copy of Drivers License, Proof of Insurance, Three References and complete a criminal background check.

Step Four: Once approved – matched with a child with similar

Step Five: Pat on the back...you're making a difference!!!

All matches are supported by professional staff at local BBBS agencies. BBBS Match Support Specialists regularly consult with volunteers, children, and parents.

Want more information?

Contact Kristy Smithson, BBBSOK Manager of Native American Partnerships, by phone (405) 606-6309 or email kristy.smithson@bbbsok.org | www.bbbsok.org

CONTACTS

To sponsor a scholarship, contact: James Lambertus, OKC Chapter Chair, aiccokc@earthlink.net, 405-650-5996 or Fran Smith, Treasurer, fran.smith@bank2online.com 405-946-2265.

To make a contribution to the Fund online, please click: http://tiny.cc/aiccokc_scholarshipfund

NATIVE AMERICAN HIRING PREFERENCE?

Advertise your jobs to Native Americans! E-mail your ad for a quote to: lisa@nativetimes.com

New Mexico education chief rejects school district split

FELICIA FONSECA Associated Press

FLAGSTAFF, Ariz. (AP) -New Mexico's top education official has rejected a proposal for the petitioners, said decisions up largely of American Indian would operate are for the school students.

Skandera said Friday that a group of Kirtland, N.M., residents bring forth mission and vision Central Consolidated School interest of public education or documents the group provided of the proposal appeared to be her request was for persuasive by the school board, and it would at that time. irresponsible of her to approve it because people cannot get along, statute be damned, we don't care. she said.

have been present in the district the facts. We talk the talk, but for years can finally be put aside we are not about to take on the if the adults in charge choose to Navajo tribe." Manning said. do so," she said.

of a district that spans 3,000 Rights Commission, American Indian students.

public hearing on the proposal and language in the classroom. that she said generally was civil comments and allegations of Skandera said was "so bizarre on to generation," Shelly said. its face that it is unexplainable on grounds other than race."

include parts of the reservation forward. in a new district because it wasn't petition.

rigorous curriculum for students, divisions among community decreased costs and increased can be healed. accessibility to school board lawsuits arising from violations both sides are honored.

of civil and voting rights if the district, which has a 90 percent Navajo student population, was

Byron Manning, a spokesman to split a school district made on how a new school district board and superintendent to Secretary-designate Hanna make, and it would have been presumptive of the petitioners to failed to show that dividing the statements. Manning said he was most disappointed that District would be in the best Skandera threw out a majority of the students. The driving force after the hearing. Skandera said disagreement over actions taken arguments, not new information

"What they're saying is 'the We don't care that you have the "The struggles and issues that data. We don't care that you have

The Central Consolidated Tensions have long flared School District as a whole, among residents in the district Navajo Nation President Ben over what students should be Shelly, tribal Vice President taught and who is in control Rex Lee Jim, the tribe's Human square miles and has about Navajo communities and some 6,100 students, making it one members of the Tribal Council of New Mexico's largest based had spoken against the divide. on enrollment and one of They argued it amounted to the country's largest serving segregation of Navajos living on the reservation. They also Skandera's decision came less argued that a split would undo than a month after she held a efforts to teach Navajo culture

"They are still children of but also included disparaging this nation, and we must do everything we can to ensure they racism. The proposal would have have the opportunity to learn split the district at the Navajo the precious Navajo knowledge reservation boundary, which handed down from generation

School board President Matthew Tso thanked Skandera She did not consider a second for her decision that he said option from proponents to would help move the district

Skandera commended the certified as part of the original petitioners for the work they put into the proposal and said The proponents had argued her decision now provides that a split would lead to more an opportunity to overcome greater parental involvement, members. Yet Tso and Manning less travel time for students, say they're not so sure the rift

To the school board, Skandera members and a superintendent. said listening to the residents of But at no time did the Kirtland is not an abstract hope petitioners mention a strategic on her part but an "absolute plan or vision for creating a new expectation," and her staff district or propose a curriculum would be monitoring the board's for students, Skandera said. meetings to ensure that the She also saw the potential for students' and parents' rights on

AAIP receives grant for Native students' health careers program

■ Shakopee Mdewakanton Sioux Community gift will fund program for future M.D.s

JASON McCARTY

OKLAHOMA CITY Association of American Indian Physicians (AAIP) was recently awarded a $100,000 matching grant by the Shakopee Mdewakanton Sioux Community to assist American Indian and Alaska Native (AI/AN) students pursuing a healthcare career.

AAIP's Careers in Health for Native Students program was created to increase the number of tribal members in the health and wellness workforce. AAIP will establish an educational healthcare pipeline to assist students navigate their education, training and career development.

"Encouraging Native students to pursue careers as physicians, health professionalsandbiomedicalresearchers is one of our primary goals and the gift from the Shakopee Tribe will allow us to continue this critical work," said AAIP Executive Director Margaret Knight.

The tribe's matching donation will be contributed after AAIP raises the initial $100,000.

Mdewakanton Shakopee Community Chairman Stanley R. Crooks said, "We hope other tribes and organizations will support this program so that more youth are encouraged to study the Science, Technology, Engineering, and Math fields with the ultimate goal of helping tribal youth become the leaders of tomorrow. Our people feel good when they see American Indian physicians and healthcare workers involved in their communities. We look forward to matching this pledge for $100,000."

AAIP President Dr. Donna Galbreath echoed Chairman Crooks sentiments on the importance of seeing tribal members in healthcare roles locally.

"Because Native American people suffer from chronic illnesses like diabetes, tuberculosis, pneumonia and influenza at far higher rates than other racial populations, we need to groom our own citizens to be physicians and prevention specialists," Galbreath said. "Indian people respond better when their healthcare needs are in the hands of Native physicians and other professionals who understand their culture and value both traditional and Western healing methods."

The American Association of Medical Colleges last year reported the number of AI/AN accepted into medical school has substantially and steadily declined over the past eight years. According to the organization, there were 465 medical school applicants and 202 enrollees in 2004; by 2011 those numbers had declined to 379 and 157 respectively.

As fewer AI/AN physicians have gone into practice over the past decade, Native population, in contrast, has increased by 26.7 % from 2000 to 2010, according to the U.S. Census.

"The cross-section of these two trends - fewer doctors and larger populations - is where we are today and why we must address this troubling disparity in our healthcare systems and increase the number of Native physicians in Indian Country," Knight said.

Website offers Natives diabetes forum

LAWRENCE, Kan. Two Native American professors living in Kansas say Type 2 diabetes has ravaged their race for so many years they felt compelled to help spread information and hope for those battling the disease.

Rhonda LeValdo and Teresa Trumbly Lamsam said they hope the Native American tradition of storytelling will help combat the spread among Native Americans of Type 2 diabetes, a chronic blood-sugar disease often triggered by obesity.

"It seemed inevitable," said Lamsam, 50, a visiting journalism professor at the University of Kansas who grew up on an Osage reservation in Pawhuska, Okla. "You're going to get older. You're going to get diabetes because you're Indian. When I saw complications, I used to think, 'I wonder how long before they lose their feet?' Amputations were so common."

Diabetes also ran in the family of LeValdo, 37, a member of the Acoma Pueblo from New Mexico. LeValdo is a media instructor at Haskell Indian

Teresa Trumbly Lamsam

Nations University and president of the Native American Journalists Association.

In response, the two women launched WellboundStorytellers.com, a website that originally invited Native American journalists to discuss their health struggles and successes, The Kansas City Star reported. Within days, Native Americans across the country were asking that the site be opened to bloggers too.

"We have a Hawaiian guy who is working on the website. I have an educator and filmmaker who say they want to be part of it," Lamsam said. "They are all on health journeys and they want to share and receive support."

Diabetes is only one of several health problems among Native Americans and Pacific Islanders, who rank at or next to the bottom of nearly every health category among all

"Diabetes, obesity, heart disease, cancer, suicide rates," said Darryl Tonemah, a Native American health psychologist of Kiowa, Comanche and Tuscarora descent who is a board member of the American Diabetes Association.

Lamsam said the website originally was part of journalism research she was doing on the mainstream media's coverage of a federal initiative known as the Special Diabetes Program for Indians, which has spent about $1.5 billion over the last 15 years battling diabetes in Native American communities.

During the research, LeValdo's uncle died from complications from diabetes, and she and Lamsam decided to start

"We thought we needed to be role models," Lamsam said.

DEVELOPMENT

The threat to the Awa grew so grave that it caught the attention of the British-based indigenous rights group Survival International, which designated them "the world's most endangered tribe" and made their preservation its top campaign priority this

While the Awa may face the most immediate threat, tribes across Brazil are locked in the same struggle as they battle loggers, ranchers, miners and farmers who often invade government-demarcated reserves. Brazil's maturing economy is driving much of the development, as is renewed strength of the country's farm sector, which recently pushed through reforms loosening Brazil's forest protection law.

Watchdog groups say more conflict is inevitable as government-backed projects such as hydroelectric dams and roads bring thousands of settlers to remote areas. Two bills now working their way through Brazil's Congress would further open in digenousterritory to development and potentially weaken tribes' hold on their land.

"We're seeing that the conflicts Indians are having are becoming more potent in recent years, with a series of violent clashes stoked by the agenda of the federal government to develop remote areas," said Cleber Buzatto, executive director of the Brazil-based indigenous rights group CIMI.

For the Awa and other tribes, however, contact with the outside world hasn't just brought threats: Help is also on the way.

The issue will take center stage during this month's "People's Summit" in Rio de Janeiro, a gathering linked to the annual World Social Forum, also held in Brazil. The summit is expected to draw thousands of activists to an alternative to the United Nations' Rio+20 conference on sustainable development happening in Rio at the same time.

The plight of the formerly isolated Awa even drew the attention of Academy Awardwinning actor Colin Firth, who appeared in a Survival International video urging people to contact Brazilian Justice Minister Jose Eduardo Cardozo and tell him to send police to protect indigenous

"This is our chance right now to actually do something,"

Firth says in the clip.

On June 5, Brazilian President Dilma Rousseff created two new nature reserves, as well as seven indigenous territories in the Amazon, covering thousands of square miles across the country.

For Brazilian farm groups, protecting tens of thousands of indigenous people is too high a price to pay for blocking production of soy, beef and other agricultural goods, exports of which have helped fuel rising fortunes in Brazil and a growing middle class. In total, 11 percent of Brazilian territory and 22 percent of the Amazon have been turned over to indigenous groups.

"Who benefits from this? Not our country, which today enjoys the best and cheapest food in the world and boasts of being the globe's secondlargest food exporter," Sen. Katia Abreu, president of Brazil's National Agriculture and Livestock Federation, wrote in a recent opinion article for the newspaper Folha de S. Paulo.

 $\hbox{``Neither do the Indians, who}\$ as their numbers show don't need more physical space, but sanitation, education and an efficient health system. They need, in short, a better life, like all of us."

At a news conference on Monday, Abreu added that any expansion of indigenous beyond reserves those originally established before 1993 is "not in accordance with the constitution and lawless."

Federal agencies responsible for protecting the indigenous say they are doing virtually everything in their power to stop the encroachment, but acknowledge their powers are limited while policing with limited means roughly 480,000 square miles of Indian reserves, an area larger than Sweden.

As a sign of the government's limited reach in the Amazon, about 180 illegal sawmills have sprung up around the Awa's land, often in plain sight, with giant trucks roaring through forest roads day and night bringing fresh lumber.

In Mato Grosso do Sul the 40,000-strong state, Guarani-Kaiowa tribe has seen many members pushed into makeshift camps along highways and tent villages along rivers, as they lobby to have their lands recognized legally.

Economic hardship has sparked a rash of suicides. More than 550 tribe members killed themselves from 2000 to 2011, according to statistics from Brazil's secretariat on indigenous health. An additional 282 were murdered, mostly in fights over land, between 2003 and 2011, according to CIMI, making up half of all native people killed in Brazil during the period. Guarani-Kaiowa elder Nisio Gomes was gunned down in November by masked men, his body dragged into a waiting pickup and spirited away. His remains have yet to be found. "We've gone through many difficulties, and I can't even walk in the cities because of the risks," said Valmir Gomes, Nisio's son, while lobbying in Brasilia for the tribe's own reserve. "We need the demarcation so that we can freely walk on our own lands."

Indigenous activists, however, say experience has shown demarcating land is clearly not enough.

CIMI registered 33 invasions of reserves in 2010, the most recent year for which statistics are available. At least 10 of those conflicts turned deadly, with violent fights breaking out between the indigenous and those entering the land. That's roughly the same number of invasions and conflicts CIMI has reported annually over the last five years.

The Brazilian government officially recognized the Awa reserve - some 455 square miles in Maranhao, Brazil's poorest state – in 2005, but the incursions continued. That's included people entering with guns and threatening federal agents charged with patrolling the area. Satellite images show that nearly a third of the Awa's forest has been logged and much of the area taken over by cattle ranchers and farmers. Of the tribe's few hundred members, an estimated 60 to 100 of them have never had any contact with the outside

In a Survival International video, Wamaxua Awa, a young Awa, says he spent years running away from outsiders encroaching on tribal land before recently leaving the forest and living in a village with other contacted Awa. His three brothers still live deep inside the forest, he says.

"When I lived in the forest I had a good life," he says in a soft, timid voice while wearing a modern, V-neck shirt. "Now if I meet one of the uncontacted Awa in the forest, I'll say, 'Don't leave! Stay in the forest.' I'd tell them to stay, that it's better in the forest. 'There's nothing in the outside for you,' I'd say."

Associated Press writers Jenny Barchfield in Rio de Janeiro, Bradley Brooks, Stan Lehman and Renata Brito in Sao Paulo and Jack Chang in Mexico City contributed to this report.

COMMENTARY

A disastrous flood that brought out the best and the worst in people

TIM GIAGO (Nanwica Kciii) Notes from Indian Country © 2012 Unity South Dakota

A natural disaster brings out the best and the worst in people.

The 40th Anniversary of the Rapid City Flood of 1972 has brought out mostly the best in the actions of the people during and after the flood. 238 people lost their lives that night, many of them Native Americans by reason of of the Rosebud Sioux Tribe, defend their own racism. geography: most of them lived in what is now called the flood plain along the banks of Rapid Dakota to understand the raged across the city. but during the flood several accommodate the survivors by-side with other Native financial slack. But the old Americans they would later racial hatreds of some of label as GOONS.

lived in Rapid City and along I was working in a who just happened to be on I got up on the morning of June been washed across fields and relations the most are those

The takeover at Wounded next morning, Rapid City's Knee by the American Indian Mayor Don Barnett quickly Movement would happen just authorized Rapid City motels seven months after the flood, to open up their rooms to members of AIM rolled up with assurances that the City their sleeves and worked side- would take up most of the the motel owners came out But in the aftermath of in the open. They began to this disaster politics between refuse rooms to Indians and the different Indian factions this could have led to certain were set aside. AIM leader conflict if Mayor Barnett had Russell Means was right in the not stepped up and declared thick of pulling bodies from an end to this racial aggression the flood waters along with and threaten those motel members of the Dick Wilson owners who did not cooperate administration. In 1973 they with threats of reprisal. It is would be at war against each ironic that even in the face of death and destruction; there RubenMcCloskey, amember are still those who jealously

But along with the "best" assignment with the National 10 before heading to work I under river bridges like so living far from this city and there were also instances Guard that fateful week, did watched the morning news many toys. Finding my way have not shared in the efforts to of the "worst." It is hard for their best to save lives even and was aghast when the news through the maze to find the bring about positive change. people not living in South as the waters of Rapid Creek of the flood was announced. I immediately got on the thread of racial prejudice that As the victims sought phone and tried to reach my existed back in the 1970s. shelter that night and the mother who lived in Rapid City and through her I would but she was safe and sound. be able to find out about my brothers, sisters, aunts, uncles the rest of the family and taller than all of the others and and cousins. But as happens in most disasters, all of the phone survived. lines were either stressed or out of service.

I called my boss and told him what had happened and boys, had risen in the torrents he told me to head on home. of rain that poured from I drove non-stop as far as the skies that night of June 9 Lusk, Wyoming until I could no longer keep my eyes open community that would rise it, the best and the worst of so I pulled over and caught a from the mud and debris couple of hours of sleep before to become the health and after the Flood of 1972. Thank finishing the trip to Rapid apartment where my mother lived was an adventure in

By that time work crews

My mom was frightened, She had been in contact with all of them had surprisingly

The river or creek as we called it, Rapid Creek, a place where we swam and fished as and had wreaked havoc on a economic center of Western goodness the best prevailed. South Dakota.

There are those who still and heavy equipment had criticize the lack of racial already made a good dent in harmony in this city, but even was born and educated on the the cleanup and when I came those images have begun to Pine Ridge Indian Reservation. into town on Highway 79 I change. There are Indians and He was the founder of The was appalled at the extent of non-Indians working together Lakota Times, Indian Country the disaster. Entire sections to tear down the wall of racial Today, Lakota Journal and with Don Loudner, a member construction job in Elko, of town were unrecognizable. prejudice without fanfare. Native Sun News. He can be of the Crow Creek Sioux Tribe Nevada on June 9, 1972. When Cars and mobile homes had And those who criticize race reached at UnitySoDak1@

The criticisms I offer in my writings are called constructive by those who know me best. Change often follows disaster and Mayor Barnett stood most of the citizens of Rapid City have no idea of the racial issues he faced with courage and intelligence during and after the year following the greatest disaster in the history of Rapid City.

But as history would have people came out during and

Tim Giago, an Oglala Lakota,

Expanding farm credit opportunities

TOM VILSACK USDA Secretary

Today, American agriculture is thriving. Farm income is strong, and we are in the three best years for agricultural exports in history.

agriculture sector is driving to get started.

are creating this success.

just starting out or who have Farmer smaller farming operations.

While producers have been Youth Loans. able to increase their bottom costs are often high to enter the commercial credit. agriculture sector. Land costs, can quickly add up and many creating jobs, and ensuring Service Agency steps in to 11,000 loans in 2008 to 15,000 we're committed to supporting with commercial lenders to farmers. the farmers and ranchers who provide guaranteed loans ranchers is access to credit - affordable credit, including as we work to ensure that all farmers, in particular for those who are loans under the Beginning Americans have access to the veterans. and Development Program and by USDA.

That's where USDA's Farm farmers and ranchers from paperwork burden.

Ultimately, we're able to help line over recent years, startup many borrowers transition to steps to ensure flexibility that Americans have the most help. The agency offers direct loans in 2011. In fact, more credit cards or personal loans, White House Rural Council, affordable food supply of any loans for farm ownership or than 40 percent of USDA's farm which carry high interest rates Secretary Vilsack and USDA developed nation. At USDA, operations, and also works loans now go to beginning and have less flexible payment are taking steps to strengthen

Rancher programs and services offered in our programs. Just last Since 2009, USDA has made month, USDA invited public equipment and other expenses a record amount of farm loans comments on a proposed rule to purchase or operate a farm through the Farm Service that will make "microloans" Agency – more than 128,000 of up to 35,000 dollars simply don't have access to the loans totaling nearly 18 billion available for new farmers, number of loans to beginning with half of the traditional

Small farmers often rely on and food supply in the world.

As chair of the first-ever schedules, to finance their services for rural businesses In addition, we have operations. The goal of this and entrepreneurs creating job for farmers and ranchers. increased lending to socially-microloan program is to better opportunities - finding new One issue that is always For beginning farmers and disadvantaged producers by meet the credit needs of small ways to partner with other critical for farmers and ranchers, USDA provides nearly 50 percent since 2008 farm operations, beginning Federal agencies and the private returning sector to spur investment.

USDA is an equal opportunity America's farmers and provider and employer. To file Finally, we're taking new ranchers are the best in the a complaint of discrimination, world. By further expanding write: USDA, Office of the access to credit, USDA will Assistant Secretary for Civil help a new generation of Rights, Office of Adjudication, farmers out-produce the world 1400 Independence Ave., SW, and ensure the strength of an Washington, DC 20250-9410 American agriculture sector or call (866) 632-9992 (Tollthat drives our economy, free Customer Service), (800) The prosperity of our commercial credit necessary dollars. We've increased the using simplified applications creates jobs, and ensures the 877-8339 (Local or Federal most secure and affordable relay), (866) 377-8642 (Relay voice users).

The viewpoints expressed in columns and letters are the opinions of the writers and not necessarily the opinion or viewpoint of the Native American Times publisher or staff. Send letters to editor@nativetimes.com. Please keep letters to 350 words or less. Sign your name, tribal affiliation and city of residence for verification purposes.

SUPERNAW'S OKLAHOMA INDIAN SUPPLY

Wholesale items for Pow Wow Vendors

Bone chokers $20 per dozen

Handmade lamp worked glass bead bracelets $1.00 each Glass bead stretch bracelets 5 for $2.50

12 Necklaces: Chain w/ pendant and display pad $13.50 36 inch gemstone chip strands Reg. 3.95 now $2.00 36 inch turquoise chip strands Reg. 7.95 now $4.00

Always our regular stock of seed beads from 16/0 to 8/0, findings, leather, hackles, fluffs and thousands of other supply items.

Remember we've moved around the corner 109 North Broadway, Skiatook, OK 74070

New Dealers Cash or Credit Card Only.

Open Noon-6pm Mon. thru Fri. • 10am-5m Sat. • Closed Sun. Local: 396-1713-Countrywide Toll Free 1-888-720-1967

Website: www.supernaw.com • Email: Supernaw@flash.net

VATIVE	AMERICAN	TIMES
--------	----------	-------

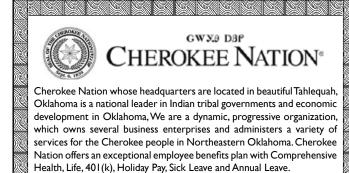

Name:
Address:
City:	State: Zip:
Phone:

■ $65.00 for 52 issues ■ $32.50 for 26 issues □ $16.25 for 13 issues ■ $1.25 single copy

Mail this form with a check or money order to: Native American Times • P.O. Box 411 Tahleguah, OK 74465 • 918-708-5838

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT / HELP WANTED

CURRENT OPPORTUNITIES WW HASTINGS HOSPITAL, TAHLEQUAH

#5998 Medical Technologist/T/PT #5768 Medical Technologist/R/PT #6470 Medical Technologist/T/PT

POSITIONS CLOSE 6/15/2012

Interested applicants please apply at www.cherokee.org

Cherokee Nation Human Resources Department PO Box 948 Tahlequah, OK 74465 (918) 453-5292 or 453-5050

Employment will be contingent upon drug test results. Indian preference is considered.

Faculty Chair

Position Summary: Serve as ONLI full-time Faculty Chair; is responsible for carrying out instructional duties, which requires an individual who has the ability to:

• Teach college-level and career and technical educations classes in a culturally diverse and historic setting • Engage in professional activities such as publishing and present conference papers • Ability to represent PNC in various public settings Assist in designing and implementing curriculum, supervise book/textbook orders as required for faculty • Serve on various committees, as assigned • Serve the College and its students in an ethical, enthusiastic, and visionary manner • Ability to lead accreditation process and participate fully on such committee.

Qualifications: Masters Degree required; PhD preferred. Two to four (2-4) years experience in progressively responsible professional position is also required. In addition, full-time faculty must have a proven track record with concern to: providing vision and guidance in helping establish an academic department and or program, carry out instructional responsibilities (including developing syllabi and lesson plans, supervise implementation on MOODLE/CAMS portals), working with both internal and external organizations, developing a professional dossier that clearly demonstrates advancement and activity, teaching life-skills to students, and serving the College by assisting with extracurricular activities, when necessary.

Other Requirements: Full-time faculty must be able to travel to attend meetings, conferences, workshops, seminars, etc. as deemed necessary by the project director's

Duties & Responsibilities:

- Ensure the academic integrity and rigor of the classroom,
- Author and submit syllabi to the project director, Chair faculty committee
- Attend regular department meetings, as required by the project director, Assist in fund raising efforts that impact the proposed project,
- Relate to a wide diversity of people, including traditional and nontraditional students, in various cultural settings.
- Work in a professional and collegial manner with other faculty, staff, and students, Demonstrate excellent verbal, interpersonal, and written communication skills,
- Perform other duties as assigned by the project director/supervisor.
- Send resumes to Dr. Joseph Bohanon at jbohanon@pawneenationcollege.org, fax

918-762-3467, or mail to 861 Little Dee Drive, Pawnee, OK 74058.

Admissions Assistant/ Recruiter

Position Summary: Serving the ONLI program; responsible for carrying out a wide variety of duties that allow the Director of Admissions/Project Coordinator to plan, organize, direct, and control organizational functions of the Admissions Office, which requires an individual that has the ability to:

- · Multi-task in a vibrant and active environment,
- Compile, compose, and distribute various written documents and correspondence in a timely manner,
- Operate numerous software programs and learn new (or updated) programs as they become available, including Microsoft Office: Word, MS Excel, and PowerPoint,
- · Execute directives in a timely manner.

 Act in a professional and courteous manner to students, other staff, and

Maintain both official and document

Qualifications: An earned associate's degree is required, a bachelor's degree is preferred; experience in a progressively responsible position is required; experience in tribal programs is preferred. In addition, the Admissions Assistant /Recruiter must have a valid driver's license, a clean driving record, and a reliable vehicle for traveling to and from recruiting events; as well a proven track record with concern to: completing assigned tasks in a timely manner, working with office machines such as photocopiers, calculators, recorders, etc., working with both internal and external organizations, and serving the College by expected presence with extracurricular activities, when necessary.

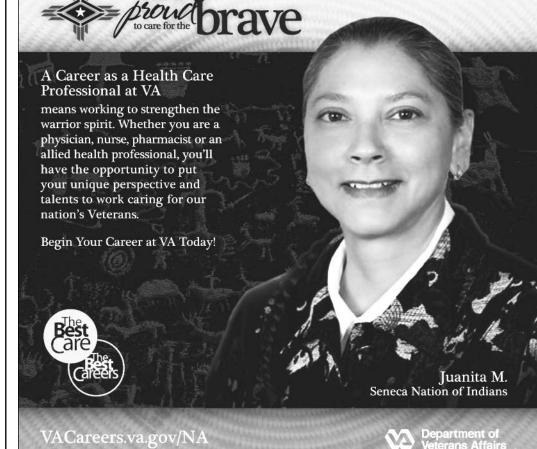

Other Requirements:

The Admissions Assistant /Recruiter must be able to travel to attend meetings, conferences, workshops, seminars, etc. as deemed necessary by the appropriate project office.

Send resumes to Staci Rowton at srowton@pawneenationcollege.org, fax to 918-762-3303, mail to 861 Little Dee Drive, Pawnee, OK 74058

Go online to nativetimes.com for more jobs!

-New jobs posted throughout the weekon Facebook

Assistant/Associate Professor of Exercise Science

Full-time Assistant/Associate Professor of Exercise Science beginning Fall 2012. Doctorate required in Exercise Science or related field, ABD considered. College teaching experience preferred. Duties include instruction and advising in courses leading to a BS in Exercise Science, establishing and overseeing internship sites and engaging in college/professional service.

Salaries are competitive and commensurate with experience and credentials. Review of applicants will begin immediately and continue until position is filled.

Candidates should submit letter of intent, vita and three professional references to: Human Resources, Bacone College, 2299 Old Bacone Road, Muskogee, OK 74403.

Bacone College is a private four-year ollege with a mission to provide opportunities to Indian students and employees. EOE

Look for Native American Times and Twitter!

Department Of The Interior | National Indian Gaming Commission

Director of Public Affairs

Job Announcement Number:NIGC-NB-12-MM636760 SALARY RANGE: $123,758.00 to $155,500.00 / Per Year OPEN PERIOD: Monday, June 04, 2012 to Monday, June 25, 2012 SERIES & GRADE: GS-1035-15 POSITION INFORMATION: Full Time - Excepted Service Permanent DUTY LOCATIONS: Washington DC

JOB SUMMARY:

The National Indian Gaming Commission is an independent Federal regulatory agency whose primary mission is to regulate gaming activities on Indian lands for the purpose of shielding Indian tribes from organized crime and other corrupting influences; to ensure that Indian tribes are the primary beneficiaries of gaming revenue; and to assure that gaming is conducted fairly and honestly by both operators and players.

The incumbent is responsible for overseeing and coordinating all governmental and public interactions for the National Indian Gaming Commission's (NIGC/Commission) communication programs and activities relating to public, governmental and media relations.

The Director reports directly to and receives broad policy guidance from the Chief of Staff while work is evaluated on the basis of results as This is a senior level position.

The salary range for this position is equivalent to the GS-15 salary. If hired, the salary range will be $123,758-$155,500.

For full job description and application information visit http://www.usajobs.gov/ GetJob/ViewDetails/316156300

REQUEST FOR PROPOSAL

Request for Qualifications

Wyandotte Nation is requesting the services of a professional Architect to design and develop plans/specifications for a "Community Facilities" building project, funded by the Department of Housing and Urban Development. Details of this project will be made available to interested parties upon request. Indian preference will be observed, and at this time, only proposals from qualified Indian owned professional architect firms will be accepted. The proposed project will be constructed using Green Standard Energy Star appliances, Geothermal HVAC and Solar Thermal Banking.

Selection will be based on a firm's ability to work with the tribe and experience of similar projects. All contractors will be required to comply with Section 3 and Davis Bacon.

The project location is in close proximity to the existing Tribal facilities, on land owned by Wyandotte Nation. Interested parties should contact Mr. Ron Kaiser; Planning/ Development Director at 918-678-2297, extension 225. The Tribe must receive all qualification submissions for consideration before July 6, 2012.

Request for Bids

The Iowa Tribe of Oklahoma District Court is currently accepting bids from contractors to update the Tribal Court Law Library. The Tribe is seeking to obtain online access to legal research as well as to replace published materials. Further details will be made available to interested parties upon request. For more information, please contact the Court Administrator, Lauren Truitt at (405) 547-2402 ext 228 or ltruitt@ iowanation.org.

NATIVE AMERICAN HIRING PREFERENCE? Advertise your jobs to Native Americans!

Free SBA workshops slated to help Native Americans remove small business barriers

WASHINGTON - The U.S. Small Business Administration, the Federal Reserve Bank of San Francisco, and the Federal Reserve Bank of Minneapolis will hold a series of free workshops on "Uniform Commercial Codes: Bringing Business to Indian Country."

The Uniform Commercial Codes workshops will help tribal affiliated organizations, tribal governments and Native American businesses understand how adopting a secured transaction code can increase economic development opportunities.

The workshops will demonstrate how to compete in the marketplace; identify roadblocks and solutions to secure---business transactions in Indian Country; explain the significance of commercial laws to borrowers; and discuss why lenders must have the ability to secure loan transactions.

As sovereign nations, Native American tribes are free to adopt their own commercial codes, so tribal commercial laws can vary widely. Tribal commercial codes include business laws governing commercial transactions and financial services, but the differences among tribal codes and with the Uniform Commercial Codes that give legal structure to the rules outside tribal areas can complicate business dealings outside the tribe. These workshops will improve understanding of the Uniform Commercial Codes and lead to more efficient cross-border business activity.

The five one-day workshops, all free and open to the public, will be held from June to September 2012, and include the following cities (The location marked TBA will be updated online with the confirmed date):

Phoenix, Arizona June 12, 2012: 8:30am - 3:00pm

Bismarck, North Dakota September 27, 2012: 8:30am - 3:30pm

Niagara, New York Date: TBA: 8:30am - 3:00pm

For additional information on the Uniform Commercial Codes workshops, including local area registration information, http://www.frbsf.org/community/ resources/2012/0605-Uniform-Commercial-Codes-Bringing-Business-to-Indian-Country/index.

SBA also offers free online courses for starting a business, managing a business, financing a business, and contracting that includes a Native American Small Business Primer course offering strategies for business success. It is one of nearly 30 online tutorials offered by the SBA's Online Business Training at www.sba.gov/ training.

For more information on SBA's programs and services, please visit www.sba.gov.

Reeves Renovations

Professional Construction, Remodeling & Repairs

Bathrooms • Kitchens • Paint • Tile • Trim • Plumbing Electrical • Solar Panels • Windmills • Winterizing Quality Work • Free Estimates

918-637-6736

johnwilliamreeves@juno.com Serving Mayes & Cherokee Counties

Metal Roofing & Siding

Professional Construction and Home Repairs

Free Estimates

Charles Snell 918-507-2902

Native American Contractor

Professional & Affordable Web Design Let us create a web site that never stops giving you BUSINESS 24 -7 376-3428 www.ganica.net

BEADING & CRAFT SUPPLIES CLOTHING & ACCESSORIES JEWELRY & NOVELTIES ORIGINAL ARTWORK COLLECTIBLES & BOOKS

2850 S. Wood Drive Okmulgee, Okla. 918-752-0040

http://oicgiftshop.com

Master of Ceremonies ◊ Frank Carson

2011 Tribal Princess

Alexis Tanyan

2012 Tribal Princess \( \text{Danelle Springer} \) Head Gourd Dance Singer \( \rangle \) Leonard Cozad Jr.

Head War Dance Singer \( \rightarrow John Arkeketa \)

Head Man Dancer ◊ George Alexander Head Lady Dancer \( \rightarrow \) Michelle Garcia-Holiday

Head Gourd Dancer  $\Diamond$  John Shotten

Co-Host ◊ Red Rock Creek

Northern Drum \( \rightarrow \text{Blackbird} \)

Arena Directors \( \rangle \) Pat Moore & Bear Murray

Water Boys \( \rightarrow Josh & Jordan Murray \)

Pow Wow Committee ◊ Robert Murray Jr. 580-304-6731

John "Kandie" Des Jarlait

Lori Murray

Bernadette Huber 405-240-2600

nformation: Robert Murray Jr. 580-304-6731

FRIDAY

5:00 PM LOWER FLAG GOURD DANCE 6:30 PM

REGISTRATION OPENS 7:00 PM GRAND ENTRY 7:30 PM 10:30 PM SPECIAL "49" CONTEST

SATURDAY

2:00 PM GOURD DANCE LOWER FLAG 5:00 PM EVENING MEAL BREAK 5:30 PM GOURD DANCE 6:30 PM

7:00 PM REGISTRATION OPENS GRAND ENTRY 7:30 PM SPECIAL GEORGE GIBSON MEMORIAL 11:00 PM

STOMP DANCE CONTEST SUNDAY

2:00 PM GOURD DANCE LOWER FLAG 6:30 PM GRAND ENTRY

American Indian Arts & Crafts/ Food Vendors

Coordinated by Iowa Tribe Enterprises Linda Big Soldier, CEO Must complete application Reservations & information: 405-547-4239 or lbigsoldier@iowanation.org

27th Annual Iowa Tribe of Oklahoma POWWOW

June 15-16-17, 2012

Bah-Kho-Je Pow Wow Grounds

Hwy #177, 4 miles south of Perkins, Oklahoma

Contests

Rules: Must register and be in parade in on night of contest Must be in full regalia to receive prize Committee reserves right to combine or separate divisions

Divisions: Tiny Tots (0-6) - Combined boys & girls, combined divisions

Jr. Girls (7-12) - Combined divisions

Jr. Boys (7-12) - Combined divisions

Teen Girls (13-17) - Combined cloth/buckskin; fancy shawl/jingle Teen Boys (13-17) - Combined grass & traditional; straight; fancy Women (18-54) - Cloth; buckskin; combined fancy shawl/jingle Men (18-54) - Straight; fancy; combined traditional/grass Golden Age Men (55+) - Combined divisions Gold Age Women (55+) - Combined divisions

EVENTS

*Email your powwow or other event info to: Lisa@ nativetimes.com. Name, date, time, place and contact okchoctaws.org information is free.

EVERY THURSDAY The Otoe-Missouria Substance Abuse and Behavioral Health Programs sponsor an open group for families touched by addiction from noon to 1 p.m. at the Otoe-Missouria Health Building. This is a confidential group. Call 580-723-4466 x252 or x262 for more information.

SECOND TUESDAY Cherokee Artists Association meeting at 202 E. 5th Street Tahlequah, Okla. Info: (918) 458-0008 or www. cherokeeartistsassociation.org

FOURTH THURSDAY Each month the American Indian Chamber of Commerce of Oklahoma Eastern Chapter hosts a monthly luncheon at Bacone College, Muskogee, Okla. 11:30 a.m. at Benjamin Wacoche Hall. Please RSVP one week ahead of time. Phone: (918) 230-3759

EVERY 2ND SATURDAY Modoc Tribal Citizens Meeting at Wyandotte Community Center 1pm-3pm. Info call 918-961-0439 or 832-350-4530.

Indian Taco Sales - from 11-

Alliance, 5320 S. Youngs Blvd, Oklahoma City www.

YOUTH COUNCIL The Native Nations Youth Council (NNYC) bimonthly meetings from 6:30pm -8:30pm @ the Youth Services of Tulsa Activity Center (311 S. Madison - on 3rd just west of Peoria). Call to confirm location. Info Call: Chad Gilley (918) 382-2204 or nnyc@ihcrc.org

JUNE 14 Iowa Tribe of Oklahoma 4th Annual Golf Tournament kicking off Iowa Tribal Powwow - 8am at Cimarron Trails in Perkins, Okla. Registration begins at 7am. Info call Linda Andre 405-547-5352 Ext 23

JUNE 14-17 TeAta, a play by Chickasaw playwright JudyLee Oliva at Burg Theatre, Oklahoma City University. For information, call (580) 272-5520 or email performance@chickasaw. net. For tickets, Call (405) 208-5227 or purchase online at www.okcu.edu/ ticketoffice

JUNE 15-17 Iowa Tribe of Oklahoma 27th Annual Pow Wow, Bah-Kho-Je PowWow Grounds, Hwy #177, 4 miles south of Perkins, Okla Free admission, camping,

2:30pm at OK Choctaw Tribal contests in all divisions, arts & crafts, rations. Contact Robert Murray 580-304-6731 or Bernadette Huber 405-240-2600.

JUNE 16

The 17th Annual Oklahoma Indian All-State Basketball Games at the sports center on the Oklahoma Wesleyan University campus in Bartlesville. Games will start at 6:00 P.M. For more info: contact us 918-642-3162, paradox@valornet.com

JUNE 21-24 Muscogee Nation Festival at Claude Cox Omniplex in Okmulgee. For more information on the Festival, contact MCN Tourism & Recreation at (918) 732-7992 by e-mail at tourism@ muscogeenation-nsn. gov or online at www. muscogeenation-nsn.gov.

JUNE 21-24 TeAta, a play by Chickasaw playwright JudyLee Oliva at Burg Theatre, Oklahoma City University. For information, call (580) 272-5520 or email performance@chickasaw. net. For tickets, Call (405) 208-5227 or purchase online at www.okcu.edu/ ticketoffice

JUNE 22-23 Peoria Powwow, 60610 E. 90 Road, Miami. Features a wide range of contest dancing, including gourd dancing and straight dancing, as well as grass, traditional and fancy dancing. Call 918-540-2535.

JUNE 22-24

Tonkawa Tribal Powwow at Fort Oakland, Tonkawa. Come out and experience the Tonkawa Tribal Powwow, Quapaw Tribal Powwow an annual tribal celebration featuring Native American dancing, contests, crafts, artwork and food. Call 580-628-2561.

JUNE 23 Creek Council House Museum's Indian Art Festival 106 W. 6th, Okmulgee, OK; 10:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. For Free Booth Space or Register into $1000 Art Competition Contact: csago71@sbcglobal.net; 918-756-2324

JUNE 28 - JULY 1 Pawnee Indian veterans Powwow held at the Memorial Stadium. For more info call Toni Hill (918) 762-3621 Ext. 25

JUNE 30 47th Annual Coker Reunion, Masonic Building, 1729 HWY 9 West, Seminole, Okla. All descendants of London Coker and wife Mary Washburn are invited. Potluck meal at Noon. For more info call 405-382-3044.

JULY 2-4 Kiowa Gourd Clan  Celebration, Carnegie City Park, Carnegie. This event will feature the tribe's Sun Dance, held in the middle of summer during the longest and hottest days of the year. Call 580-654-2300.

JULY 4-7

at Quapaw Tribal Grounds, 5681 S. 630 Road, Quapaw. An annual celebration over the 4th of July weekend that includes dancing, contests, vendors and plenty of family fun. Call 918-542-1853.

JULY 5-8 TeAta, a play by Chickasaw playwright JudyLee Oliva at Rasmuson Theater, National Museum of the American Indian, Washington, D.C. For more information, call (202) 633-1000

JULY 6 Indian Taco Sale 11:00 AM - 2:00 PM at Norman First American UMC, 1950 East Beaumont Drive, Norman, Okla. Call Ahead for Speedy Service. Free

Delivery on Orders of 10 or

JUNE 30 Murrow Indian Children's Home Benefit Powwow, 3pm-11pm at Bacone

College, Muskogee.

More (405) 321-5640

JULY 9 - SEPT 28 The Potter & The Painter:

Works by Lisa Rutherford and Jim Van Deman at Red Earth Museum & Gallery, Oklahoma City

JULY 27-29 Kihekah Steh 43rd Pow-Wow, 193rd Street N & Javine Hill Road (52nd W.Ave)

Skiatook, OK. Contest powwow - Stomp Dance -Sat. night. Info call Donna Phillips 918-381-7996 or E-mail:

donnak51@sbcglobal.net

AUGUST 3

Indian Taco Sale 11:00 AM - 2:00 PM at Norman First American UMC, 1950 East Beaumont Drive, Norman, Okla. Call Ahead for Speedy Service. Free Delivery on Orders of 10 or More (405) 321-5640

Indian Taco Sale 11:00 AM - 2:00 PM at Norman First American UMC, 1950 East Beaumont Drive, Norman, Okla. Call Ahead for Speedy Service. Free Delivery on Orders of 10 or

More (405) 321-5640

SEPTEMBER 15 Timothy LittleVoice Honor

SEPTEMBER 7

Dance at WhiteEagle, OK. Gourd Dancing @ 2:00pm Hosted by Ponca Gourd dance society. Supper @ 5:30pm. War Dance Hosted by Osage clan. Info tlittlevoice@rocketmail.com

Tulsa Ballet plans memorial tribute to Native American co-founder

Moscelyne Larkin Jasinski

TULSA, OKLA. – On Sunday, September 16, 2012, Tulsa Ballet will host a memorial tribute to honor and celebrate the life of Co-Founder Moscelyne Larkin Jasinski at the Tulsa Performing Arts Center's Chapman Music Hall at 7:00 p.m. In 1956 Miss Larkin with husband Roman Jasinski and musician Rosalie Talbott founded Tulsa Ballet. A former ballerina with Ballets Russes and award-winning ballet teacher, Miss Larkin passed away on April 25, 2012.

"Miss Larkin was one of those individuals whose life accomplishments, legacy and impact on the region are bigger than life itself," Artistic Director Marcello Angelini said. "Tulsa Ballet wants to celebrate her life, the life of the person who gave birth to this company and nurtured it till adulthood, with a memorial gala as spectacular as her life was. If you knew her, expect to remember your friend. If you didn't, expect to learn about this unique individual who, with her love of the art form, devotion to her birthplace, artistic vision and sheer determination, made Tulsa and the entire state of Oklahoma a better place for us and our children."

Tulsa Ballet's memorial tribute to Miss Larkin will feature dancing by company artists, video footage of Miss Larkin and a narrative of her life. Admission is free to the public. Information about reserving tickets will be released after August 1st.

Born January 14, 1925 in Miami, Oklahoma to a Russian-born mother, Eva Matlagova, and a Shawnee Peoria / Welsh father, Ruben (Babe) Larkin, Miss Larkin remained proud of her dual cultural heritage and her Oklahoma roots throughout her life.

COU

Tana Takos Horso

Former Miss Indian Okla. to portray Chickasaw storyteller

DANA LANCE Chickasaw Nation

OKLAHOMA CITY – A Colbert native and an Southeastern Oklahoma State University alumnus will bring the role of young Te Ata to life in the production of, "Te-Ata", a play about one of America's most beloved Native storytellers, when it comes to an Oklahoma City and Washington D.C. stage this summer.

Tana Takes Horse, who now resides in Dallas, will play Mary Frances "Te Ata" Thompson Fisher in the production of "Te Ata".

Takes Horse was Miss Indian Oklahoma 2005 and is of Chickasaw, Choctaw, Crow, Chippewa and Hidatsa decent. Most recently, Tana has been volunteering in the Dallas school district by directing two theatre productions.

The play will be presented June 14-17 and 21-24, 2012 at Oklahoma City University and July 5-8, 2012 at the National Museum of the American Indian Rasmuson Theatre in Washington, D.C.

Tickets are now available by contacting the Oklahoma City University Theatre Department at 405-208-5227 or visit the OCU website for more information at www.okcu.edu/theatre. Tickets range from $12 to $15. Students, senior citizens, Allied Art members and groups purchase for $10 each.

The Oklahoma performances will be followed by a touring production July 5-8, 2012 at the National Museum of the American Indian Rasmuson Theatre in Washington, D.C. For more information about the Washington, D.C. performance, visit http://nmai.si.edu/calendar/.

LISA REED | PHOTO COURTESY THE BISKINIK

Presenters and visitors in a snake dance on the opening day of the 2011 Choctaw Days festival in front of the National Museum of the American Indian in Washington, D.C.

Choctaw Days to be held in Nation's Capital

TRAVIS MORROW

WASHINGTON – The second annual celebration of Choctaw Days is scheduled to be held in Washington D.C. June 20-23. For the second year the event will be hosted by the Smithsonian's National Museum of the American Indian (NMAI) which is located on the National Mall.

"Last year, we were the first tribe to hold a festival at the NMAI," said Chief Gregory E. Pyle of the Choctaw Nation, "even before that successful event concluded we were working with NMAI officials on the 2012 version."

The theme of this year's Choctaw Days is "Bringing in the Colors," a tribute to the military service of members of the Choctaw Tribe.

Prominently featured will be the deeds of the Choctaw Code Talkers from World War I. D.G. Smalling, great-grandson of one of the original Code Talkers, will present a history of the unit and explain how the Choctaw language was used to confuse the enemy.

In addition, Southeastern Oklahoma State University will put on a production entitled "It Wasn't Code to Us." The play will be presented in the Smithsonian's Rasmuson Theatre and will feature Choctaw actors.

"The performance deals with Choctaw Code Talkers of World War I," said Dr. Randy Prus, Chair of Southeastern's English, Humanities, and Languages Department, "but the emphasis is on the Choctaw language and culture."

Daily activities during the festival will include demonstrations of Choctaw social dancing, the Choctaw flute, a history of stickball, and traditional storytelling. Tribally inspired recipes will also be featured at the Smithsonian's Mitsitam Cafe, and traditional cooking demonstrations will be held in the museum's amphitheatre.

On Thursday, June 21, the Choctaw Nation Princesses will be placing flowers at memorials throughout Washington D.C., including the graves of two Choctaw Chiefs buried in the Congressional Cemetery. On both June 21 and 22, there will be a stickball demonstration at the U.S. Capitol's Reflecting Pool and in a park area next to the NMAI visitors will be able to see two Choctaw horses, a rare strain of Spanish mustang.

"We are thankful," said Chief Pyle, "to have the opportunity to educate the world about the multi-faceted Choctaw Nation of Oklahoma through venues such as Choctaw Days at NMAI."

A full schedule of Choctaw Days events is available on the Choctaw Nation's website: choctawnation.

Crumbo exhibit opening at Okla. History Center

COURTESY CRUMBO FAMILY ARCHIVES

MICHAEL DEAN
Oklahoma Historical Society

